DISCLAIMER NOTICE

A number of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, (LDS, Mormon Church), who have received their Temple endowments, may be either disturbed, or interested in the early Christian art works, early Christian writing, in this study. It's not my intentions to cause discussions, or to have different ones point out similarities between early Christianity, and the restored endowment. Therefore, I would like to caution all members not to discuss, and point out how close some of these things parallel the restored version(s). Furthermore, keep in mind that none of these references, and editions that have drawings in them, or copies of original pictures (illustrated editions), were derived from anything in 19th-21th century Mormonism's Temple endowment. Moreover, neither does this book represent official doctrines of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or any other church. But rather, this book contains my own understanding as to how different topics, & items in history & how they can be linked up to other similar topics along each different time line. In some cases I have presented questions, theories, speculations, & conclusions which were derived from my own on going studies in ancient histories. Some of these conclusions may be subject to change, or may need to be up dated as new evidences come forth. Thus, as I gain a better understanding about what the different ancient writers and artists, etc., had in mind with regards to their own symbols, beliefs, and traditions. Or as different scholars & other fellow researchers might point out mistakes, additional insights, or other possible interpretations of things. Some of these conclusions, which I am now presenting, may be subject to future modifications, changes, and up dating. The art-works within, (at least the illustrated editions), some were redrawn, (other are in the public domain, as far as I've been able to determine, &), from works which date back to well before the restoration that started about mid 1820s. However, there are exceptions to this in other cases, when the time lines go beyond that time, into the later legends of the topics presented here in this on going study. Thus, art works, or symbolism, must be interpreted according to the time frames, and according to the historical data, settings, and theological beliefs of those who used these symbols, art works or texts. Consequently, I have often tried to include other scholars' & researchers' interpretations, in with my own, even if they might differ from mine. Moreover, the reader should keep in mind that many descriptions of these art works (or copies of certain ones of them in illustrated editions), represent certain aspects of Christendom's mysteries only. And no references have been made here to the Temple endowment in Mormonism, (or The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints). Nor has any attempt or type of comparison been made between the two mysteries, or ordinances. So while endowed members of the restored church are encouraged to continue to remain silent on the restored version; the testimony of history will continue to bear witnesses to honest seekers after truth concerning the truthfulness of the restoration. Moreover, as honest investigators and members seek to understand the apostasy, and gain a stronger testimony of the restoration. And as endowed members seek to strengthen their own testimonies concerning Temple work, by study and also by faith, (Doctrine & Covenants 88:78-79, 118, 93:36, 53). Thus through the testimony of histories, & other areas of studies, they will continue to provide evidences for many aspects of the restoration. Thus, I hope that this on going study, will edify, up lift, and enlighten any and all readers concerning Christ, and all of the different beliefs that offer many answers to life's questions, which beliefs have turned unto fables. It's through the restoration that we have a basic picture to look at, as we put the different pieces of the whole puzzle together.

INTRODUCTION

This is an on going study of the different layers of history that focuses on historic Christianity. It's a look at the good, the bad & the ugly aspects of "The Great Apostasy." There still are many links & gaps to be added in future editions, as the on going studies, present more clues to the great mysteries. Plus, that will brings more clarity to our views of the bigger pictures of the whole historical drama. There's still a lot more to be added, & many more gaps to be filled to connect up, in these time lines of different topics, in understanding more about how, when, & where different early Christian doctrines faded out to their later fables and legendized forms.

Many aspects of "The Great Apostasy" were prophesied about too: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our LORD Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty." (2 Peter 1:16). "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Tim. 4:3-4). Though they were to "refuse profane and old wives' fables," in time, they eventually turned to them, as later legends departed from true theologies, (1 Tim. 4:7).

Another aspect of the legendization of doctrines turned to fables is the eventual blending of Greek philosophy used by later Christian apologists & church fathers, to try to make the doctrines more pleasing, reasonable, & acceptable to the different areas early Christianity spread to. Of this, the Apostle Paul prophetically warned:

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of man, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. 2:8). Titus 1:14, warns the earliest Christians to not give heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth. "Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is faith: so do." (1 Tim. 1:4).

How Greek philosophy tainted later Christianity, has been noted by many historians, for the history of second century Christianity is "the history of the clash and conflict between these new mystical & philosophical elements of Christianity & its earlier forms."¹

Another aspect of the Great Apostasy was the rapid spread of splinter groups that kept splintering off from each other, or growing up in different areas of where the different early to later Christian sects' seeds got spread to. Some reasons for the splits are illustrated by Clement of Rome, 30-100: He laments of the apostasy of the Corinthian branch, their inner fighting with each other. Their jealousy, envy, strife, sedition, persecution, disorder, war, & captivity. The 'worthless' rose up against those who were in 'honour.' Those of no reputation rose up against those renowned. Righteousness was far removed, peace gone, faith dimmed, the commandments & ordinances, disobeyed. Each going after their own lusts, & desires of their wicked hearts.²

As the contentious sects split up even more, some grew to domination & were victorious over other rival sects. Thus, their histories were written and sometimes molded to put themselves in the best light. While their rivals got polemically vilified, often unfairly, inaccurately, and were suppressed, militantly at times, and declared to be an 'illegal religion,' or in other cases, 'heretical sects,' that needed to be thought policed! Thus, a lot of intolerant bias polemical vilification tactics were often used by writers against their rival sects, & non-Christian antagonists, which created histories that didn't fairly represent what might have been the actual beliefs and practices of the rival sects, or religious non Christian opponents. In some cases, the early Christians were vilified by early anti-Christians & were persecuted, until certain brands were accepted as the State Religion, like during the 4th century, when Roman Emperor, Constantine rose to power. In time, however, later Christians, unfortunately were known to persecute each other, & sometimes even drove out other sects & faiths. The dominating sects would seek out & often burned their rivals' writings too, & in later cases, the people. Charges of "heresies," began to be polemically thrown back & forth. The charge of 'heresy' eventually became a deadly charge, a death sentence! Especially when different sects, that gained civic and theocratic powers, would enforce their brands of Christianity on others! Having thus gained, or regained, the favors of the State, or civic leaders, they often controlled also the media of the time, & suppressed their rivals, after they'd labeled or branded them as an out-law religious heretical sect, or vilified them as witches, Satanic, devil-worshippers, immoral, "infidels," & 'enemies of the State.'

In time too, those who declared others as 'heretics,' were themselves later considered 'heretics!' Especially, as later generations of Christianity retrogress away from the earlier accepted beliefs, doctrines, & practices of earlier Christians. Plus, as later Christians developed their own versions of evolving, cultural contaminated traditions, dogmas, beliefs, superstitions, & continued to abandon earlier beliefs that fell under later controversies.

As the centuries went by and aged Christendom, later Christian diverse sects, that became the dominating force over others, also had power hungry persons that bought their way into either civic, cleric, or both positions of power. Thus, in some of the later theocracies, they wielded their powers & enforced their agendas with the sword! All these aspects were products of these later stages of the Great Apostasy! Creating religious intolerance, as thought policing & enforced creeds, decrees and dogmas were forced fed to the common folks and non-Christians. All of which if they were not accepted by the people, could mean that they could be subjected to all kinds of horrible punishments, and even death.

As different inventions of torture created horrific torture chambers, the 'guilty' could suffer confiscations of property, loss of limbs, eyes, tongues, hands, legs, or their heads choked off. 'Guilty' sentences could be documented, just for being charged, true or not, for going against, or being in defiance of the dominating Christian sect. Numerous examples will be considered in this study, to show the different areas & times where no religious freedoms, & no religious tolerance was granted to those who didn't accept their particular brands of the State Religion. Christendom, persecuted in earlier centuries, later persecuted and hunted down rival sects' members, & whole congregations in some cases. Then, those of earlier centuries, who had thought of themselves as the defenders of the true faith, were later declared heretical, case in point is what happened to Origen. He was a great defender of Christianity of his time, wrote answers to early anti-Christians, like Celsus. But in time, his views were later condemned during later centuries. Thus, whoever might be a minority could be declared heretical by the dominant intolerant sects, that had Kings, Emperors, & Queens as part of their particular faiths. Ones that could abuse their civic-powers: To enforce, to fine, penalize, capture, imprison, suppress, persecute, extract forced tithing-taxes, & put to death, the disobedient. Or thought-police them with all kinds of horrible methods of torture that were invented. Thus forcing them, if they could, into accepting whatever brands of Christianity was dominating a particular area, at a particular time throughout historic Christendom. In fact, the thought policing that went on, as Christendom became more diverse, is one of the products of the Great Apostasy.³

Another aspect of this whole journey through time is the historical facts that apostasies tend to build on earlier apostasies. A doctrine doesn't start out becoming a fable, it has to retrogress over long periods of time, into their later myth makings stages. While in other cases & areas, the process can often be sped up, if there is little or no written records, art works, ritualistic reminders, and protective priesthood powers to keep false doctrines & false teachers in check, or to preserve original doctrines. If the areas that the gospel got spread to, was in a more pure & original form, & has those protective elements in place, to preserve what it has. If so, then, the myth making is more likely to be kept in check & countered with truth. But this is so long as the people remain righteous, and true to the original message, and loyal to their priesthood endowed leaders, who are maintaining their own righteousness & thus remaining worthy of the spiritual gifts, & keeping the false teachers in check, (1 Cor. chaps 12-13, Eph. 4:11-32). But once these protective aspects are lost, it is then that the retrogression to legendization process starts up to turn true doctrines into fables & mythologies.

Hegesippus, a second c., Jew who was converted to Christianity in Palestine, he illustrates the point, says Eusebius, the church historian, who cites him as saying this of the conditions of the early church, how that was at first: "a pure and uncorrupt virgin; whilst if there were any at all, that attempted to pervert the sound doctrine of the saving gospel, they were yet skulking in dark retreats; but when the sacred choir of the apostles became extinct, and the generation of those that had been privileged to hear their inspired wisdom, had passed away, then also the combinations of impious error arose by the fraud and delusions of false teachers. These also, as there was none of the apostles left, henceforth attempted, without shame, to preach their false doctrine against the gospel of truth."⁴

Consequently, as false teachers arose, they added to the apostasy. But also, later apostasies often will be built over & blended with others' earlier apostasies, that continue to get built upon others' apostasies. Thus, the next generation gets farther and farther away from the original doctrines in these ways. Moreover, when this happens, little faults should go to those later generations who are just going by what apostate doctrines they'd learned from their apostate parents & teachers, who can only give what light & knowledge that they might have inherited from earlier generations. But also, can only pass on the dark knowledge that got mixed in with the fragments of light & truths they inherited too. So as the lights dim further, many of them do the best that they can with what light that they still have, in an ever increasing Dark Age. While some, that are motivated by darker forces, might help retrogress the apostate doctrines even down further, so that by the next generation that comes along, they get even more further away from the original doctrine & take it another step away from the light towards turning it into being closer to confusing fables, legends & faded traditions. Thus, the retrogression process continues over time in what I call the legendization process.

THE GREAT APOSTASY, LIKENED UNTO A GOSPEL SHIP. (OR CHURCH), OUT IN THE OCEAN, BEFORE A DARK & MIGHTY STORM: One parable illustration to describe the Great Apostasy, is to liken it unto a ship, called the gospel, or gospel ship, (or true church), out in the ocean. The captain, (Christ), looking down the horizon with his telescope (extended divine vision to see & predict the future). Sees a storm coming in the signs that also indicate a storm front is building up, even though it's still fairly calm. Some of the crew members are plotting mutiny, lying in wait & seeking opportunities & ways to take over the ship, and control its passengers & crew. (They are like the prophesied 'wolves' or false teachers plotting to arise, counterfeiting the gospel and mysteries (temple ordinances). They will claim to have the true "gnosis." (Or knowledge that comes from revelation, the sacred 'secret' knowledge, given by Christ to his disciples, apostles, & prophets, during his post-resurrection teachings. Acts 20:28-31, 2 Cor.2:17, 4:2, 2 Pet.2:1-2, Eph.4:3-32).⁵ When things start to get rough, Christ & his apostles, like ship officers, warn the other crew members, & passengers, (or members of the true Church), that a storm & mutiny is coming. As the winds start to pick up, they are like "every wind of doctrine," that comes from different cultures' religious dogmas & ritualistic symbolisms, (Eph.4:11-14). The wind starts to blow up against the sails stronger, up against the crew members, & effects their balance & threatens them of slipping & falling over board. If, that is, they don't have a safety line, (the spiritual gifts), or other ways of keeping themselves from being carried away by the wind, or washed over board. (What they do with the hands are what keeps them from falling, such as holding on to the words & doing the teachings of Christ, his prophets, & apostles. Keeping the commandments, keeping the hand clasping covenants, by cleaving unto God & Christ's saving right hand, so that they don't slip & fall.⁶

For like with the New covenants, the keeping of them can be a challenge in families that have those who try to get the covenanted to not live the gospel, such as perhaps in the case with the Old, when different ones who devoutly served, were tested, were also being challenged by the "controversy by the waters of controversy," and because of those who kept the commandments, & "remained faithful to thy covenant," had "parted from his father and his mother, his brother and his sons..."⁷

For will they fall-away, become traders? Latin for 'hand over.' When persecutions got rough, different church leaders handed over their scriptures & holy Christian writings to thought policing Roman soldiers enforcing the orders & laws made against the early Christians, by Roman officials. 2 Thess. 2:1-15).⁸

But ship Captain & officers, (Christ, his prophets, & apostles), encourage them to stay strong, hold on, (to remain firm in their faith, & to follow their commands). But as the storm gets stronger, the mutiny within, (those who reject & betray Christ), & the waves without, (the 10 different persecutions),⁹ kill the Captain, & threatens the ship's officers, who are soon killed too, & their bodies are washed over board, to no longer be heard of. (The apostles are martyred in the different areas they did missionary work in, being rejected & killed off in different ways).¹⁰

The mutineers, (false teachers who try to take control & compete with each other), don't know where to stir the ship, as the waves of controversy, schisms, & inner contentions, diverse cultural contaminations of true doctrines, blended in with "every wind of doctrine," (Eph.4:11-13), threatens to ship-wreck the gospel ship, now in peril. The dark heavy clouds & storm front winds (of doctrines), start to create huge stronger waves that start to crash in & up against the ship. Meanwhile, some of the mutineers (false teachers, copyists, religiously motivated scribes & false church-leaders), begin to make crude copies of maps (their own scriptures, their own counterfeit 'gnosis,' or claims to revealed sacred secret teachings of Christ). Doing so, to try to convince the others which way to steer the ship. ("These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh..." & other vices, 2 Pet.2:14-22. "Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." (Jude 6-13). They contend amongst themselves as to which map copy is the correct one to be guided by. (Different tampered with versions & copies of scriptures that they try to use to attempt to claim authority for their particular doctrines & ways to go). With so many conflicting maps presented & argued over, as being the authentic copy to follow, the crew is confused & don't know what to do, though trained shipmates, while others are inexperienced passengers. (There are too many conflicting orders, (the commandments of men). Plus, too many voices threatening punishments if their orders aren't followed. (Different schisms, contentions, false revelations, & because the spiritual gifts have faded out, all this has produced thought policing tyrants). So much so, that the crew members don't know who to obey, & now fear their leaders too. Mean while a wave of heretical views, with their own "scriptures," comes crashing into the ship. On the other side, the wave of the Christological controversy comes crashing in. Another wave of Gnostic blends & mixed dogmas crashes in on another side, mixing in with the other waves & thus becomes almost un-discernible as to which wave is which. More waves come crashing over, the mountainous wave of Greek Philosophy, is mixed in with other Oriental religious thought. Plus, waves of paganism, Jewish dogmas, Egyptian & Roman mystery religions' symbolism, beliefs, & ritualistic parallels, come crashing in & over onto the ship, flooding the different compartments with their blends. Different types of waves came crashing in on different areas of the ship (or in different areas of the church). For "...all through the first several centuries of Christianity the Church was strictly an Eastern one, [in the Roman Empire] and so was the wave of philosophies that engulfed it."¹¹ Each wave causing its own particular damages, & mixing in with the strengths of other waves.¹² (Many splinter groups of early Christians, absorb the cultural contamination of their neighbors, and areas Christianity spreads to, blending beliefs, rituals, symbolism & tampering with their scriptures to come up with their own canons).

Despite the waves coming in, there still are those who attempt to hold on to what truths they have, as they try to do good. (The Great Apostasy waves didn't destroy everything all at once, there still remained many basic truths, many good principles being lived, & many good people trying to live what Christ like traits they had learned). As the waves kept crashing in on the deck of the ship, there were children being left out & exposed to the weather, & harsh environments, left outside to die, by their pagan parents, who were passengers on the ship too. Many of these were rescued by early Christians & cared for. Even though early anti-Christians were charging that early Christians were killing & eating babies, in the secret meetings held in the dark areas of the ship! However, those who knew the truth about many other early Christians, & even those amongst the pagans, despite their fellow pagans' claims & charges, had to admit that the early Christians were helping with the charity issues on the ship. ("The outstanding moral distinction of the Church was her extensive provision of charity. The pagan emperors had provided state funds for poor families, and pagan magnates [or wealthy and influential person, especially in business] had done something for their "clients" and the poor. But never had the world seen such a dispensation of alms as was now organized by the Church. She encouraged bequests to the poor, to be administered by her; some abuses and malversation crept in, but that the Church carried out her obligations abundantly is attested by the jealous emulation of Julian [the Apostate, 361-63 reigned as Roman Emperor, & was a critic of the church]. She [the church] helped widows, orphans, the sick or infirm, prisoners, victims of natural catastrophes; and she frequently intervened to protect the lower orders from unusual exploitation or excessive taxation. In many cases priests, on attaining the episcopacy, gave all their property to the poor. Christian women like Fabiola, Paula, and Melania devoted fortunes to charitable work. Following the example of pagan valetudinaria, the Church or her rich laymen founded public hospitals on a scale never known before. Basil established a famous hospital, and the first asylum for lepers, at Caesarea in Cappadocia. Xenodochia—refuges for wayfarers—rose along pilgrim routes; the Council of Nicaea [325 A.D.] ordered that one should be provided in every city. Widows were enlisted to distribute charity, and found in this work a new significance for their lonely lives. Pagans admired the steadfastness of Christians in caring for the sick in cities stricken with famine or pestilence.... [Consequently, Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, Latin Father, 340-397, could write about the church's efforts to do good & offer some safety] "Amid the agitations of the world, the Church remains unmoved; the waves cannot shake her. While around her everything is in a horrible chaos, she offers to all the shipwrecked a tranquil port where they will find safety."¹³

The light of day is ever going out, as the sun goes down & the night falls upon the stormy ocean. In the almost complete darkened, & with the ships' lamps being tossed around, they don't give off much light, as some are extinguished by the growing waves. The ship starts to break up, & takes on a lot of water, (a combination of controversies causes real damage to the original gospel message). Some mutineers seek to buy off the others, for positions of authority, to become ship officers, to be obeyed, (thus, the Simony controversy causes problems amongst the other mutineers & crew members). All these different waves (controversies), crash into each other to blend & affect each other, as the Trinitarian controversy wave crashes up against the Christological wave, that is crashing up the Preexistence controversy wave. All these effects the deification-wave, that is blended in & crashing in on the crew, desperate to know where to stir the ship, & which conflicting commands to follow. Some of the more powerful mutineers, who have civil authority, & men at arms, cause more problems, as they persecute, hunt down, arrest, capture & torture crew members that won't give up their particular leader's (faith) that they are following. (The heretic hunters, Inquisitions, Emperors' decrees, & force of arms to accept, & obey the creeds signed into law).¹⁴ After many crew members are killed off, some being martyred, others going over to the side of their rivals' side that dominates all others, (early Christians persecuted during 10 different eras, thought policing theocracies, more Inquisitions, militant Kings & Queens enforcing their religious decrees. Forced conversions). The mutineers with power (such as the Emperor Constantine), try to enforce unity within the ship. (The militant-thought policing decrees of Clerics & Emperors, seeking unity within their parts of the Roman Empire, by force of arm & decrees to follow the Nicene Creed of 325). But with the Trinitarian controversy wave crashing about, so also, are still the Christological controversial waves, which crash up against other waves, as pre-existence, deification & other controversies, toss the ship to & fro, with also every wind of doctrine.

St. Jerome, (345-420), admits that in the western part of the Roman Empire, (perhaps during when Rome was being invaded, & eventually sacked by Alaric the Visigoth, 410)¹⁵ That: "...As for the church, our house upon this earth as well as our home in heaven will be lost to us if we are lazy and slow to good works; and the whole structure which was designed to elevate to the peak of heaven shall collapse to earth, bringing ruin to its inhabitants. When our hands weaken, the storms overcome us, and this is as true of the Church as it is of private individuals: that through the neglect of the leaders the whole structure collapses." Also warned Jerome: "Christ disestablishes his church because of daily increasing unrighteousness."¹⁶

By now, the night has set in (Dark Ages), & only corrupted, & tampered with maps (copies of the scriptures), can be consulted, but not by the regular passengers, or ship's crew members, (scriptures are suppressed & become illegal to own, except for a corrupt clergy). But also, because there is no living captain, & real living ship officers to consult for guidance & to settle the on going conflicts on board & to calm the ocean (as Christ commanded the storm to be still, & with not any living Apostles & Prophets to help guide the church). With so many waves now crashing up against & into the ship, & with every wind of doctrine tossing them to & fro. With the lights of their lamps extinguished, & with the rain clouds & sun gone down, the gospel ship & its crew in trouble, have little choice to be try to ride out the storm, & hope for a calm new dawn! (The Reformation). Which, when it comes, they can access the damages done, & hope for God to send a rescue ship (The Seekers), to then bring about a time of restoration, with new living prophets & apostles to restore the gospel ship, or build a new one, & get the people back on course, (Acts 3:19-21, The Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol.4, p.528, book 4, chapter lxi, Origen Against Celsus).¹⁷

But as it was, even during the Reformation, as Pierre Van Paassen, wrote in a biography of reformer, Girolamo Savonarola, (1452-1498): "A world without prophets is a world that knows not its sign. It is like a ship without rudder or compass floundering about helplessly, aimlessly drifting toward perdition."¹⁸

For as the storm raged on, different ones noted how far-off-course, the gospel-ship had gone. How that it was now flooded with dogmas reduced to incomprehensible "mysteries," which were being enforced by thought-policing religious leaders, (running the state religions in different areas of the ship). They were now also bitter rivals, fighting with each other. (Thomas Jefferson): "Man once surrendering his reason, has no remaining guard against absurdities the most monstrous, and like a ship without a rudder, is the sport of every wind."¹⁹ The monstrous creatures of the ocean, & sharks, circle the ship to feast off of the passengers, crew members & others that might get washed over board, or those who jump over board, or are martyred for their beliefs. "As scholars and theologians have spilt an ocean of ink attempting to explain the title "Son of man," they have, in like manner, wrestled to obscure the plain and obvious meaning of the title "Son of God."²⁰ (The 'ocean of ink,' might be likened unto the blood of martyrs & others put to death, because they challenged, or didn't accept the dominating enforced religious laws, dogmas, & creedal formulas, concerning how Christ's as "Son of God," was to be interpreted. Plus, the thought policing that has gone on throughout the centuries to force many people to accept the dominating beliefs of the state-run religion in power, during the on going Christological & Trinitarian controversies).

The different church leaders, crew & passengers, seeing that the gospel ship needed repairs, still sought to use old tainted rotten boards, to try to plug up the holes where water kept flooding in. (Rotten old boards of Platonic philosophy continued to cause problems in the early to much later church. Thomas Jefferson, writing to his friend, John Adams, noted the apostate conditions of Christendom during their times, late 18th century 13 American-colonies. How the waves of Plato's "foggy mind," had influenced the Christian priesthood, who had, in finding the doctrines of Christ too plain & easy to understand, had thus "...saw, in the mysticism of Plato, materials with which they might build up an artificial system which might, from its indistinctness, admit everlasting controversy, give employment for their order, and introduce it to profit, power and pre-eminence.... [Christ teachings are easy to understand, while the] thousands of volumes have not yet explained the Platonisms engrafted on them: and for this obvious reason that nonsense can never be explained.... Plato is canonized; and it is now deemed as impious to question his merits as those of an Apostle of Jesus...."²¹

MORE ON WHAT HAPPENS TO PURE DOCTRINES DURING APOSTASIES: Another part of this whole more lengthier process, is what happens to the doctrines when they get blended in with other folk beliefs, or the surrounding cultures' already established mythologies. They became Christianized legends, or Christian legends became more paganized fables, because with these different blends, they retrogressed further away from their original elements. Or the later Christian doctrines, rituals, symbols, etc, got paganized, or the pagan symbols, etc., got Christianized. What spins off from these are more faded traditions, customs and myths that start to get even more distorted, changed, fragmented and blended in with the cultures' established customs, mythologies, & superstitions. Thus, the on going developments of superstitions plays a big part in what I call the "legendization process," when the time did come when they didn't endure sound doctrine, but turned unto fables.

This "legendization" process can be taking place even among areas where the same doctrine is still being preserved to a certain extent because of writings, and art works that illustrate the doctrine. Writings help keep the belief & doctrines alive, especially if they are hidden away to be discovered and translated later. So we have to give credit to all of the artists and writers down through the centuries who have recorded for us what stages the beliefs were in during their times.

What has caused some beliefs to become changed, altered, & further legendized are case by case situations. As the beliefs of Christianity spread throughout different parts of the world, a number of circumstances in the areas they spread to, could contribute to how well they either got preserved or became further legendized. If they got written down, or illustrated in art works, they were preserved better, in contrast to word of mouth oral tales, that often would loose their originality as time went by. Or if they were popular beliefs, or ones that conflicted with the already established cultural beliefs of the areas the beliefs started to get infused into. If they paralleled already established beliefs, they had a better chance of surviving, even though they might be blended in with the already established beliefs. If they conflicted with other beliefs, they might get changed to fit in, or get argued over and even declared heretical.

In other cases, the beliefs, customs, & practices in other areas that are established, might even be altered & blended in, doing so on purpose, as done by clerics. Some have attempted to get their rivals, or others living amongst them, to accept their beliefs, by having the parallels between them blended together, slowly, in the hopes that this method of missionary work will soften the acceptance & adaptations of the newly introduced beliefs, practices, customs, or 'doctrines.'

Another aspect that often influences the molding of later legends, traditions, customs & myths are the influences of the established powers of the culture. The powers & influences of the State, or the political powers, especially if the religious leaders have also taken on the role of religious-political welding powers. In these cases, beliefs, doctrines, rituals, practices are often enforced and established by decrees, creeds, councils, & governing officials, sometimes somewhat dictatorial. What follows then, are what must be accepted by the peasantry, lower clergy & lay persons, as to what are the acceptable state religious beliefs, that must be believed in. Plus, the acceptable rituals to be practiced, or the holidays to be observed. These religious settings, can & do have affects on the legendization of doctrines, rituals and observances. Or their preservation of beliefs & rituals, though they might be in creedal formulas argued over in church council meetings. Plus in edicts, synods, & councils' decisions, & written as canonical laws. Much of which then gets preserved because they are being militantly preserved by force of arms. At least until the next Emperor, King, Pope or other powerful cleric comes along later to make their own changes, or discard the former dogmas, or make changes to the formulas of the creeds.

In these settings, religions that become outlawed, by the State, and which are forced to go underground, because of times of persecutions. These can also have affects on the preservation, rejection or developments of different aspects of the religious rituals, beliefs and ceremonial practices, as to how they might eventually become eventually fraternalized. Or, become part of the symbolism of later secret societies. Or even ripped out as much as possible through the persecution of the State that seeks to enforce its decrees as to what is the State religion of the time. We see this in the early centuries of Christianity, when it was an “illegal religion,” as decreed by the Roman Empire. But then, how later Christianity changed, when it became the State Religion in some areas, and decreed others “illegal” such as during the Spanish Inquisition.

Another aspect of further the legendization process is the slow process of fable makings that comes with the blends of different cultures’ myths, legends, & superstitious beliefs & practices, when they live amongst each other peacefully. In these types of settings, these blends can cause the original doctrines to fade out even further. Even during the days when there are prophets & apostles, & during Christ’s time, even the spiritually endowed, the seers, the revelators of the gospel, & givers of scriptures, were tainted by the cultural influences they lived in. As were also their disciples, by the customs, superstitions, levels of the truth in scientific knowledge available, or not available yet, & other world views of their times. Plus, the religious, social, political & physical environments to which the holy-men & women of God, or saints, & which the prophets, prophetesses, apostles, & their disciples & converts lived. All these conditions had effects on their world views of their times, & in all ages of recorded history. Which is why God through revelations, & Christ through restorations & clarifications, helped even the prophets & apostles understand more about the world they lived in, & the creation of the world & worlds in the universe, even if those clarifications were done a little at a time, & over different periods of time, (1 Cor. 13:8–13, Amos 3:7, Isa. 28:9–13, Rev. 19:10, Eph. 3:8–16).

Without prophets, apostles, & the spiritual gifts used to discern & to counter superstitions, & to clarify doctrines, (Eph. 4:10–14). The safe guards & protections thus gone, allowed more myth making to take place, as the already existing fables & superstitions, that were piled on each other over time, before, were continued to be piled on top of the old, with new ones. Thus, covering the original doctrines, even more, especially during times of apostasy.²²

Plus, add to that other aspects, which are, when scriptures get suppressed, destroyed, or doctrinally dogmatically alter, changed, words deleted or added in. Done so in order to fit the dominating controversy of the times. Plus, when the scriptures get held back, or written in languages that only the clergy can understand. Doing so, in order that the peasantry can’t read or understand them. Plus, when the sermons are given in the language that only the clergy could understand & to interpret, according to what the corrupt clergy wanted the peasantry to understand, like during the Middle Ages. Thus also, in areas where illiteracies were a problem, the beliefs in oral forms, when passed down in cultures that also had established superstitions. Such settings added to the legendization of doctrines, rituals, practices & beliefs too. The fact that the canon of scriptures were different in some areas, where some books were accepted, while in other areas rejected, or unknown, also contributed to the developments of the legendizations of different beliefs too. Errors in translations, copyists’ errors, or later even incorporating the enforced beliefs into the marginal notes, or even inserting and taking out of certain elements of the scriptures, also had influences on the legendization process too.

A lot of superstitious beliefs developed amongst the peasantry, some of which also cause a lot of harm to other people, and themselves. Thus, different superstitions were spawned and spread during different ages of the apostasy.

Thus, when the products & retrogression of an earlier apostasy of another culture, when met up with a current apostasy of another culture, which then blend, it produces their own further retrogressions of faded, & almost lost doctrines in the new fables & myth makings. This is what goes on during their blending of superstitious beliefs, & superstitious apostate practices, retrogressed clerical ceremonies, mysteries, symbols & types.²³

During apostasies, the rituals, ordinances, or mysteries also get changed, distorted & blended with earlier left over fragments of apostate mysteries. (Isa. 24:5). Paul admonished the early Christians at Corinth, to: “Keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you” (1 Cor. 11:2). Clement of Rome, 30–100, noted how those at Corinth, neither walk in the ordinances of Christ’s commandments, or live according to what Christ expected. (The Apostolic Fathers, 14). Even Pope Adrian IV, 1522, acknowledged the corruption of the ordinances: “We know well that for many years things deserving of abhorrence have gathered round the Holy See. Sacred things have been misused, ordinances transgressed, so that in everything there has been a change for the worse.”²⁴

These also often get blended in with the fallen angels’ counterfeits of the true gospel, & then handed down in secret societies’ symbols, rituals, & heretical apostate mystery religions.²⁵ This happened in historic Christendom, when, for example, during the Middle Ages, and the Inquisition period, a lot of evil tortures, forced confessions, & thought policing took place in Europe, and in the New England Colonies in America. When, those marked as “evil,” were slaughtered during the horrific dark day of the Inquisitors’ hunts for alleged heretics & witches. Numerous cases were heard & wicked verdicts of death and torture were given. Mostly done by a corrupt, wicked & superstitious clerical legal system, & which resulted in many gruesome deaths by different manners,²⁶ mainly because of the apostate superstitious legendized beliefs, some of which were faded fragments of pre-existence themes turned, by those times, into superstitious fables, practices & world views:

“The horrors of Devil worship, of the Inquisition, and of a misconception of the nature of evil. They were the visitations that necessarily followed in the footsteps of a most abandoned ignorance. They oppressed mankind like a dreadful nightmare, like ghastly hallucinations of a feverish brain, and the disease passed away slowly, very slowly, only when the light of science, which is the divine revelation that is taking place now, [1900s] gradually began to dispel the gloomy shadows of the night and revealed the superstitious characters of the beliefs that had begotten the crimes of the dark ages.”²⁷

Other aspects of apostasies & their legendization processes, are how different ones will break off from a sect to form their own. Though they might keep a lot of the beliefs of the former, they might alter, change, throw out what they want, and keep what they want of their former faith, as they establish their own versions of them all. Or they might reject it all and start fighting against their former faith with endless polemical writings, and lists of reasons why they stopped believing. Another aspect is that the moral codes of the religion, when they go up against what are becoming more & more popular trends; which might be immoral, such aspects can cause changes amongst large memberships who might try to find ways to rework beliefs to be molded into blending in with the popular acceptable life styles & trends. Moreover, if the leaders don’t attempt to fight against the growing encroachments of such trends, but even get “corrupted,” themselves, this can cause further legendization of doctrines, beliefs, practices, rituals & customs.

The loss of spiritual powers, and gifts of the spirit, are another aspect, that leads to lack of protection against the encroachments of beliefs, practices, & rituals that have outsiders’ influences on the original beliefs as preached by the founding leaders. This is what some of the early Christian fathers noted, when they complained that the spiritual gifts were becoming less and less. What replaced them, when there were no more Christian prophets & apostles heard of, were the claims to alleged powers, and perhaps even real powers of different “saints,” throughout Christian history. But also, the alleged claims that different things had magical type powers in the different stories that, in time, were generated over lore about holy “relics.” Many of which were claimed to be the actual part of the True Cross, the Crown of Thorns, apostles’ bones, and the bodies of the Apostles and martyrs. Or some other holy preservation of something alleged to have been touched or owned by the founding religious leaders.²⁸

THE BASIC PARTS TO THIS STUDY

What this study will consider & explore in time lines, are the “legendizations” of the following:

1. The causes & effects of the legendization process.
2. Loss of the Spiritual gifts.
3. Legendization of the Pre-existence, the pre-birth life as spirits in a family in heaven.
4. Christ’s descent into the spirit prison & baptism for the Dead, later legendized.
5. Christ’s descent & post resurrection world- wide-treks, later lost & turned to fables.
6. The “mysteries,” or enactments, & ceremonial ritualistic types of these beliefs, fade to masonry.
7. Nature of God, & Godhead turned dogmatic.
8. Deification, perfection, the rewards of godhood to the faithful & martyrs in later versions.

What became legendized into legends, later traditions, fables & when & how were rituals eventually fraternalized?

1. With the spiritual gifts fading out of the early Christian church, as admitted by early Christian apologists, so also did the offices of prophets & apostles that produced additional scriptures. Thus, the canon of scriptures, and debates with the uses of the dialectic arts of clever arguments, & human reason, became the ways to argue out Creeds & Decrees in different church councils. The different branches of Christendom developed their own canons of scriptures, some including other books, or writings different from other Christian sects. Thus, different versions of the holy bible developed down through the centuries. Earlier bibles that started with pre-existence themes, eventually were discarded for versions that started with the creation drama.²⁹

2. The spiritual gifts that produced scriptures, miracles, & over-came language barriers, etc., faded off into relic magic, where the alleged bones, or bits-of-the-cross, etc., were believed to hold & give off magical & divine healing powers, etc., to those who paid to see, or touch the old-relics.³⁰

3. The Scriptures: Earlier copies were confiscated, & some destroyed during days of persecutions. Some were turned in by Traders (or those who handed over their copies of the scriptures), to the Roman soldiers-police, after Roman Officials decree them & early Christianity to be an illegal religion. In the case with the “Secret Archives of the Vatican,” it’s written that “...the archives lost heavily in the persecutions, and even the leaders of the Church sometimes collaborated and yielded up Church books and documents. Some of them managed to substitute heretic books and false documents; others were compelled to deliver sacred books and genuine archival documents. These traitors, the traditores, or handers-over, were the most despised of the lapsed Christians, because they had compromised all Christians and the organization of the Church itself.... The damage done to the archives in these earlier persecutions was lessened by the fact that they were local rather than general, and the lost books could be replaced by making copies from those belonging to churches in other regions. The sending of books to other churches seems to have been a regular practice....”³¹

So it was hoped that many holy books could have been replaced, but there were always the questions & concerns about if the other copies were copied down accurately, or not. Plus, if the differences noted, when compared, were of such that they changed the message & meanings of doctrines to the point were the original intended gospel message had become distorted, manipulated & cleverly forged to fit the dogmatic schisms of the times. Especially as the early Church passed through different eras of debates, anti-Heretical polemics, & fell under the hands of false teachers, that were prophesied would enter into the different churches, after the apostles & prophets had left the areas to go to other branches of the early church. Thus, also the many letters sent back to the early branches, to try to combat the false teachers already seeking to draw away their own disciples. There were always the questions of differences noted in the different language translations too. Later, when Christianity became the state religion of the Roman Empire for a time, debates, polemical writings, & church councils came up with different lists of what were considered to be official canons for different sects.³²

4. Pre-existence, in some areas of Christendom, such as the fallen angels, were to become the later fallen creatures, certain types of birds, pesty insects, mythical monsters, & some classes of water spirits. Those that haunted the lakes, rivers, & wooded areas, seas, & deep caverns, which they had fallen from heaven, down into, according to later folklore.³³ Some later classes of water spirits, or water babies, that storks go & gets from marshes, the clouds, (heaven). Or from rivers & watery areas, according to lore, are the spirits of the unborn, waiting to be born & taken by the storks to their expecting parents. (Such as in Baby announcement cards, late 19th early 20th c.)

5. In addition to thousands of art works & writings illustrating Christ’s, John the Baptist’s, prophets, apostles, saints, & others’ descents into the underworld. For different reasons, but mainly, to preach the gospel & rescued souls out by resurrection. Many baptismal fonts were symbolical types of the early to later Christians’ descent into the underworld to battle demons there, & like Christ, & those who also descended, they also free souls, & like hand clasping angelic guides, they help them through the dangerous watery deep. Thus, hand & wrist grasping to help those out of the fonts, were like ascensions out of the underworld of death. They went down as a type of ritualistic death, then are raised to life, (by hand & wrist grasping covenants). They are then anointed again, & clothed in a white robe, symbolic of the resurrection & deification themes.

The descent & Baptism for the dead, later legendized: Christ preaching the gospel to the spirits in prison & baptism for the dead, in some areas of Christendom, became the later masses & liturgical rituals for the dead. Then much later, the corrupt sales of indulgences, where it was claimed by those who sold the indulgences, that as soon as the coin in the coffer rings, a soul from purgatory springs. Other versions of it faded off further into the much later legends & folklore about fairy type winged nymphs, & water-way creatures, & some classes of water-babies, that were believed to be unbaptized babies who had died without baptism. Amongst these, are those that haunted the lakes, rivers & wooded areas near water ways. Upon hearing their cries, one could say a baptismal prayer & thus baptize them to set them free.³⁴

6. Christ’s world wide treks, eventually faded off into the later German traditions about a blond hair, female fairy type gift giver, called Christkindl = (German for Christ-child’s wanderings). This, later became the Kriss Kringle legends, & eventually the X-ing out of Christ from Christmas into Xmas. Such as during the much later commercializations of Santa Claus, & his mythical frosty annual Christmas flights around the world, to deliver the latest electronic toys, gadgets, & goodies.³⁵

7. Anointing of oil in the early Christian mysteries faded off into coronation ceremonies done to anoint Christian Kings & Queens to their thrones. Plus, the coronation ceremonies of later ecclesiastical leaders, & the ceremonies to Knighthood, amongst different Knight Orders.³⁶

8. White garments of the early Christian mysteries, eventually became White-Sunday, or Whitsuntide, & the later giving of new clothing during Easter times.³⁷

9. The oaths or vows done in early Christian mysteries, later became fraternalized in later freemasonry, oaths sworn on the holy books, as done by Nobles, Earls, Barons, & Royalities of Christendom. To fade off into the hand clasping oaths in 'paying homage' ceremonies between Christian Kings, Queens, Nobles & Knights. To be fraternalized further in later oaths to political office, oaths on the holy book in courts to "tell the truth." To be fraternalized further in the boy scout oaths & hand clasp.³⁸

10. The different types of hand & wrist grips done in early Christian mysteries faded off into later hand & wrist grips done in later versions of greeting the wandering Christ. In numerous depictions of realm travels, in prophets, saints, & Christ going in & out of different realms of existences. For examples: The descent into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the abyss & the Anastasis = resurrection. In ascensions & assumptions into heaven. In early to later Christian wedding hand clasping traditions, & the sacred sacraments of marriage. To be later fraternalized in the hand & wrist grasping done in later freemasonry, & even the boy scouts.³⁹

11. Eternal wedding ceremonies faded off into the later versions of tying the knot, or joining the groom & bride by the hands to wed them for unto death do they part. Fragments of their union in the after life realms became symbols in stone tombs, or grave markers that show the hand of the groom & hand of the bride joined together in a hand clasp. This was to symbolize their union & welcoming each other in the after life. "What God has joined together, let no one divide asunder." Also, 2 hands depicted clasping together on rings, or 2 separate rings with hands that clasp together to make one ring. This symbolism kept in remembrance the later concepts of eternal-love, in that the ring or circle has no beginning or end, & thus is symbolic of the type of love that is eternal.⁴⁰

12. The Godhead, thus believed in some areas of Christendom, to be 3 in 1, or only 1, this eventually developed into strange depictions of three heads on one body Godhead. Or three faces on one head, Godhead. Or three rabbits touching ears in a triangle pattern, or three circle symbols, three triangles, or the triangle with the all seeing eye. Though some areas of Christendom depicted the Godhead as three separate individual men, three identical looking men, three different looking men, one older than the other. Three men joined together to symbolize their oneness. It so happened that as anti-body beliefs discouraged depicting the Godhead as being too human in their images, different non-human symbols developed, such as star symbols, triangles, & circles. Plus, in a lot of cases, just the hand of God extending out of heaven from above, to do different types of finger language symbols of blessing, etc.⁴¹

13. Deification, theosis, Christian moral perfection, (becoming a god or goddess), became the martyrs' rewards. This eventually faded off into extreme sufferings and deprivations of the Christian hermits, monks, and nun orders, out in the deserts & other monastic orders. Eventually developed, deification-substitutes for martyrdom, in their penance systems of self inflicting sufferings of different types. These were believed to replace the sufferings of martyrdom, which qualified the sufferer to be rewarded with deification & perfection. Also developed were deification themes in Ladders to heaven, with each rung representing a Christ like traits, such as love, charity, kindness, chastity, humility, etc., progressively developing each trait, adding to the others, by going up further on the ladder. Plus, with hand & wrist grasping at the top of the ladders, or the crown, all represented the ascension up the ladder to Christian moral perfection & godhood, or deification. These types of "works" were later rejected by later Christians, & god-making, or studying to become god(s), or goddesses, became a discarded doctrine by many. But to also later be further argued against, rejected & mocked as satanic. Though different versions of Christian god-making, & going off to monasteries to study to become more divine, did survived & are still debated over. It also became blended in with the legendization of what the Godhead was said to be like. God's physical glorified body was argued over as being not physical, but spiritual. The physical resurrection eventually faded out, in some areas to become spiritual-resurrections. Thus, as anti-body views & philosophies of the Greeks influenced Jewish & Christian Christological views, & the Trinitarian interpretations of what the Godhead was said to be like. They also clashed with other controversies over if there was a physical resurrection in deification, or one that said that eventually, physical bodies weren't going to be needed in the eternal world. Thus, later versions of deification were affected by the later descriptions of the Godhead, that were argued over. Plus, the unscriptural formulas & words that were used to somehow make the Godhead into 3 in 1, or 1 in 3, for it was decreed that there could only be "one God." Thus, deification was changed, as to what the deified Christian would become, as the descriptions about the nature of what God was believed & argued was like, also changed from having a physical body type, in human shape. Into a non-physical, non-human shape, a bodiless 'god' without body, parts or passions.⁴² Consequently, later legendized versions of deification have the deified Trinitarian believing Christians as somehow being absorbed into the mystical essence of a bodiless one 'god,' or "Godhead." Into a formless deification & state of being, that didn't have a physical body, or need of a resurrected body any more. But a divine type of incomprehensible 'oneness,' that somehow filled the universe to be everywhere present, but not confined into being in one place at a time.⁴³

14. Part of deification themes is its complete opposite, demonification. One of the reasons for deification is that it is the hope of Christ & our Divine Parents, that the human family doesn't become like the rebellious fallen angels, or become demonified, for this would be according to the devil's & demons' plans & post fall from heaven activities to bring about their negative plots & plans. However, on the complete opposite side of the extreme, if different ones should become gods or goddesses, by following Christ's gospel & example, this glorifies the Deities, & expands their kingdoms, thrones, principalities, dominions, & families in the heavens throughout space. For their gods' or goddesses' made so by their plan of deification, or their plan set forth in the pre-existence council in heaven, is better than them having retrogressed down into becoming like the devil & his demons, in demonification. For Christ & our Divine Parents would rather that we become like them, than they would that we become like the devil & his demons. While on the other hand, the left hand path, the devil & his fallen angel demons would rather that the human family develop all of their negative devilish traits so that damned souls will become miserable & ever spiritually blackened, like unto themselves, & thus increase their devilish domains, with the Devil reigning over them, by force, as their 'god.' He having sought to take over God the Father's glory & sought, in his pride, to dethrone the Most High God.

The Two Ways: This is part of the ancient doctrine of the 2 way, the 2 extremes. The right hand path of righteousness, & the left hand path of ever increasing darkness, wickedness on down towards demonification. Demonification was later legendized in the many myths, stories, art works, & tales about underworld creatures, haunted forests, streams & lakes, underwater demons of the lakes, & oceans, down into which the fallen angels were believed to have fallen. The blackened demons depicted in art, later to become literalized, as used to justify enslaving the black race, under slavery racial issues. Legendized further in the myths, & legends about trolls, dwarfs, elves, goblins, & the underground folk, some classes of water nymphs, & water spirits, all of which lore said were different races of the fallen angels. Demonification later became legendized in the occult, black magical arts, & modern Satanism, & secret societies. The symbols, rituals, sayings of scriptures, the Lord's prayer, the white robes are all reversed, turned upside down. Such as white to blackness, & the developing of all the negative devilish traits, in opposition to the Christ like traits of love, kindness, charity, & Christian moral perfection. Instead of being clothed in white, with Whitesunday as a later reminder of the Easter baptismal robes, this is reverse to the putting on of black robes, & Black Sabbath.⁴⁴

15. Some early Christian began to look for excuses to reject the law. Some of them took their stance to even a greater extreme, than Paul had intended. Some of Paul's converts, seemed to have interpreted Paul's teaching to mean that "grace alone" was it, that they didn't need the law of Moses, but some may have even taken it further than that and thought that they didn't even need to live the teachings of Christ.⁴⁵

NEGATIVE CONSEQUENCES & PRODUCTS OF APOSTASIES

1. As individuals & people rebel against the teachings of prophets, apostles, & their consciences, they fall under Satan's & the demons' powers & become more & more past "past feeling," (Eph. 4:11-32). This happens also as the Spiritual witness to truth from the Holy Spirit also withdraws, for such a ones ignore, or reject the Holy Spirit's promptings, & warnings to repent, as they continue on in habitual sins. Thus, the negative consequences of habitual vices, sins, & rebellious rejection against the prophets & apostles, results in the loss of spirituality. Plus, in all kinds of personal problems, & family problems that spread out into affecting, in negative ways, societies, & areas of the world.

2. With Apostasies also comes retrogression away from being counted worthy to receive more light & truth. Any truths that might have been given earlier, or then, are often ridiculed, rejected & polemically argued against, or not heeded, read, heard or used to better their souls, & societies. Thus, the light-of-truths given are either lost, destroyed by the wicked & apostates. Or, thrown away, or even outlawed. The truths might also not get studied, thus not lived, & consequently, not used to improved individuals' or societies' negative situations. The continual flow of spiritual truths & divine knowledge stops. New revelations are withheld as the Lord sees that most people have rejected & don't live what had been given earlier. The consequences & products of all this are that the light of truth is withdrawn & a spiritual dark age follows, which are times of retrogression.

3. Often, those who have apostatized will have nothing to do with their former faith, & go on in their own straying ways. While others, bitter, will often join the corrupt rivals that are fighting against the truth. Or they'll stir up those in rival corrupt clerical positions of power, & civic positions of power, to seek after those who remain faithful to the truth. Doing so, in some cases, to martyr them, destroy the church, & places of worship. Plus, to confiscate or take their wealth & properties, while seeking their holy writings to destroy them. Or, find-fault with them, looking for passages in them to distort & vilify them with.

4. Truths once taught, eventually turn to fables, legends & myths as they, & the rituals get blended in with the later products of earlier apostasies.

5. As the positive traits of the gospel are replaced by negative traits of Satan, & his fallen angels: The poor remain poor, & get poorer, as the rich greed for more & become richer. Instead of having all things in common, different classes arise. Crimes increase as people don't keep the commandments, plus the other positive teachings.

6. The people, instead of being perfected, sanctified and deified, they become more and more superstitious, carnal, devilish, sensual, and become more and more demonified, & retrogress down towards demonification.

7. The gospel answers that explained the whole journey of souls through different realms of existences. That explains the whole purpose of life, & what the challenges & tests of life are all about. These get lost, forgotten & or legendized away. Or, when those divine answers get rejected & replaced with false theories, false doctrines, & dogmas. The shield of protection which the gospel answers gave is removed, leaving the people open to all kinds of troubling incomprehensible formulas of false doctrines, false philosophies, & contentions.

8. The different false doctrines, dogmas and incomprehensible formulas created by the uninspired mixtures of false philosophies, & legendized beliefs, sometimes get infused into laws. Ones that are enforced as dogmatic laws & beliefs that are mandated as needing to be accepted & believed by the people. Heavy taxes & forced support of false teachers, & thought policing forces, often follow. As such things are built up by those in positions of power, to try to enforce the State religions that gained power over their rivals.

9. Those not part of the State religion experience a lack, or loss of many religious freedoms. Often followed by persecutions, banishments, imprisonments, heavy fines, forced tithing-taxes, confiscations of property, thought policing, book burnings of their beliefs, & suppressions. Especially, as laws are decreed that forbids their faith from being preached, their literature from being distributed, or posted, & practiced. In extreme cases, they could be hunted down & martyred.

10. Civilizations fall to wars, corruption, & secret societies. Buildings, & people are destroyed or abandoned, or turned to ancient ruins. Then, later to be discovered by other people, who try to figure out what happened, if no writings are available to tell the sad tale.

13. The heavens withhold further light & truth, & the inspiration to invent new things to improve the human families' conditions. To overcome physical challenges, etc. Especially during times of apostasy, after seeing how the fallen humanity will only use such things for evil purposes, rather than for the intended good hoped for. The devil and his fallen angels use these eras of darkness to increase more sufferings, as what light & truth once given are then perverted, misused, & counterfeited. Plus, as the good inventions once inspired, are corrupted, perverted and weaponized for endless wars & contentions.

14. Different ones that come across fragments of truth, or try to be good, use what little light & knowledge they gain to improve themselves & others, despite the evils all around them. A lot of saintly, good & honorable people, still try to live those truths, & follow the good principles learned, even during times of apostasies.

15. As different controversies arose during times of apostasy, one controversy seems to affect other doctrines, which once contaminated, starts to affect other doctrines, & their ritual counterparts. In the case with historic Christianity, for example, the Christological controversy of the 2nd & 3rd century, affected the beliefs in the basic concepts of what God was believed to be like, his shape, form, image, nature(s) & so forth. This controversy affected the copies of scriptures that were produced, many which were written & worded in ways to counter, or established the doctrines of the different rival sects that wrote against each other. Thus, the canonical scriptural controversy, about what should, & shouldn't go into the canon of accepted scriptures. This was affected by the Christological & Trinitarian controversies. While the Christological issue also affected some aspects of Pre-existence themes, in that some believed Christ didn't pre-exist. But also, Christology issues affected the Trinitarian Controversy & deification themes, as to what a man or woman was to become like, when deified a god or goddess. So the controversy over there being a physical-resurrection, or just a spiritual one, affected many other beliefs & ritualistic types: Baptism, garment types, deification themes, etc. The Trinitarian Controversy affected also deification themes, for in being perfected, deified, it was believed that the Christian would become one with the three in one trinity. The desire to be purified from sins to thus be perfected & live with God, these aspects of deification themes were affected by the later Sale of Indulgences Controversy. Which were the beliefs that, money paid to the church could buy good deeds done by the saints, which counted as proxy good deeds for buyers of saintly-merits. Their good deeds applied by proxy to the sinner, & even dead relatives, could help in cleansing & perfecting their souls so that they could be saved out of purgatory, or wouldn't have to even go there, if they purchase of indulgences & merits where a large enough amount, or an accumulation of amounts. It was later believed that this could also reduce the time that the buyer, or his dead relatives had to spend in purgatory burning out their imperfection. Thus, the Sale of Indulgences affected later versions of Salvation for the Dead & perfection themes. The Investiture Controversy affected the rituals of later Christian versions of the mysteries of washing, anointing, coronation ceremonies, selecting-different-ones for positions of authority. As did also the Simony Controversy, that of different ones buying church clerical positions, & how the church accepted money from the rich or those who paid for others to be put into positions of clerical or civic offices. The sale of Indulgences controversy also affected the salvation by works or grace alone controversy. Such as during the Reformation & post-Reformation era.

Part 1: Ancient Antagonists Against early Christians:
Their Charges, Slanders, Propaganda Tactics, Persecutions, Methods of Tortures & Martyrdoms that Caused Many to Apostatize

In this section, this study hopes to balance out the critics' arguments by also noting the early Christians' answers. Those not familiar with the arguments will be given a chance to critically think through them with the help of those answers, & to become familiar with a few basic tactics & negative uses of disinformation methods used to vilify early Christians. As some of these methods & tactics are exposed, the readers might start to be able to critically think through, but if prayerful, also spiritually discern &, feel the demonic spiritual negative energy behind the negative arguments of the ancient critics. They might also note that when they are repeated by later critics, those polemics will become more & more transparent, for they have already been answered to a certain extent. However, because the earlier doctrines behind those earlier answers had, in some areas of later Christendom, faded off into legends & later fables. We ought to go back to understanding those earlier doctrines as earlier answers, for they're like a divine shield against the later repeated attacks of 17th through 19th-century-critics, down to modern repeated uses of those polemics, by Atheists.⁴⁶

Ancient Issues Answered by Earlier Christian Doctrines, later Fabled

SOME OF THE ANCIENT ISSUES:⁴⁷ The early anti-Christians brought up a number of issues & questions that were answered by early Christian apologists, such as Origen, Tertullian, Justin Martyr, & others. There were a number of doctrines they used to help them in their responses to different early anti-Christians, such as Celsus, Julian the Apostate & others. Some of the doctrines used to answer early anti-Christians, before they later became legendized, rejected by later Christians, or blended with other doctrines in the slow process of passing away into fables, or changed & mixed in with other issues in later centuries, were: 1. The Pre-existence. 2. Christ preached the gospel in the spirit world. 3. Christ's world-wide-trek. 4. Deification and perfection in the after life. 5. The spiritual gifts.

PRE-EXISTENCE: ANCIENT POLEMICS #1: 1. Christianity is not of ancient origin. 2. What about the millions of souls prior to the time of Christ? How will they be saved? 3. Why was Christ sent down from heaven into just one corner of the earth? 4. Christianity derives its mysteries and doctrines from pre-Christian paganisms' mythologies, & mysteries.

EARLY CHRISTIANS' ANSWERS: 1. Christianity is of ancient origin because Christ and his gospel pre-existed before the creation of the world. 2. Christ was the divine Spirit that had appeared and talked to Adam and all the prophets from the beginning. And because the gospel was preached from the beginning through angelic messengers, and prophets in all lands; millions of souls before the time of Christ's birth were saved too. 3. Christ came down from heaven to be born into one corner of the earth in order to fulfill prophecies. However, if the critics want to see numerous "Christ's" throughout the world, they should have noted the prophets that were sent into all the world to represent Christ. 4. Christianity didn't borrow from the pagans' mythologies and mysteries, for it was the other way around. Why are there similarities between the Christians and the pagans? It's because the fallen angels counterfeited the gospel after they heard it preached by the true prophets in the different nations.

GOSPEL PREACHED TO SPIRITS IN PRISON
ANCIENT POLEMICS #2: 1. Do you Christians really believe that Christ descended into the infernal regions in order to convert souls there too? 2. If so, this doctrine is an absurd apology which you invented, and are deceived by. 3. Noting parallels between pagan versions of the descent and that of the Christians; one critic suggests that the Christians' versions were borrowed from the pagans.

EARLY CHRISTIANS' ANSWERS: 1. Yes, early Christians do believe in this doctrine. Christ had great success there too. (This doctrine also helped them answer the ancient issues as to how the millions of souls who lived and died before the time of Christ could get a fair chance to hear the gospel and be saved too). 2. And because Christ and his servants did preach the gospel there, numerous souls accepted it. Thus, they were set free from the spirit prison house and ascended into paradise. 3. If Christ's gospel had pre-existed even before his birth in the flesh, and even before the creation of the world. Then this doctrine, (the descent), wouldn't have been borrowed (from paganism) by early Christians either. But rather, the parallels to it in paganism would suggest that it had been borrowed from the prophets, perverted and legendized by the pagans. Besides, this doctrine was predicted by certain prophets before the time of Christ, but it had also been removed from some of the critics' manuscripts.

CHRIST'S WORLD WIDE TREK ANCIENT POLEMICS #3: 1. The pagans' gods have extended the boundaries of their kingdoms beyond the seas and path ways of the sun; whereas the Christians' god couldn't have because he can't even save them from their persecutors in this life. 2. Early Christians believed, God only speaks to them and doesn't care about other nations. 3. Early Christians believe that they alone will be saved while everyone else will be roasted.

EARLY CHRISTIANS' ANSWERS: 1. Christ showed is superiority over all rulers by entering into their several provinces, and summoning men out of them to be subject to himself. Also, Christ entered into numerous nations and islands of the sea, many of which are unknown to us, but known to him. Upon entering these nations, he extended the boundaries of his kingdom far beyond what any earthly king or ruler could do. In these different areas of the world to which Christ went to, are the people of Christ. He knows them, and they know of him and worship him as King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. 2. Christians don't believe that God only speaks to them alone, for he spoke to many other nations of the world through prophets. Thus, he loves and cares about other nations too. For Christ not only descended into hades to preach the gospel, but he also went to all the earth, in order that people could be saved wherever they were. 3. Thus, many others besides the Christians get to escape the fire, for these same reasons. (Romans 8:38-39).

DEIFICATION & PERFECTION: ANCIENT POLEMICS #4: 1. Christians teach that they will become perfect. 2. In the resurrection, dead bodies will rise up. 3. Deification is an old worn out myth. 4. After having created the heavens and the earth, why did Christ come down into the body of a man in order to work with wood? And why did he pick such a weak human body to live out his life in such a low ranked manner? Was it to see what was happening here?

EARLY CHRISTIANS' ANSWERS: 1. Christians do teach that they can become perfect in the after life. 2. The body will be changed, glorified, & perfected in the resurrection. 3. The different versions of deification in mythologies were correct concepts which the pagan nations had retained, though in apostate forms. 4. Why did Christ become a man? To show us how to become Gods.

THE SPIRITUAL GIFTS: ANCIENT POLEMICS #5: 1. The miracles of the Christians are magical tricks. 2. Their miracle stories are borrowed from pagan mythology.

EARLY CHRISTIANS' ANSWERS: 1. Because Moses was believed to have been a magician, according to the Egyptians; then you-Jews ought to first give us the reasons why you believe that he was a true prophet. Then we Christians will tell you why we believe him to be, and our own prophets, as true prophets too. 2. The miracles were not borrowed from similar stories in paganism, but rather, they were brought about by the powers of God. The spiritual gifts that the Jews once had, have now passed on to the early Christians.

SOME OF THESE ANSWERS IN MORE DETAILS: When a lot of these doctrines retrogressed into later fables, these earlier answers became lost in the later polemics of later anti-Christian charges, that had kept alive the same types of issues. Though there were some later Christians that tapped into speculative responses that used hints to these earlier doctrines, they weren't the full explanations of the doctrines. Instead, they made use of earlier Christian apologetics' earlier answers, as cited from many of the earlier Christian fathers' responses, to the same types of issues, answered centuries earlier. The later anti-Christian writers, for examples, of the 1900s, also used the ancient critics' logic, tactics, & mirrored the same types of issues in their rejections of later Christianity, as if they'd recycled the ancient polemics. They also ignored those answers which had been given earlier, for they knew of the early Christian apologists' responses, which would have answered their repeated issues. But, instead of accepting the early Christian apologists' answers, some of these critics, like T. W. Doane, & others, tried to use the early Christian apologists' inspired answers, as "evidences" for their later charges! An example of this was when T. W. Doane, in his Bible Myths,⁴⁸ cites from Clement of Alexandria, who spoke of Christ not only descending into hades to preach the gospel, but how he went to all the earth so that people could be saved wherever they were.⁴⁹ Christ's descent into hell, became for Doane, not an answer, but a polemical issue, for he suggested that the doctrine was borrowed from other pagan nations who had similar beliefs. Doane, like many modern Atheists, also ignored the other part of the answer, that Clement of Alexandria had given, & that would have explained the reasons why there are parallels. How that if Christ had gone to other nations, those nations' knowledge of Christ's descent, resurrection, & world trek, could have also become legendized in those other nations' later mythologies. Thus, the parallel stories to the original in early Christianity, could have survived down through the centuries to eventually become those mythologies. Such is the nature of apostasies, for they are long periods of time, during which doctrines fade off to become later myths, fables & stories, where all kinds of things are mixed in to distort the original doctrines or core beliefs.

For example: Pierre Honore notes how different doctrines, or historical events could eventually be turned into faded memories, legends, & fables. In the case with the ancient Americas' wandering Great White God traditions,⁵⁰ he used ancient Rome & Christ, as an example: "Suppose all our written records had perished, with the greater part of our civilization, and chronicles after us were trying to reconstruct our distant past from word-of-mouth traditions, legends and fairy-tales, the memories of simple people. Such people might just have heard of ancient Rome, perhaps of Julius Caesar, but they would not be able to give any sort of date. [However] ...there would be one story particularly prevalent, about a man born in the East as a savior, who preached wisdom and kindness and taught men to be good to one another, but who was then killed by men and ascended to Heaven and promised one day to return. All this the chroniclers would meticulously put down, but they would never be sure which was pure legend, which was history, and which a mixture of the two. It was rather like that when the chroniclers of the New World set out to re-create the past from the survivors' tales."⁵¹

T. W. Doane also ignored the answers that early to later 1900s Christian writers used to answer the same types of charges! Doane cites from John P. Lundy, Monumental Christianity, many times, & uses Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Tertullian, Irenaeus, Minucius Felix, as sources for his vilification purposes. But ignores also the answers to his own issues that they could have offered him.⁵² Lundy, late 19th c., Christian: "Infidelity has been accustomed to say, from the time of [Charles François] Dupuis^[53] to the present, that Christianity is only a sort of copy of ancient Paganism: that it has no new ideas, and must therefore be rejected. But where did Paganism get its sublime conceptions of God, its notions of immortality and human destiny? Whence did all ancient nations derive them, hold them, and agree so marvellously about them? This universal faith must have an adequate cause; and Christianity is but the more full, clear, true and glorious exponent of it all.... If Christ was before Abraham, [pre-existence theme] as He claimed to be, then surely He must have manifested Himself to other nations [Christ's world wide trek theme] beside the Jews, or other nations, including the Jews, must have derived their religious systems and ideas from some common source." (Note, emphasis & identifying comments added).⁵⁴

Note here, how T. W. Doane, late 19th century anti-Christian writer, who cites Lundy, neglected, or rejected John P. Lundy's answer, as to why there are parallels to early Christianity, in the pagan mystery religions. The answer was that if Christ, as the first born Spirit son of our Divine Parents, had thus pre-existed before being born in the flesh. Plus, had appeared unto prophets in other nations before Christianity. Or had given the gospel to other nations before his birth to Mary. Then not only were other nations not neglected, but they also must have fell into times of apostasy. If so, then they legendized the gospel preached to them by their own nations' prophets, & because they fell away from their message, only fragments of it survived on down to the later time when Christ restored it again, when he began his earthly mission. Thus, the reason why there are parallels between early Christianity & the pagans, was those fragments of that earlier gospel given, had survived in basic themes of the mythologies of paganism, thus the parallels noted. Which fragments still retained their former prophetic hints towards Virgin Born "gods" who would live & die, descend into the infernal regions, and rise again to be resurrected.⁵⁵ But, not accepting this answer, T. W. Doane, in his Bible Myths, passes over an additional witness & answer to the charge of "borrowing." In so doing, he also includes the following answers thus rejected, as if it were evidence for another case of borrowing. That of the doctrine of Christ's descent into hell to preach the gospel in the spirit prison, this Doane, alleges was 'borrowed' from the paganism, because the belief can be found in pre-Christian cultures around the world, that have their own versions of "gods" descending into hell. This is often how critics try to explain the origins of beliefs. They will look for pre-Christian time parallels & claim that such things were borrowed & used to construct the beliefs, or rituals that came later, during later dispensations, when the gospel was restored again, after times of apostasies. Thus, they reject the idea that God can send new prophets to restore things again, or that Christ restored the gospel during his time too. These ancient to modern critics will then come up with these recycled methods of rejection in attempting to explain the origins for divine doctrines restored, as being anything but divine, but "borrowed," from old worn out myths.⁵⁶

For examples of these being restorations from time to time, the early Christian apologist, Justin Martyr, 110-165, used the predictions of Sibyl, in his address to the Greeks, when he wrote that Jesus Christ, "...being the Word of God, inseparable from Him [God] in power, having assumed man, who had been made in the image and likeness of God, restored to us the knowledge of the religion of our ancient forefathers, which the men who lived after them abandoned through the bewitching council of the envious devil, and turned to the worship of those who were no gods."⁵⁷ Note the pre-existence themes used by Justin here.

Another example is: One of the pupils of Clement of Alexandria, Origen of Alexandria, 185-230-254. He wrote 8 books during the 3rd century A.D., in response to Celsus, thus, they are now entitled: Origen Against Celsus. Celsus wrote "On The True Doctrine" against the early Christians about 170-180 A.D. Celsus must have been aware that some of the early Christians believed in a restoration, or times of "refreshing." However, upon noting this belief, he rejects the idea, for he wrote how, "...God does not need to amend His work afresh." Origen responded by writing that God, not being neglectful, performed, at different times, numerous corrective labors in order to care for the whole world, & the people on it.⁵⁸

Origen: "...It is, then, always in order to repair what has become faulty that God desires to amend His work afresh. For although, in the creation of the world, all things had been arranged by Him in the most beautiful & stable manner, He nevertheless needed to exercise some healing power upon those who were laboring under the disease of wickedness, & upon a whole world, which was polluted as it were thereby. But nothing has been neglected by God, or will be neglected by Him; for He does at each particular juncture what it becomes Him to do in a perverted & changed world. And as a husbandman performs different acts of husbandry upon the soil & its productions, according to the varying seasons of the year, so God administers entire ages of time, as if they were, so to speak, so many individual years, performing during each one of them what is requisite with a reasonable regard to the care of the world; & this, as it is truly understood by God alone, so also is it accomplished by Him."⁵⁹

Celsus argued that Christ had begun to teach his doctrine only during Christ's life time. Origen responded by saying that Christ had not only spoken to the prophets of the Old Testament times, but He also had prophets in other nations who represented Him too. Christ had also spread the gospel throughout the whole world through these prophets and had personally visited the different areas of the world too. For Christ showed His superiority to all rulers by entering into their several provinces where he summoned men out of them to be subject to Himself.⁶⁰

Origen: "Celsus next makes certain observations of the following nature: 'Again, if God, like Jupiter in the comedy, should, on awaking from a lengthened slumber, desire to rescue the human race from evil, why did He send this Spirit of which you speak into one corner (of the earth)?' [Note here Celsus must have been aware of Christ's pre-existence themes, his spirit being sent down to be clothed in a body.] He ought to have breathed it alike into many bodies, and have sent them out into all the world. Now the comic poet, to cause laughter in the theater, wrote that Jupiter, after awakening, despatched Mercury to the Athenians and Lacedaemonians; but to not think that you have made the Son of God more ridiculous in sending Him to the Jews?" Observe in such language as this the irreverent character of Celsus... [Origen answers] We stated, indeed, in what precedes, that it was not as if awakening from a lengthened slumber that God sent [pre-existence theme, sent] Jesus to the human race, who has now, for good reasons, fulfilled the economy of His incarnation, [Christ's pre-existence Spirit was clothed in a body at birth,] but who has always conferred benefits upon the human race. For no noble deed has ever been performed amongst men, where the divine Word did not visit the souls of those who were capable, although for a little time, of admitting such operations of the divine Word. [Note the pre-existence themes, Christ pre-existed & did 'visit' different ones before his birth to Mary.] Moreover, the advent of Jesus apparently to one corner (of the earth) was founded on good reasons, since it was necessary that He who was the subject of prophecy should make His appearance among those who had become acquainted with the doctrine of one God, and... the writings of His prophets, and who had come to know the announcement of Christ, and that He should come to them at a time when the Word was about to be diffused [or spread over a wide area] from one corner over the whole world." [Note here, Christ's world-wide-treks themes].

"And therefore there was no need that there should everywhere exist many bodies, and many spirits like Jesus, in order that the whole world of men might be enlightened by the Word of God. For the one Word was enough, having arisen as the 'Sun of righteousness,' to send forth from Judea His coming rays into the soul of all who were willing to receive Him. But if any one desires to see many bodies filled with a divine Spirit, similar to the one Christ, ministering to the salvation of men everywhere, let him take note of those who teach the Gospel of Jesus in all lands in soundness of doctrine and uprightness of life, and who are themselves termed "christs" by the holy Scriptures, in the passage, "Touch not Mine anointed, and do not My prophets any harm." [I Chron. 16:22 & Ps. cv. 15. Note the belief that there were also prophets, anointed ones, preaching about Christ & the gospel 'in all lands' or other nations. Thus] "...there are many christs in the world, who, like Him, have loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and therefore God, the God of Christ, anointed them also with the 'oil of gladness.'" [This was Origen's answer to the irreverent language of Celsus]. For "the Word, knowing that the nature of God is unaffected by sleep, may teach us that God administers in due season, and as right reason demands, the affairs of the world. It is not, however, a matter of surprise that, owing to the greatness and incomprehensibility of the divine judgments, ignorant persons should make mistakes, and Celsus among them. There is therefore nothing ridiculous in the Son of God having been sent to the Jews, amongst whom the prophets had appeared, in order that, making a commencement among them in a bodily shape, He might arise with might and power upon a world of souls, which no longer desired to remain deserted by God." ⁶¹

Thus, the late 19th century anti-Christian writer, rejecting these types of clear answers he knew earlier Christians had given, T. W. Doane, rejects or ignores another source when he cites St. Clement of Alexandria. For his answer not only answers the early anti-Christian charge of "neglect," but also the "borrowing" charge. Doane: "And St. Clement of Alexandria, who flourished at the beginning of the third century, is equally clear and emphatic as to Jesus' descent into hell. He says: 'The Lord preached the gospel to those in Hades, as well as to all in earth, in order that all might believe and be saved, wherever they were....'" ⁶² Clement is not the only one that has made these types of statements in the early Christian writings, for many others testified that Christ wasn't neglectful, but that all before Christ's time, all then, & all now would eventually get to hear the gospel. Donald Bloesch, a noted evangelical observed: "We do not wish to build fences around God's grace.... We can affirm salvation on the other side of the grave, since this has scriptural warrant." ⁶³ Many, if not through prophets speaking about Christ amongst their own nations, or through angelic messengers, or Christ's visits to them. Then by the gospel being preached to the spirits in the after life spirit-prison, & or in paradise. Thousands of art works also show these events happening too, as angels, prophets, saints, Christ, John the Baptist, the apostles, & St. Mary, etc., were all depicted preaching the gospel in the lower realms. Plus, depicted as rescuing souls out, lifting them, &, or resurrecting them, by different types of hand & wrist grasps. ⁶⁴ To then guide them over to heaven or paradise, where St. Peter is also often depicted at the doors or gate of paradise, greeting souls about to enter, by hand & wrist clasping welcomes. ⁶⁵

Justin Martyr, 110-165, responding to the borrowing charge too, explained that the reason why there are so many parallels between the early Christians & the heathen mythology of other nations was this: "And these things were said both among the Greeks & among all nations where they [the demons] heard the prophets foretelling that Christ would specially be believed in; but that in hearing what was said by the prophets they did not accurately understand it, but imitated what was said of our Christ, like men who are in error, we will make plain." ⁶⁶

Justin Martyr also wrote about an earlier teaching, that they had been taught: "We have been taught that Christ is the first-born of God, and we have declared above that He is the Word of whom every race of men were partakers; and those who lived reasonably are Christians, even though they have been thought atheists." (ANF, 1:178). Here Justin response to the early anti-Christian charge that Christians were atheists because they didn't worship the pagan Roman gods or goddesses. But also note that the pre-existence themes in these 2 responses of Justin's. The first tells of demons-fallen angels (pre-existence themes), counterfeited the prophecies & what was said by the true prophets among all nations! The other, of Christ's pre-existence as first born of God, whom every race of different people are partakers. For Justin, there were prophets in other nations, just as Origen had also testified, & they had foretold of Christ, thus other nations weren't neglected! Also, if they, the demons in other nations, also heard & counterfeited what the true prophets in other nations said, & thus, set up counterfeits, then that's another reason why there were parallels to the true things, the prophets of God, had preached concerning Christ. ⁶⁷ Thus, with pre-existence themes restored by Christ, as noted by Justin earlier, a lot of age old recycled rejections, questions, & charges got answered again. Thus also, these pre-existence themes, as to what the post-war in heaven, & post-fall from heaven, activities, of their devilish doings, thus included: They were listening to the true prophets in other nations, for they had spread everywhere too, but then they were counterfeiting their teachings, & setting up rival teachings to try to discredit the true divine message that the true prophets had given, for example: "The Mithraic ritual so closely resembled the eucharistic sacrifice to the Mass that Christian fathers charged the Devil with inventing these similarities to mislead frail minds." ⁶⁸

This is one of the basic aspects of apostasies around the world: The true prophets, in ancient times, are visited by Christ, good angels, and or receive revelations about Christ's birth, life, death, descent into the spirit world, resurrection, ascension & promised return. These beliefs are often counterfeited by the fallen angels, or get into the hands of those who pervert, or withheld the teachings, ⁶⁹ or who fall away from them. ⁷⁰ They get passed down to later generations, & eventually they retrogress & faded into rival legends, fables. ⁷¹ & distorted myths, that only retain, in some cases, fragments of their originality. ⁷²

Peter, in the Recognitions of Clement, (1st-4th c.?), answers Clement about how the gospel pre-existed Christianity, that Christ pre-existed & appeared to many righteous pious ones to preach the gospel to them, before his birth to Mary. The point was that the gospel, & the saving powers of it, weren't just for a select few only, or only those who lived during Christ time, but it was for everyone willing to hear & obey it. Thus, Peter, when he encounters Simon Magnus (the magician), he chided him because Simon's "god" saves adulterers & killers, if they know him, but the good, sober, & merciful persons, if they don't know him, even though they are good, still, no mercy is shown them. ⁷³

These earlier clear answers to the ancient critics, though they still offer answers to the later recycled questions of later critics, & investigators. What happened to those answers? Were they preserved somewhere in scattered Christendom's traditions, legends, & old earlier bibles, art works, monuments, & earlier Christian manuscripts? Yes, they were, but they, must have gotten lost, or forgotten to many later generations of Christians for a while, with the exception of those who researched them out. For it takes a lot of research to piece them together from the sources, for now, in later centuries, they're like a giant scatter mosaic, with individual squares, & sections that have been scattered all over & thus have to be restored & put back together, to then step back away to see the bigger picture that would then teach those answers. Thus, also, some of these answers, must have been stashed away, & forgotten in some old libraries, or abandoned because of lack of use. While others got rejected, because other dogmas & controversies dominated, & replaced them, over time. Or they got turned to superstitious fables in other areas, & thus became so distorted & faded that they were of no use by the later generations, when the same criticism got recycled again. Such conditions in later Christendom, may be why different ones like John Sanders, a contemporary Christian writer, while addressing these types of issues wrote: “What is the fate of those who die never hearing the gospel of Christ?” Attempting to answer this in modern times, admits: “Christians have never reached consensus on this important but difficult subject. From the early church fathers to the present day, Christians have not come to one mind on the fate of those who die never hearing the gospel of Jesus Christ.”⁷⁴

Early anti-Christians, & early Christian Apologists: New Testament Times: Some of the early anti Christians were: Chief Priests, Elders, and Scribes, many from the Sanhedrin Jewish council. Early Christians’ Polemical Dilemmas, Them Targeted For Persecutions!
Plus, the Critics’ Double Standards, & Political Religious Ironies!

Despite how early Christians taught many things that could have solved many problems in their communities, before those problems got started, critics blamed them for the problems.⁷⁸

Despite how early Christians taught each other to keep the commandments, plus, Christ’s & his prophets’ & apostles’ moral teachings, and not do criminal activities. Critics, and ancient Roman Government officials didn’t treat them as other real-criminals were. They didn’t allow them to have good legal representations, while other real-criminals at least did. If the early Christians spoke in their defense, they risked having their tongues cut out. If they were suspected, or accused by paid informants, that they were early Christians, but held their tongues, didn’t admit they were. They could be tortured until they confessed they were believers in Christ. If they testified they were Christians, they were tortured for being part of an “illegal religion.”⁷⁹

Clement of Alexandria, (160–200), writing to the Roman emperors: “But for us who are called Christians you have not in like manner cared; but although we commit no wrong—nay ... are of all men most piously and righteously disposed towards the Deity and towards your government— you allow us to be harassed, plundered and persecuted, the multitude making war upon us for our name alone.”⁸⁰

But didn’t the critics want their fellow critics & pagans to live good lives? Did they also want the early Christians to do so also? If so, would that mean that the early Christians should have done a better job of living Christ’s and the apostles’ teachings, like the pagan-criminals should have, in living good pagan ethics? For, unless ancient critics enjoyed being harmed, enjoyed being murdered. Plus, enjoyed having their own children exposed to the elements. Or enjoyed having their own children thrown off cliffs, or set off to the side of roads, exposed to bad weather & gobbled up by wild beasts. But then, not rescued by the State, or in other cases, not rescued by early Christians, who found them.⁸¹

Moreover, unless the ancient critics also enjoyed being robbed, or having their spouse cheating on them, etc., etc. Then, at least we might think, that these ancient critics would have at least given the early Christians credit, for trying to live the good teachings taught them. Plus, credit for many of them in trying not to do the terrible things alleged of them! But instead, the ancient antagonists mocked them for striving towards perfection, while pointing out, & vilifying their human weaknesses & imperfections!⁸²

Despite how early Christians were forbidden to do abortion-murders & other infanticides.⁸³ Critics charged that they were killing babies & eating them.⁸⁴ But what about the babies that pagans murdered in said exposure practices? Weren't the pagan-critics just as guilty? If the early Christians were child-killers, and cannibals, as falsely charged. Why would they then rescue exposed infants, & upon saving their lives, also, along with the State, help take care of them? (Matt. 18:1-6, 10-11, 19:14, etc.)⁸⁵

Despite how early Christians helped feed their own & the communities' poor & needy. Critics blamed them for crop failures, droughts, & other natural disasters.⁸⁶

Despite how earliest Christians taught spouses & family members to love one-another.⁸⁷ Critics charged them with breaking up families & teaching things harmful to communities.⁸⁸ Obviously, differences in beliefs in families are going to create a natural area of some contentions, in whatever combinations: Atheist parents, religionist children, visa-versa. (Luke 12:48-53).

Despite how they gave money to public coffers to help widows, orphans, and the needy. Critics charged early Christians as being robber bands, coming up with all kinds of secret schemes to get gain, & money from everyone they could con.⁸⁹

Despite how paganism had their own immoralities, orgies, & lewdness. Early Christians, who taught morality & against adultery, against fornications, & other deviant sexuality. Despite all these, critics accused them of all types of "secret orgies," during their "secret meetings."⁹⁰

Despite how early Christians taught that they should pray for, & love their enemies. Plus, how they were concerned about helping others in far away lands, through missionary work. The ancient antagonists accused the primitive Christians of 'hatred of the human race.' That they thought that only the Christians would get saved, while everyone else would be roasted by God, like a cook, when God brings the fire! That they were intolerant, & declared that all who had had a chance to accept Christ, but refused, would be condemned to eternal torments. Some, they charged, had foretold the same fate for all the pre-Christians, or non-Christian-world. But, didn't many of these ancient critics know about early Christians' beliefs in pre-existence themes? Yes, some, like Celsus did!⁹¹ But also, didn't they know about salvation for the dead? Christ's world-wide-trek themes, before his birth and after his resurrection? Hadn't they accused Christ of being a wanderer? (Some did, but ignored these doctrinal-answers, when vilifying Christ of being neglectful of pre-Christian peoples, neglectful of other far away lands, & unsuccessful when he went down into the infernal regions of the afterlife, to preach his gospel there too).⁹²

Despite how early Christians' symbols, rituals, clothing symbolism, mysteries, teachings, & greetings were cautious, sacred secrets, & were done to remind them to do good, & do no crimes. Plus, to live a good moral and clean-life, to remain pure & charitable. The ancient critics helped spread false rumors, helped cause different persecutions against the ancient Christians, forcing many of them to become secretive,⁹³ to stay alive.

Critics were suspicious about what early Christians did in their 'secret meetings,' & claimed that they found out they had "secret pass words," & "secret hand-shakes."⁹⁴ "...But, on the whole, the Church was clearly regarded as a secret society of a very dangerous kind, having occult signs and pass-words, and bound together in a confederation which extended over the whole empire..."⁹⁴

Despite how early anti-Christians looked upon early Christian sects as allowing the impure, stupid, silly, & low class criminal type persons into their mysteries. The early Christian apologists continued to answer that those only, who had proven themselves worthy & repentant, were allowed to learn their more sacred secrets of their mysteries. Origen: "Whoever is pure not only from all defilement, but from what are regarded as lesser transgressions, let him be boldly initiated in the mysteries of Jesus, which properly are made known only to the holy and the pure." (ANF, 4:448).⁹⁵

Plus, critics charged them of not only being a "secret cult," but of also of taking 'conspiratorial oaths!' Plotting to overthrow the Roman Empire!⁹⁶ Thus, the critics were concerned about why they also hid what they were doing in the dark, always going out at night, so they wouldn't get caught by the Roman police-soldiers, dress in plain clothing to hunt them down, & spy out their secret doings.⁹⁷

In an account by Sallust, the venerated 12 Tables, the very foundation of Roman law, forbade nightly meetings, thus Pliny's suspicions were understandably aroused. And Pliny was not alone in his apprehension of this early Christian custom. The general public associated nightly meetings with secrecy, & secrecy meant that the early Christians had something to hide. The early Christian Minucius Felix, 200-240, notes the early anti-Christian rhetoric of Marcus Cornelius Fronto (ca. 100-166), who complained that an unlawful & desperate faction, which is leagued together by nightly meetings, were of the types of people skulking & shunning the light to then, in the darkness, so it was suspected, performed secret & nocturnal rites!⁹⁸

Pliny, later found out that the pre-conceived notions that he had, were wrong. He thought for sure that the ancient Christian rites included all kinds of secret, bloody, & barbaric elements. But as he looked deeper into the matter, he seems to have changed his mind. As it was, they sang a hymn (carmen) to Christ as to a god, they took an oath (saramentum) not to commit major crimes, & they had a common meal-all potentially dangerous signs. A carmen was not necessarily a harmless raising of voices; it could also signify an "incantation," the casting of a magical spell. It is in this latter sense that the word is used in the 12 Tables. But of course, the term could also mean just a solemn saying in rhythmical form, (such as singing a hymn? 1 Cor.14:15-17, Matt.26:30, James 5:13, Acts 16:25). The word sacramentum could be equally ambiguous. It could simply mean the oath of allegiance of a soldier, or more sinisterly, the initiation into a mystery in which the candidate took an oath of secrecy & allegiance to the principles of the cult. And such a mystery-oath was not necessarily innocent & harmless, as the case of the Bacchanalia had shown.⁹⁹ But as Pliny the Younger had the early Christians investigated further, he finally had to admit that instead of most of them being at fault in going around secretly to causing harm to their communities, they were actually mostly good people, trying to do good. Consequently: "The younger Pliny was compelled to report to Trajan that the Christians led peaceful and exemplary lives.... Galen described them as "so far advanced in self-discipline and ... intense desire to attain moral excellence that they are in no way inferior to true philosophers."¹⁰⁰

But, despite this, this didn't stop others in acting upon the rumors going around about the evils that early Christians were alleged to be doing. Thus, early Christian symbolism was fostered by the horrors through which the early Christians had to pass through during times of persecutions. The prevalence of symbolism in early Christian art is thought to have been due to fear of detection & punishment, especially if early Christian subjects were depicted openly. Thus, symbols were invented and used as secret signs by which the early Christian brethren & sisters could recognize each other. Plus, all the symbols of Christianity were ordained primarily to teach pure doctrine, and that they were necessarily used to distinguish Christianity from paganism, and as signs and watchwords to discriminate between friend and foe, true and false, hypocrites and genuine Christians. The earlier anti-Christians, such as Caecilius, & Fronto, charged that “they recognize each other by secret marks.” And that: “When they extend the hand for greeting at the bottom of the palm they make a tickling touch and from this they ascertain whether the person who appeared is of their faith.”¹⁰¹

Informants had warned about some of the terrible things the early Christians were known to do in their illegal secret meetings. Roman Imperial rule made it illegal for new associations, new clubs to be formed & hold meetings more than once a month. So with the early Christians allegedly sneaking off to regular “secret cult meetings” to engage in “orgies,” strange meals, performing ritualistic murders, & other things against the Roman government. Such activities rumored against the early Christians were activities that the Roman authorities concerned with. So went the rumors & informants’ stories & charges. Thus, the authorities were pressured that they needed to do something about this “Atheistic” superstitious “cult,” who were said, “hated” humanity, & refused to sacrifice to the pagan Roman gods.¹⁰² Another factor, that must have added to the polemical confusion, were the different groups that were blending Christian ceremonies in with pagan rites, to make perverted mysteries of their own. It could have been to these extreme groups that critics pointed to in order to vilify all Christians, when they didn’t represent the good Christians trying to live moral lives. For example, John wrote to the saints at Pergamos, who were holding to the false & hated doctrine of the Nicolaitans, (Rev.2:15). These were supposed to be a Gnostic sect that taught impure doctrines, practiced impure rituals, encouraged & taught that adultery & fornication were things indifferent, as they also mixed several pagan rites with early Christian ceremonies.¹⁰³ Such groups could have given the rest of early Christianity, a bad name, & reports of such extreme groups could have become fuel to be added to the polemical fires that were used by many early anti-Christians, to vilify them as a whole, rather than contrast the good amongst the bad.

“Sometimes Roman police or soldiers would be given the job of going in plain clothes to the meeting, waiting until they caught the password^[104] and then being let in.... [However,] Many a person who went to meetings of the [early] Christians to spy on them would say to his family the next day. “I can’t see why there is all this talk against the [early] Christians. They’re not planning to overthrow the government. And they didn’t go into the frenzies that some of the people who belong to the mystery religions do.”¹⁰⁵

While some reported positive things, other spies, who had more negative intentions towards the early Christians, might report & claim that the early Christians were up to no good. Because of these accusations, the imperial decrees, & loss of civil rights, with the persecutions & punishments that resulted against the early Christians, that included terror, forced indoctrinations, forced participation in the official Roman sacrificial rites, proof of participation through certifications, & public rejections of Christ & confirmations of ones’ paganism, payments, fines, confiscations of & destruction of properties, confiscation & burnings of the scriptures. Plus, all kinds of different methods of horrible tortures: Being thrown to the lions, being set on fire, strangled, beaten, & many other horrors being done to the early Christians, many early Christians went into hiding or apostatized, going back to their former religions as pagans, etc.¹⁰⁶

Despite how early Christian scriptures & Christ’s sayings, if put into practice, could have decreased crimes, thefts, murders, & other unethical practices in their communities. Critics helped caused the properties, riches, & early Christians’ scriptures to be decreed “illegal,” confiscated & destroyed. Or their properties, & wealth to be split up amongst those who turned them in, so that they could obtain their riches & properties.¹⁰⁷

Roman officials, like how the Jewish chief priests and scribes of Christ’s day, sought to lay hands on Christ & Paul, to have them charged & arrested. They sought to take hold of their words, or vilify their teachings & sayings, as the later critics would do to early Christians’ books & scriptures. “And they watched him, [Christ, as they later did with early Christians] and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.” (Luke 20:19-26, 19:27, 20:20, Matt.22:15–22, 26:21, 59-64, Mark 12:13-17, 14:57-58, John 15:18-20, Acts 6:10-15).

Despite how, before different canons of the New Testament were compiled, the earliest Christians’ scriptures were what the Jews also considered were scriptures from the Old Testament time prophets. Plus other scriptures, like the Book of Enoch. Despite how they were authenticated & accepted prophecies during the earliest Christian times, & used as such. Later, some questioned them, & Enoch’s writings fell out of use, as did other writings. (Was it because Enoch wrote of many pre-existence themes, some rejected in later centuries?) The copies of scriptures, (before the New Testament was compiled with the Old), had passages that were considered authentic prophecies, and writings. Despite this, the critics claimed that they were not authentic writings, & thus charged early Christians as not having credible sources. Or, that perhaps didn’t pass some kind of ancient type of peer-reviews. Critics then set up doubled standards, saying that the early Christians needed to use credible non-early-Christian sources. While the critics could use early Christian sources, in this double standard, but they used such sources, often times taken out of contexts, so they could vilify the early Christians with “their own books.” Thus, different ones like Celsus gloated that the “best evidences,” against the early Christians, is their own writings.¹⁰⁸

Despite this double standard, the critics also set up a lot of no win scenarios, saying that they couldn’t use their own witnesses’ statements in their favor! The reasons given, were because they were mostly “silly,” or “crazy,” women! Or deluded followers, who didn’t witness any authentic divine events, & because their witnesses also betrayed Christ. (Of course the critics used the half truth tactic, by only presenting half the story, & failed to point out how most of those “betrayers,” later were willing to suffer martyrdom for the cause of Christ).¹⁰⁹

Despite how many prophecies used by early Christians did testify of Christ, & what he did, centuries before he did fulfill prophecies. Some of the critics amongst the Jews, were charged by some early Christian apologists, of taking out prophecies, because the Jews knew they could be used by early Christians, in Christ’s defense as fulfilling them.¹¹⁰

Despite how early Antagonists amongst the Jews rejected & asked for authentic evidences for the new revelations given by early Christian prophets & apostles, & Christ, himself. The early Christian apologists challenged them to show how their own prophets were to be believed first, before evidences from early Christians were to be given about early Christian prophets. Show us first how your prophets were true prophets, then we will show you how our prophets are true prophets. Thus, showing also that because your true prophets prophesied of Christ, which prophecies were fulfilled. They were also then not guilty of having given false prophecies, which would have made them false prophets. Then also the evidences for them being true prophets, are also evidences for Christ being their promised Messiah. Plus, that the early Christian prophets are true, for they were the Messiah's new line of true prophets, that they should believe too, as they do with theirs.' (ANF 4:415, Origen Against Celsus, book 1 chap. xlv).

Despite how early Christians were accused of ritualistic murders, & all kinds of unlawful activities & plots against the Roman government. Critics caused the very things (they charged them with), to come upon the early Christians during different eras of martyrdom & persecutions.¹¹¹

Despite how early Christians had vows of chastity & how to dress in modest ways, to reduce lustful thoughts, one towards another. Critics caused early Christian women to be stripped of their clothing, mocked, raped, sold as sex-slaves, or had their naked bodies torn & eaten by lions in their gladiatorial games, & circuses.¹¹²

Despite how the ancient Christians' sacrament was vilified as being a blood drinking cannibalistic meal! Critics' & their fellow pagans' blood thirsty lusts for violence, caused many early Christians to become martyrs, as they suffered awful & bloody deaths in the gladiatorial games & circuses.¹¹³

Despite early Christians were taught to be industrious, thrifty, but generous & kind. Critics charged that they were taking away their jobs, sources of income & causing them economic problems, in their communities.¹¹⁴ Case in point: Had Paul's 2 year missionary & church activities at Ephesus, caused a decline in pagan idol worship? That resulted in the decline of sales of idol worshipping trinkets & supplies? "The manufacture of the images that Pagans worshipers dedicated in the Temple of Artemis found their trade slacking; perhaps Paul had repeated here his Athenian indictment of image worship, or idolatry. One Demetrius, who made silver models of the great shrine for pious pilgrims, organized a protest against Paul and the new faith, and led to the city theater a crowd of Greeks whose catchword, repeated for two hours, was "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!" A local official dissolved the gathering, but Paul thought it the better part of valor to leave for Macedonia." ¹¹⁵

Despite how early Christians worshiped Christ as God, or the Son of God! Critics charged they were "Atheists" because they refused to take part in mandatory Roman sacrificial rites to pagan gods & "divine" Roman Emperors.¹¹⁶

Despite how miracles were done by Christ & in his name! Critics charged them with being done by magical spells, incantations, by the power of devils, while some of the critics practiced such things themselves!¹¹⁷

Part 2: When the Spiritual Gifts Faded Out of the Later Christian Church

The great apostasy slowly took its time, but toll on the different doctrines, rituals, but also the spiritual gifts & the top-ranking leadership positions that went with them. After the original apostles were martyred, or their whereabouts unknown, & there were no longer any more prophets to continue an ever growing canon of scriptures. The later Christians couldn't claim any more to have scriptural producing prophets & apostles amongst them, as also their Jewish forefathers couldn't.¹¹⁸ However, 'scripture' production still went on, but many writings claiming the name of an Apostle, or a Gospel of one of the earliest followers of Christ, would be later questioned as to if they were, or were not actually written by an Apostle, or earliest disciple that knew Christ.¹¹⁹

But with the loss of an on going line of scripture producing leaders, prophets & apostles, the actual spiritual gifts that produced scripture, couldn't be claimed anywhere amongst the Jews & amongst the later Christianity, as being on going. Otherwise we'd have an ever growing Old Testament, with an ever growing New Testament. As it was, the early Christians attempted to preserve what fragments of "the sayings of Jesus," as they could. Plus, the different letters, books, & writings of the Apostles that they could collect. They then had to come up with excuses as to why real divinely inspired scripture producers stopped in the early Church. Had to come up with the best 'substitutes' for divine revelations. Thus, some claimed that they still had prophetic gifts, while others turned to their training in the dialectic arts of arguments & reason, influenced by Greek philosophy & the schools of the times. These things started to taint their thinking & interpretations of scriptures, that they did have, & that were filtered through the lens of philosophy, not through the spiritual gifts.¹²⁰

However, we should give credit to the early Christian nations for preserving as much of the basic elements of the gospel as they did. Many thanks should be given to the different early Christian scribes, copyists, artists, & honest recorders of the different traditions, writings, & doctrines. While we're also sad to read of those early Christian leaders, that handed over their copies of early Christian books, & scriptures, out of fear for their lives, while some didn't. But the ones handed over ended up being destroyed or burned.¹²¹ In addition to this, no thanks to those who perverted & twisted the gospel for their own evil & twisted purposes.¹²² The great apostasy was not God's fault! But it came about as a result of rebellion, sin, and anti-Christ-movements & demonic forces.¹²³ The early church had enjoyed the benefits for which the different spiritual gifts had to offer.¹²⁴ But eventually, the spiritual gifts had faded out of the gospel picture.

Paul names these different spiritual gifts when he wrote to the Corinthians: "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.... For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretations of tongues:..." (1 Cor.12:1, 8-13).

Paul goes on to point out the importance of all these gifts, but also points out, in chapters 13-14, that charity is the greatest of all gifts. And that the gifts are given to certain chosen ones, to keep the people from being led off into an extreme, in which they would think that every thing anyone presents are supposed to be of God. For he wrote: "If the whole church be come together into one place, & all speak with tongues, & there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, & there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all: And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; & so falling down on his face he will worship God, & report that God is in you of a truth. How is it then brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be 2, or at the most 3, & that by course; & let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; & let him speak to himself, & to God....For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." (1 Cor. 14:23-28, & 33).

Another important spiritual gift was "discerning of spirits" (1 Cor.12:10). For "...the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (1 Cor.2:14). It was important for the church to be able to "discern" the Spirit of the Lord, & the spirit of truth, as compared to the counterfeit spirit of Satan. They needed to be able to discern between the 2, so that they would be able to detect false spirits, & false persons who may have been attempting to deceive them. For it seems that there were those who had been deceived, & so the leaders in the early church sought to combat the deceptions as best as they could. (Eph.4:10-19).

Being thus spiritually gifted, or equipped with these different spiritual gifts, they had a lot better chance to deal with the different problems that arose in the different branches of the church. But also they were more equipped to combat those, who with "cunning craftiness," had sought to deceive the people in the different areas of the early church. Than they would have been, had they not had the different spiritual gifts. (Eph.4:10-32; 5:1-17; Rom.16:17-19, Acts 8:5-25).

Bishop, Ignatius, 30–107, enjoyed the spiritual gifts of his position, he tells of knowing things because the Spirit had told him. He wrote to the bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp, "...As to invisible things, pray that they may be revealed unto you, in order that you may lack nothing and that you may have the spiritual gifts in abundance." In a letter to the Philadelphians, he tells how that he had the gift of discerning of spirits, 1Cor.12:10. "Some desired to deceive me as to the flesh; but one does not deceive the Spirit..."¹²⁵ 1Cor.2:13, 12:10, Acts 5:3. It may be that many of the earliest saints, still endowed with the gift of discernment, had detected, by the spirit, the false doctrine that certain persons had tried to bring to the Ephesians. Thus, Ignatius commends them for resisting such teachers: "I have learned that certain persons passed through you from yonder, bringing evil doctrine; whom ye suffered not to sow seed in you, for ye stopped your ears, so that ye might not receive the seed sown by them." (The Apostolic Fathers, 65).

249, Cyprian, Ad Donatum, III, iv, following his baptism, he had a witness of the Holy Ghost, received a "testimony" about his change in life style & in becoming a Christian: "In my heart purified of its sins, a light entered that came from on high.... Immediately in a marvelous manner, I saw certainty succeed doubt."¹²⁶ Peter promised the testimony of the Holy Ghost to those who obeyed, (Acts 2:38–39).

Justin Martyr, 110–165 AD, wrote: "Now, it is possible to see amongst us women and men who possess gifts of the Spirit of God." (ANF 1:243). In his Dialogue With Trypho, a Jew, or one who might have represented the Jews of the 2nd century A.D. Trypho had to face up to the fact that prophets had ended amongst the Jewish race, as Justin points out: "For the prophetic gifts remain with us, even to the present time. And hence you ought to understand that [the gifts] formerly among your nation have been transferred to us. And just as there were false prophets contemporaneous with your holy prophets, so are there now many false teachers amongst us, of whom our Lord forewarned us to beware; so that in no respect are we deficient, since we know that He foreknew all that would happen to us after His resurrection from the dead and ascension to heaven. For He said we would be put to death, and hated for His name's sake; and that many false prophets and false Christs would appear in His name, and deceive many: and so has it come about. For many have taught godless, blasphemous, and unholy doctrines, forging them in His name; have taught, too, and even yet are teaching, those things which proceed from the unclean spirit of the devil, and which were put into their hearts. Therefore we are most anxious that you be persuaded not to be misled by such persons, since we know that every one who can speak the truth, and yet speaks it not, shall be judged by God..."¹²⁷ Unfortunately, as we shall see, Justin's Christological views were tainted by his Greek philosophical training, that adopted anti-body dogmas, when interpreting the physical human image type aspects of God the Father.¹²⁸

Another trans.: Dialogue With Trypho, chap.82, PROPHETICAL GIFTS OF THE JEWS WERE TRANSFERRED TO THE CHRISTIANS: "For the prophetic gifts remain with us, even to the present time. And hence you ought to understand that [the gifts] formerly among your nation have been transferred to us. And just as there were false prophets contemporaneous with your holy prophets, so are there now many false teachers amongst us, of whom our Lord forewarned us to beware; so that in no respect are we deficient, since we know that He foreknew all that would happen to us after His resurrection from the dead & ascension to heaven."¹²⁹

This was the type of testimonial that Justin Martyr presented to the Jews, in his response to early anti-Christians amongst the Jews, that had rejected Christ as their promised Messiah, the Son of God. Many of the early Christians believed that the Jewish religions had fallen into apostasy. Thus, it was time for the early Christian dispensation. But what had passed over to the Christians, would not last too many centuries. Even some of the later Christians had noticed that the spiritual gifts were fading out of the church. And yet, others held onto different gifts as long as they could. If they had lost different gifts, they certainly kept alive traditions of them.

E. De Pressense wrote that other early Christian Fathers, after the time of Justin, also claimed that some of the spiritual gifts still remained in the Church of their time, but that they were also fading out of the Church, or were of increasing rarity.¹³⁰

Last few years of 1st c., Clement, bishop of Rome, to the Greek churches, urged the early Christians to repent of the jealousies and divisiveness, (or different ones amongst them causing disagreements or hostilities). Ignatius, bishop in Antioch, martyred about 115, warned of many of the same things going on.¹³¹ It was these types of elements which continued to cause splinter groups, factions, & rivalries between different early to later Christian groups. How that they called each other heretics, excommunicated each other, banished each other, & caused some to be even martyrs for their particular interpretations of dogmas that arose.

James Barker & Scott R. Petersen both note how that the Jews had fallen away into apostasy, & thus because of this, for 400 years before the time of Christ, they had no prophets, as they had earlier. Christ came along to restore the gospel & to bring about the atonement, etc. Many of the Jews rejected this because they felt that they had the old laws, & that they were good enough (Matt.21:23).¹³²

Justin Martyr's Dialogue With Trypho: "One may see among us (the Christians) men and women who have received the gifts of the Spirit of God... there were no longer to be prophets in your (Jewish) race as in the past... For after him (Jesus) absolutely no prophet has come among you." And further on, "We have still among us, even until now, prophetic gifts, which should make you understand that which your race formerly possessed has been transferred to us." (ANF 1:240).¹³³

The later Christians illustrated the Jews' loss of such gifts passed to them, by many art works that showed, & were symbolic of, the claims that the Jews had willfully "blind folded" themselves in their own spiritual darkness, in rejecting & killing Christ, their Messiah. That blind fold will one day be removed when Christ returns, & then, they shall see the spiritual light of the new revelations that Christ & the Christian church, the ecclesia, had tried, (sometimes by force), to get them to accept as the truth. This, was the basic concept that spanned throughout the Middle Ages, & was illustrated on hundreds of art works, called ecclesia et synagoga. Some examples, are ones like in an Illuminated Bible that shows the apostles laying down to rest the synagogue, symbolic of how the time had passed for the Jews, their prophets had ended. While, it was Christ & his apostles that now had what the Jews once had.¹³⁴

The fact that there was not one scripture producing Church leader, amongst the Jewish sects, that could continue the Old Testament type scriptures, was evidence to early Christians, that the Jews had lost their long line of true prophets, & the spiritual gifts once enjoyed. If that was the case then, what about now? Could it also be that the fact that Christendom has now not one scripture producing Church leaders, & has forbidden anything new, as by way of new revelations, to be added onto the Bible, as amongst the different sects of Christendom? Could this be evidence that they too have lost also their long line of prophets, & new scripture producing Spiritual Gifts too? If so, such things are products of 2 different eras of apostasies. Thus: "The very fact that the Bible ceased to grow through the ages is itself proof positive of the great apostasy."¹³⁵

One of the challenges for scholars to deal with, as different ancient documents, books, & fragments are discovered, is to classify them according to the many conflicting sects. Some of the ancient texts, if authentic, show that amongst Gnosticism, set apart from orthodox Christian views, was: That for some, the very essence of Gnosticism was belief in direct revelation; while for others, it was the denial of direct revelation. Some also note that the knowledge professed by the Gnostic teachers, was said to be designed to subordinate the revelation of Christ to the speculations of human philosophy. Thus, attempts were being made to make their teachings as substitutes for "true" revelations, but of which couldn't actually be true ones. Consequently, counterfeit forms of claims to appear to be receiving revelations, ended up also being written down, & held by the different Gnostic sects, as counter claims to having the spiritual gifts over rivals sects that either denied any gifts still in use, or some of them, or their own. Also, when copies of these so-called "revelations" were acquired by rivals, they were polemically written against. The teachings about how there were once revelations, thus cause some to try to get their own revelations, even though they couldn't. So they at least tried to keep alive, the traditions of receiving revelations, by coming up with stories & claims to the spiritual gifts, miracles, & miraculous cures, etc. Such issues became one in many controversies going on at the same time during the 1st few centuries, thus, the revelation controversy. For with counterfeit revelations, came also counterfeit mysteries, spurious "holy" writings, & "gospels," as false teachers, prophetically warned about, came into the different sects & earliest church, claiming to have spiritual gifts. As soon as the apostles & prophets were no longer heard of, & even while they were alive, but were absent from a particular branch of the earliest church, many false teachers took advantage & rushed forward with claims to having their own revelations & spiritual gifts. So was it also the case when the Jews, when they lost their spiritual gifts through their own apostasy, there still were different ones amongst them, like the Hassidic Jews, who, unlike the Rabbis, believed in continuing revelation, and displayed affinities with the medieval Catharian sects.¹³⁶

Irenaeus, 115–202, pupil of Polycarp, 70–155, a disciple of the Apostle John, wrote, in contrasting the Gnostics with the early Christians, that they can neither confer sight on the blind, nor hearing on the deaf, nor chase away all sorts of demons. They also can't cure the weak, lame, & paralytic, as often been done by Christians in regard to bodily infirmity, & also in raising the dead. Others have foreknowledge of things to come. Others see visions, speak prophecies, while still others heal the sick by laying their hands upon them, after which they are made whole. It's not possible to name the number of gifts which the Church, scattered throughout the whole world, has received from God, (ANF 1:407-9). In response to Heretics, how that the spiritual gifts were still known to be heard of in use: "...For this reason does the apostle declare, "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect," terming those persons "perfect" who have received the Spirit of God, and who through the Spirit of God do speak in all languages, as he used Himself also to speak. In like manner we do also hear many brethren in the Church, who possess prophetic gifts, and who through the Spirit speak all kinds of languages, and bring to light for the general benefit the hidden things of men, and declare the mysteries of God, whom also the apostle terms "spiritual," they being spiritual because they partake of the Spirit." (Against Heresies, Book 5, chap. 6).

Another translation: "...For this reason does the apostle declare, "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect," terming those persons "perfect" who have received the Spirit of God, and who through the Spirit of God do speak in all languages, as he used Himself also to speak. In like manner we do also hear many brethren in the Church, who possess prophetic gifts, and who through the Spirit speak all kinds of languages, and bring to light for the general benefit the hidden things of men, and declare the mysteries of God, whom also the apostle terms "spiritual," they being spiritual because they partake of the Spirit, and not because their flesh has been stripped off and taken away, and because they have become purely spiritual...."¹³⁷

"The battle of the second century had been a battle between those who asserted that there was a single and final tradition of truth, and those who claimed that the Holy spirit spoke to them as truly as He had spoken to men in the days of the apostles. The victorious opinion had been that the revelation was final, and that what was contained in the records of the apostles was the sufficient sum of Christian teachings: hence the stress laid upon apostolic doctrine."¹³⁸

E. De Pressense, 1871: "It was chiefly among the ignorant and the common people that the artifices of the magicians found dupes. We see from the romance of Apuleius how much credit the magicians had among the people. In opposition to their false miracles, the [early] Church could show miracles which were true, and supernatural events such as had signalled the first days of missions were still repeated, though with less and less frequency. The clear and unanimous testimony of the Fathers of the third and fourth centuries, leaves no room to doubt the continuance of miraculous power in the Church of that period. Irenaeus and Tertullian speak of miraculous cures effected by Christians, and even of persons being raised from the dead." "That some cast out devils," says Irenaeus, "is a matter that cannot be called in question, since it is attested by the experience of those who have been thus delivered, and are now in the Church. Others have the gift of foretelling the future, see visions, and speak prophetic words; others effect cures by laying their hands on the sick." [Irenaeus, Against Heresies, II, p.57]. "Often," says the same Father, "the life of a man has been granted to the prayers of the faithful."

Tertullian relates that Septimus Severus was healed of a serious disease by a Christian, who, following the practical directions of James, had prayed over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the grateful emperor gave him a home in the palace to the end of his life. [Tertullian, "Ad Scapulam," c. iv].

Origen mentions miraculous cures wrought in the Church of his time. He says: "There are still among Christians, traces of that Holy Spirit who appeared in the form of a dove. They cast out devils, heal the sick, and, subject to the good pleasure of the Word, foresee the future." [Origen, Delarue edit., I. p. 311, 321-392].

Thus, the continuance of miracles in the Church of the first three centuries is guaranteed by the most authentic tradition. To those who admit the supernatural element in Christianity, the fact presents nothing abnormal. There was no deep gulf, placed between the apostolic and following ages. The first era of the Church did not end with a sharp line of demarcation; miracles did not cease with the last of the apostles. They were perpetuated for the very simple reason, that the circumstances which had called for them remained the same. They were designed to mark, in a visible manner, and by an impressive symbol, the extraordinary and supernatural character of Christianity; they were specially appropriate to the period of the Church's creation and formation, and had an important purpose yet to fulfil in the terrible struggle of the second and third centuries—that great crisis of the moral world, when all the powers of darkness seemed abroad. It is perfectly conceivable that the miraculous element may again appear in parallel seasons of convulsion and of final conflict between the kingdom of evil and the kingdom of good. There is, however, a notable diminution [or reduction] in the proportion of outward miracle or prodigy [or a person with exceptional abilities,] as the Church advances in years, and we have already marked its gradual decrease even in the apostolic age.... The gradual cessation of miraculous power is recognised by the Fathers. Origen asserts that only a few traces of the supernatural operation of the Divine Spirit remain. "The signs of the Holy Ghost," he says, "showed themselves from the commencement of the ministry of Christ; they were multiplied after His ascension, and subsequently diminished. Some vestiges of them still remain among men." [Origen, I. p. 36, 700].¹³⁹

The chronology of them having the spiritual gifts, then their slow decline, goes along with their scripture production phases too. The early church was under the direction of Jesus, then it was passed on to the apostles & prophets, & other leaders, Eph.2:19-21, 4:10-14, 1 Cor. chap.12. The original intent of the early leaders was to also maintain the foundation that was set. If one of the apostles died or fell away, as with the case with Judas, then they would be replaced by another candidate, suggesting the intent to keep such positions fill, & that someone should come along & say they are no longer needed, (Amos 3:7, Acts 1:24-6:13:2-4, 1 Cor.12:1-25).

Clement of Rome [30-100], wrote that when different leaders should pass away, other approved men should succeed them in their ministry.¹⁴⁰

Papias, [70-155], is said to have been associated with Polycarp, in the friendship of St. John himself, and of others who had seen the Lord. Papias wrote: "...For I imagined that what was to be got from books was not so profitable to me as what came from the living and abiding voice."¹⁴¹ He seemed to think that the greater source of spiritual truths came from living witnesses, rather than from books. Thus, living apostles' "living and abiding voice" took a higher priority over that which was written in books.

The fourth-century historian Bishop Eusebius of Caesarea, through whose compilations Papias survives at all, remarks irritably: 'Clearly he was very weak of intellect.' Yet on this subject, at least, he makes sense: '...if ever any man came who had been a follower of the elders, I would inquire about the sayings of the elders; what Andrew said, or Peter, or Philip, or Thomas or James or Matthew, or any other of the Lord's disciples; and what Aristion says and John the Elder, who are disciples of the Lord. For I did not consider I got so much profit from the contents of books as from the utterances of a living and abiding voice.' By Papias's day, indeed, knowledge of the authorship of the canonical gospels, and the manner in which they were composed, is already confused; what he has to say about Mark and

Matthew is shaky tradition. But he gives us a useful hint that at that stage the oral chain, less full of pitfalls, was still preferable to the written one. By the time Irenaeus, Bishop of Lyons, wrote at the end of the second century, the oral tradition has gone for good. He has to put his trust in the canonical writing and does so in full confidence; but what he says about their authorship and emergence is, in part at least, manifest nonsense. In short, by the end of the second century, a well-informed ecclesiastic like Irenaeus, professionally engaged in putting down heresy and establishing the truth, knew no more about the origins of the gospels than we do; rather less, in fact.... The earliest Christian document is Paul's first Epistle to the Thessalonians, which can plausibly be dated to about AD 51...."¹⁴²

Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, early second century, in an epistle to the church in Philippi, about 107, he warns against anti-body doctrines infesting the churches, that has been called Docetism, the doctrine that denied the physical reality of Jesus and his work. Thus, he reminds the Philippians to "turn back to the word which was delivered to us in the beginning."¹⁴³ The "sayings" in the beginning, testified that Christ had a real body.¹⁴⁴ So there was some value to not only the "living and abiding voice," that of living apostles & prophets, etc. (Eph. 4:10-14). But also "the word" that recorded what was said & witnessed. Both were needed to help protect, manage, and minister to the needs, concerns & difficulties that the members faced, & in order to keep the true church going. Thus, Paul used the body, as a type of different spiritual gifts & clerical positions in the "body" or the early church. Where, for example, one part of the body, such as the foot, shouldn't say to the head, that it's not needed, & visa-versa. Which was like saying that a bishop shouldn't say prophets & apostles are no longer needed. Or like saying that regular members shouldn't say a bishop, or other clerical positions & spiritual gifts, are not needed, for all were part of the body of the whole church, Christ as the head, (1 Cor. 11:3, Eph. 2:13-22). All parts of the "body" helped compliment & support each other, so long as they had love & charity, the greatest of all spiritual gifts, (1 Cor., chaps. 11-15, 12:1-28).

By the time of Tertullian [145-220], the positions of still having & maintaining prophets & prophetesses in the Church, was an issue. As it was, they at least still had bishops, & other leaders who weren't to be placed there by Simony. (Or, the buying up of church positions, Acts 8. A problem that kept into the church later on). Thus, Tertullian tells how: "...We are governed by approved elders, who obtain their office not by purchase, but by the testimony of their fellows: for nothing that is God's is obtainable by money...."¹⁴⁵ Tertullian noted that Christ had given his apostles power (Matt.10:1), to work miracles, just like Christ had worked miracles, (ANF 3:257). Could the 'approved elders' still do the same, were they still endowed with miracle producing powers from Christ? (Acts 3:6, 5:12-16, 6:8, 8:6-8, 9:26-41, 19:11, Heb.2:4).

As to the written word, preserved in whatever manner could be devised, (written in scrolls, books, carved on stones, on different types of metals). They all helped preserve, in their originalities, the words, or the verbal "sayings," that had gone on before: "The mind of preliterate man can be fathomed only through the mute testimony of the artifacts dug up by the archaeologists' spade; but literate man speaks in his own voice. Four thousand years ago, an Egyptian scribe fully understood the value of his profession: "A man has perished and his body has become earth," he wrote. "All his relatives have crumbled to dust. It is writing that makes him remembered."¹⁴⁶ This is why many ancient writers hid their sacred writings in containers, or ceramic storage jars, like what the Dead Sea Scrolls were found in.¹⁴⁷ Or why other ancient types of preservation methods were practiced, for the ancients sometimes wrote, or inscribed on materials that wouldn't decay, or fade out, such as the many different types of ancient writings found on different types of metals, discovered in different parts of the world.¹⁴⁸ They did this for different reasons, but the main reason being that they wanted to preserve their words to last over the centuries for later generations, who then might discover their “sayings.”

But, the written word, in the hands of other peoples, & later generations, not preserved by these ancient methods mentioned, can only be preserved in their original messages, so long as later translators, & copyists correctly preserved their messages. Plus, provided that they also don’t get changed & manipulated during times of early to later polemical dogmatic trends that often arise, when later manuscripts have different ones add or leave out things to fit their own particular agendas.¹⁴⁹ Be they religious theories & dogmas, or political theocratic decrees of ‘doctrines,’ or whatever.¹⁵⁰ But instead, preserve the original intended messages in their original meanings, otherwise such “sayings” will often suffer the legendization processes, whereby an original doctrine or theme will eventually become a later legend, myth, or tradition, the further in time that the later “sayings” gets away from the originals.¹⁵¹

What little bits of the words of Christ, & the apostles, & prophets, that were collected & what we do have now, are just a small fragment of what must have been presented, (John 21:25; Acts 1:3). Did Jesus Christ also write his own gospel? Did those whom Christ & the Apostles raised from the dead, write their own Near Death Experiences, like many modern NDEs?¹⁵²

What might still be found that was lost, & confiscated, if preserved somewhere? What understandings & picture of the ancient church might have got lost by being burned, hidden away, buried, or suppressed by the later church theocracies.¹⁵³ Or archived in later Christian archives,¹⁵⁴ or still preserved somewhere in different undiscovered lost early Christian libraries?¹⁵⁵

What verbal “sayings” were passed down, must have eventually become the themes of later legends too. What sayings were also claimed to be the true “sayings,” also had to compete with others declared true, but which were more likely forgeries. We also don’t have the original hand written writings for what makes up the New Testament, & there were earlier versions of the New Testament canon that included some books, such as the Shepherd of Hermas,¹⁵⁶ & other writings, not included in many modern canons of the New Testament too. Plus, intentional manipulations of “the original doctrines,” by uninspired “wolves” that had entered into the early churches, not sparing the flock, (Acts 20:29–31). For with the protection gone, that all the spiritual gifts provided, by having living Apostles & prophets around, (Ephesians 4:10–14). The early to later churches were left defenseless against being tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrines. Ones that the crafty wolves (or uninspired false teachers), plus, many different contentions, schisms, & uninspired misinterpretations did produce. For this & the legendization of doctrines began, when, & where the prophets & apostles, & their spiritual gifts, faded out of the later church.¹⁵⁷

When the apostles were still alive, the members had a living doctrinal anchor to keep them from being tossed to and fro by the winds of every type of false doctrines that blew against them. “But as is evident in the earliest Christian writings of the second century, by the end of the first century the apostles were gone, and Christianity had lost its doctrinal anchor.”¹⁵⁸ As to the false teachers that arose, their “False doctrines are like the winds that toss the water to and fro, and they are apt to unsettle the minds of men, [and women] who are like unstable water.”¹⁵⁹

While the written word sought to preserve original teachings, the different aspects of the original gospel were also most definitely complimented by thousands of art works. So we are grateful for the many artists throughout historic Christendom for preserving many basic concepts & filling in gaps here & there, to keep alive, many beliefs

& doctrines, after many of the spiritual gifts had faded further out.¹⁶⁰

But we also have to be grateful for the many artists in helping to add to the historical records, thus giving us a better understanding of the legendization processes, the results & products of apostasies & spiritual gifts going out. Showing through art & symbolism, when, where & how doctrines faded off into legends. How that they, for example, helped to show the changes in beliefs that came about with pressures from Emperors, Kings, Queens & clerics that militantly enforced their dogmas & decrees for ‘doctrines’ that were supposed to be believed in. For, in time, we also start to see how many art works, such as those depicting the trinity, document the changes underway. For we don’t see those types of art works earlier. A case in point is how artists were made to depict the Godhead, when anti-body beliefs prevailed, & artists could get in trouble if they didn’t depict the dogmas right. Such as how many showed just hand symbols for God the Father, in many cases. This was done under the pressures to not dangerously depict the Father with a full human shaped body, during times & places when beliefs were being enforced militantly by force of arms. When & where the dominating beliefs declared that God the Father didn’t have a body, but was ‘incorporeal,’ without shape, everywhere present, & a spirit essence that filled the universe. While in contrast, many others did, despite the anti-body Greek philosophical influences that tainted the Christological controversy & Trinitarian controversy. Thus, many were also depicting God-the-Father, as an older looking man, separate from Christ. Or, as an identical looking man, or differently to visually distinguish, between the Father & Son. In contrast, thus also the many art-works of 3 faces on 1 head for the Godhead. Or 3 heads on 1 body for depictions of the trinity of post-Nicene Creed times after 325, for examples. All these help us to understand the time lines of historic Christianity that mark the different eras, & stages of the Great Apostasy. Showing us the consequences of what happened when, where & how, the spiritual gifts did fade out of the church in different areas. How some beliefs began to prevail militantly over other less dominated ones, not backed by militant clerics, Emperors, Christian Kings & Queens.¹⁶¹

As one aspect of the gospel goes out, other areas are affected by the loss too, such as the case with what began to happen to the earliest Christians’ understandings of the nature & kind of being that Christ & his Father are. During the first 3 centuries, during the Christological Controversy, & as more & more of the spiritual gifts faded out, after the apostles & prophets were no longer heard of, the earliest Christians’ beliefs & defense of Christ, the Son of God, as having a real body, real blood, & real physical resurrection. Plus, of Christ created in the image & likeness of his Father, God the Father, who also is in the image of man, as man, like the first man, Adam, was in the image of one of the Gods. The “they” & “us,” (plural Deities), that also created Eve in “their” image too, male & female being created in the images of Elohim, (or Deities, male & female, Gen.1:25-26, 5:1-2, John 8:13-19, 10:24-39, Heb.1:1-10).¹⁶² These beliefs, backed up by ritualistic types & symbolism, (the sacrament, baptism, etc.). The anthropomorphic beliefs, (or attributing human form or feelings to a god, thus having human characteristics in form and shape). All of these earliest Christian views, became one in many beliefs to become distorted, challenged, & blended with other cultural contaminations.¹⁶³ “The God of the Bible did things. Plato’s God is above that. The choice is between an anthropomorphic God and an impotent God. This answers the question as to why the kinds of miracles common to the Old and New Testaments have ceased in the Christian world. Their God doesn’t work them. This is why they don’t have prophets or Apostles; their God doesn’t call them [Heb.1:1-9, 5:1-11]. This is why they don't have continuous revelation; their God doesn't speak."¹⁶⁴

The Clement of Alexandria, in the 2nd century A.D., was aware, like later Eusebius would, in the 4th century A.D., that the early apostles & "the blessed men of old possessed a marvelous power," but, by later centuries, that power was no longer in the church. So many things that were taught by the apostles were lost to the world. Clement was aware that some things had started to fade out of the gospel picture. For "...things there are which though not noted down still remained for a while, but they are now being lost. Some of these things are now completely extinguished, having faded away in the mind from sheer neglect & lack of exercise."¹⁶⁵

"The signs of the Holy...showed themselves from the commencement of the ministry of Christ; they were multiplied after His ascension, & subsequently diminished. Some vestiges of them still remain among men." [Origen 1. p.36]. They "...attribute a power of healing to the simple reading of the holy books, & the invocation of the name of Jesus, they lower miracles to the rank of magic, & became believers in incantations & cabalistic formularies." [Origen, I p.461]. Justin speaks of the attempts of "heathen exorcists" in failing to cast out demons, & how through the name of Christ they, the Christians, succeeded. Tertullian is also said to have said that the demons would not lie to a Christian when "any Christian will compel the spirit to confess honestly that he is a demon, even though he may have elsewhere falsely pretended to be a god..." [Tertullian, Apol., c. xxiii]. "...In short, miraculous gifts have not, at this era, disappeared from the Church, but they are of increasing rarity, more rare even than the Christians themselves suppose, incapable as they are, as yet, of discerning between the really miraculous, & miracles created by the imagination. It would be most unjust to confound the miracles of the Gospel with the pseudomiracles born of heated brains. The mere comparison makes apparent the wide differences between them.... the miracle has always a moral aspect; faith alone comes into operation; there is no approach to the incantation, or any mystic formula.... The great apologists of Christianity are themselves sensible of this inferiority, & we shall find Origen treating miracles rather as the subjects of proof than as themselves adequate proof of any doctrine not otherwise verified, since such arguments can be brought forward in support of the false, no less than of the true."¹⁶⁶

Clement looked to the revelations in Christianity to help him answer some of the questions he had had for years, & which the Philosophies of his day had not given an answer to, & for which he could say was the truth. Later church fathers attempted to hold on to the gifts as best as they could, & this may be one reason why Tertullian later joined the Montanists. For they claimed the gift of prophecy was with them. During the 1st half of the 2nd century, the role of prophecy experienced a number of gradual changes. By the end of that century, the church's experience with Montanism, & with the Gnostic sects, in which prophecy played a prominent role, had left both prophecy & prophets largely discredited. For Ignatius (ca. 115), prophecy was a gift that he exercised in a congregational setting & that exposed congregational secrets (Philad. 7:1-2). In the Didache, prophets as well as apostles are depicted as itinerants, or traveling from place to place, (11-13). While some did settle down permanently too, (12.3-4). Christian communities were widely scattered but maintained communication through traveling Christians, including apostles, prophets, & teachers (3 John 5-8), to whom they offered hospitality. However, some of these travelers were charlatans, intent on fleecing the flock, and on freeloading. Tests for determining the genuineness of the prophet, apostle, or teacher, were therefore devised. A few prophetic figures of the early 2nd century, such as Ammia of Philadelphia and Quadratus, were remembered as orthodox Christian prophets. Tertullian was attracted to Montanism, said to be a "New Prophecy," as a prophetic & apocalyptic movement that originated in Asia Minor, about 156 or 172. Montanus, the prophetic founder, was eventually joined by 2 prophetesses, Priscilla & Maximilla.¹⁶⁷

Montanism was particularly dependent on the Gospel & Revelation of John. The movement espoused a rigorous ethic, placed a high value on martyrdom. Plus, it expected the imminent arrival of the great persecution, & the descent of the heavenly Jerusalem at Pepuza, 70 miles east of Philadelphia. Although Montanism was a popular movement, it was strongly opposed by Christian heresiologists.¹⁶⁸

Tertullian, (born at Carthage, North Africa, 160 A.D., baptized 190 A.D.), after the year 200 A.D., he joined Montanism. He wrote concerning some of the things that were happening in the Christian sects of his day. For he suggested that the devil & his demons had set up counterfeit spiritual gifts of God. For, "...they [the demons] sometimes try to be regarded as the authors of what they report & they certainly sometimes are the authors of evil, but never of good. Even God's dispositions they picked up in the past from the words of the prophets, & today they gather them from the reading of the scripture they hear. Therefore, taking from them certain responses with regard to dates they set themselves up as diviners in thievish rivalry with the divine...."¹⁶⁹

Tertullian, & his fellow Montanus Christian friends, seemed to have believed that certain spiritual gifts were still in use, such as the spirit of prophecy. The original prophets & apostles were unknown in the historical records, by the 2nd – 3rd centuries A.D.,¹⁷⁰ so different ones, that hoped to keep the spiritual gifts going, claimed that they possessed different gifts. Thus, was the case with the Montanus Christian sect that claimed to have preserved some of the spiritual gifts. Mosheim wrote that Montanus, was "...an obscure man, without any capacity or strength of judgment & who lived in a Phrygian village called Pepuza...." He claimed to be sent with a divine commission.¹⁷¹

T. Edgar Lyon wrote that in the eastern portion of the Roman Empire, about 156 A.D., Montanus joined the Christian church. Montanus later insisted that the Church had lost some of its original elements, & thus was in need of being reformed "...by discarding its innovations of the last half century & return to the basic ideas of first century Christianity. But he failed to realize that there was no power within the church which could direct this movement & bring back to earth the divine authority which had been lost. He assumed, in his failure to understand this missing element, that the church could reform itself. Montanus listed three areas in which he saw need for reform, if the apostatizing church were to be worthy of the name Christian."

"1. Revelation must not cease in the church.... Montanus maintained that in the church of Christ there would always be revelation. If it had ceased, it was because the church leaders had proved themselves unworthy of it. He contended that he was a prophet & had received revelation... 2. The church must return to the old discipline...." 3. He also "...Opposed the growth of the professional clergy.... These challenges were met by the churches usually conceding that at one time such things may have been in the church, but the passing of time had required change.... The clergy admitted that revelation had ceased. The church had already lost its divine authority.... As late as 565 A.D., Justinian was taking steps to suppress..." Montanism. "Latourette says that it was still surviving as a sect in the 8th century."¹⁷²

Many of the ancient Christians did not regard the scriptures as being closed & final. For during the middle part of the 3rd century, many Christians of that time were more than willing to accept the proposition that more inspired writings might be coming forth in due time. One of the first Christian martyrs said that "If there are ancient faith-promoting books, why can't there be modern ones... or why should the present have less authority than the past because of some superstitious veneration of mere antiquity?"¹⁷³ The spiritual gifts, with scriptures that those gifts produced, were still being sought after in those early centuries, (2 Tim. 3:16-17).

At that early time, Montanism had not yet been defined as a heresy, "...And even the wise prudence of Irenaeus shows anxiety not too hastily to denounce it; 'seeing,' as Eusebius affirms, 'there were many other wonderful powers of divine grace yet exhibited, even at that time, in different churches.'" ¹⁷⁴ The visions of Hermas, were considered evidences, by many early Christians, that "prophesying" was still being done through inspired early Christians, who had the gift. The Shepherd of Hermas, about 160,¹⁷⁵ was believed to be a sort of "anti-Montanist" work, showing that there were still spiritual gifts among the early Christians at Rome. Montanism is not named in Hermas' writings, but the writings were considered to be "...a reminder of better 'prophesying,' & by setting the pure spirit of the apostolic age over against the frenzied & pharisaical pretensions of the fanatics." ¹⁷⁶ The book came to be respected by many Christians, & was almost considered scripture by some, & even quoted as such, by different ones like Irenaeus. While Tertullian scorned the work, perhaps because he had decided upon another prophetic path way to follow, such as the one the Montanists had to offer. For him, that was where the spiritual gift of prophesying, was at.¹⁷⁷ The book was filled with symbolic allegory, & visions that were said to be genuine "prophesyings" during the apostolic age. The popularity of the book would grow, & it would even be read in the different areas of the early Church during the 2nd-4th centuries. Some accepted such works as authoritative, for as they gathered on the day of the Lord for the sacramental meal. The words of Hermas were among those "inspired" writings that were read and considered. "...But the tongues were ceasing, as the apostles foretold; & they who professed to speak by the Spirit were beginning to be doubted. 'Your fathers, where are they? & the prophets, do they live forever?' It was gratifying to the older men, and excited the curiosity of the young, when the reader stood up, & said, 'Hear, then, the words of Hermas.'" ¹⁷⁸

There was some discussions as to whether or not Hermas' writings were inspired or not. Some of the early writers who had a high regard for these writings were Irenaeus who quotes it was Scripture, (Contra Haeres., iv., 20, 2). Clement of Alexandria accepts it as divinely inspired (Strom., i., xxi. p. 426). While Origen has his doubts, but gives as his opinion that it's "divinely inspired." (Ut supra.). Later, during the time of Eusebius, 4th century, differences of opinions prevailed, as some accepted it as being inspired, while others opposed the claim that it had any "divine origin." Earlier, Tertullian designated it among the "apocryphal" works, but his words suggest that he was against its anti-Montanistic opinions, for even his words, however, show that it was regarded in many churches as Scripture.¹⁷⁹ Others were of the opinion that the work was fictional.

Different versions of the book have survived, the book must have been in circulation at the time, or before Irenaeus, in order for him to have quoted it as scripture, thus it has been assigned to the time of the reign of Hadrian, or of Antoninus Pius. The Greek speaking eastern Churches had copies of it in circulation. But other manuscripts have given us minute differences to consider.¹⁸⁰

When the true spiritual gifts began to fade out of the different branches of the early Church, what took their place? Was there just an empty void? In many cases, satanic counterfeits, & false spirits, & their counterfeit spiritual gifts, eventually replaced the true divine spiritual gifts. This was during those later centuries in later Christianity, when the true spiritual gifts had faded out of the gospel picture, as a result of the great apostasy.¹⁸¹ The devil & his demons had caused confusion & trouble, even during the days of the Christ & the apostles, & the earliest Christians.¹⁸² So why wouldn't they be able to do even greater damage during the Dark Ages of apostasy?

Now this is not to say that Satan & his demons had totally done away with the divine powers, & had won the battle. Or that there weren't any good people, for there were, down through the ages, those who did the best they could, with what light & knowledge that they did have. Who also did exercise the levels of faith & Christ like love that they did have, like many of the different saints throughout Christendom's history.¹⁸³ However, what we must note is that even Christ &, his apostles went into areas where the faith levels of the people were so low that they didn't perform as many miracles, as were in other areas, where they did do more, based on the peoples' higher faith levels.¹⁸⁴ "...Christ himself attributes his cures to the 'faith' of those whom he healed; and he could not perform miracles in Nazareth, apparently because the people there looked upon him as 'the carpenter's son,' and refused to believe in his unusual powers; hence his remarks that 'a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and in his own house.'" ...¹⁸⁵

The spiritual gifts also faded out more, when different ones sought them for evil purposes, rather than their intended good uses. Consequently, the more the people rejected & attempted to use the spiritual gifts, or their positions in the church for their own selfish & wicked purposes, the spiritual gifts, were taken away from them.¹⁸⁶ Plus, the more false teachers entered in the different branches of the early church to pervert &, twist the basic gospel message, the spiritual gifts were voided out, if they even had them in the first place.¹⁸⁷ Also, the more that other cultural blends, such as Greek Philosophy, were blended in & thus corrupted the early Christians' later versions of "the gospel," the more the spirit of truth didn't witness to such blends as truth, for a that point, they had grieved the Holy Spirit. (1 Cor. chaps. 12-14, 2 Cor.2:17, 11:13-15, 2 Pet.2:1-2, Acts 20:20-31, Eph.4:11-32).¹⁸⁸ The more the dialectic arts of persuasive clever arguments were used to attempt to settle schisms, & dogmatic issues, rather than rely on the spirit of discernment & truth.¹⁸⁹ Then, the faster the spiritual gifts faded out, for such things would void them out. The spiritual gifts weren't for the pomp & glory of the ones who used them. They weren't for sale either, (Acts 8:5-24). The more charity & love, the greatest of the gifts, faded out (1 Cor. 13). The more the spiritual gifts faded out even more, even to the point where the clerical positions of apostles & prophets, who produced scriptures, were no longer heard of. The consequences of all these aspects resulted in the retrogressive decline in the spiritual gifts, which many noted became less and less known.

About the year 200, the living faith seems to be transformed into a creed. Devotion to Christ, into the controversial Christology, arguing over what Christ was like, & if he had a real body, or not, if he was the Son of God, or just a mere man. If he pre-existed, or not, etc. Prophecy, was transformed into technical exegesis, (or the critical explanation or interpretation of a text, especially of scripture), & theological learning. The ministers of the Spirit, into clerics. Miracles & cures disappear altogether.

The “Spirit” becomes law & compulsion. This enormous transformation took place within about 120 years after the Apostolic age.¹⁹⁰

Origen, (185-255), the spiritual gifts were still visible: “And in the name of Jesus can still remove distractions from the minds of men, and expel demons, and also take away diseases.” (ANF, 4:437). However, Origen admits that the spiritual gifts were in decline, had gradually disappeared until they were rarely, if ever, seen. But at least they still had the gifts of the Spirit, though not as in abundance as in the apostolic times. “For they [the Jews] have no longer prophets nor miracles, traces of which to a considerable extent are still found among Christians,... and these we have ourselves have witnessed.” (ANF, 4:433).

After the 2nd or 3rd century: “It had been acknowledged at least since imperial times that the ‘age of miracles’ was over, in the sense that Christian leaders could no longer spread the gospel, like the apostles, with the aid of supernatural powers—at any rate as a rule.”¹⁹¹

By about the mid 3rd century: “The Church survived, and steadily penetrated all ranks of society over a huge area, by avoiding or absorbing extremes, by compromise, by developing an urbane temperament and erecting secular-type structures to preserve its unity and conduct its business. There was in consequence a loss of spirituality, or as Paul would have put it, of freedom.”¹⁹²

From about 245-313, during Diocletian’s (Eastern section of the Roman Empire, reigning 284-305), the Holy Spirit & gifts were missing, & the Church’s actual declension, at least by the end of the 3rd century, is said to must be dated in the pacific part of the Empire. As different scholars try to date the time of the loss of Spiritual Gifts, it must be noted that some areas of Christendom held onto them better than perhaps other areas. Was it because some areas, that suffered persecutions, had some that fell away, while others stood strong? During this whole century, the work of God, in purity & power, had been tending decay. One of the causes noted, was the connection with philosophers, others were that the Church appeared to have become an ordinary business in some areas. Plus, human depravity was another noted cause of the decay of godliness. Consequently, one generation of the Christians had elapsed with hardly any proofs of the spiritual presence of Christ with His Church, & the later Christians, & church their leaders could see it! Some therefore had to admit, that the evidence for the decline, was that there was hardly any real evidence for real miracles, that could be truthfully reported. Thus, some faith promoting miracle stories, had to be manufactured, some of which centered around relics, they with other counterfeits, became the substitutes for the actual Spiritual Gifts, that produced real divine powered miracles.¹⁹³

From the 4th century onwards, the basic premise of the Jewish and Christian doctors, were that prophecy and revelation have forever ceased.¹⁹⁴ Though there were cases throughout Christendom’s history, where different ones arose, claiming revelations, & special gifts, none of their claims were ever added to what would be accepted as scriptures. So also seems to be the case amongst the Jews, for if the spiritual gifts that produced scriptures of old have continued from the times of the Old Testament, & the New, there would have been an ever growing canon of scriptures produced by those real spiritual gifts. But instead we don’t have an ever growing canon, but a closed one, because real prophets & apostles faded out of the Jewish & Christian faith, many centuries ago.¹⁹⁵

Consequently, with most of the gifts having faded out, there began to grow substitutes for spiritual gifts, & claims to miracles still being performed. However, many of these stories have a feel of embellishments, perhaps for faith promoting purposes. Others seem tainted with elements & details on their ways towards further legendizations, & thus have questionable authenticity to them. While there also might be a few here, & there, that were miracles actually performed by those possessed of the spiritual gift of charity. Even in a world of darkness & wickedness, there still might have been many, here & there, that were really living as much of a Christ like life as they knew how to do, during their particular times & circumstances.¹⁹⁶ Each case has to be considered as being either possible cases of an actual preservation of some gifts, preserved by righteous living, or a product of embellished legendization processes & faith promoting story tellings.

About during & post-325, stories were being told about what is alleged to have happened during the Nicene Creed era, at Nicaea. A famous fountain sprang up in the middle to the square, where the synod had united in public prayer. The waters were claimed to have healing powers. Another story or legend tells of 2 of the bishops that died during the council, & were buried at Nicaea, after the signing of the creed, the document was left on the graves of the 2 with the invocation for them to add their names to the others. The next morning, so the story goes, their signatures were found on it.¹⁹⁷

In later centuries, Basil, 329–379, had prayed that they would not lose the power of prophesying “the way the Jews did.” Jerome, 325–420, wrote that with the lack of revelation, a number of pretenders had appeared. Earlier, Methodius, 260–312, like that of Basil, pities the Jews who were left with the scriptures alone to guide them. They do the best that they can, but have no revelation. He hoped that the Christians would not fall into the same conditions as that of the Jews, that they would always be able to have revelation.¹⁹⁸

E. De Pressense wrote that other Christian Fathers, after the time of Justin, also claimed that some of the spiritual gifts still remained in the Church of their time, but that they were also fading out of the Church, or were of increasing rarity.¹⁹⁹

Having prophet, apostles, & their spiritual-gifts were important to the early Christians, & other nations must have had their own too because Christ was not the neglectful type. However, if what had happened amongst the Jews, where they lost the long line of prophets, so also could happen to other nations too. Which meant that what happened during the apostasy of the Jews, the eventual legendization of the doctrines & rituals, could have also happened in other nations too. If so, it was the hope & worry of some of the early Christian apologists, noting the spiritual gifts becoming less frequent, that they could still some how be able to hold on to those gifts. But, with the disappearance of their prophets & apostles,²⁰⁰ it was obvious to some of them, that they were heading in the same directions as the Jews & other nations. For after the apostles disappeared, so also did the living voice that produced scriptures, & preserved the originality of the original gospel message. They had the written word, it was true, just like the Jews had with their old prophets, now dead & gone. But the living word was so much better, for the protection, guidance & preservation that living prophets & apostles offered (Eph.4:10-14; 1 Cor.12:4-31, chap. 13). For without them, in time, without a continued long line of prophets & apostles. Plus, the farther away from their written words, the wider the gaps, & the more chances for cunningly devised fables, could then start to creep in to replace the original gospel message, (2 Peter 1:16-17). The more chances also that the original doctrines could be misinterpreted, & the doctrines altered and changed to fit whatever the clever manipulators could devise. For just as cunningly devised fables, & the distortions, & legendizing of the doctrines’ ritualistic types too, had crept in amongst the Jews & other nations. So that by the time of the early Christian era, there would be left over fragments used by critics who challenged the originality of Christ's restored gospel, by pointing to the parallels. So also could the same types of things happen to the later Christians, & many of them regrettably admitted that what happened to the Jews' loss of their prophets, and loss of continual revelations, was happening to later Christendom's loss of many things too. It had happened to the pagan nations, when they lost their prophets too. Many early Christians noted the loss, when different schisms continued to split up the early Church into warring factions, and splinter groups polemically writing against each other. (1 Cor. 12:25). When it became obvious that there are no more revelations & most of the spiritual gifts that produces on going scriptures amongst the people fade out. Excuses are often used, as if to shut the mouth of God, by claiming no more of his words are needed. That loyalty to his words of the past, are more important than claims to new revelations. But then there still were those who claimed that those of old, the apostles of the past, for example, still spake! But differently, as they had originally, for it was but through another leader that the dead revelator spoke.

384–399, reign of Pope & Bishop of Rome, Siricius, the claim was made that "Peter speaks through Siricius..." Was the Roman Church thus claiming revelations from Peter, just as Peter had spoken by the spiritual gifts as an apostle? It seems that these claims would be continued to be made, such as during 440–461, when reigned Pope & Bishop Leo I. He sent his doctrinal letter (tome) to Flavian, Bishop of Constantinople and said that: "Peter has spoken through Leo."²⁰¹ With them claiming that Peter had founded the church of Rome, they made this claim. But why didn't they take it a step further back & claim that Jesus spoke through those Popes?

John Lawrence Mosheim, D.D., 1819, wrote that the "...miraculous influences of their religion, were the prevailing motives that induced the greatest part to renounce the service of their impotent gods.... How far these conversions were due to real miracles attending the ministry of these early preachers, is a matter extremely difficult to be determined. For though I am persuaded that pious men, who, in the midst of many dangers, and in the face of obstacles seemingly invincible, endeavoured to spread the light of Christianity through the barbarous nations, were sometimes accompanied with the more peculiar presence & succours of the Most High..." Despite this, wrote Mosheim, he was "...equally convinced, that the greatest part of the prodigies, recorded in the histories of this age, are liable to the strongest suspicions of falsehood or imposture. The simplicity & ignorance of the generality in those times furnished the most favourable occasion for the exercise of fraud; & the impudence of impostors, in contriving false miracles, was artfully proportioned to the credulity of the vulgar;... while the sagacious & the wise, who perceived these cheats, were obliged to silence by the dangers that threatened their lives and fortunes, if they detected artifice.... Thus does it generally happen in human life, that, when the discovery and profession of the truth is attended with danger, the prudent are silent, the multitude believe, and impostors triumph."²⁰²

In the later centuries of the Middle Ages, a clerical claim to a miraculous-healing was used to help the Roman Papacy with some landholding issues. A remarkable document, suspected of being a forgery, was the Donation of Constantine, claimed to be written by the Emperor about 312. It claimed he had been smitten with leprosy, was about to take a bath in the blood of infants, at the suggestion of Pagan Priests, to cure him. But the cries of the infants' mothers made him recoil from the idea & spare the infants. After a dream telling him he would be healed by one Bishop Sylvester of Rome, he appealed to the bishop for help. The bishop is said to have dipped him three times in a font of sanctified water, by way of baptism. Like in many later Christian art works of the hand of God extending out of a corner of the page, or from a cloud, or from above,²⁰³ this document claims that a hand from heaven, clasped Constantine's hand &, he rose from the font cleansed of his leprosy. In gratitude, the emperor is claimed to have transferred all Italy to the property of the Pope, & removed to his city of Constantinople. The manuscript recording his donation was left on the embalmed body of St. Peter. The document, probably a forgery by some crafty clerical zealot, was considered authentic until it was challenged by the Humanist scholar Lorenzo Valla, during the 15th century.²⁰⁴

As the spiritual gifts lore developed, during the 4th & 5th centuries, stories began to circulate about the strange & extreme monastic-life-styles of different monks & desert hermits, or ones that had entered into extreme fanatical forms of monasticism. Such stories might be considered as being the time when the themes, but not the actual spiritual gifts, but the memories of them, were turning into legends & fables. As different later Christian hermits sought to torture their own bodies through depriving themselves of the pleasures of the flesh, fanatical lengthy fasts, forsaking family life, going without speaking for years, living on pillars for years, not letting themselves see the face of a woman for years, least they should fall to sexually temptations. Others went without sleep, for as long as they could. Others slept in marshes so that they could expose their naked bodies to poisonous flies. Others carried heavy weights, wherever they went. Some didn't wash themselves for days, & stank up their places of living with body odors, their dung, & rotting flesh type smells from ropes they'd tied to their bodies, that had putrefied (or decay or rot and produce a fetid or very unpleasant smell). Others were said to not lay down, but stood standing up to sleep, etc., etc. So with these types of fanatical extreme self torturing life styles, thinking that such things were going to bring them closer to Christian moral perfection & qualify them for a martyr's equivalent type of eternal bliss, & afterlife reward. There also developed stories about their spiritual gifts at work too.²⁰⁵

"The pilgrims who flocked from all quarters of the Christian world to see the monks of the East credited them with miracles as remarkable as those of Christ. They could cure diseases or repel demons by a touch or a word, tame serpents or lions with a look or a prayer, and cross the Nile on the back of a crocodile. The relics of the anchorites became the most precious possession of Christian churches, and are treasured in them to this day." There was one Simeon Stylites (390?-459), at Kalat Seman, in northern Syria, about 422, lived on a 6 feet high pillar, 3 feet wide at the top with a railing & rope to keep him from falling off during sleep. He lived up there for years, in the rain, sun & from there preached his sermons to those who crowded around to hear. He was also said to have "performed marvelous cures". Some monks also had left their monasteries to trouble the populace with their begging, others went about preaching asceticism, selling real or bogus relics, terrorizing synods, get others to thought police & destroy pagan temples.²⁰⁶

During the 5th century A.D., the spiritual gifts may have almost disappeared except for certain cases, & in different areas. What seems to have begun to replace these divine gifts were superstitions & beliefs in relic-magic, such as the bones of martyrs, crosses, & other things, that were said to have divine powers over demons, etc. Mosheim wrote that a "...singular & irresistible efficacy was also attributed to the bones of martyrs, & to the figure of the cross, in defeating the attempts of Satan, removing all sorts of calamities, & in healing, not only the diseases of the body, but also those of the mind."²⁰⁷

"While pagan ceremonies and rites were increasing in the church, the gifts and graces characteristic of apostolic times, seemed to have gradually departed from it. Protestant writers insist that the age of miracles closed with the fourth or fifth century, and that after that the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost must not be looked for. Catholic writers, on the other hand, insist that the power to perform miracles has always continued in the church; yet those spiritual manifestations which they describe after the fourth and fifth centuries savor of invention on the part of the priests and childish credulity on the part of the people; or else what is claimed to be miraculous falls far short of the power and dignity of those spiritual manifestations which the primitive church was wont to witness.... The virtues and prodigies ascribed to the bones and other relics of the martyrs and saints are puerile in comparison with the healings,...” [& other spiritual gifts & miracles mentioned in 1 Cor. 12:8-10, etc.]²⁰⁸

So what replaced them? One answer already noted, is the use of reason, logic & the Greek dialectic arts of skilled argumentation tactics. Another is how it seems evident that as later Christians tried to hold on to anything that they could claim was from the original founders of Christendom. That could be claimed was from Christ's belongings, or body, such as hair from his beard, or a bit of cloth from his robe. Or something that could be claim was apostolic, that eventually, relic magic lore followed. Lore that claimed that relics still passed down to them their founders' miraculous powers: Be they alleged bits of things their founders touched, or wore, and that still retained the powers of Christ, or the apostles & prophets. Thus, alleged powers generated from the bone of an apostle, etc., etc., & other superstitions, were being used to claim miracles still existed.²⁰⁹

The New Testament priesthood practice of healing the sick by the laying on of hands, & blessing oil anointings, the transferring of priesthood powers, & the Gift of the Holy Spirit, given after baptism, by laying hands on the head of candidate, or sick person, called the “imposition of hands.” Much of these was replaced in later centuries by relics claimed to have healing-powers, & other alleged miraculous powers. The later Satan's counterfeits—relics also included the use of graven images, beads with allegedly mystical powers, & shrines supposedly & purportedly used for cures. “They were the sorry substitutes for God's decreed ordinances and a powerful witness that another ordinance of Christ's Church had fallen by the wayside.”²¹⁰

Thus, it was claimed that even though there were no spiritual gifts to produce an ever increasing canon of scriptures. There were at least other spiritual gifts still in use in their collections of relics! These things were their replacements, because there were no true Christian apostles & prophets known throughout later Christendom. Or ones that could produce real on going scriptures to be collected with other real scriptures of old.²¹¹

Of course they had their scripture producers, but they were old scriptures that couldn't or weren't considered to be from a current living prophet or apostle, as to their own times & places in later Christendom. But instead, the scripture production was the making of hand written copies of the earlier scriptures, with different ones, & sects in different areas of Christendom, coming up with their own collections, different from the others.²¹²

But, despite this, the early to later Christians argued in their polemical wars against the Jews, how that they had rejected the restoration through Christ,²¹³ to bring back what had been lost for over 400 years, from the time of Malachi to John the Baptist, who prepared the way for Christ.²¹⁴ Thus, also, it was an early to later Christian polemic, that eventually turned into what the Jews thought of as anti-Semitic. How Christendom had charged that the Jews no longer were doing the right types of rituals, & that their synagogues had lost what had passed on to the Christians. For the Jewish laws had been replaced by the early Christians' restored gospel. That of the spiritual gifts, leadership, & different aspects that made the early Christian church the right way, & the old Jewish ways the apostate invalid way. At the same time, the Jews had charge Christendom with apostasy away from their faith. While the Christians would counter that the dispensation of the Jews had ended because of their forefathers' apostasy, & because they had rejected their prophesied Messiah, Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, & had killed him. Thus, a lot of persecutions against the early Christians arose, with different vilification propaganda tactics circulating from early anti-Christians, some of which were from the Jews.²¹⁵

But then, during the Roman Emperor, Constantine's time, (reigned 307-337), when Christianity became the State religion. Plus, on into the Middle Ages, & into the Reformation, & on up to modern times. Early to later Christians' polemics, prejudices, persecutions, heretic hunting, included forcing Jews to repent, & forced 'conversion' towards the Christianity of those times. Plus, the Inquisition, & on going thought policed periods of theocracies, when & where they tried to reclaim the Jews. If they couldn't then ban or even exterminate them, along with other unbelievers, heretics, & those alleged to practice witchcraft & worship the Devil.²¹⁶

This is not to say that there weren't individuals & groups of Christians and Jews, here & there, that didn't maintain the other spiritual gifts, like their charitable qualities, the spiritual gift of charity. Or weren't trying to follow what light they still had. But to point out what often happens to areas, & communities, after the people rejected, & killed their prophets, dark ages are produced!²¹⁷

Many of these times were rightfully interpreted by their victims, as being an age of darkness & spiritual blackness. Evidences that the later Christians had, like the Jews had earlier, lost most of the spiritual gifts.²¹⁸

But even during those times, many different ones amongst all faiths, did possess the gift of charity, even in a world turned dark & demonic. Thus, there were many who should be credited for their great efforts they made, in living the good principles taught them in their own particular faiths.

For the early to later Christians, it was the survival of deification themes, as found in their quests at advancing towards Christian moral perfection. This, despite the fact that they weren't perfect, & never would be in this mortal life, like none of us are.²¹⁹ They preserved in part, many spiritual gifts, &, they were shining lights of hope in a dark age without prophets & apostles. Thus, with the different ones that kept Christ's sayings, lived what light of the gospel that they did have, even despite the dogmas that they inherited from their parents & teachers. These different ones would become known in stories, & legends as 'the saints.' During the Dark Ages, there developed many traditions about the lore of the different true saints. How, despite the challenges of the corrupt, barbaric, cruel & spiritually dark times they lived in, they shine forth with a much light as they could by actually living what teachings of Christ that they'd learned, studied, or had consciences enough to follow.²²⁰

For without those living charitable traits, which were to be the real motives behind running hospitals, setting up places of refuge, feeding the poor, healing the sick, & watching over pilgrims on the dangerous pilgrim routes, (1 Cor. 13). It was believed that the spiritual darkness of Satan & his devils, would have spread even further to triumph completely over the forces of light and goodness. As it was, there were many legends, faith promoting stories, & art works, that gave hope, with fragments of pre-existence themes, that told of the post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, the demons. Their on going fights, but not triumphs over St. Michael, & his angelic armies. For so it was that the battle in heaven, sometimes continued on earth too.²²¹ Thus, spiritual gifts lore, got blended in with pre-existence lore & with Christ's world wide militant trek lore. But also deification lore. We see all this in how that many monks were taught to look for the wandering Christ in all that come to their monasteries, hospitals, & places of spiritual refuge. Christ, they were taught, would be guised, to test them, as a man of sorrows, the poor, as a cripple, a leper, a noble, a stranger, a small child, & as a pilgrim, etc. Thus, all were to be treated as if they could be the wandering Christ, as they performed the spiritual gift of charity, in doing their Christian duties of Matthew 25:13-46.²²²

Also, these themes are seen in how that many believed that they needed to combat the ever increasing spreading of the black arts of wizardry & witch craft. Thus, many different fables, & superstitious beliefs, arose, as a result of different ones coming up with different spiritual gift type countermeasures.²²³ Along with these are the different types of folk magic, & lore about what Satan & his fallen angels were doing after the war in heaven & their post-fall from heaven activities, (surviving pre-existence themes). The folk magic formulas, & procedures were believed, by many superstitious later Christians, to contain saintly powers & abilities (spiritual-gifts-lore mixed with deification lore). That they get access to from the spiritual storage banks in the heavens, of proxy-merits & proxy good deeds of powerful saints. For it was believed, by many later Christians, that they could be called upon during prayers to the saints, & then their particular rites, if performed during the folk magic prescribed times, would give them the sort of, spiritual-gifts-countermeasures, needed to combat witches' spells. Plus, to counter the other magical creatures of lore, superstitions, & fairy tales. Such as those about dwarfs, goblins, elves, trolls, fairies, and the underworld, or underground folk, as also in other later Christian nations' folk lore too. Many of the said creatures, dwarfs, etc., were believed to be the different races, of the fallen angels.²²⁴ They were busy with each their own post-fall from heaven activities, (pre-existence lore), as they went about their earthly & underworld devilish activities. Such as tempting people, seeking to do all kinds of harms, causing murders, accidents, ill omens, bad luck, etc. They were seeking to demonize further, (making people & souls into being more like the demons too, the reversal of deification). Doing this to as many as they could, amongst the human family, & the fallen souls of the after life realms. There were also many other pre-existence themes thrown into what became spiritual-gifts-lore & themes, such as lore about the spiritual powers needed to combat, the Devil & his demons everywhere.²²⁵

Thus, lore about the divinely powered saints combating & resisting, the Devil, & his demons, became popular lore & subjects in art works, to warn, teach & remind-all to be mindful of their vows, Christian duties, & to be on guard against the forces of darkness everywhere.²²⁶ Now, even if some of these stories were embellished somewhat for faith promoting purposes, & eventually became more legendized into miraculous or spiritual-gifts-legends. They still gave the common folk hope & wonderful tales to tell, during the long winter evenings. Ones that told about what different saints were alleged to have done, with those spiritual gifts, powers & abilities. For as they were advancing more & more towards Christian moral perfection, and eventual deification, their abilities became more & more advanced, glorious, & miraculous. Thus, it was believed that because they had become sanctified, more perfected, with more Christ like qualities, & would eventually, in the after life, join in the ranks with the other deified saints. Then, they, though lesser gods, & goddesses, ranked below Christ, could at least be called upon for help in times of need. The merits of their good deeds & spiritual gifts, could be tapped into, they could act as proxy good deeds & spiritual gifts, because they had inherited different powers & abilities. For as Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, notes from the scriptures available to him: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the Glory of God and his power." (ANF, 2:198, 215, Protrept. ciii). Thus, if different ones didn't have enough merits, or good works of their own, to combat the devils, & perform their own miracles, cures, or get protection from them, to counter the forces of darkness. They could call upon the saints who had their own ever increasing divine qualities (deification themes), that lore had assigned to them throughout the long traditions about the saints. Thus, spiritual gifts, by a sort of proxy merits from the saints' relics, & treasury-of-merits, could be used, so it was believed, as substitute spiritual gifts, like with later sales of indulgences.²²⁷

These artistic reminders & teaching tools were filled with spiritual meanings & symbolism.²²⁸ Reminders of the powers of the growing State-Religion, Christianity, whose spiritual gifts were becoming more like earthly civic powers, in the name of victorious "heavenly" powers, in many cases, to be feared, & respected.²²⁹ These art-works were sometimes seen by the monks, knights, nobles, royals, and the many illiterate later Christian pilgrims. Plus, merchants & others of all types, & faiths, that wandered the dangerous pilgrimage routes. They led to different towns, villages, cathedrals, monasteries, churches & other places of sanctuary, where art works prevailed & showed their different biblical & traditional saintly themes, & happenings in history.²³⁰

Consequently, the spiritual gifts that did survive were in the charitable acts of kindness done by many saints, & many good monks at monasteries, that practiced hospitable policies: Feeding the poor, healing the sick, giving sanctuary to even criminals, so long as they were penitent & seeking to repent & right their wrongs, as much as they could. Giving hospitality to travelers, pilgrims, & to all that might knock on their doors. Giving of their resources, as much as they had, to those seeking to take advantage of their hospitable policies. Thus, many were given a warm place to stay during the colder seasons. Or places to rest, & to try to improve their lives, both physically, & spiritually, as much as they knew how to. Or were taught to, by the good monks, through assignments of different tasks, those things that needed to be done, as a sort of community service hours as set forth as required penitent deeds & punishments. Or of food production, & other manufacturing going on to keep the monasteries going, supplied fuller & the treasures restocked. There were spiritual gift themes from the teachings of beautiful and well-preserved illumination manuscripts, & holy books, that preserved what light of truth they still retained. For there were many good monks amongst bad ones, that still tried to do their best to be of service to their fellow members of the human family. There were also different charitable ones & different individuals amongst the different sects, who did live loving & Charitable lives too. All these should be credited for keeping lit the lights of hope, during the dark age of the apostasy.²³¹

During the 8th century, amongst the Franks, the real spiritual gifts, having faded out, were replaced by popular lore and folk beliefs. For the Saints appear in the fields, miracles & portents, or signs or warning 'foretold' that something momentous or disastrous was likely to happen. These were affairs of everyday experiences. Dreams & omens exercise the peoples' minds, sanctuaries, & relics acquired talismanic powers that can heal or hurt.²³²

In time, bishops, or Priests were later believed to be just as good as having living apostles, & prophets, in that they were believed, they were, 'chosen by God.'²³³

RELIC MAGIC AS SUBSTITUTES FOR SPIRITUAL GIFTS LOST

In later centuries of Christendom, relic magic might have been born out of the different clothing items said to have powers to heal & even cast out evil spirits. But was it the clothing itself, or the person endowed with divine powers that had worn the clothing? Cases in point by which relic magic just might have been inspired from, were when a woman was healed by touching the hem of Christ's garment, (Matthew 9:20–22, Mark 5:25–34, Luke 8:43–48). In the land of Gennesaret, the people set up the sick in beds along the streets, as in other villages, or cities, or country that Christ entered, where "they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him were made whole." (Mark 6:53–56). Later, after Christ had endowed his apostles with healing priesthood powers, others were said to be healed by Peter's shadow. Thus, the sick were lined along the street on beds so that Peter's shadow, as he walked along, would overshadow them, whereby they would be healed, (Acts 5:12–15). Paul's handkerchief, or apron, which perhaps had been touching Paul's body, were brought to the sick & possessed, and such a clothing item was said to miraculously heal diseases & cast out evil spirits, (Acts 19:11–12). Paul was at Ephesus for about 2 years, and "did such extraordinary wonders" that many looked upon him as a miracle-worker, and sought to cure ailments by applying to the sick the linens Paul had used."²³⁴

We can see from these examples how later relics could have been inspired from, or got started from those types of stories. In later legends, garments would be connected to relic types, such as perhaps in the case with a German legend, The Holy Rupert: Rupert, upon clothing a poor child, was rewarded according to Matthew 25, of having given a garment to the wandering Christ-child, disguised as a poor child, or least of these his brethren, but of which garment must have become a sort of relic for the Convent of Eubingen.²³⁵

The different later Christian sects of those later centuries, came up with their own substitutes, in addition to these, in order to claims that the divine powers & gifts were still in use. Some must have also found that their claims to having different types of relics, could also generate revenues from pilgrimages routes. Many routes became trade routes too, as they would be eventually created for pilgrims seeking to be cured, forgiven, or to see & experience the wonders said to be surrounded & near the different relics & markets that sprung up. One relic legend is the 'Legend of the Breviary, Festival of the Finding of the Holy Cross.' According to it, after 325 A.D., or after the Council of Nicea, Helena, the mother of the Emperor Constantine, left Rome on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, Jerusalem. While there, she had excavations made of the mountain of Calvary, looking for the "true cross," & 3 crosses were taken out of the ground. There were no titles on them to know which cross was the one Christ was crucified on, so Macarius, bishop of Jerusalem, prayed & commanded that a very ill woman should touch each cross. The first 2 produced no effect, but the 3rd one touched suddenly restored health to her. So this legend goes. Another source says that the cross was inclosed in a vase silver box & given to the bishop of Jerusalem. Helena kept a part of it & 2 nails believed to have been some of the ones that had fasten the Holy victim to the wood. She sent these "precious relics" to her son, Constantine, who received them with joy. Sanctuaries were built over their resting place.²³⁶

Paul prophesied of time when many would depart from the faith, speaking lies in hypocrisy, (1 Tim. 4:1–2). Certainly the multiplying of all kinds of relics, to replace the spiritual gifts, was foreseen. Consequently, once divine miracles were no longer common among the people, they invented replacements, manufactured substitutes, & imitations. They looked for ways to keep the traditions of miracles going. "Multitudes of lies were framed concerning miracles wrought by the relics of departed Saints, as they were termed." Also: "Relics rapidly became, and for some 800 years remained, the most important single element in Christian devotion. They were the Christians only practical defence [or defense] against inexplicable suffering."²³⁷

The Spiritual Gifts went on sale, got commercialized! Different ones saw opportunities for profiteering off of the ignorance, illiteracy, superstitions & beliefs of many that had been shaped by ever growing legendized versions of blends of paganism in with later Christians' beliefs. Plus, their blends of rites, customs, traditions, & folk magic, that developed from those cultures, that spread & flourished as consequences & products of the Great Apostasy.²³⁸ For, if a church leader needed funds to build a church or cathedral, funds could be generated by charging a small fee for pilgrims to come see & be near the relic, or collections of relics, that were said to cause miraculous cures, or other wonders. Thus, the different real, or alleged to be real miracles, are what seems to have replaced the actual spiritual gifts that had faded out during later centuries in Christendom. In time, there were too many relics that couldn't all be relics, & this was some of the things complained about by later 16th century Reformers.²³⁹

During the Middle Ages, pilgrims headed for over a thousand shrines whose miracles had been recognized by Rome. One such popular destination was the tomb of one Pierre de Luxembourg, a cardinal, who'd died, age 18 of anorexia. Within 15 months of his death, at least 1,964 miracles were credited to the magic he had left in his bones.²⁴⁰

"Medieval Rome Catholicism was a religion of forms and ceremonies, superstition abounded. The veneration of shrines and relics and the belief in their capacity to work miracles and to confer spiritual benefits was almost universal."²⁴¹

5th–6th c., corrupt traveling monks, who had fled from society, not to become holy, but to escape slavery & famine, would travel about from place to place, being lazy, immoral & were known to sale false relics. Augustine, Jerome, & Ambrose tried to correct these growing abuses.²⁴²

During these later centuries, before the witch hunting eras, in every corner of Europe, from the 5th–15th centuries, various "striga," or "masca" or "vala," or witches, were more tolerated by the common folk & even consulted for magical help, in doing their practices, as requested, to help with different needs, & protection, etc. They were sometimes also more open about their magical arts, than in later centuries, when they were forced to go underground, because they were hunted, for if caught & if they were even witches at all, & they were forced to confess, were tortured, burned, & otherwise murdered & killed.²⁴³ Early on, even the early Christians were charged with practicing "the black arts," or "black magic," & according to early anti-Christians, they were guilty of all kinds of evils in the societies they infested. The early Christian apologists countered these claims as best as they could, but many were martyred, because many non-Christians believed the gossip, rumors, stories & propaganda circulated against the early Christians.²⁴⁴

During 5th through 15th centuries: “Witches and witchcraft belonged, then, to the regular business of life in pre-modern times.... Christianity’s relation to all this was ambivalent; tolerance, not to say complicity, was frequently the norm. Individual priest might even double as conjurors, dispensing what were essentially magical remedies alongside their regular parish ministrations. It is also clear that some of the Church’s own devotional practices closely resembled traditional magic: for example, prayers for saintly intercession; the veneration of sacred relics for the purpose of cure or other personal benefit; the hallowing of particular landscape sites; the use of outright charms like the widely-found agnus dei (a wax medallion made for paschal candles). Individual worshipers could move with relative ease back and forth between such ostensibly Christian maneuvers and the nostrums and devices of the “cunning folk.”²⁴⁵

During the 6th century: “Medicine remained, for we hear of court physicians; but among the people magic and prayers seemed better than drugs. Gregory, Bishop of Tours (538?-94), denounced as sinful the use of medicine instead of religion as a means of curing illness. In his own sickness he sent for a physician, but soon dismissed him as ineffectual; then he drank a glass of water containing dust from St. Martin’s tomb, and was completely cured.”²⁴⁶ So the story goes.

787, 7th General Council, the bishops were forbidden to consecrate new churches that didn’t have relics. In time, the miraculous power of relics were to become more wide spread throughout all of Christendom.²⁴⁷

About 10th–11th centuries: “The deficiencies in human resources were supplied by the power of the saints. They were great power-houses in the fight against evil; they filled the gaps left in the structure of human justice. The most revealing map of Europe in the centuries would be a map, not of political or commercial capitals, but of the constellation of sanctuaries, the points of material contact with the unseen world. The resting places of the saints were the chief centres of ecclesiastical organization and of spiritual life. The saints were indeed very businesslike; there was nothing mild or uncertain about the justice which they dispensed; they looked after their own. The monks of the monastery of Fleury on the Loire, for instance, had a precious treasure in the body of St Benedict, and from the ninth to the early twelfth century they kept a record of what it did for them.”²⁴⁸

“The spirit of the fifteenth century did not differ much from that of the Umbrian peasants, who, about the year 1000, wished to kill Saint Romuald, the hermit, in order to make sure of his precious bones; or of the monks of Fossanuova, who, after Saint Thomas Aquinas had died in their monastery, in their fear of losing the relic, did not shrink from decapitating, boiling and preserving the body. During the lying in state of Saint Elizabeth of Hungary, in 1231, a crowd of worshipers came and cut or tore strips of the linen enveloping her face; they cut off the hair, the nails, even the nipples. In 1392, King Charles VI of France, on the occasion of a solemn feast, was seen to distribute ribs of his ancestor, Saint Louis; to Pierre d’Ailly and to his uncles Berry and Burgundy he gave entire ribs; to the prelates on bone to divide between them, which they proceeded to do after the meal.”²⁴⁹

At Wilsnach, there was said to be a church that had been destroyed by a knight in the 14th century, & with part of the altar left standing, & it was believed that wonderful “cures” were performed on the spot, & pilgrims came there from afar. The archbishop of Prague, opposed to the superstition, & abuses of the church, appointed a commission of 3, including John Huss (born July 6, 1369), to investigate the miracle. The committee discovered that the miracle was a fraud. Huss not denying transubstantiation, suggested that there was no miraculous powers in the 3 red wafers found in the altar. How that the glorified body of Christ exists “dimensionally in heaven alone. (Here he used the later Christological theme about Christ’s body). He then concludes that all that is said, therefore, about relics of Christ’s body, or his blood, as being in this place or that, must be false.”²⁵⁰

1483–1546, during Martin Luther’s life time, Frederick the Wise, & others, like princes, rival each other in seeing who could collect the most relics. Wise had at least 5,000 sacred objects in his private collection. Some of them listed in a catalogue included: The rod of Moses, a bit of the burning bush, thread spun by the Virgin Mary, etc. The elector of Mayence exceeded Wise’s collection, & included 42 whole bodies of saints & some earth from a field near Damascus that God was supposed to have created man from.²⁵¹

HUMAN-REASON & LOGIC ALONE: With the prophetic gifts & officers gone, the churches of these later centuries were to face the challenge of sorting out the different dogmas that arose, through logic & reason. Even when the prophets, & apostles, & different early leaders had been alive in the earliest days of the Church, they had to face the challenges of sorting out different issues, problems, & controversies that arose in the different areas of the Church, for that was part of their job & duties.²⁵²

John Fox, author of Fox’s Book of Martyrs, summed up the challenges of the later centuries: “Most of the errors which crept into the Church at this time arose from placing human reason in competition with revelation.”²⁵³

The primitive church had a hard enough time as it was, with different problems & controversies that arose among the members, & even between some of the apostles themselves. And then to add to those challenges, & problems, the fact that false teachers, & their teachings, had begun to infiltrate into many of the branches of the church. They were presenting different counterfeit teachings, & practices, inspired by false spirits that had also infiltrated the different branches. And all these added more challenges and problems for which the spiritually gifted leaders had to deal with. All of which the early leaders attempted to do, & did do by spiritual combat, as best as they could with the spiritual gifts that they had been given by Christ. (Eph. 6:10-20). And it was a battle even for them! Now consider, if it was a battle even for them: How much more of a battle would it have been for the later Christians who seemed to have lost most of the spiritual gifts, by those later centuries?

When the people rejected the prophets, & apostles & martyred them, they also took away the constant reminders that those inspired leaders gave to the early Christians to be kind, charitable, mindful of others, humble, and to always be perfecting their lives, by working on getting rid, in their lives, the bad negative traits, while striving for more positive traits, (Colossians 3:5-25, 4:1-6, etc). These traits helped improve communities, if lived by the righteous. For even the non-believers would also have to note that they were not being harmed by at least the believers, who were not making evil choices. Thus, so long as believers lived their religious convictions, vows & kept the commandments, & sayings of Christ, & his inspired leaders.²⁵⁴ There would be less greed, because selfishness had been rid of, & they would have been more willing to help those in need. There would be less poverty, because they’d have freely given of their abundance, if they had it, to others & thus would have had all things in common, because they also had love towards each other, & the non-believers too, (Acts 2:42–46, 4:32–35, 1 Cor. 13). There would have been less theft, because there was less covetousness, & less negative schemes by those plotting ways to get other peoples’ wealth or property. There would have been less murders, & the problems that often arise with all types of sexual deviants, perversions, unfaithfulness & fornicating, which produce children born out of wedlock, or the unborn being aborted–murdered. Or if born, later exposed, through the wicked practices of the times, that of exposure of infants, by leaving them out side to be at the mercy of the weather & wild animals, or slave traders, who might find the unwanted infants. Yes, the living of Christ’s teachings, & following the teachings of living prophets & apostles of the times, & other inspired righteous spiritually gifted leaders. All these would have solved many problems, & sin-produced-consequences, before they all got started. Such things would have made their societies better, as it would ours’ today, making it a lot safer & better place to live in. But because from the earliest days of the church, the positive traits were not live, & the negative traits of the devil & his demons were returned to, even after different ones had repented for a while of their former negative life styles. The problems that the negative traits, & loss of the spirit, & loss of the spiritual gifts, & the loss of the Apostles & prophets, all summed up to are these: The creating all of the sins, diseases, challenges, crimes, problems, legal issues, & family problems, contentions, schisms, wars, famines, murders, thefts, etc., that sins & evil-choices produce. Plus, with all their negative ripple-affects throughout families & societies. Which also produce many of these negative effects because of those who are also not doing the good that was taught them, & which they knew better, should have been done too, ends up not being done. Such as: Feeding the poor, clothing the naked, visiting & caring for the sick, etc., etc., (Matt. 25).

A venerable bishop, Thascius Cyprian, 200–258, laments & admits: “They used to give for sale houses and estates; and that they might lay up for themselves treasures in heaven, presented to the Apostles the price of them, to be distributed for the use of the poor. But now we do not even give the tenths from our patrimony; and while our Lord bids us sell, we rather buy and increase our store. Thus has the vigor of faith dwindled away among us.”²⁵⁵

John Chrysostom, 354–407, one of the Greek father, wrote that: “If we no longer have revelation, we have something better, the bodies of the martyrs, which the demons fear.” And yet, as mentioned earlier, Chrysostom had argued that the early leaders, the apostles, etc., had overcome the great minds of their times, not by the abilities to win debates & out argue the Greeks, or others. But it was, despite their weaknesses, how they over came their foes, with the help of the spiritual gifts, (1 Cor. 1:25-7; 2:6-16).²⁵⁶

LOSS OF SPIRITUAL GIFTS, & THE POWER STRUGGLES AMONG RIVAL CLERICS

During the 4th–6th century, the dogmas and controversies were not settled by divine words from an inspired clerical officer, leader, or prophet & apostle. Consequently, the later Christians, & their dogmatic views, lacked the inspirational guides of those with true spiritual-gifts. Ones that went with their clerical offices, like in the earliest church, (Eph.4:19-14, 1 Cor., chapters 12–13). Hence, human logic & reason continued to be the basis of attempting to resolve polemical issues & deal with their different conflicts over religious & ritualistic modes of performances, & schisms.

Add to that, the shaping of dogmas influenced by a combination of theocratic power grabs, special interest groups’ political, commercial & militant agendas. Plus, the on going struggles between Emperors’ powers, and ever growing clerical powers. Plus, the on going threats, & militant invasions of German Barbarians from the north into Italy, & other parts of the Empire in the west.

Plus, the shifting & establishment of the Eastern Empire seat of power at Constantinople, by Constantine. All these elements & others, played each & their own parts & aspects in the shaping, developing & enforcing of the different dogmas. Some which were accepted at times, & for a time, only to later be condemned, according to the leanings and acceptances, or rejections of different Roman Emperors. As it was, there were, at times, different ones that were in power in the different areas of the later Roman Empire’s areas throughout the Mediterranean provinces. The Church had, from early times, adopted the divisions of the State in its organizations. Cities became the seats of bishops, who sometimes met in synods, (or an assembly of the clergy), in the provincial capitals. The bishops of these capitals became metropolitan centers of powers, with ever growing competitions between the clerics’ claims to rights to elect church leaders, & the State’s claims to the controlling the election of subordinate bishops. As the bishops’ positions took on more & more religious-political powers, the positions of bishoprics became sought after more & more. Especially by those seeking theocratic powers in the ever growing metropolitan seats, or to become ruling Patriarchs, like in the East. Some of the early centers of theocracies or Sees, that developed, were those at Rome, at Antioch, Alexandria, & Ephesus, then later in Constantinople, which from 330 onwards, rapidly grew in theocratic importance & power. This despite how the Roman See would later claim superiority over all others in time.²⁵⁷

The “...theological notions that generally prevailed, were proved rather by the authorities & logical discussions of the ancient doctors, than [they were] by the unerring dictates of the divine word...”²⁵⁸ wrote Mosheim. Many issues that arose were discussed in councils, in later centuries of Christianity. But they were done with no apostles, prophets, & the spiritual gifts to help them settle things in an official manner, with divine authority. For the different later Christians sought to resolve different issues as best as they could through polemical arguments, & creeds. In the later centuries that followed, the different councils rejected the earlier Christian doctrines, & so some of the doctrines & practices also began to fade out of the church.

However, we must not forget the many different saints, monks, & monastic orders that did their best to strive towards their own versions of Christian moral perfection, despite their weaknesses & imperfections. All credit & honor should be acknowledged to them who tried to remain kind, in a savage world. Tried to remain charitable, in a world of greed. Tried to maintain their vows of chastity, in a world where other church leaders justified all types of immoralities & whoredoms. Tried to feed the poor, take care of the sick, wounded, & afflicted, in a world of all kinds of dangers along the pilgrimage routes. Tried to keep as many of the teachings of Christ & ascend up the rungs of the ladders to heaven, towards the ultimate goal & rewards of enduring to the end to reach deification & Christian moral perfection. Where each rung represented Christ-like-traits, such as love, kindness, etc. All this, despite the temptations of lust, riches, fame, pride, greed & other distractions that sought to pull them down & cause them to “fall” away. Thus, all credit should be given to them, the faithful, & noble later Christians, as they that tried to keep the light of Christ lit. As they shined forth, with what spiritual gifts of charity & other Christ-like traits that they developed.²⁵⁹

395–450, the See of Alexandria was ruled by a dynasty of strong and unscrupulous prelates, or bishops or other high ecclesiastical dignitaries, “...with a traditional technique which included bribery, anathemas, exploitation of national animosity, and the terrorising of councils by the use of armed sailors from the ports of Alexandria and monks from Thebaid....”²⁶⁰

398, clerical power struggles continue in many areas of Christendom. Such as with Theophilus, bishop of Alexandria’s failed attempts to prevent the election of Chrysostom to the See, (or the seat of authority of a bishop or archbishop), of Constantinople. By 403, Theophilus made use of the Empress Eudoxia, whom Chrysostom had offended. Consequently, with also the help of opposing groups in Asia, that secured a deposition against Chrysostom at the Synod of the Oak, he was exiled. By similar methods, Cyril, Bishop of Alexandria, 431, Council of Ephesus, deposes & excommunicates Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, and vilified him with dogmatic claims that he had divided too trenchantly the personality of Christ. More deposing followed, 449, Second Council of (or ‘Latrocinium’) of Ephesus, for Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, deposes Flavian, bishop of Constantinople. Other methods & tactics used in these power struggles were: Bribery, armed-forces at the council, to enforce the deposition. But then, 451, Council of Chalcedon, Dioscorus is banished, while Eutyches, a monk who was restored earlier & who had attacked dogmatically Nestorius, was condemned. One of the many points of contention, in the Christological Controversy, was over the single personality, or not, & the single nature, or not, of Christ. These power struggles caused different ones to rise & fall in their clerical positions, as the See at Alexandria, that dominated earlier, lost to the domination of other Sees, or areas of the church. The doctrine of the 2 natures of Christ, was formulated by Leo of Rome, & it was accepted then, 451, though the Alexandrian party resisted this, & thus, at Egypt & Syria, the Monophysite heresy prevailed, that proclaimed dogmatically, 1 nature of Christ, only, not 2.

Joachim of Fiore, 1135–1202, known as Joachim of Flora & in Italian Gioacchino da Fiore, an Italian theologian and the founder of the monastic order of San Giovanni in Fiore. Later followers, are called Joachimites. He seems to write about the human family seeking more divine wisdom from God: “When Scripture says, ‘the eye is not satisfied with seeing nor the ear filled with hearing’, it means that full and unending pleasure is to drink not what has been tasted but instead what is yet to be tasted, nor to hear what has been heard and interpreted by the fathers, but rather to hear something new from God’s inexhaustible treasures, something we lack of divine wisdom.”²⁶²

1245–47, the Council of Lyons, (1245), & Frederick II, in his Illos felices (1246), sought to reform the church, as others suggested earlier that it needed to be done. It was declared that the prelates and clergy should be returned to that state of poverty in which they were at the time of the primitive Church. “...For clerks of that time contemplated the angels, and coruscate with miracles, cured the sick, raised the dead and subjected kings and princes by sanctity and not by arms.” By 1247, north French barons followed the rhetoric to justify reducing clerical powers. They claimed that the clergy should be reduced back to the state of the primitive church, this was to be done in the hopes that they would return to “lead the active life, [& so that] they will again perform miracles, those miracles that have long departed from this earth.”²⁶³

During the 16th century, Erasmus, a respected Priest, reprimanded his fellow monks who believed that “to perform miracles is old-fashioned, outworn, completely out of step with the times.”²⁶⁴

After many centuries, & with the rise of Reformers during the 16th & 17th centuries, there arose those who sought to bring back many of the basic beliefs they found in scriptures. However, more splits resulted in historic

Christendom, as rival sects continue to split off from different Reformationists’ versions of The Reformation, after breaking away from the Catholic religion.²⁶⁵

With the scriptures being translated, printed, & different versions of the bible being made available to the common folks in their own languages, rather than being suppressed as before, by the clergy. Different ones started to note how far away from the original message the churches & clergy had retrogressed to. Different people looked at the state run churches under the authority of Kings & Queens, as being corrupt. They looked upon the clergy as sinful, degraded, & in apostate conditions, & sought to bring back the spiritual gifts.

Thus, George Fox, founder of Quakerism, during the 17th century, claimed to have the spiritual gift of revelation, & became known amongst his followers, as a wandering prophet. Fox was born in 1624, & by about age-19, in about 1643, he was concerned about the act of a couple Puritans, or those claiming to be living Christian moral lives, but who were taking part in a popular custom of “drinking healths.” Men would drink until one refused to order another round, and the one who quit would be obliged to pay for all the liquor. Fox refused to take part in this custom, when invited by those he thought should be living more Christian like. Earlier in his life, he had read the bible & started seeking answers from God as to what he should do about the corruption he was seeing in the churches. After this incident, he spent the night in his bedroom in deep prayerful meditation. Suddenly, Fox alleged, the voice of God tells him to forsake all, and be a stranger to all: “Thou seest how young people go together into vanity and old people into the earth... Thou must forsake all, both young and old, and keep out of all, and be as a stranger unto all.” God is alleged to have commanded him.

9-9-1643, at the command of God, Fox went on the quest for religious truth. As a Seeker, he became critical of all professional clergymen, rejected the creeds of all established religions, and claimed to have revelations, & that others could also get messages through the Light-of-Christ too. By 1647, he more earnestly promulgated his religious convictions, & in time, his followers looked upon him as a traveling prophet. However, as the years passed, Quakerism was plagued with debilitating schisms, & the members issued conflicting beliefs. Especially when they each claimed their own messages through claims to revelations, were true. This was what Fox had proclaimed, that they all could also be enlightened by the Light of Christ & the Holy Spirit, when transformed by the Light of Christ to be united with the “Seed,” to thus speak for God like the prophets of old. Though the Quakers claimed such spiritual gifts, their revelations didn’t produce new scriptures, as did the true prophets of old did. Instead, many of them claimed the bible was enough but was second to their claims to be able to receive divine revelations. However, without a true prophet or apostles to keep unity, (Ephesians 4:10-14), conflicting schisms arose & caused more disunity in their versions to reform, & upon being Seekers of truths. Their claims to the spiritual gifts of new prophets, only produced conflicting “truths.” Though claimed to be revealed to numerous members, during their different moments of quiet prayerful meditations.²⁶⁶

1703-1791, John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, commenting on 1 Cor. 13, notes how the gifts of the Holy Spirit were only common in the Church for more than 2-3 centuries, but not afterwards. “We seldom hear of them after that fatal period when the Emperor Constantine called himself a Christian.” Furthermore, it was from this time, that the gifts almost totally ceased, for “very few instances of the kind were found.” But why? Wesley argued for a real answer over ones given: The cause of this was not because there was no more occasion for them, but because the love of many Christians, so-called, had “waxed cold.” For: “The Christians had no more of the Spirit of Christ than the other Heathens. The Son of Man, when he came to examine his Church, could hardly “find faith upon earth.” This was the real cause why the extra-ordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were no longer to be found in the Christian Church; because the Christians were turned Heathens again, and had only a dead form left.”²⁶⁷

Priesthood Keys of Revelation and the Spiritual Gifts

The spiritual gifts of revelation were also part of the Priesthood powers. Symbolized in types as a key. As a key unlocks, or locks doors, so also does the power of the priesthood, unlock the doors to knowledge, and the revelations of Christ. The priesthood power of revelation, as given to those who have the testimony, the witness of Christ, as the Son of God, these are concepts that the New Testament presents, (Matthew 16:13–20, Rev. 19:10). Christ warned the scribes & Pharisees & lawyers, how that they had become hypocrites in their rejection of his message, like those of old who rejected & killed the prophets: “Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered.” (Luke 11:52).

It was through the keys of the priesthood powers that Christ gave to his apostles & prophets, that the true miracles were done. Plus, that the rituals, or mysteries, were performed, by the authority given them by Christ, & in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The keys were also types of unlocking the spirit prison, in the rituals done by the worthy living, for & in behalf of the dead. Baptism became a ritualistic type of this, for they’d go down into the water as a type of Christ going down into the spirit prison to unlock, with the keys, the gates of hell, to there after free, by resurrection, the spirits of the dead.²⁶⁸

Geoffrey R. King tells us how Christ “went into the world of the dead, conquered the warden and master of that place, wrenched from his grasp the keys of death and of Hades, so that ever since Good Friday night Christ has held the keys. He says so in Revelation i., [Rev. 1:18] you remember: “I am He that liveth; I became dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore; and I have the keys of death and of Hades.” Satan had them before: I have them now. Then when Jesus ascended He took these released captives under Satan’s government with Him up into Heaven. That is why I have called this study “The Divine Missionary to Hades”.”²⁶⁹

Peter, in turn, is also one who was given power from Christ to raise souls too. Thus, in a number of art works, Peter was given keys to loose or to bind, or lock hell’s gate, or also enter into the fires of hell to preach the gospel. He descends into hell with his key and reaches down to those in hell, just like Christ did, and raises them by the hand, as Christ did, and guides them over into paradise, just as Christ also did. In some cases, he stands before the door to paradise, key symbol with him, and greets, with hand grasps, all those on the right hand of Christ’s Judgment, as they ascend to paradise.²⁷⁰

The key symbol became a popular symbol for St. Peter, & the Catholics’ claims to being keepers of the keys, as said to be held by Peter’s successors of Popes (Papas or church Fathers), throughout the centuries. Thus, keys in the hands of their Popes represented their claims & contentions to still have the powers, authority, keys, & spiritual gifts, with tales of miracles here & there throughout Catholic history. Thus, claiming evidences, be they real, or manufactures, in some cases, to thus show that the spiritual gifts are still used throughout the Catholic churches scattered branches of their later versions of historic Christendom.²⁷¹

BAPTISM WITHOUT AUTHORITY CONTROVERSY

Along with Priesthood powers, & clerical rankings, there were also the issues of who had what authority to perform different church rituals, & their worthiness, to do so. In time, worthiness didn’t seem to be that much of a sought after qualification, & during the later centuries into the middle ages, simony became a notable problem in the later church, (the buying or the sale of clerical positions, after Simon, Act chap. 8).²⁷²

With the rise of different “heretical” sects, the issues over who had authority to baptize, or if former heretics needed baptism again, came up during the mid 3rd century. The Montanists, Marcionists, Valentinus, Marcion, Apelles, the different Gnostic sects, each had their own baptismal rituals, & claims to the spiritual gifts & authority in different areas where Christianity was spreading to. The questions & discussions over what constituted valid baptisms were brought up time & time again, when after 250, converts, who had belonged to heresies, that had organized their own churches, began to ask for admission into the church that rivaled the heresies. In other cases, converts had been born into heretical sects, or had been baptized from paganism. Thus, the issues were, what about the baptisms they might have gone through already. Did they need to be baptized again, or not? Different churches responded variously, Rome proselytes counted it valid to just lay hands on the converts, (called the imposition of hands, placed on the person’s head, (Acts 8:– 24). In Asia, rebaptism was practiced, with each method being claimed to be done under apostolic authority.

193–211, reign of Alexander Severus, a couple synods (assembly of clergy & sometimes including laity), were held in Iconium and Synnada. A ruling came forth that rebaptism was to be done through most churches of Asia Minor. Early 3rd century, under Aegrippinus, bishop of Carthage, in Africa, a synod sanctioned rebaptism. Stephen (of Rome), contended with some Asiatic bishops over the manner admitting converts from heretical sects, & argued that baptism, no matter in what heretical sect done, was valid, while imposition of hands, was not. Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, was drawn into the controversy by a question of some Numidian & Mauritanian bishops. Cyprian, argued that heretics, not being members, couldn’t administer baptism, nor confer the Holy Ghost. He noted the custom in Rome, was to not baptize heretics, & insisted that the African church of baptizing them, was the true tradition. He points out their inconsistency in baptizing, but not validating imposition of hands. The question was brought up about how the Apostles & apostolic testimonials treat heretical baptisms, or them taking part in the sacrament? They wouldn’t approve, so why should different ones, like those at Rome, not observe the true apostolic tradition. Cyprian cites Stephen to point out his ironic teachings of the heretics, that do not baptize those who come to them, from one another, but only receive them to communion. Cyprian goes on to point out the inconsistencies, how that heretics don’t baptize those who come to them from one another, so why should baptism be allowed to just anyone, anyhow, anywhere? If for baptism, then why not for impositions of hands too? Cyprian was asking the bishop, Stephen (of Rome), to be consistent, as Cyprian argues for more oneness in the churches. But, he admits that such issues were dividing the church & the Holy Spirit is not there, because he is lost, and cannot be among profane persons and those who are without baptism. Or at least the true traditional one, & the true traditional apostolic imposition of hands to receive the Holy Ghost. He warns that there were those who were following the examples of heretics, that they couldn't get light from darkness, because there were those who were doing what anti-Christ's do. He calls for the need to return to our Lord and origin, and the evangelical and apostolic tradition. Further on, how that all converts from any heresy must be baptized by the only lawful baptism of the church, with the exception of those already baptized, who then went over to heretics, but return, repented, should be received & restored by the imposition of hands, back into the fold.²⁷³

Cyprian again defends the earlier Christian concept of Baptism by authority, & argues against those who baptize without it, & that don't have any priesthood. He argued how that heretics and schismatics have no power (authority) or right whatever, dicimus omnes omnino haereticos et schismaticos nihil habere potestatis ac juris. Though different ones like Firmilian, bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia, agreed with Cyprian, his views didn't gain support, or were influential enough to get those at the Council of Arles (314), that decided against rebaptism. For in the 8th canon it ordered that if the schismatical baptism had been administered in the name of the Trinity, converts should be admitted to the church by the imposition of hands.²⁷⁴

When those of the members of the early Christian communities experienced the loss of the spiritual gifts, through disobedience to morality, by not keeping the commandments, and by not following the Prophets' & Apostles' warnings! Such as to repent, to not go after heretical teachers, or wolves that had entered into the flock, (false teachers). Ones that created more schisms, contentions, controversies, & splinter-groups that multiplied. Then, different ones changed the purpose of baptism, that had been for the cleansing of the sins of individuals; to where it eventually became for the sin of Adam, "original sin." They changed the age for those who were to be baptized, from those who could reason, listen & could understand the gospel message, repent of their sins, etc. To later include infants, who had to have proxy spokes-persons, or "God parents," to answer for them, & later teach them what it all meant, when they grew up & could understand. They changed the mode & manners of baptism to include different modes, some for convenient sakes, & to include different various pomp, long ceremonies, long prayers & additional man-made qualifications & requirements. Baptism, that required one endowed with the priesthood, was changed to be allowed to be done by ones without authority, & the councils of Arles (314) & Nicea (325), both approved heretical baptism—baptism without the priesthood, according to the Roman usage.

Were all these the results of the loss of the spiritual gifts? Or did these changes result in the loss of the spiritual gifts? Or was it a combination of both? Especially, as disobeying, changing things, thus caused a noticeably decrease in miracles. Plus, the loss of then current scripture producing clergy, for there were not claims to having then, current prophets, & apostles, as they noted that the gifts of the Spiritual Gifts, were becoming rarer, & even soon ceased in the East & in the West.²⁷⁵

313—476, was roughly the period in historic Christianity in which on going controversy over baptism without authority raged on, along with many other controversies. With the loss of the spiritual gifts, the loss of prophets & apostles to help keep doctrines, ritualistic modes, & the mysteries in check, from those who wanted to substitute other ceremonies. Baptism without authority, & the mode itself was also changed to different

"acceptable" types, for it was no longer just immersions, but pourings, & sprinklings.²⁷⁶

By the end of the 3rd century, & later, all the early Christian churches in north Africa are said to have rallied to the Roman church's usage. Thus, baptism could then be performed by those without authority, for it didn't matter who performed it, what sect they belonged to, the baptism was recognized as valid. In the Eastern part of the Roman Empire, the hesitations once keeping back the controversial practiced, eventually gave way to the church of Rome. After the beginning of the 4th century, baptism was considered valid no matter who performed it, and no matter in what sect performed. Thus, with the spiritual gifts that also go with the priesthood, becoming less, & less available. Plus, less important, less known, & not required. Anyone having the priesthood, or without it, man, woman or child, member or non-member of the church, were 'authorized' to baptize in the different modes that also were allowed.

For the Roman version, Augustine formulated a baptism of compromises, for though a baptism without authority was considered unlawful, and with usurpation of the rites of the church, it still was validated. The thinking of many, that went for this increasingly popular policy, & position, was that, though it was true that heretics & sinners baptize illicitly, and they have no right to baptize, & usurps the formulas & rites. Despite this, the sacraments are venerable and were to be recognized, even if done by their unworthy hands. Thus, for the sacrament to be valid, all that was needed, it was later argued, was that the formula be pronounced literally, & it didn't matter what meanings the minister of it might give to the terms that compose it.²⁷⁷

Thus, in the later Christian churches, as the spiritual gifts faded out, there were also compromised in issues over priesthood authority that were part of the spiritual gifts to perform different miracles too. Like in the case with the earlier casting out of the evil spirit. When the sons of Sceva tried to use the name of Jesus, the evil spirit said: Jesus I know, Paul I know, but who are you? Without the authority, power, & priesthood, the evil spirit was able to overcome those who tried to imitate the formula employed by Paul, despite how the name of Jesus was being used, (Acts 19:15–17).

While the church at Rome & other churches that adopted this later compromise, they thought they had good intentions to do so, for it removed difficult obstacles for heretics to return to the church, so they thought. They wanted to make it easier, so the qualification became easier, in many cases. While others still maintained that the earliest church had to have those endowed with the priesthood, who were also worthy, to perform them.

30–107, Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, martyred about 107, wrote that it wasn't lawful to baptize without the bishop. S. John Chrysostom, (349–407), Archbishop of Constantinople, wrote "...For the Gospel is a work perhaps for one or two; but baptizing, for every one endowed with the priesthood..."²⁷⁸

In time, baptism was also done to infants, who can neither believe, repent, understand what was being done, & why. Was Origen, (185–254), interpolated to make him say that: "the church received from the apostles the tradition of giving baptism to infants." If so, why did it take about 5 centuries to conform to the "tradition"? Then 13 centuries to finally secure it under official recognition?²⁷⁹ There was also believed to be no priesthood needed, especially when baptism for the dead faded off into later myths & baptismal prayer formulas. Such as for water nymphs type creatures, believed in some area of much later Christendom to be the spirits of babies, who had died without baptism. Thus, simple baptismal-prayer-formulas were believed would baptize them.²⁸⁰

By the 5th century, with the approval & favoring of Christianity by the Emperors, many adults had been baptized because it was the politically correct thing to do. But they got baptized without any conviction, without repentance, and instruction. Some, after the baptism of their political chief, were baptized of their own free will, while others, at times, were forced. Without sincere repentance, conviction & changes in their life styles, the newly “baptized,” brought into the church, their immoral habitual life styles. After all, they were still pagan at heart, & “Christians” in name only. They certainly weren’t committed, or taught what it was meant to be Christians. Others waited to be baptized, as late in life as possible, thinking that they could sin all their life long, & then before they thought they were going to die, they got baptized to be ‘cleansed of their sins,’ before they died.²⁸¹

WHEN & WHERE THE SPIRITUAL GIFTS, PROPHETS & APOSTLES WERE REPLACED BY “DOCTRINES” & DOGMAS, ENFORCED AS LAWS & BY THOUGHT POLICING THEOCRACIES & TYRANTS

With spiritual gifts, the offices of authority by Apostles & Prophets gone from the later church, (Eph.4:10-14; 1 Cor. chap.12, Amos 3:7). With scriptural producing prophets & apostles no longer heard of which could reveal God’s will, help settle issues through the Holy Spirit, (Acts 1:2-5, 5:29-32, 15:28, 1 Cor. 2:11-14).

Different ones made claims to being more “true” in their authority, through being more “apostolic,” than others. (Or, by maintaining that their church was founded by an apostle). Such things were used by some later church leaders to try to gain more powers. Plus, to make what was produced in letters, published decrees, or tomes, as more authoritative than others. Such claims to being apostolic, was also used to claim their positions on schisms, or arguments & wording, not found in scriptures, but set forth in new compromised formulas of dogmas, was the divinely approved truth. Claiming divine apostolic foundations, & some claiming that Peter spoke through them, was to thus claim their positions over different versions of the wordings in creedal statements of “faith,” were more “authoritative,” than their rivals.²⁸²

An early case of thought policing during the earliest church was when Peter & John went up to the temple to preached, but then healed a lame man. The priests, the captain of the temple, & the Sadducees were grieved that they had taught what they did about Christ’s resurrection, etc., & sought to arrest, or detain them for further thought policing. Word about John’s & Peter’s preaching, got to the rulers, elders & scribes of the Jews, Annas the high priest, Caiaphas, John & Alexander, and as many as were the kindred of the high priest, who were gathered at Jerusalem. When Peter & John was taken before them, & was asked by what power, or by what name had they healed the impotent man, etc. Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, boldly testified that it was by the name & power of Jesus Christ. The council looked upon them as unlearned & ignorant men, & noted that they had been with Jesus. They also saw the healed man standing with them, and thus couldn’t say anything against the good deed. However, despite acknowledging amongst themselves that a miracle had been performed, they sought to suppress the knowledge of it from spreading any further amongst the people. Thus, they said, “...let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.” (Acts 4:17). Replying to this, Peter & John told them that they were to obey God, more than their man-made council, for they were speaking of what they’d witnessed & heard.

They were the witnesses required, like in the Law of Moses. After threatening them again, & finding nothing further to hold them any longer, they let them go, because of the people who were glorifying God for the miracle performed. Later on, after their threats were not heeded, & they were caught again preaching & performing miracles. Then brought before another council, they were threatened again: “Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? [Jesus] and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man’s blood upon us.” (Acts 5:28). Hearing them testify again about Jesus, they talked among themselves as to how to slay them, thus attempting to use the civil & religious leaders to thought police the earliest Christians, (Acts, chaps. 3-5).

Peter prophetically warned: “There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.” (2 Peter 2:1). As the centuries aged Christendom, different early to later Christians accused each other of teaching heresies, some fought each other thinking that they had the divine truths. There were even “the fighting monks,” while others were more Christ like, attempting to develop different good qualities, despite their weaknesses. Others rioted, & murdered others for their particular religious views. The Roman Emperors were used, as the Emperors also used later Christendom, to try to unite the splintering sects of Christianity. Tried to get them to stop fighting with each other over creedal wordings & formulas. Those that gained the Emperors’ favor to have their particular “doctrine” enforced as law throughout the Empire, found that they could be changed from the status of being a true Christian to being a heretic. They could be banned, or exiled, when their rivals changed the minds of the Emperors. Formulas, and versions of creedal formulas, debated over & declared church “doctrine,” earlier, & then enforced by Emperors, & their armies, earlier. They could & did also become “illegal doctrines,” later, & those teaching them could be called, “heretical” & an “illegal religion.” Especially when later, they went from being approved, to later be declared heretical. Thus, what was once decreed doctrine became heretical, while what was once heretical, became church doctrine. “Doctrines,” often decided upon by Emperors, Kings, & Queens, with royal seals of approval for all to accept, or suffer different types of punishments, for not going along with royal demands & theological formulated decrees & ecclesiastical laws. In later centuries, to be called a “heretic,” became a death sentence, when during the later centuries, “heretics” were hunted, martyred, outlawed, & fined. Plus, imprisoned, tortured, burned, whipped, beaten, flogged, forced to confess alleged “crimes,” banished, shipped out of the area, their writings burned, thought policed, & accused of all kinds of evil things.²⁸³

54-68 reigned Nero, to 193-211 the reign of Septimius Severus. These Roman Emperors looked upon early Christians with suspect, indifference, & declared them to be dangerous, & thus an illegal religion. Consequently, the early Christians suffered from the hostility of both Jews and pagans. The Jews looked upon early Christians as apostates, & denounced them to the Roman civil authorities, & the results were that many early Christians suffered martyrdom.²⁸⁴

112 A. D., Pliny, governor of Bithynia, wrote to the Emperor Trajan, concerning the prosecution of the early Christians, complaining that: “This contagious evil [the early Christians] ... has not only infested the cities, but has extended to the villages and the country districts.”²⁸⁵

305, the struggles in the Roman Empire affected the physical & spirituality of the early Christian churches’ growth, & survivals. Diocletian resigned & compelled

Maximianus to resign also from his authority, but then these two Caesars became emperors & each appointed a new Caesar. What followed was 9 years of civil war, with 6 emperors at one time, all attempting to become the sole emperor. If a ruler favored the early Christians, his conqueror persecuted them, so that in various provinces, they suffered severely.²⁸⁶

311, the Roman officials of the Empire, finally removed the status of illicit religion from the Christians, whereas before that time, early Christians were subjected to different times of persecutions, thought policing from Roman soldier-policing, & at least 10 persecutions instituted by the emperors, in different areas of the Empire.²⁸⁷

As these 10 persecutions tested the loyalties, commitments, & faithfulness of the different early Christian sects that claimed to still have the spiritual gifts. There were many who went into hiding, others were boldly willing to become martyrs. Others apostatized & returned to their former faith that they were, before being converted to Christianity. While others openly practiced, & took part in the Roman empire's required ceremonies, while secretly they still believed & practiced their particular sect of early Christianity.

The tenth persecution was under Diocletian (300–305), & was empire wide and the most violent of all. It was first applied to early Christian soldiers, and then to the leaders of the churches. Then, finally to all early Christians who were placed under obligation to offer sacrifice under pain of death. And because, where persecution is church wide, severe, prolonged, & when torture and death are the penalties for membership in the church. The weak are made hypocritical and perjure themselves, or apostatize. While the strong persist in their allegiance to the faith, and die!²⁸⁸

PART 3: Scriptures Confiscated, Burned, Changed, Corrupted, Books & Letters Taken Out, Different Canons, Scriptures Suppressed

A number of sayings are reported to have been some of the missing sayings of Jesus. Some of these sayings were preserved by some of the earliest Christians. While other sayings are questioned as to their authenticity.²⁸⁹ In the Nag Hammadi texts, The Gospel of Thomas starts with the words: "These are the secret teachings which the Lord who was dead and liveth (i.e., the risen Savior) spoke to Judas-Thomas."²⁹⁰ What if these sayings contain real authentic sayings of the risen-Lord? What we have in our present New Testament can't be everything that Christ taught.

Where are the 40 days sayings of Christ? Though conflicting claims & interpretations raged in the early centuries of Christendom concerning the "40 day sayings of Jesus". Despite this, we know that there were many things which Jesus taught & showed his followers before Christ's ascension. (Acts 1:1-11). For after Christ's resurrection, in Acts 1:3, we read that Christ showed his followers "...many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God..." What were these things that he showed them?

John wrote that "...many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20:30-1). There "... are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." (John 21:25). These passages seem to suggest that there were many more works & teachings which Jesus did, which were not recorded in the New Testament. What might they have been?

In Acts we read of prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch, one of them was Agabus, the others are not named. Was he amongst the early Christian prophets? If so, could there have been a Gospel or Testimonial, or Book of Agabus, the Prophet? (Eph. 4:7-14, Acts 11:27–30, 21:10). In Acts 13:1: "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul [Paul]." Where might be the book(s) of Simeon, called Niger, the Prophet or teacher? Or The Gospel, or prophecies of Lucius of Cyrene, the prophet or teacher? Or the Gospel, or book of prophecies of Manaen the prophet or teacher? Or were they just "teachers," & not of the certain prophets at Antioch? Are there more letters written by the apostles, now missing, than what we now have in present day New Testaments? Plus, where might be the book of the Prophet Judas, (not the one who betrayed Christ, but another Judas), and the Book of the Prophet Silas? (Acts 15:21–41).

Some believe that Christ did not write a book, while others say that he might have written one, or more books. And still, others say that there is some book that was "under the name of CHRIST." Other works are: The Acts of Andrew. The Gospel of Andrew. The Gospel According to the 12 Apostles. The Gospel of Barnabas. The Writings of Bartholomew the Apostle. The Gospel of Bartholomew. The Gospel of Basilides. The Gospel of Cerinthus. The Revelations of Cerinthus. An Epistle of CHRIST to Peter and Paul.²⁹¹

About 170-80 A.D., a canonized New Testament was compiled called "the Muratorian canon," this canon contained the 4 gospels, Acts, Paul's letters, the letters to Timothy & to Jude, John 1 & 2, & the book of Revelation. It also included the Wisdom of Solomon, & the Apocalypse of Peter. The books that were omitted were: 1 & 2 Peter, James, 3rd John, & the book of Hebrews. There was considerable dispute over which books should be included in the canon. One rule that was usually always followed was that the book had to have been written by an Apostle, or someone of that stature. The book of Hebrews was challenged because of its uncertain authorship. However, it was one of the popular books, & therefore was canonized by the general Church population, & was attributed to be from Paul.²⁹²

By the early 2nd century, different splinter groups of early Christians, accused each other of possessing forged, & corrupt texts of the scriptures.²⁹³ Tertullian discussed "writings which wrongly go under Paul's name" but instead were composed by a presbyter in Asia.²⁹⁴ As different ones called each others, not of their sects, as forgers, heretics, & of adulterating scriptures, & accused each other of corrupting the gospels. So also did different versions of the scriptures get used, & sometimes selective books & passages get left out, or deleted. Or if not known, were not included in the different sects' lists of "sacred texts."²⁹⁵ Marcion, Valentinus, & others had their own sects & they accused Tertullian's sect, (the Montanists?), of adulterating the scriptures, & false expositions.²⁹⁶ Others became heretic hunters, & went after thought policing other sects, in some cases by destroying & suppressing every Saying which did not agree with their concept of orthodoxy.²⁹⁷ Tertullian also alleges that Marcion had made "such an excision of the Scriptures" that he used "the knife, not the pen."²⁹⁸

With the discoveries of many ancient documents, books, & fragments of early Christian writings, there were "collections of sayings of Jesus before our canonical gospels were written" and that the Gospels were originally based on such collections. But there were many sayings that didn't make it in the different canons, but in other sects' scriptures. Some sayings seem to have been lost, until they were later discovered in the ancient documents, or at least noted later, & considered. In 1909 a Saying of Jesus, was noted, & perhaps suggests that the spreading of Christ's teachings, if authentic, was far & wide: "Jesus said: Life is a bridge—do not linger on it, but hurry over it". This was inscribed in Arabic over 2 different gates of a palace mosque of a long-ruined Mogul city in northern India.²⁹⁹

Some early Christians began to look for excuses to reject the moral laws written in the scriptures. Some of Paul's converts, interpreted Paul's teachings to mean that "grace alone" was it, that they didn't need the law of Moses, & even didn't need to live the teachings of Christ. R. Joseph Hoffmann, tells us that these early Christians, that practiced "salvationism," reasoned that without the constraints of the Jewish law, anything is possible; & as the early Christians is saved by faith rather than by works, anything is permissible.³⁰⁰ Towards the end of the second century, Clement of Alexandria accused the Carpocratians of changing the scriptures to sanction their own homosexual & other immoral practices.³⁰¹ Thus, motives for changing scriptures were not only doctrinal, but also to try to justify immorality, & the moral corruption that corrupted many of the early to later Christian sects. This, motive was also used during the Middle Ages & Reformation times too.

There is an obvious gap between what happened in New Testament times, & what got recorded, or written down. All of the apostles, & other witnesses, must have written their own gospels, but of which were either hidden, lost, destroyed, or confiscated. There must have been more than just four gospels, there had to have been more than 13 of Paul's letters, & more written down by others. "But whatever else was written was probably destroyed during the persecutions when the Christians were required to surrender their manuscripts."³⁰²

In 303, when Diocletian (reigned 284-305), got talked into persecuting the early Christians in the areas he ruled over. He caused church property to be confiscated, destroyed, & the sacred books & scriptures burned. He "...ordered a general destruction of all Christian books and decreed the penalty of death against any found with such books in their possession."³⁰³

"With the end of the Great Persecution in A.D. 304—which began with Diocletian's edit that Christian churches be destroyed, their congregations forbidden to meet, and their Bibles and liturgical books surrendered—the church had quickly become the richest religious organization in the empire."³⁰⁴

Early Christian traitores, or handers-over, surrendered their copies of the scriptures, to save themselves. "These traitors, the traitores, or handers-over, were the most despised of the lapsed Christians, because they had compromised all Christians and the organization of the Church itself."³⁰⁵ Some copies must have been preserved & handed over to early anti-Christians, who, like Celsus had earlier, (170-80), then wrote to vilified the early Christians, by citing certain passages, many thus taken out of contexts.³⁰⁶

"Officers and members of the church had been forced during the persecutions to give up their manuscripts to be burned and, in consequence, many of their doctrines were, in the scriptures remaining to them, not fully set forth and there were differences of opinion."³⁰⁷

304, an early Christian female martyr, & maiden named Irene, was found out by the governor of Macedonia, Dulcitus, to have kept Christian books. She held them in her possession, instead of giving them up, as the law required. She had fled, with 2 others to the mountains to avoid the Emperor's decree against Christians. She tried to avoid implicating others who had helped them, & declared that nobody, but themselves, knew they had the books. She had hid them, & they were very unhappy that they just couldn't pull them out & read them when-ever they wanted, for fear of them being found out. However, she was sentenced to death, and: "The books also, the sacred Scriptures, were publicly burnt."³⁰⁸

Later, in North Africa the Donatist (bishop of Carthage), dispute raged over if the Christian bishops, who had surrendered the Scriptures to the pagan police, during difficult times of persecutions, had thereby also forfeited their powers & office. Thereby also making their baptisms, & ordinances performed by them, also null & void.³⁰⁹

Manipulating Texts to Back Up Dogmas of the Times

During the 4th century, Origen's writings, Rufinus admits, as he's copying the texts: "Wherever, therefore, we have found in his [Origen's] books anything contrary to that which was piously established by him about the Trinity in other places, either we have omitted it as corrupt and interpolated, or edited it according to that pattern that we often find asserted by himself. If, however, speaking to the trained and learned, he writes obscurely because he desires to briefly pass over something, we, to make the passage plainer, have added those things that we have read on the same subject openly in his other books.... All who shall copy or read this shall neither add anything to this writing, nor remove anything, nor insert anything, nor change anything."³¹⁰

Tertullian, 145-220, considered the writings of Enoch to be genuine scriptures, which were restored through Ezra (ANF, 4:15-16). While the copies of the writings of Enoch during the early centuries of the primitive Church, were considered by many to be important enough to cite (Jude 6, 14). The Ethiopian Bible in Africa, includes the Book of Enoch.

2nd c., Irenaeus & Clement of Alexandria cite the Book of Enoch without questioning its sacred character.³¹¹ Tertullian, whilst admitting that the "Scripture of Enoch" is not received by some because it is not included in the Hebrew Canon, suggests that Enoch's writings were preserved by Noah in the Ark, or miraculously reproduced by him through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. (ANF, 4:15-16, On the Apparel of Women, chap. 3). What other books of scriptures could have also been preserved by Noah, if any? Origen, 254, assigns to the Book of Enoch, the same authority as to the Psalms. While it wasn't accepted in the Churches as Divine, Origen adopts its language and ideas, & discloses personal conviction that Enoch was one of the greatest of the prophets.³¹²

3rd c., the Chester Beatty codex contained a copy of the 1st Book of Enoch, in the New Testament, but also a homily on the Passion by Melito, bishop of Sardis.³¹³

As pre-existence themes faded out into legends in later Christianity, could it also be that the Book of Enoch, or his writings, that contained many pre-existence themes, also faded out of use too? Most of the New Testament writers were familiar with the Book of Enoch, Jude cites it as scripture, (Jude 24), & St. Barnabas considered it as scripture, as with also the earlier church Fathers & apologists, it was considered to be a canonical book. However, from the 4th century onwards, (which was about the time when the pre-existence controversy was building up), it fell into discredit, and even under the ban by such authorities as Hilary, Jerome, & Augustine, & thus gradually passed out of circulation, & became lost to the knowledge of Western Christendom.³¹⁴

In time, The Book of Enoch, was said to be unknown to Europe for nearly a thousand years, except through the fragments preserved by Georgius Syncellus, circa 792. Then, during the 18th c., different versions were said to be discovered by Bruce in Abyssinia, 3 copies of the Ethiopic version in 1773. Then, different copies came to light during the 19th century.³¹⁵

The writer of 2 Timothy wrote: "And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 3:15, KJV). Before different versions of New Testament lists of scriptures were considered by different councils, & different early to later Christian Fathers, plus, Gnostic sects' lists, & those considered to be "Heretics." The Old Testament lists of books, different lists, were the scriptures that the earliest Christians used, for the New Testament was being acted out live & hadn't been compiled yet. The letters of Paul, & the Gospels, etc., hadn't been collected yet into any type of canon. Thus, during the earliest days of the church, the scriptures that Christ cites, & that the apostles make references to, were those of Old Testament times. Moreover, what happened to later scriptures, also happened to Old Testament time scriptures.³¹⁶ Thus, during Old Testament times, the Yahwists are said to have removed from their scriptures, any earlier hints to a polytheistic period in earlier Israel's beliefs systems. Eventually, they enforced their monotheistic views on the scriptures, by tampering with the texts. This is said to have taken place during the time known as the "Deuteronomic Reform" of B.C. 620-400.³¹⁷

The earlier attempts to rid the Old Testament scriptures of their earlier polytheistic phrases, & imagery, in some cases didn't get everything. There were still references here & there that suggested there was more than just 'one God.' Such as references to Elohim, 2,555 times in the Old Testament, which are cases of references to the plurality of "Gods." In Genesis, references to plurality in the creation, let "us" create, in "our" image. Attempts to make these in reference to the Trinity, were only bad cases of attempting to rewrite history! Especially, when such views were dominating over other views, and were being dogmatic enforced upon the ancient text by those enforcing the Trinitarian as the law of the land. To the scholars of history, it was obvious that the later Christian formulas of the trinity weren't known yet in history. Just as art works of, a 3-faced-1-head-trinity, in creation scenes of Adam & Eve. These types of dogmatically enforced formulas attempted to be illustrated in some art works, were also not known in earliest Christian art, before they argued over the different possible formulas for the creed, during & after the Nicene Creed era, of 325. But in the case with Jewish traditions of multiplicity of gods, these plurality references were said to be "...a relic of the old polytheistic phraseology which has escaped the careful expurgation of the writer." Thus: "The question here is, by what authority did the translators, both Jewish and Christian, make the decision that the references to the Gods ought to be rendered in the singular?"³¹⁸

Consequently, some notions of the multiplicity of the gods survived in Jewish traditions, as seen in the person of Yahweh, which Jews, rather than say the name of Yahweh all the time, would pronounced that name with another word, 'Adonai,' or literally, 'my lords.' Thus, the efforts to impose total monotheism failed, but not without first erasing as many references to polytheism that they could reword out, or translate out, from references to gods, changed to god. Jeremiah's writings suffered, but they didn't get everything, (Jer. 11:13). Deut. 5:26, could be translated "the living gods" from "the living Elohim." As also "the holy gods," in Josh. 24:19, 1 Sam. 2:25, 4:8, 2 Sam. 7:23, Gen. 35:7). But, as much of the old Canaanite religious beliefs that showed plurality, was purged out, there still were fragments of the blends of ancient Israelites' plurality of gods, with the encroachments of other idolatrous nations amongst them, that had influences upon their versions of polytheistic themes, that were still detectable. But, the Yahwists did what they could to change the texts of their copies of the scriptures, to fit their dogmas & dominating monotheistic views. For none other than 'the one holy God of Israel,' was acceptable to the

Yahwist priests & their dogmatic teaching about the "one God" that they prescribed about the 7-6th c. B.C., to later centuries, in Jerusalem, about 4th c., B.C. These factors may also have had an influence on other scriptures, such as Enoch's writings. Plus, why references to pre-existence themes in Jewish thought, also suffered the legendization process, & must have also been rid of, as much as possible, but not entirely, like in later Christendom. Because in Enoch's writings, as with others, there are references to a council of gods. Which, of course, would make it difficult to maintain strict monotheistic dogmas, if such references weren't dealt with. Which seems to have been the case in a number of eras: In both the ancient Yahwists' era, & the later, in the case with the monotheistic thinking Jews, scribes, & leaders of Christ's day, that rejected the idea that God the Father could have a literal Son, who made himself to be God, & was thus a god-maker (John 10:29-39), when he made reference to a passage that he used to point out the plurality of gods, & god-making, right in their law (Psalm 82:6, Isa. 41:22-23). But then also the later Christians of the Christological controversy era of about the 2nd century A.D. that led into the Nicene & Post-Nicene eras of the 4th-6th centuries A.D., & later. Of which although had many church Fathers who had their own versions of the pre-existence, deification, which they argued over too, got talked out of, in some cases. These, like earlier, also came in conflict with the different controversies over what the Godhead was argued to be like, or not, as being argued out in their different church councils. Consequently, it was also no wonder that copies of the writings of Enoch, with its pre-existence themes, also faded out of both Jewish, & later, most Christian canons too. Especially because such writings, as with others, like many Rabbinical teachings, traditions, & Jewish legends, still had, though faded in some cases, references to many pre-existence themes! Ones that made references to councils of gods, the pre-mortal Messiah, (Christ). Plus, of prophets ascending into such councils to receive the "sode" experience. This was in how they got to experience the divine council of the gods, themselves, as a witness, & as one who would become a messenger of the divine messages learned in such sode experiences. Plus, to receive the divine instructions for scriptural productions, being commanded to write down their sode experience, & go out & warn the people to repent. Another different reading of Psalms 82, is from the Qumran 11th cave fragment. Scholars suggest it's basically about the deification of Melchizedek as one of the gods in a council in heaven.³¹⁹

Thus, what they'd later write about would become their scriptural testimonial witnesses & prophetic warnings, & descriptions of their marvelous pre-existence experience. What it was like to see & take part in the council with the other gods, & sing praises unto the Most High God, the God of gods. How that they, the prophets, were also learning in such experiences, from the divine-beings, how they, as righteous & holy prophets, were passing through the divine mysteries, & covenants, which if kept by them, & the people, would also help them in also ascending further into becoming more like the gods, & eventually even being deified as gods & goddesses.³²⁰

Consequently, by time of Christ, the translators, & scribes, & theologically motivated religious leaders, in charge of keeping & distributing copies of the scriptures, had passed down to them, already tampered with the texts, for earlier side notes of scribes, were later written in as text. References to Elohim & heavenly councils were tampered with, as were references to gods, were rendered singular, in some cases. The Masoretic text changes Exodus (32:4, 23), from 'gods' to singular. Other examples: In Exodus 22:20, the phrase "...save unto the Lord only..." as an addition, by a scribe to clarify any ambiguity caused by the plurality of Gods in the word Elohim. Exodus 34:24, originally read "to see" God, but because that implied God had form, it was altered "appear before the Lord" to avoid an "objectionable anthropomorphism.” Another example, “gods,” was translated “angels” in Psalm 8:4-5. We know that there are differences because these changes were most likely made here & there by isolated scribes or scribal schools, & wasn’t typical of all copyists, that thus gave us the other texts to note the differences that were made in others.³²¹

Plus, there are other cases that came down from the post-exilic apostate editors after Israelites’ Babylonian captivity, post 6th B.C., onwards. For example, the Psalms were rearranged, changed, and had suffered deletions.³²² The prophet Jeremiah laments: “How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain.” (Jer.8:8). The New English Bible words it: “How can you say, ‘We are wise, we have the law of the Lord,’ when scribes with their lying pens have falsified it?”

Consequently, by time of Christ, the translators, & scribes, & theologically motivated religious leaders, in charge of keeping & distributing copies of the scriptures, they in turn, continued to make their own changes, so much, that they had changed the nature of God, (Elohim, that has an “ancient pre-Israelitish and polytheistic origin”) a “true plural both in form and in meaning.”³²³ To then be anything but in the image of man, or plural, rephrasing the meanings of anthropomorphic descriptions. Or metaphorically arguing them out as being symbolic. Some examples of passages that would have to be allegorized away, are such things as how, we, as men (& women) were supposed to be created in the image of Elohim, (Gods, both male & female, Adam (male), Eve (female)).³²⁴ Genesis 1:26-27, speaks in plural language, “us” & “our” image, and after our likeness, in talking about how “God” or Elohim (the Gods), “created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.” This implies that the image [Hebrew tselem] of God is both male and female. Tselem is like how models resemble their paintings or statues, as the art works resemble the model after which they were copied from. While the Hebrew, demuth “likeness,” refers to a resemblance, similitude or pattern, as sons & daughters are in likeness of their parents. Just as when Adam & Eve begat children, like a son, Seth after his (Adam’s) image, who was after God’s image, (Gen. 5:1-3). “Certainly there have been attempts to spiritualize the meaning of the passage. Nevertheless, the most natural way to read it is as follows: if humankind [‘adam] was created, both male [zachar] and female [neqebah], in the image of God, then the image of God must be both male and female, (in much the same way that humankind, which was modeled after God, is male and female).”³²⁵ These are some examples of just a couple passages, out of many others, that would be argued to be symbolic, or metaphorical, or not literal. And because they were looking for more ways to give their anti-body views “scriptural” support, they had to philosophize away, the more simple & plain meanings of texts, and morph them into complex formulas & incomprehensible nonsense.

Such as that which came out of the fusing of Philo’s & other Alexandrian Jews’ blends of Orphic, Neo-Pythagorean, & Neoplatonist Greek traditions. Of which once blended in with Philo’s Logos philosophy, created & influenced the forming of weird systems of various mystical traditions about divine emanations (or something which emanates from ‘god.’ Or some kind of being or force which is a manifestation of God, & personified “aeons.”³²⁶ All of which weird incomprehensible concepts were very obviously foreign to anthropomorphic descriptions & phrases of God(s) in the scriptures, that still had surviving passages that described God in human shaped terms, & wordings that present God(s) in human image phrases. Thus, these anti-body Greek philosophy influenced Jews, to create “scriptural” support for the Philo types of dogmas, had to do more of their own scriptural tampering, deletes, changes, or reinterpreting of the plain meanings, which they figured, had to be done as much as possible, & with as many of the different references they could find, in order to explain away & rid the scriptures of those passages that plainly witnessed to an anthropomorphic nature of Deity. Such things had to be faded out somehow, be explained away by the Philo types, & those in Alexandria, influenced by their blends & treatment of already earlier tampered with scriptures. They had to somehow reduce these, & other basic scriptural concepts away. However, as they did, many things survived in legends, & other texts that got reduced in scriptural stature, to not be included as being worthy of them, like the Book of Enoch, & others, that tell about God being as the Lord of spirits, who would father a son, that pre-existed, was in a heavenly council, with other spirit sons & daughters. That also told of one of those sons that caused a rebellion, war in heaven & fell, causing other to fall with him. There was also stories & passages about another son, who would be sent down from heaven to be born into a human body. How that son would suffer, die, descend into the underworld, & be resurrected.³²⁷

While the Pagan critics knew that the heathen nations had their own gods that became man, suffered, died, descended into the underworld, defeated the underworld gods, & then was reborn. To then use these pagan parallel stories to try to discredit Christ as only being a recycled mystery religion, a copy of what was known already amongst the pagans, & mystery schools & religions, before Christ.³²⁸

So while pagan critics were pointing to such things; the Philo types, & other Jewish scribes, copyists, & theologically driven religious leaders, were stripping their scriptures of any prophetic predictions that they figured Christians would use, & were using to show that Christ, who looked like a man, was their promised Messiah, who fulfilled the prophecies of the prophets of old. Because the Old Testament prophets were the scriptures that they used, because the New Testament hadn’t been compiled yet. Even Christ & the apostles cited the scriptures to point out prophecies that were being fulfilled in Christ.³²⁹ So Christ’s critics amongst the Jews, rejected everything they could about Christ, because in most of their beliefs systems, many dogmatically & militantly made it a law, that had to be believed, that God couldn’t have a human body, or be a man. Because of such views, & this intentional separating & distancing between God, & the human family. These types of theological views continued to affect how they treated their scriptures.³³⁰

Add to this how it was still difficult for many Rabbis (or a Jewish scholar or teacher, especially of Jewish law), to still have to deal with the many anthropomorphic passages about God, that still must have been in existence, perhaps in other copies of scriptures, if not the same ones being tampered with, but also in translations acceptable by many different Jewish sects. However, & whatever might have been the case. They still attempted to find ways to get around what was still surviving in traditions, legends, & their teachings about God the Father. One way around such difficulties had been opened up to them centuries earlier, with the translation of the Old Testament into Greek. According to legend & traditions, 70 to 72 elders, 6 from each tribe, gathered in Alexandria in Egypt, to “miraculously” translate their scriptures into what would become known as the “Septuagint” or (LXX). The term coming from the Latin septuaginta (70). The name stuck, & the entire Old Testament in Greek, became known as “the Septuagint.” It is noted, in its historical setting for its “most distinguishing characteristic” & anti-body aspects, & its rephrasing out of descriptions of God in human shaped forms & anthropomorphic wordings. Plus, “its scrupulous avoidance of anthropomorphism and phrases that did not sustain the idea of a transcendent God. Like their neighbors, the Jews of the third century B.C., wanted a God who transcended human understanding, one who was above and beyond the comprehension of the mortal mind.”³³¹ But, despite this, even though the Rabbis couldn’t completely avoid making anthropomorphic descriptions as divine accommodations to human frailty, as they themselves prayed to God as Father, spoke of his ears, hands, & other body parts, & referred to his weeping over Jerusalem. It was their hope that the Septuagint (LXX) modified texts, would help evolve the peoples' religious views of God to accommodate the encroachments of Greek philosophy infecting different Jewish sects even more. Plus, that such movements might attract like minded, if not even might convert or enlighten the Gentiles, in the new world that the Jews were now living in.³³²

Plus, to become more attractive to their Greek philosophy influenced anti-body movements infecting different Jewish sects of Christ's time. Consequently, such encroachments upon Jewish scriptures & Rabbinical teachings, were just some of the reasons, in many, why Christ was rejected! While they had been widening the gap, between God & the human family. In complete opposite contrast, Jesus was perceived of bringing God down to his human level!³³³

Claiming to even be, God the Father's Son, 'the Son of God'! Thus, Christ was rejected for this & because he looked too human! Even smelled, down to the usual human body odor. (For if Christ sweat drops of blood, he must have sweat body-odor too, (Luke 22:42-44). Celsus, who used the Jewish critics' writings as sources, in his own writing against Christ, & early Christians, (170-80 A.D.). He also notes these types of human aspects too, & makes fun of Christ's descent to earth from heaven, to do such menial tasks, as working with wood, after having created the universe.³³⁴ Thus, Celsus helped preserve a look at the historical setting & the anti-body dogmas of many of the Jews, and their rejections of early Christian anthropomorphic beliefs of Deity. Consequently, Christ's vilifiers also noted that he was a man who also needed food, drink & was even a accused of being a drunk, (Matt.11:19). Who also was once a child, (Luke 2:52)! God a child? But it was also rumored about, amongst early anti-Christians amongst the Jews, seeking any way they could to vilify Christ, that he had been "born of fornication," (John 8:42).³³⁵ But also, he was a man that cried, when God couldn't cry, a man that laughed, when God couldn't laugh, for God was without emotions & passions, in their thinking. Though as noted earlier, some of the Rabbis, had prayed to God the Father, in such ways too. Christ also walked about, & God didn't need to do that, nor had God feet & legs to walk about. Thus, they figured that Jesus couldn't be the one God or "the Son of God," because he was in every way they could determine, just a man, like them. Consequently, for Christ to have taught that his Abba-Father, his Daddy, was God the Father, this was blasphemous! He'd broken their laws. Also, when the Jews had heard about this, they reasoned, as Celsus had, that in Christ calling God the Father his daddy, "Abba," like how Jewish sons called their earthly fathers, Abba, or daddy. That would suggest another unthinkable! That 'God the Father' had fathered a Son, as a 2nd god, even "the Son of God!" Such concepts were not only blasphemous to the Jews, but unthinkable, & against 'the law!' (John 10:29-39). "We have a law, and by our law he [Christ] ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God." Said the Jews before Pilate, (John 19:7, Mark 14:60-65, Matt.26:59-68, Luke 22:66-71). "When Caiaphas asked him [Christ] whether he was "the Messiah, the Son of God," Jesus is reported to have answered "I am he." ...In the morning the Sanhedrin met, found him guilty of blasphemy (then a capital crime)..."³³⁶

By this time, many of them were steeped too much in the Greek influenced anti-body beliefs of the time, even amongst the Jews. For by that time, references to God having hands, ears, feet, eyes, a mouth, & other body parts, & human type emotions, had been rejected, & thus the translations were rephrased to fit the dominating dogmas of the time.³³⁷

"The translation of the Septuagint from Hebrew to Greek illustrates the problems that have attended translations ever since. Aside from the sorry state of the text due to scholastic incompetence, there was a far more serious problem, namely, the theological bias of the translators. This caused them to change the meaning or paraphrase texts that were either unclear or embarrassing to them. Concrete terms in Hebrew came out as abstract terms in Greek. Expressions about God—deemed by the Greek translators to be crude or offensive because they described Deity as the Holy Man that he is, rather than the immanent spirit they supposed him to be—were changed or toned down or deleted entirely. Passages setting forth the so-called anthropomorphic nature of Deity were simply assumed by the translators to be false and were translated, paraphrased, and changed accordingly."³³⁸

"Theology was the pious cloak used by Philo [ca. 13 B.C.-A.D. 45 to 50] and other Alexandrian Jews to explain away all within the scriptures that placed them at odds with the Greek philosophical world in which they sought citizenship. It was in the clerical robes of a theologian that Origen and others of the ante-Nicene Fathers wrote as they betrayed the New Testament faith in a marriage with Greek sophistry."³³⁹ "In Alexandria the Orphic, Neo-Pythagorean, and Neoplatonist traditions, fusing with the Logos philosophy of Philo, stirred Basilides (117), Valentinus (160), and others to form weird systems of divine emanations and personified "aeons" of the world."³⁴⁰ With the Septuagint translators removing many of the anthropomorphism from the Hebrew Bible, others followed with open dislikes to what was left of god-body passages remaining, & Philo was one of them. Thus, he, like later Jews during the Middle Ages, got in the habit of metaphoricalized away body-god passages.³⁴¹

With all these influences from Philo, Greek philosophy & other cultural contaminations, more scriptural manipulations & tampering came about through other tactics. When they came across a passage they didn't like, they resorted to: Allegorical interpretation! This was fairly simple to apply, for wherever Scripture says something 'unworthy' of God—that is, something that is not worthy of the perfection of the supreme being—such words are not to be taken literally. Examples: When the Bible says God walked in the garden, or that God spoke. These are to be understood in light of how it's to be remembered that an "immutable being," they claimed, does not really walk or speak. This was how the gap was attempted to be bridged between the gulf of philosophy & scriptures. But the problem was how to factor in Christ's pre-existence in with a Father that was said to be immutable, (or unchanging), impassible, etc. So the Logos, Word, or Reason of God, (versions of pre-existence themes), about Christ, became that gap between such a Father-God, who used the Logos to speak to Moses & with humans. For in the case with the Father, he was suppose to be immutable, (unchangeable), uncreatable, without body parts, or passions, nor can he speak to his creations by way of revelation. He can't even be a real "he" or a real "Father," for that would imply male physicalness. So such terms as "begotten Son of God," became points for later Christians to argue over. For to suppose that God actually had a Son would, according to those schooled in philosophy, was unworthy of God. But how were they to factor in the monotheism sought after, when there still was this complicated story in scriptures about Christ separately born into a human body, (for the Father & Holy Ghost couldn't have been, for that would make them changeable). Thus, in Christ's case, he was capable of a personal direct relationship with humans, because the Logos, or Word descended from heaven to become flesh. (1 John 1-3, John 1:1-5, 14, 6:33, 38, 42, 8:14-19, 58-59, 10:25-39). Such blends were being attempted by Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, & others during the Nicene Creed era, & it all must have made scriptural copyists go crazy with attempting to make scriptures that kept up with the latest dogmatic trends.³⁴² This was another form of scriptural tampering, different from actual word rephrasing changes, but of which had a similar effect.

Thus, as different ones took offense at the idea of a physical-man-god concept, "those who were offended with an anthropomorphic view of God espoused by the scriptures set about their work to make “biblical modifications.”³⁴³

As with Old Testament copies & manuscript manipulations & tamperings, to manufacture dogmatic support through “scripture,” for dominating beliefs of the times. So also with different manuscripts of what would become the later New Testament. A case in point in many, is how it being because Luke 22:44 showed Christ had a body, bled real blood, & suffered in that human shaped body; that those verses would slip in & out of manuscript copies. During the Christological controversy of the 1st two centuries, such verses were an obvious annoyance to those promoting the development of a passionless God doctrine.³⁴⁴

We should also keep in mind that, different hand-written copies of these varied, & in different areas, tampered with scriptures, was what the spreading sects of diverse earliest to later Christians had, as their scriptures, because the New Testament wasn't finalized yet into the popular canon, many modern Christians now have & use. That wouldn't come about until centuries later, during the 4th century. But still many couldn't agree, so they had their own canons. But even the Old Testament hadn't been decided upon yet, also, as to what should be included in it, or what shouldn't be. Just like the different letters, gospels under different names, & other ‘holy’ writings in early Christianity, weren't collected into a set canon yet too. But, even after that, books considered scriptures earlier, were later rejected by others. Consequently, books, gospels, letters, came & went from different diverse canons that were about as diverse as early to later Christianity was.³⁴⁵ Thus also, as with the diversity with different contending factions in the Jewish faith were, so also had different versions of their “scriptures” been copied. Some that they accepted, while others they rejected, & that were held in different collections here & there. Some hid their collections, or holy libraries away to protect them, during times when their collections were sought after, declared illegal, & decreed to be destroyed, because the dominant sect had gained enough power to enforce their particular versions of what were then to be the acceptable “scriptures.” So also was it in the case with the diversity amongst different early to later Christians’ versions of the “scriptures.”³⁴⁶

The attempts of keeping unity in scriptures, were also about as successful as attempting to keep unity in just a single early Christian sect. Even with apostles & prophets, when they were alive, & it was their job description to try to keep unity, it was almost near impossible, (Eph.4:11-14), but they still tried, & warned what would happen, when they weren't around. (Acts 20:28-31). When they were no longer heard of, Christianity kept splitting up into rival sects, & continues even to this day to split up into different rival sects.

Mosheim notes that “not long after the Savior’s ascension, various histories of his life and doctrines, full of impositions and fables, were composed by persons of no bad intentions, perhaps, but who were superstitious, simple, and piously fraudulent; and afterwards various other spurious writings were palmed upon the world, falsely inscribed with the names of the holy apostles.”³⁴⁷

About 2nd to early 4th cent.(?): “Faced with the hostility of a powerful government, the Church felt the need of unity; it could not safely allow itself to be divided into a hundred feeble parts by every wind of intellect, by disloyal heretics, ecstatic prophets, or brilliant sons. Celsus [early anti-Christian late 2nd c.] himself had sarcastically observed that Christians were “split up into ever so many factions, each individual desiring to have his own party.”³⁴⁸ With so many sects multiplying, their individual scripture production of their own copies of “scriptures,” was also going on behind the scenes. Each sect seem to think that they had to have “scriptural” support for their particular versions of different gospel themes, & dogmas. Celsus: “It is clear to me that the writings of the [early] Christians are a lie, and that your fables have not been well enough constructed to conceal this monstrous fiction. I have even heard that some of your interpreters, as if they had just come out of a tavern, are onto the inconsistencies and, pen in hand, alter the original writings three, four, and several more times over in order to be able to deny the contradictions in the face of criticism.”³⁴⁹

Not only did the early Christians have to discern between false teachers, & true ones, figure out if the copies of scriptures they had were good copies, or manipulated ones. They also they were to watch out for even whole letters & gospels claimed to have been written by an apostle, or close disciples of Christ, or his apostles. Paul, to the Thessalonians, seems to warn them about this type of thing. How that they were not to be so soon shaken in their faith concerning Christ 2nd coming, as by way of a “letter as from us,” (2 Thess. 2:2-3). Letters, that might have been one in his, or some other apostles’ name, but not written by them.³⁵⁰ It may be that a letter was going around that was saying the 2nd coming was real soon, sooner than what was thought, even by the Apostles. So Paul warns them that other things had to happen, such as a falling-away first, before Christ’s return. Consequently: “One of the hindrances with which Christianity had to contend from within, was the publication of Spurious Gospels and pretended apostolic canons. Many of these writings are believed to have been fabricated by heretical sects and parties in the Church, for the purpose of supporting their views of doctrine and practice.”³⁵¹

Paul gives another indicator of what was going on, perhaps in other areas, besides in the Corinthian branch of the church. For after warning them about not taking the spiritual gifts to fanatical extremes, such as if they’re babbling in an unknown language, & unbelievers hear them, how they’d probably think they’re crazy! He goes on to warn them about those that think that they are having revelations, which if everyone claims they did, could cause confusion: “How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying.... For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints.” (1 Cor. 14:22-33). If different ones “hath a revelation,” or a “psalm,” could there have been different ones who might have also written “a gospel,” or “a letter,” thinking that they were doing good by presenting their own “revelations” to the church, when they gathered together?

As it was: “In the early days members of the congregation, especially women, were allowed to “prophesy”— i.e., to “speak forth,” in trance or ecstasy, words to which meaning could be given only by pious interpretation. When these performances conduced to ritual fever and theological chaos, the Church discouraged and finally suppressed them. At every step the clergy found itself obliged not to generate superstition, but to control it.”³⁵²

As it was, there were other early Christians also writing mystical narrations, poems, stories, abstract speculations, so that by the 2nd century, there were more than a dozen gospels in circulation. Some had whole libraries of texts, letters of Jesus to foreign kings, Paul to Aristotle, & histories of the disciples & characters in Christ’s life & times.³⁵³ With different ones having been raised from the dead, we might wonder if there were many equivalent stories like unto many modern Near Death Experiences, thus ancient NDEs.³⁵⁴ Where different ones told there many stories about the goings on, & life in the after life realms, what it was like, what they saw & experienced. Many of these stories could have been considered scripture, as also what Christ could have told his disciples & apostles, during the post-resurrection 40 days, (Acts 1:1-3).³⁵⁵ Also, when “the saints which slept arose,” during the resurrection, & “went into the city, and appeared unto many,” (Matt.27:52-53, 10:8, 11:5, Luke 7:22, Heb. 11:35). What stories might they have told? Did some of those they appeared to, write down what they were told, what answers to questions about the after-life they might have asked? Could such writings have been considered scriptures? Thus, could there have been such inspirational writings circulating about, for example, like the NDE of Lazarus? (John 11:1-44, 12:1-2, 9-11). The 'gospel of the resurrected saints,'? Or 'the book of risen saints'? Or 'the witness of Lazarus'? Or the visions of so & so, & so forth! In such settings, there could have also been those who might have tried to take advantage of the interests, to forge their own stories, & claim revelations to get a following, to also get a little fame.

Spurious (or false or fake) gospels, letters, & other writings, or "scriptures," claimed to have been written by Christ, his apostles, & other close disciples of his time. With these in circulation, add to this another dogma making schism, that of false letters alleged to have been written by different church leaders, for example: Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth (168-177), "'As the brethren,' he says, 'desired me to write epistles, I wrote them; and these the apostles of the devil have filled with tares, exchanging some things and adding others, for whom there is a woe reserved. It is not [a] matter of wonder if some have attempted to adulterate the sacred writings of the Lord, since they have done so with those which are not to be compared with them.'"³⁵⁶

The noted tampering of scriptures, that resulted in different versions of stories, & evolving beliefs during different Old Testament eras, that later generations inherited. Then to have the later generation, do their own tampering, during Christ's era & after. Which later generations inherited, after these tamperings with scripture. Which copies were passed down to others, who made their own further tampered with copies of the scriptures, to fit & give their own Christological views, and dogmas, 'scriptural-support.' Wasn't the end for different ones evolving beliefs, & coming up with their own versions of the scriptures, & their own selections of what were acceptable books, gospels, letters, or writings to make up their own individual sects' canons.³⁵⁷

By the time of Christ's day, because of the Israelites' real scripture producing prophets were no longer heard of, for about 400 years, from the time of their last prophet, to the start of a new line up of prophets, like John the Baptist, & the prophets & Apostles that Christ set up in his church, (Eph.4:7-14, I Cor. 12). A lot of legendization of their earlier ancient Old Testament time beliefs, had taken place. Thus, only fragmented hints to pre-existence themes, multiplicity of gods, the Messiah's world wide treks, deification themes, & temple works, were still detectable. They still had such beliefs, & their Temple, but many changes had come about by then, because they were without the spiritual gifts, that produced on going scriptural 'sayings,' or writings, from a long line of on going living prophets of their times.³⁵⁸

A common product of apostasies are how, when one doctrine starts to go, others doctrines, that get in the way of them being taken out, also suffer & get pushed out too Or they get diluted, changed, eventually discarded, ignored and often legendized too. Such was the case with many pre-existence themes, or of "sent ones," or being "sent down," or "he went down," from heaven, (all pre-existence themes).³⁵⁹ Consequently, as anti-body dogmas crashed into pre-existence-themes, phases that conflicted with the trends, philosophies & other factors, tainting scriptural beliefs, were changed: "Phrases like "he saw" or "he went down" were changed to "he revealed himself".³⁶⁰ Did anti-anthropomorphic contaminated dogma enforcers believe & reason?: 'How can "God" come down from heaven, or how could he have "went down," if he is everywhere present, formless and fills the universe?'

Other pre-existence & deification themes were also challenged, & thus had to be discarded, argued against, philosophized away, abandoned & mocked by those seeking to enforce their anti-body God dogmas on others. Plus, in order for their Greek philosophized-views about the nature of "God," to work. For what wouldn't work with these dogmas were the scriptural pre-existent themes about our Divine Parents: God the Father & Goddess the Mother in heaven, & their Sons & Daughters. How that from the Divine Parents, Christ had descended from heaven as the pre-existing spirit of Christ, who was known as the literal first born, & thus also, the literal only begotten Son of God in the flesh. What also wouldn't work with the anti-body God dogma was how Christ kept calling his, & our Father in heaven, as Abba, Pappa, Daddy, or Father, the commonly used name for the Jews of Christ's time, in how they'd address their earthly fathers in the same way that Christ addressed his literal Father of his flesh as Abba-Father. This was bringing his & our Father in Heaven to that very close of a relationship with Christ, & as being just as literal a father, as other fathers on earth were, in having fathered sons, & daughters. This drove many of the Jews crazy, when Christ continued to do this, & was one of the reasons why they sought to stone him & eventually crucified him, (John 8:14-59, 10:25-39, 19:7, 20:17-23, Mark 14:61-62, Matt.26:63, Luke 22:70, Eph. 3:9-16, Rom. 1:7, 8:3, 15-21, etc). All these aspects, & pre-existent & deification themes, the family in heaven & on earth themes, had to be de-literalized away, re-worded, & stripped from the scriptures, as much as they thought they could get away with. Then also philosophized away, in order to make the other anti-body God dogmas to prevail over the restored doctrine that Christ & his prophets & apostles were preaching. Such as how that the Fatherhood of God was real, & the human family was apart of that. Plus, how that the Divine Parentage behind the family in heaven & on earth, was real, & not figurative. Plus, how that that Divine Parentage had hoped & made plans for as many of their children to be deified too, because their children had chosen to follow the right path towards deification, & not chosen the plan & path of Satan towards demonification, along with his fallen angels. For they too, were also part of that family in heaven, & were spirit sons & daughters that had apostatized & fallen away to become the fallen angels or demons.³⁶¹

"The idea that Israel's understanding of God evolved through the ages from the polytheistic god[s] of her neighbors to the monotheistic God of later years is described as a necessary part of progressive revelation. We will see this same kind of reasoning used again when theological justification is sought for the dogma of the Trinity. Such a concept of revelation is wholly foreign to scriptural writ. It is hard to image the same God who said, "Ask, and ye shall receive," now responding to the earnest appeal of his prophet by saying, "Ask, and I will lead your people through hundreds of years of error, argument, debate, and contention, but eventually a superior doctrine will emerge."³⁶²

Before the Nicene Creed era, the divine embodiment doctrine came in conflict with the later incorporeal God themes of later centuries. Greek philosophy influences, playing a part in molding later Christian beliefs, such as Origen's. Perhaps because nowhere in the bible is God explicitly described as incorporeal; the Greek term for incorporeal, (which Origen said God the Father was like), is asomatos. Thus, this term, not in the Bible, had to be allegorically made to appear was biblical through Origen's masterful philosophical training from Clement of Alexandria. He tried to de-literalize bible texts that supported the earlier Christians' beliefs in a corporeal God, into metaphorical interpretations. But then, while also admitting, that at least Christ, did come down from heaven to be born into the body of a human man child, to then grow up, & eventually to suffer on the cross, in that body.³⁶³

Changes in texts were also done with good intentions, by interpreting them through Greek philosophical training, & world views. Philosophy, was even seen as being a purifier over the anthropomorphic statements of God, prophets, & scriptures. Thus, the existing copies of scriptures, it was believed, needed to be purified of all notions of God that were of the Jewish religion. Especially, ones that presented human attributes & bodily shapes to God, for he can't resemble man, & man & women can't be created in God's image, for such passages that boldly suggested such things were "allegorical," not literal, so they supposed. So to purify those types of passages, it was believed that it was a good thing that revisions were made, for they were justified in bringing about this cleansing & purification, for that, & other Christological issues, to make their polemics stronger than their rivals: "Such were the revisions made to the Christian faith by the early Catholic Fathers. As we have already seen, they were sustained in their efforts by those who 'alter[ed] the words of Scripture in order to make them more serviceable for the polemical task. Scribes modified their manuscripts to make them more patently 'orthodox' and less susceptible to 'abuse' by the opponents of orthodoxy.'" ³⁶⁴

Origen, was such a one, for during the 3rd century, he spend 20 years & employed a corps of stenographers, (or those who processed writing in shorthand and transcribed the shorthand on writing materials). Plus employed copyists, to collate in parallel columns the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, a Greek translation of that text, and Greek translations of it by the Septuagint. But keep in mind, that he had also inherited LXX (70 or the Septuagint), from earlier generations as already rephrased to reduce polytheistic phrases, to monotheistic singular wording, & that took out many anthropomorphic passages by the ways it was translated into Greek, centuries earlier. Origen then proceeds to compare the diverse renderings and used his knowledge of Hebrew to offer "to the Church a corrected Septuagint." But how correct was it? Did he let his biases in Greek philosophy influence his "corrections?" Or did he do what Philo & other have done, reconciled Judaism with Greek philosophy, or as in Origen case, reconciled Christianity with Greek philosophy? As it was, Origen treated the scriptures with allegorical non-literalism, for he argued that deeper meanings to the texts were to be found looking upon the texts as being symbolic, rather than literal. Thus, he suggested that scriptural narratives were invented in order to convey some spiritual truth. Like in Genesis, surely we're not to think that God actually planted a Garden, & so forth. It was through these methods that Origen changed the plain meanings of the texts, that already had been tampered with throughout the generations. ³⁶⁵

Another case of changing texts for dogmatic "doctrinal" support for later Christian beliefs that developed during the 3rd-6th c., was done, some might argue innocently, to try to support the Trinitarian creedal formulas that were argued over. The tactics were also used by different ones in the later church of 'back-dating' theological concepts by tampering with New Testament passages. The Trinitarian texts in, 1 John 5:7-8, make explicit what other texts merely hint at, it originally read simply: 'There are three which bear witness, the spirit the water and the blood, and the three are one.' During around the 4th century, this must have been altered to read: 'There are three which bear witness on earth, the spirit and the water and the blood, and these three are one in Christ Jesus; and there are three who bear witness in heaven, the Father, the Word and the Spirit, and these three are one.'" KJV reads: "these three agree in one." Scholars have determined there have been changes to the text 1 John 5:7-8, & have called this wording the Comma Johanneum, & that it did not appear in any language found in biblical manuscripts before the 7th century, & was only mentioned in a homily in the 4th century. During the 16th century, Martin Luther must have noted the issue, for he omits this passage from his German translation of the Bible. ³⁶⁶

Paul Johnson suggests & argues, that: "Such manifest fabrications should not be regarded as deliberate fraud, done with intent to deceive, and to obfuscate the truth. They occur throughout the history of Christianity, up to the Renaissance and even beyond, and they spring from a concept of the nature of documentary proof which is alien to us. Thus, an earnest scribe, believing wholeheartedly that the doctrine of the Trinity was true, though is merely an accident or oversight that it was not made explicit in 1 John, and therefore saw it as his duty to remedy the matter. He was merely doing constructive work in the cause of truth! Where these accretions occur late enough, they are easily identified and removed by modern scholars. The earlier they were inserted, the more difficult it is to detect them. And, of course, beyond a certain point, which occurs early in the second century, there is no longer any possibility of cleaning up the text. Moreover, even if we were to have the perfect and original texts of the gospels, they would not protect us from the efforts to create 'constructive truths' made by the evangelists themselves, and their oral sources. These are particularly obvious when the evangelists are engaged in aligning or shaping events in Jesus' life to fit Old Testament prophecies: there, the temptation to create, and so to falsify, is obvious, & we are on our guard...." ³⁶⁷

These later unintentional or intentional add ons to scriptures were done out of the needs for seeking dogmatic support from scriptures, things not found in the scriptures! Thus, the voids could have motivated some to add small phrases, or words to the texts, like in the case with 1 John 5:7-8, & much later with Romans 1:17. The prior example, might have been also due to the admitted fact that some of the wording of the Nicene Creedal formulas argued over, were completely foreign to scripture. The homoousios type phrases & wording, was simply no where to be found in the existing scripture of fourth-century Christendom! Thus, this was a case of something that was not originally in, & thus must have been justified by some later Trinitarian believing scribe, that is said to have made a side note phrase that later got added to the text in later copies. Whatever might have been the case, it was later used by those attempting to support what they believed was the "true" dogma, concerning the nature of the Godhead as somehow being three in one. ³⁶⁸

MISSING SCRIPTURES, & PROPHECIES: Matthew 2:23 mentions a prediction that is not found in our present day versions of the Old Testament. Matthew mentions that Christ lived in Nazareth 'that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene'.

1 Cor. 5:9, mentions an additional epistle of Paul's, that we now don't have. What might have been in it?

Some of the differences in ancient scriptures in contrast to modern canonized versions, are noted when we have different early Christian fathers citing from passages of scriptures that are no longer found in present day Bibles. For example, Clement of Rome, 30-100, quotes from scriptural passages that are not known from any writings: Psalm 28: "Thou shalt raise me up and I shall acknowledge thee." ³⁶⁹ Where could this be from? Another is from Ezekiel, & another unknown, at this time, passage which was scripture to Clement. Then, this one: "Cleave to the saints, for those who cleave to them shall be sanctified." ³⁷⁰ Cleaving, or holding on to the saints, might suggest the types of things we see in many art works of the saints, holy angels, & others on the right hand side of Christ's judgment. How that they are cleaving, or grasping hold on to souls that are entering paradise, or in paradise. Thus, they are joining in with the sanctification & deification process going on in that paradisaical realm. St. Peter, for example, is sometimes depicted at the door or gate to paradise, clasping the hands, or wrists of souls entering there in. In paradise, different ones are greeting each other with different types of hand & wrist grips. Thus, could this be the type of cleaving that Clement of Rome has in mind, while quoting this now unknown passage of scripture? Which types of scriptures as these, became the inspirations for these later art works? ³⁷¹ (Psalm 60:5, 73:23-25, 118:15-21, Isa. 41:10, 13).

Justin Martyr, 110-165, claimed that the Jews had removed passages from Esdras and Jeremiah, & from "the sayings of Jeremiah". One of these missing passages predicted that: "The Lord God remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation." This prediction was later used by Irenaeus, 120-202, a number of times in defense of his own particular interpretations of the doctrine of Christ's descent into the spirit world. Irenaeus wrote that the prediction was from Isaiah, & Jeremiah. (ANF 1:234-5, note 1, p.235, & 451, 493-4, 506, 510, & 560). Thus, Justin accuses the Jews of removing small phrases from the scriptures, (which had to have been of the Old Testament era scriptures). Thus the charge against Jewish rivals was that prophecies were removed because they were significant enough for early Christians to search, understand, & which they could have interpreted as pointing to Christ as the promised Messiah foretold by the prophets of old.³⁷²

In the earliest church, Christ & his apostles & prophets used the scriptures of Old Testament times to testify that Christ was prophetically written about by the prophets of old. (Luke 24:13-32, 2 Tim. 3:14-17, Matthew 2:4-6, John 5:39, 45-47, 20:9, Acts 2:25-36, 8:28-35, 10:43, 13:27, 32-37, 17:1-5, 26:22-24, 28:23). Tertullian, (145-220), notes how that: "By the Jews it may now seem to have been rejected [the scriptures of Enoch] for that (very) reason, [because how that Enoch likewise preached concerning the Lord,] just like all the other (portions) nearly which tell of Christ. Nor, of course, is this fact wonderful, that they did not receive some Scriptures which spake of Him whom even in person, speaking in their presence, they were not to receive." (ANF, 4:16, On the Apparel of Women, chap. 3).

Justin Martyr, (110-165), the Christological controversy was underway, which challenged & argued over different aspects about Christ: His pre-existence, or not, his actual physical birth, or not, his divinity, or not, being born a mere man to Mary & Joseph. Plus, his descent from heaven into a mortal body, or not. So in addition to what some of the Jews were doing to some of the copies of their scriptures of the Old Testament. Further tampering must have caused other prophecies about Christ to be taken out, or rephrased to reduce his, & God the Father's anthropomorphic (physical human shaped) attributes. Justin's schooling had included & made him a Greek philosophy influenced early Christian-apologist. Who, like Philo (ca. 13 B.C. - A.D. 45- 50, Greek-philosophy-influenced-Jew, in Alexandria, Egypt, who tried to blend Jewish traditions & Old Testament scriptures, in with Greek philosophy, with their anti-anthropomorphic interpretations of Old Testament scriptures, (or against physical attributes & descriptions of Deity). Both argued that the Greek philosophers borrowed their wisdom from Moses. But hadn't Moses testified & prophesied of the physical aspects of the Messiah? Weren't all the physical animal sacrifices of the Mosaic law, the blood smearing rites, & other types, all prophetic of the physical Messiah, who was to come to die a physical death? How then would early Christians, steeped in Greek philosophy, work their ways around such physical aspects, with all the physical reminders in their sacraments, & rituals? Justin seems to be amongst those making the attempts, as he tried to also, like Philo, blend the 2 conflicting & contradicting belief systems, & explains it thus: "God begat Himself a kind of rational Force, which is called by the Holy Spirit (i.e. the Old Testament) sometimes "the Glory of the Lord," sometimes: 'Son,' 'Wisdom,' 'Angel,' 'God,' 'Lord,' 'Logos,' & 'Captain of the Lord's host.' All these appellations (or formal names, or titles), both from his ministering to the Father's purpose and from his having been begotten by the Father's pleasure."³⁷³ So, ironically, although prophecies about Christ's life & physical doing in his mortal body, as the literal "Son of God," were being removed from different copies of the Old Testament, as noted by even Justin Martyr & others.

Unfortunately, Justin & other the Greek influenced early Christian apologists, were removing the prophecies in their own ways & methods, by the ways they reinterpreted the prophecies of old through the lens of Greek philosophy.³⁷⁴

During the early centuries, early anti-Christians amongst the Jews, Rabbi Joseph Kimchi, wrote a book against the early Christians, Book of Covenant. His son, Rabbi David Kimchi, also followed his example & wrote: Answer to the Christians. In it he claimed that the scriptural prophecies concerning the coming of the Messiah were not fulfilled in Jesus Christ, not even one!³⁷⁵ Thus, with different earliest critics also keeping tabs of the "sayings" of Jesus, as they heard him preaching, in order to vilify him. Plus, to find ways to twist the meanings of his words, before the Jewish theocracy of the time. It's also no surprise then to see charges against the Jews, with the alleged motive of removing small phrases to reduce scriptural & prophetic evidences for Jesus being their promised Messiah, whom they had crucified, (Acts 2:22-36, 5:28, Matt.22:15-22, 26:21, Mark 14:57-58, Luke 11:53-54, 19:22, 20:20).

110-165, Justin Martyr, points out to the Jew, Trypho, that Jesus had fulfilled the prophetic promises concerning the coming of the Messiah. (ANF 1:199-201, 207, 212-242). Origen also responds to Celsus by giving evidences concerning how Christ fulfilled the different prophetic promises. (ANF 4:410-11, Against Celsus, book 1 chap.33-5 & p.418-20 book 1 chap. li-ly).

"Origen criticized the Jews because they accepted prophets and revelation of past ages but could not accept Jesus Christ, the source of all revelation and prophecy. He rightfully observed that the Jews could not disregard Christ without disregarding the prophets who preach his word: "But disbelieving Him [Jesus Christ] they also disbelieve them [all the past prophets], and cut off and confine in prison the prophetic word, and hold it dead."³⁷⁶

What added to the later Christological issues that raged from about the 2nd c., onwards, is how Old Testament scriptures, manuscripts & copies, were alleged to have had polytheistic implications reduced & gutted, in order to appeal to those who had theological powers enough to change the polytheistic views, into monotheistic. This was said to have been done during the Deuteronomic reformation, (640-609 BC), & by the last centuries BCE. Thus, Deut. 32:8, once read that "the Most High apportioned the nations, when he divided humankind, he fixed the boundaries of the peoples according to the number of the gods." In other translations "sons of God." The original references them as "divine beings," & the Septuagint, the oldest Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible, has them as divine entities, "the angels of God." These earlier passage, with their differences, reflect the progressive excision, (or the act of cutting out, or the surgical removal of part or all), of the traditions that described heaven as being peopled by more divine beings, than God. This progressive gutting of passages from the Old Testament scriptures would certainly have affected the doctrinal beliefs, such as "the Gods" relationships to the human family, & any possible fragments of deification, if any, that might have survived in Jewish thought, by the time of Christ. Such as his encounters with those who rejected his restored teachings of deification, (Matt.5:48, John 10:29-39). Plus, how the Jews had rejected Christ's shocking references to him as being one with the Father. This, they understood correctly as meaning that Christ was saying, though he looked like a man, that he was also divine, & even "God." Or as in other passages about Christ say, he is, "the Son of God," but also amongst many sons of God-the-Father, who could also become gods, (John 10:27-39, Psalm 82:6; Isa. 41:23, John 20:17).³⁷⁷

Celsus used the early anti-Christian arguments of the Jews against the early Christians, thus Origen not only response to Celsus, but to the early Jewish critics too: "And I remember on one occasion, at a disputation held with certain Jews who were reputed learned men, having employed the following argument in the presence of many judges: "Tell me, sirs," I said, "since there are two individuals who have visited the human race, regarding whom are related marvelous works surpassing human power - Moses, viz., your own legislator, who wrote about himself, and Jesus our teacher, who has left no writings regarding Himself, but to whom testimony is borne by the disciples in the Gospels- what are the grounds for deciding that Moses is to be believed as speaking the truth, although the Egyptians slander him as a sorcerer, and as appearing to have wrought his mighty works by jugglery, while Jesus is not to be believed because you are His accusers? And yet there are nations which bear testimony in favor of both: the Jews to Moses; and the Christians, who do not deny the prophetic mission of Moses, but proving from that very source the truth of the statement regarding Jesus, accept as true the miraculous circumstances related of Him by His disciples. Now, if ye ask us for the reasons of our faith in Jesus, give yours first for believing in Moses, who lived before Him, and then we shall give you ours for accepting the latter. But if you draw back, and shirk a demonstration then we, following your own example, decline for the present to offer any demonstration likewise. Nevertheless, admit that ye have no proof to offer for Moses, and then listen to our defense of Jesus derived from the law and the prophets. And now observe what is almost incredible! It is shown from the declarations concerning Jesus, contained in the law and the prophets, that both Moses and the prophets were truly prophets of God." (ANF 4:415, Against Celsus, bk1, ch. xlv).

The late 19th century anti-Christian & occult writer, H. P. Blavatsky mentions a tradition which speaks of Peter's denials. (John 21:18). "...The latter part of this sentence, say the Greeks, relates to the Church of Rome, and prophesies her constant apostasy from Christ, under the mask of false religion. Later, it was inserted in the twenty-first chapter of John, but the whole of this chapter had been pronounced a forgery, even before it was found that this Gospel was never written by John the Apostle at all." The prediction says: "...Verily, I say unto thee, Peter, thou shalt deny me throughout the coming ages, and never stop until thou shalt be old, and shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldst not."³⁷⁸

The Book of Hermas, or the Shepherd of Hermas, is said to have been part of some of the earlier Christian Bibles. It was bound with the New Testament in some codices, & cited & considered scriptures by different early Christian fathers, like Irenaeus, Tertullian, Origen & Clement.³⁷⁹ What were some of the reasons why this book was taken out of later canons? "Evidently at Naples, the Shepherd won, at least for a time, its struggle to be received among the canonical books of the New Testament."³⁸⁰

Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, mentions a passage of "scripture," that we don't have in our present day Bibles, but must have been in the copies of scriptures that survived to his time: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power."³⁸¹ Clement also quotes as sacred scripture, the late 1st c. treatise: The Teaching of the 12 Apostles.³⁸²

Hippolytus & Origen noted a letter said to be from Paul: "...I do not wonder that the teachings of the evil one are so quickly gaining ground. For [my] Lord Jesus Christ will quickly come, since he is rejected by those who falsify his words."³⁸³

During the 2nd-3rd c., the scriptures weren't the only texts that got tampered with, changed, words added, parts deleted, wording corrupted according to the dogmas, controversies, & polemics of the times, & who had copies. For apparently, also some church leaders' letters were said to be changed too. Christological issues caused some scribes, copyists on different sides of the issues to add parts to the different texts of the scriptures to support Christ's preexistence, support that he had a real physical body, was physically resurrected, wasn't the son of Joseph, but the Son of God. That he had real human flesh, real blood, though he was also divine too, a God-man, not just a mere man, as some sects argued. Moreover, that he also had a real human body, & wasn't just a phantom only appearing to be human. Also, that he died a real physical death on the cross, & that there was no separation in him that left, while another part of him suffered. That he was not just a mere man, born of Joseph, to later be adopted as Son of God, but that he was born the Son of God from the start, to the virgin. These are just a few summations of the Christological controversy, during which scriptures were corrupted, changed, & things were deleted that seemed to support the rivals' polemics. While things were added to support & reinforce the polemics of other sects that wrote against Gnostic sects, Adoptionists, Separatists, & others.³⁸⁴

Passages of scripture that clearly showed Deities' human shape characteristics were targeted by anti-body copyists, for physical & verbal tampering tactics. Plus, doctrinal correcting through misinterpretations methods. Other doctrines suffered the same types of fates. For if passages showed up in other copies of scriptures as different from tampered with ones, & that were in support of corporeality, or others' dogmas, anti-dogmas, then the different sects' copyists could counter-interpret the ones they didn't like away, for example: "It is only after divine corporeality is rejected on philosophical (Neoplatonist) grounds, that these passages [those indicating God's corporeality] are given figurative or allegorical interpretations."³⁸⁵ The same with other gospel themes too.

Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, wrote about the falsification of his letters, how "...when [early] Christians asked me to write letters I wrote them, and the apostles of the devil filled them with tares, by leaving out some things and putting in others. But woe awaits them. Therefore, it is no wonder that some have gone about to falsify even the scriptures of the Lord when they have plotted against writings so inferior." Theophilus (bishop of Antioch, died 190), noted that "heretics were even then no less defiling the pure seed of apostolic teaching... it is clear that Theophilus joined with the others in this campaign against them...." Polycarp attempted to preserve the apostolic teachings, for he "constantly taught those things which he had learnt from the apostles, which are also the traditions of the Church, which alone are true."³⁸⁶

During the 3rd century, as in later centuries, the canon of scripture was still in flux, & was changing according to different early to later Christian sects' preferences, & their particular dogmas that they held out as "truth," while rejecting their rivals' scriptures as "heretical." In fact, were no set "canons" yet, as we know them today, during the 3rd century, for different early Christian sects had their own lists of what they accepted as authoritative.³⁸⁷ What also contributed to differences in earlier to later canons of scriptures was the availability of copies, & what could be copied accurately, or intentionally or mistakenly copied inaccurately from different texts circulating. Plus, the protection, or lack of protection of copies hid from early anti-Christians that sought to confiscate the scriptures, so that they could either destroy them, or abuse them. Some of the abusive tactics were to vilify all early Christians in general, by finding passages they could take out of context, or misquote, or distort. The ancient critics were not too much concerned if who, & what they were citing was from apocryphal early Christians & their rivals' sources, or from scriptures of extreme heretics, or from more accurate collections. But instead, such selections were quoted so that the critics could say & write things like: 'What better proofs of the strange, wicked & secretive things that early Christians are doing in their secret meetings, than what's in their own books!'³⁸⁸ Consequently, it's no wonder that different readings & differences, can be found in different copies of the different books of different canons, that were made by hand.

After all, this was long before the printing press was invented, & the faster distribution systems improved.³⁸⁹

Eusebius, the church historian, noted that different manuscripts were getting so corrupt that there was no hope in finding agreements between them. The scriptures had been adulterated so much that so also had been the simplicity of the faith. Those whom mutilated the scriptures, claimed that they had corrected them.³⁹⁰

With all the forging of apostolic writings, different ones thought it would be best to collect & preserve those things thought to be genuine. But there was no unity of agreement on what was genuine, & what was not, what was spurious, & what was not. Who was to decide, & by what authority? There were no living prophets & apostles to help in this. Should the Roman Emperors, like un-baptized pagan cult leaders, like Constantine had been, in taking part in the Nicene Creed controversy, 325 A.D., be in charge of such a task? Or should another council, without State interferences, be called to make a canon of acceptable, authenticated scriptures?³⁹¹

OMOIOUSIOS IN NICENE CREED 325, NOT IN SCRIPTURES

When the spiritual gifts were almost completely gone by the 4th century, if not entirely, & without current, as to that time, scripture producing living prophets, & apostles to help solve doctrinal issues. The council of Nicene, 325, resorted, under pressure from the Roman Emperor, Constantine, to settle on certain words not found in scriptures. Hosius of Corduba, proposed the term omoousios, composed of 2 words, one meant the same, & the other substance. "But precisely this word (h)-omoousios was the word that all the Eusebians [Eusebius of Nicomedia & Eusebius of Caesarea, Church historian,] did not want, under the pretext that it was Sabellian and that it was not found in the scriptures, in reality because it was the only one that expressed, without equivocation, the divinity of the Son of God, his unity as to substance with the Father. And it is for the opposite reason that the orthodox clung to it so much, although it was not scriptural."³⁹² Both Eusebiuses opposed the word substantial (or "of the same substance"), & its use and "argued that it was unscriptural."³⁹³

Another source says that Homoousion, "was not only unscriptural, but which was in bad repute as having been used by the heretics Valentinus and Paul of Samosata..." It was also condemned by the 3rd Council of Antioch. However, it was used against Arianism, to counter them.³⁹⁴

Eusebius of Nicomedia, had attempted to assure the Christians under him, that it had been approved for "the use of certain expressions not found in the Scriptures.... Since the divinely inspired Scriptures never use such terms as 'out of nothing,' or 'that existed which at one time did not exist,' and such like terms; for it did not seem proper (eulogon) to say and teach such things,... never in times before have we thought it proper to use these terms." Also: "We are well aware that the Bishops and writers of ancient times when discussing the theology of the Father and the Son never used the word homoousios."³⁹⁵

"It is not clear what the council intended to teach by the phrase "from the substance [ousia] of the Father" and homoousios with the Father. Both were unscriptural and employed with some reluctance. The later phrase was placed in the creed by the emperor Constantine, probably with Hosius [of Corduba's] guidance. Literally it means "of the same ousia" (substance)."³⁹⁶

Other writers note how, "...the doctrine of the Trinity, which was never in the Bible anyway."³⁹⁷ "The Nicene Creed is not to be found in any Gospel. It derives from no utterance of Christ nor from the words of any of his Apostles. It directly contradicts the plain language of the New Testament. Its ideas cannot even be expressed in scriptural language; they are cloaked in that of the Greek philosophy whence they came."³⁹⁸

"Some conservative bishops, even among those who were committed to the doctrinal position taken by the Council of Nicaea, were very much worried by the fact that, in the Nicene Creed, a word utterly foreign to the scriptures-homoousios-was proclaimed the dogmatic standard for the church."³⁹⁹

St. Hilary of Poitiers, 315-367, noted that the argument was about words which had been worked out through heated discussions, and which had only divided them even more. "We avoid believing that of Christ which He told us to believe, so that we might establish a treacherous unity in the false name of peace, and we rebel with new definitions of God against what we falsely call innovations, and in the name of Scriptures we deceitfully cite things that are not in the Scriptures..."⁴⁰⁰

"One criticism of the Nicene formula at the time relates to its use of a word (homoousios) which appears nowhere in the Bible."⁴⁰¹

"The so-called Semi-Arians in particular objected to the word ὁμοούσιος. Their objection to this term was that it was considered to be "un-Scriptural, suspicious, and of a Sabellian tendency."⁴⁰²

Athanasius, (296, 298-373), also admits & was troubled by different "unscriptural" terms & words being infused in the Nicene Creedal formulas on both sides of the arguments, & being debated over & pushed on the Council.⁴⁰³

Like in the case with the Christological controversy & its dogmatic polemical effects on the copyists & scribes who collected the scriptures & copied them. That controversy, like the Trinitarian one, influenced them to add, change, delete, omit, interpolate, & make copies which reinforced their particular dogmas, & some destroyed copies that were made by their rivals.⁴⁰⁴ "When revelation had ceased and an effort was made to harmonize the revealed doctrine with the conclusions of the philosophers, then the phraseology and the revealed doctrine as found in New Testament was rejected, and new terms and expressions were used."⁴⁰⁵

By the council of Nicaea, the spiritual gifts, revelation wasn't used by the different ones bringing up the unscriptural formulas for the Nicene Creed. "Historians admit that the omoousios (one substance) was not scriptural and that the Athanasian views were not found in the writings of the Apostolic Fathers and the Apologists."⁴⁰⁶ However, some argue that many early Christian Apologists, influenced by Greek philosophy, departed away from the scriptures & accepted Greek thought as a way to answer different issues, & thus set the stage for the use of Greek philosophical terms, that show up in the formulas of the later versions of the Nicene Creed.⁴⁰⁷

After the Nicene Creed, different ones reacted to the unscriptural wording in it. The eastern bishops in the eastern part of the Empire, while denying that they were Arian, "they avoided the unscriptural expression, omoousios, (one substance)."⁴⁰⁸

The definition of the Trinity "was not revealed, is not in the scriptures- even the terms used are unscriptural, as recognized by the Council of Nicaea; and the "mystery" was developed as the "revealed doctrine" was made "more precise" and given "scientific form," without revelation, in the councils."⁴⁰⁹

"The vocabulary used in giving more precise form to the dogma of the Deity was not to be found in the New Testament, [which was not yet settled on during the Council of Nicaea, 325, but would be later], but was itself taken from the language of philosophy and then given greater precision by means of speculative thinking."

“Foakes-Jackson points to the fact that the word omoousios was not only unscriptural but was in bad repute because of its use by Valentinus and Paul of Samosata. This made it possible for the Arians to accuse their opponents of borrowing their key word from the heretics who they condemned.”⁴¹⁰

“Motivated by the spirit of compromise and political expediency, someone at the council proposed that omoousios (two Greek words combined meaning “same substance”)... be used to describe the relationship between the Son and the Father. In essence, they were deemed to be consubstantial, or of the same substance. It mattered not that such word was never used in the scriptures or by the early Christian writers; it suited the exigencies of the moment. The concept of consubstantiality was ambiguous enough that the vast majority of attending bishops [at the council of Nicea] were willing to accept it.”⁴¹¹

“The New Testament never speaks of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, as a substance or essence that is one with his Father, the Almighty God. In fact, the word Trinity is not discussed in the New Testament, nor is there a formal doctrine of the same. The belief in the Trinity is a radical departure from the teachings of the New Testament. Actually, the various terms used in early church creeds derive from Greek philosophy, not the Bible.”⁴¹² As noted earlier, the art works don’t depict the 3 in 1 - 1 in 3, concept in later Christian depiction the Godhead, until after the Nicene Creed era, post-325. For it’s then that we see 3 heads on 1 body, 3 faces on 1 head “God.”

NOT IN THE BIBLE!

Other things the later churches adopted & practices were noted by different ones to “not be in the Bible.” John Wyclif, (born about 1324 in Yorkshire, died at Lutterworth 1384), in his Opus Evangelium, left unfinished at his death. He notes & attacks the Roman church, its elaborate ritual, indulgences, & other things not authorized by the Bible.⁴¹³

“One criticism of the Nicene formula at the time relates to its use of a word (homooousios) which appears nowhere in the Bible.”⁴¹⁴

14th–16th c., the Reformation came about because, as the bible, though still suppressed in many areas, translated & made available in others area. Started to be translated even more, & printed out in languages of the common folks, such as in English & German. Consequently, different ones started noticing that some of the things the Roman Catholic church taught and ritualistically performed, were not in the bible.

Martin Luther, (1483–1546), in his writings, & at the council at Augsburg, where questioned, 1518, argues that the sale of indulgences, & merits-treasury were, not in the bible. (Merits were said to be good deeds stored in some heavenly treasure, like a bank account of good deeds done by Christ & the saints. It was believed that the church could get access to those merits, if money was given to the church to purchase these, proxy good works, to then be credited towards the buyers. Thus, these merits accumulated, would be considered & credited towards the buyers on the day of judgment. Thus, it was as if the buyer had done the good works themselves, even if they still lived wickedly! This is the basic concept behind what might be called proxy merits).⁴¹⁵

Luther also complained that these, & other papal bulls, like that of Clement VI, were not scriptural & that the bull did violence to holy scripture. His writings were challenged, so he asked them to show him from scripture & reason, his “errors.” Instead of showing him, they threatened him & tried to intimidate him to recant willingly, or unwillingly. He repeated his argument to have them show by reason & scripture, his “error.”⁴¹⁶

But Luther also had his own problems with teaching things not in the bible, his “sole” authority. He interpreted the Bible by Augustine type methods, (being an Augustinian trained monk at one time), instead of interpreting Augustine by the Bible. He made changes to the texts in some areas to adapt to his theories, for the scriptures must adapt themselves to his way of interpreted theories or suffer the penalty of de-canonization.⁴¹⁷ Some say that Luther added the word “solo,” or “solum,” (alone, in English, while in German, “allein,” to Romans 1:17,⁴¹⁸ & or 3:28, & elsewhere). This was done to enforce his dogma of being saved by “faith alone.” Unfortunately, this led to many living the false doctrine of Antinomianism, (or the belief that Christians are released by grace from obeying moral laws). For even during Luther’s time, he regretted their actions, how that many believed & lived as if Christ had abolished the moral law, and that Christians, therefore, were not obliged to observe it. This led to all kinds of sinful acts & problems, for good deeds were done either. So Luther warned about not taking it to this extreme.⁴¹⁹ Consequently, it was not in the Bible, that those who thought themselves “saved,” by grace alone, then had a free license to go out & sin, & cause all kinds of havoc in their families. Plus, in their societies, running around murdering people, stealing from them & each other, not feeding the poor, but robbing them, fornicating, taking part in orgies, adulterous affairs, beating up people, & forsaking any type of conscience they suppressed!

During Paul’s day: “The practice [of forgery] was common and not considered so immoral in those [early Christian] days. The Nazarene ‘Zealots for the Law’ were no doubt responsible. These did all they could to turn Paul’s converts against him, with considerable success, and did not scruple to pervert his teaching. See Romans 3:8.”⁴²⁰ “And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.” Had different ones perverted Paul’s teachings, even forged letters in his name, or altered copies of his real letters, during his day, to say that he, or the church leaders with him, had taught church members to ‘do evil, that good may come’?”

Apparently, there were many early Christians that were upset with Paul’s attempts to get his converts to not practice all of the works of the Law of Moses, like circumcisions. Though Paul had taught against the necessity of having the Gentiles, Greeks, & other non-Jewish converts to have to be circumcised, (see Paul’s letter to the Galatians). Paul hadn’t taught against keeping the 10 commandments of Moses! He wasn’t saying you can go out & kill, steal, fornicate, be adulterous, disrespect your parents, etc., now, because you’re all saved by grace, so long as you confess Jesus with your mouth! No! No! He hadn’t been teaching such things, but rather: “Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.” (1 Cor. 7:19). Instead, he went completely in the opposite direction, & continued to try to get his converts to not only live the 10 commandments of Moses, but to add onto those commandments, teachings, & moral laws, Christ’s higher laws, & good works. To add Christ-like-traits, to others ones, as they repented, forsook their old sinful ways, were washed of their sins, & sought to improve their own lives in the on going quest & struggles towards the crown, heavenly glory, & the reward for enduring to the end. Plus, as they continued in their quests for Christian moral perfection.⁴²¹

However, the controversy over circumcision, attributed to at least two different extremes in how Paul’s writings, and teachings were being misinterpreted, plus, false teachings being attributed to him. Plus, as noted, possible spurious letters in his name being written, & published in the name of countering his alleged “anti-Mosaic law” teachings, & to vilify him in the churches. As it was, because some must have noted that there were those who were misinterpreting Paul as suggesting that they didn’t need to live any type of moral laws, to be saved. (Did they get a hold of a spurious letter alleged to be written by Paul, that would have given them "scriptural" support for their lustful activities? Did some of the different Jewish converts manufacture evidence against Paul, by publishing spurious letters that were then further misinterpreted & used by others? Such as ones who then thought & taught that, not only didn't they need to keep the Mosaic 10 commandments, but that they didn't need to keep Christ's higher moral laws too, being saved by grace & not by works?)⁴²²

As it was, some of the Jewish converts to Christianity, then vilified Paul as saying that he was teaching against the Law of Moses, or other aspects of "the law." Charging that he was teaching that "to do evil, that good may come," (Rom 3:8). It must have been because what he & his followers were falsely charged to be teaching, (when Paul wasn't teaching such things), that Paul wrote to counter these charges. Thus, this & other reasons must have been why Paul kept on stressing the keeping of the commandments, the developing of Christ like traits in their lives, & living Christ's higher laws, in different letters.⁴²³ However, word must have reached the ears of the Jewish converts, about the different "salvationists" that might have been a product of the spurious letters. If not, then a product of misinterpreting selective passages in Paul's letters to claim he had given them a free grace license to sin, for they were "saved by grace," & not by works. If such groups were known to the Jewish converts, they must have pointed to them, as evidence to charge & wrongly suggest that, "Paul's teaching immorality!" Or at least anti-circumcision, anti-Moses laws & works of those laws. Thus, some of the Jewish converts had gone to Antioch "to teach the brethren that unless they were circumcised as Moses prescribed, they could not be saved." (Acts 15:1-2). Others had vilified Paul, such as at the church of Corinth, involved in dissension, (or who were in disagreement that leads to discord), & immorality, that was thus disordering the church at Corinth. So Paul wrote them letters, & even went to them, about 56, & faced his detractors, for: "They had accused him of profiting materially from his preaching, laughed at his visions, and renewed the demand that all Christians should obey the Jewish Law."⁴²⁴

Clement of Rome, [A.D. 30-100], Polycarp, [65-100-155 A.D.], Ignatius, [30-107 A.D.], & others wrote that the Christians should show that they were true Christians by the way they lived. They should live a moral life, & avoid sinful acts. They should show forth good works. Grace & works went together in salvation, for the unrepentant sinners would not be saved. Thus they were to seek the higher laws in becoming an imitator of God. Clement of Alexandria, [153-193-217 A.D.], wrote against those who sought excuse themselves from living up to the moral codes contained in the Mosaic law. Clement of Alexandria, also wrote that Paul had circumcised Timothy. For "...the noble apostle circumcised Timothy, though loudly declaring & writing that circumcision made with hands profits nothing."⁴²⁵

Like what happened with Luther, during the 16th century, because there were those who were selective in what parts of Paul they wanted to accept. They, like in Luther's time, took his "saved by grace," concept as a license to sin & this led to all kinds of immoral behavior. Apparently, what happened with the people of Paul's, & Luther's day, was also a problem that James noted was going on too, during his day. There were different ones perverting the apostles' teachings, like those of Paul's, to try to justify having no moral restrains, thinking that they didn't have to live any of the commandments, or moral teachings & in being 'saved' by grace, could thus do whatever they wanted. Thus, James wrote against those like the "salvationists," & stressed doing good works, to show that they had faith in Christ, (James chaps. 2-4). While different church fathers like Irenaeus & Tertullian argued against other "Christians" groups like the Marcionites, & the Encratites, & assorted gnostic sects, they were not able to successfully block the wave coming from the other side of the shore, namely the Libertinism who had normally associated with the salvation cults of the empire. Salvationism had imprinted itself on the Christian church at Corinth by the 50s, & by the end of the 1st century, James offers an already archaic solution-the doing of works: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? (James 2:14). Can someone naked simply be clothed in warmth, just by saying it? "Even so, faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." (James 2:15-17). This was James' antidote to the salvation-by-faith doctrine advocated by Paul in his desperate attempts to bring the churches under moral control.⁴²⁶

THE "GOOD WORKS" CONTROVERSY OF LATER CENTURIES. CHANGES MADE TO SCRIPTURES TO ENCOURAGE ANTI-WORKS: With pre-existence themes faded out about how God the Father is a loving Father of his spirit children, whom he sent to earth to learn mortal lessons by free will choices between good & evil. Of which spirits, clothed in mortal bodies on earth, could then be cleansed of their sins, through Christ's loving atonement, & by following Christ's teachings & gospel. They, upon death, their spirits could return to our Father in heaven & be received in glory (deification themes). By these later centuries, 16th c., many of these themes & concepts had been changed to depicting God the Father as a sort of tyrant, & of Christ as a harsh judge! Sitting in judgment, ready to condemn sinners to fry for their sins in the purging fires of purgatory.⁴²⁷ Thus, Martin sought to change these beliefs to suggest that Christ & the Father are more forgiving, & loving. Plus, that the works prescribed by the Catholic church, that he was apart of as a Priest, with its prescribed penances, & other required ritualistic performances, were works that were not required. That faith alone, in Christ, was all that was needed.⁴²⁸

Many Reformers noted, (as others, like Harry Emerson Fosdick, a much later Baptist minister), what wasn't in the scriptures, that had become the policies & practices of the later centuries. That neither in Paul's epistles to the Romans, nor in any letter he wrote, was concerned about sacred relics, religious pilgrimages, confession to a priest, purgatory & how to get out of it, or the acts of penance, & all the self-punishments, that were familiar in the monasteries.⁴²⁹ Such "works" were some of the things not in the scriptures, that Luther & others were concerned about. However, unfortunately, in time, these concerns over these Catholic-works that Martin Luther did himself, as an Augustinian priest, were later on down to modern times, grossly misinterpreted! For many thought, & some still do, that it was the belief of Martin Luther, that he was teaching that any types of good works were not required to be done, & any type of evil works, didn't matter, if they were done, for a person was, "saved by grace alone," & thus had a free license to sin, or do what they wanted & still "be saved," regardless! Martin Luther, later regrets having started these misconceptions & perversions of his teachings about "grace alone." For word came to him about how some of his followers believed that Christ had abolished the moral law, & thus they began to live their false doctrine of "Antinomianism." This was where they believed their new found spiritual liberty gave them a license for every carnal indulgence of the flesh, while also abandoning any types of good works too. They simply exchanged one set of godless works for another, for many "disavowed all works, even godly works, as a necessary ingredient to salvation. The pendulum merely swung from one heresy to another."⁴³⁰

Some "Born-again Christians," today even try to discourage any good works because, what's the point, they don't count, for, (as the often cite), "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," (Isa.64:6), & the good works Jesus did, counts as all the "merits" needed to cover our unrighteousness, or lack of doing our own good works, so some modern preachers claim.⁴³¹ So for some modern Christians, not all, they have perverted the “saved by grace alone,” false doctrine of Luther, into such an extreme perversion, (like the Antinomians of Luther’s time did), by their tactics & use of selective scriptures methods. (This is where some focus on the few passages on grace, taken out of their textual & historical context. But that also ignores, or tries to argue away, many more other passages on doing good works, on keeping the commandments, & of living the many Christ-like moral teachings, such as the sermon on the mount. Plus, the earliest Christian writings on doing good works & living a moral life style, & their defenses against early anti-Christians’ charges, that they weren’t a wicked, black magical, murderous, cannibalistic secret society & cult, as rumored & charged. But that they were actually doing a lot of good in their communities, if the people would only let them).⁴³²

But isn’t that one of Satan’s & his demons’ job descriptions? To get people to not only do bad works, but discourage good work, & even use all kinds of satanic tactics to get them not to do any good works? Aren’t the modern anti-works preachings of many preachers helping the devil & demons with their jobs? This modern Antinomianism, is creating the same havoc in communities where the keeping of the commandments is not encouraged, & even mocked. Thus, we have to wonder then, like Martin Luther did, how that a lot of the crimes, murders, thefts, adultery, beatings, homelessness, & the poor, & other negative issues in our communities, are partly due to this anti-good-works, & lack of incentive to stop evil works, false teachings. Especially as it gets preached from the pulpits over the years, & now over the radio & TV by many of these “born-again Christian” preachers, who often speak of getting to know Jesus as your personal savior, by accepting the altar call to pray & “get saved!” But John wrote: “He that saith, I know him, [Christ] and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected.” (1 John 2:4-5).⁴³³

But, how far things have changed, for earlier, during the witch-hunting craze, & days of the Puritans communities of the American colonies, 17th century. If a “Christian” didn’t live the way that they were expected to live, the good Christian life, they could be suspected of being an evil witch, or wizard! If someone claiming to be a “Christian,” was contentious, argued with their neighbors, or was defiant, conceited, gained a reputation of being in a bad mood most of the time. That person could be accused of being a witch, in a league with the devil! So, Puritan-Christians were required to show that they weren’t satanic witches, by manifesting outward signs of good Christian morals. That they weren’t witches because they lived the good Christian life! That they were charitable, kind, etc., and not thus manifesting any negative-traits of the Devil, & his demons!⁴³⁴

But, Luther, while noting Catholic teachings about sacred relics, acts of penance, etc., weren’t in the bible, Luther admits adding a word, here & there to his German New Testament, to make the different passages say faith “alone,” & how this was noted by the papacy who also made an issue out of it, in their attacks upon him & his new translation. In his polemics & discontent for the papacy he said he was going to keep it that way, & keep the word in his own translations of the New Testament into German. He wrote about the complaints different ones had about him adding (solo, alone, solum, allein) because some said it wasn’t in the bible, & he admits it wasn’t in the Greek or Latin. He also called James a “straw epistle,” because it couldn’t be made to agree with Paul, when James wrote how faith without works is dead (James 2:17, 19-20, 26). But if Paul also differed with

Luther, then Luther didn’t hesitate to question the correctness of Paul’s theology & argued that Paul’s argument won’t stick.⁴³⁵ Because James countered his hopes to construct a “faith alone,” anti-Catholic works dogma, he complained that: “We should throw the Epistle of James out of this school [the University of Wittenberg.]”⁴³⁶

Luther: “Many sweat to reconcile St. Paul and St. James... but in vain. ‘Faith justifies’ and ‘faith does not justify’ contradict each other flatly. If any ne can harmonize them I will give him my doctor’s hood and let him call me a fool.”⁴³⁷

When Luther was before the council at Augsburg, 1518, he claimed that he couldn’t recant his teachings about his doctrine of justification by faith alone without works, since his “error” was the teaching of scripture. If so, where? Was there a translation of the Bible, in Latin, or Greek, before Luther’s German New Testament (1522)? Ones that Luther could have used to show his “faith alone,” dogma was scriptural? If not, was there a translation of the Bible in Latin or Greek that the council at Augsburg (1518), could have used to show Luther, at his request, that his “faith alone,” was not in the bible, & that he was thus in “error”? If they could have, but didn’t: Was it because to start meeting Luther’s requests, this could have also meant that Luther could have asked where their indulgence & merits dogmas & practices, plus other Catholic-works, were in scripture? Thus, pointing out that they were not in the bible? Which must have been one in many other reasons why the bible, in some areas, was suppressed by the papacy, while it was available in other areas to those who could afford copies.⁴³⁸

1530, Martin Luther, An Open Letter On Translating, Nuremburg, 9-15-1530, Martin mentions the polemics he was still having with the papacy over their charge that he corrupted the scriptures with his translation of the New Testament (1522). Then later, the Old & New Testament, completed in 1534. During the translation process in 1530, including the Apocrypha, into German, he notes, from a letter sent to him how: “...It has been charged by the enemies of truth that the text has been modified and even falsified in many places, which has startled and shocked many simple Christians, even among the educated who do not know the Hebrew & Greek languages...”⁴³⁹

Martin Luther, in a letter, 9-8-1530: “To the Honorable and Worthy N., my favorite lord and friend.” Martin Luther: “...I rendered them, [Romans 3:28] “We hold that a man is justified without the works of the law, by faith alone,” and you also tell me that the papists are causing a great fuss because Paul’s text does not contain the word sola (alone), and that my addition to the words of God is not to be tolerated...” He goes on to challenge the papacy’s translation abilities, & understanding of the German language. Further on: “...It is my Testament and my translation, and it shall remain mine. If I have made some mistakes in it (although I am not aware of any, and would most certainly be unwilling to deliberately mistranslate a single letter) I will not allow the papists to be my judges....” Further on he complained about a translation that was his: “...Oh Dear Children, how it pained me when his prince in a detestable preface condemned Luther’s New Testament and forbade the reading of it, while commanding the Scribbler’s New Testament to be read, even though it was the very same one Luther had done!... He has patched it and altered it in a few places.... But I did have to laugh at the great wisdom that so terribly slandered, condemned and forbade my New Testament when it was published under my name, but required it to be read when published under the name of another!... If your papist wishes to make a great fuss about the word sola (alone), say this to him: “Dr. Martin Luther will have it so, and he says that a papist and a donkey are the same thing.”” Further on: “...I shall show why I used the [German equivalent of the] word sola — even though in Romans 3 it was not [the equivalent of] sola I used but solum or tantum....

I have used sola fides elsewhere; I want to use both solum and sola. I have always tried to translate in a pure and clear German.... I know very well that in Romans 3 [28] the word solum is not in the Greek or Latin text — the papists did not have to teach me that. It is fact that the letters s-o-l-a are not there.... But it is the nature of our language that in speaking about two things, one which is affirmed, the other denied, we use the word allein [only] along with the word nicht [not] or kein [no].... In all these phrases, this is a German usage, even though it is not the Latin or Greek usage. It is the nature of the German language to add allein in order that nicht or kein may be clearer and more complete.... Yet why should I be concerned about their ranting and raving? I will not stop them from translating as they want. But I too shall translate, not as they please but as I please. And whoever does not like it can just ignore it and keep his criticism to himself, for I will neither look at nor listen to it. They do not have to answer for my translation or bear any responsibility for it.... So much for translating and the nature of language. However, I was not depending upon or following the nature of the languages alone when I inserted the word solum in Romans 3. The text itself, and Saint Paul's meaning, urgently require and demand it. For in that passage he is dealing with the main point of Christian doctrine, namely, that we are justified by faith in Christ without any works of the Law. Paul excludes all works so completely as to say that the works of the Law, though it is God's law and word, do not aid us in justification.... So, when all works are so completely rejected — which must mean faith alone justifies — whoever would speak plainly and clearly about this rejection of works will have to say "Faith alone justifies and not works." The matter itself and the nature of language requires it....⁴⁴⁰ Martin goes on to give his reasoning for making the changes, & adding the word, here & there, claiming that it was so that it made more clearer sense to the German readers, but also reinforced his "faith alone," dogma that he claims Paul was teaching. Martin claims he did it without any ill motives in mind, but the papacy didn't accept his reasoning & continued to ban his version of the Bible wherever they could.⁴⁴¹

JOHN'S BOOK OF REVELATION WAS REJECTED BY SOME EARLY CHRISTIANS

During the 3rd century, a bishop of Alexandria named Dionysius the Great, set forth powerful arguments against the common authorship of the two books: The Gospel of John, and the Book of Revelation. His reason for doing so was polemical. A sect proclaiming the imminent Second Coming and the millennium was pointing at the Revelation to John as its authority. Dionysius responded with an attack on Revelation itself, which was destined to jeopardize the book's canonical status for a long time. Some of the Greek bishops of the churches of Asia, representing the Seven Churches, to which John's Apocalypse is said to be addressed. They rejected John's Apocalypse because they felt that his predictions didn't come to pass. Thus, they met in council at Laodicea in 360, and discredited this gospel and voted it out of the canon. While the Latin, or Roman Church, continued to have the book in the canon, and didn't attempt to explain, nor deny, the failure of the prophecy.⁴⁴²

"The Western churches accepted the Book of Revelation, the Eastern churches generally rejected it; these accepted the Gospel according to the Hebrews and the Epistles of James, the Western church discarded them. Clement of Alexandria [153-193-217] quotes as sacred scripture a late first-century treatise, The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles."⁴⁴³

Later during the 16th century, Martin Luther and John Knox had some doubts about the Book of Revelation. Luther however, still used it to his advantage in claiming, along with others, that the Pope of his time, was the predicted anti-Christ! While some from the Roman Church considered Martin Luther as the predicted anti-Christ. Reformer, Ulrich

Zwingli was of the opinion that the Book of Revelation wasn't written by John.⁴⁴⁴ But Luther would rather that the book would be discarded, because, like James pro-works letter, Luther didn't like Revelation because it went against his faith alone, dogma, when it warned of being judged by works, good or bad done.⁴⁴⁵

Gnostics of the 2nd c., like Marcion, perceived a shocking contrast between the harsh God of the Old Testament, & the loving God of the New. They couldn't be one, & the same deity, he believed. The God who tempted people to sin and then punished them for what he tempted them to do, the God who hardened hearts and laid waste to lands, could not be the merciful Lord revealed by Christ. Before the canon of the New Testament was finally set in the 4th c., a number of books with a claim to inspiration enjoyed wide circulation. Those that were eventually excluded from the canon are known as the Christian Apocrypha. Many of these books were said to be Gnostic. Others occupied the broad borderland between orthodoxy and heresy. Many legends and popular traditions of Christianity had their origins in such Apocryphal books as The Ascension of Isaiah and The Acts of Peter.⁴⁴⁶

Marcion was considered a heretic, by many of the early Christian Fathers, because he held such views about the "God" of the Old Testament, as compared to Christ. And because of some of his other interpretations & practices. 300, in the Church in Africa, the "CHELTENHAM CANON" was used. This canon contained the 4 Gospels, 13 letters of Paul, the acts of the Apostles, Revelation, the 3 letters of John, & 2 letters of Peter. Both the books, James, & Jude, were excluded.⁴⁴⁷

270–330, Eusebius of Caesares, a Church historian, divided the books of the New Testament up into three categories. That which they accepted. Others that were unaccepted. And the apocryphal writings, or those of questionable origin. Those which were accepted were the 4 gospels, Acts, all of Paul's letters including Hebrews, 1 John, 1 Peter. However, Revelation was questionable, but accepted by some & wasn't by others. The books which were disputed were James, Jude, 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John.

340s, some of the Goths near the Danube river, converted by Arian-bishop, Ulfilas, eventually got their own version of the bible. Ulfilas, known as 'The Apostle of the Goths,' translated the Bible into the Goths' language, but left out the Book of Kings. Ulfilas presented that later version of Christianity, but not without fierce opposition. In time this version was what formed German Christianity, born of the Trinitarian controversy & which was to drive a deep wedge between the German Barbarian Arians, & Roman Catholics.⁴⁴⁸ How different was this translation of the Bible from others? Arius held the view that Christ was inferior to God the Father in dignity and nature. Their scriptures are said to be one of the oldest Teutonic writings known. Had these scriptures been worded & changed to also support the Arianism views?⁴⁴⁹

Ulfila was a descendant of a Cappadocian family that had been taken captive in a Gothic raid into Asia Minor. There he was raised as a Visigoth, and as a member of the Gothic delegation he was sent to the Roman court in Constantinople. There he fell under the influence of the Arian bishop Eusebius of Nicomedia, who consecrated him as bishop to serve the Christians among the Goths. "...Ulfila also provided the Goths with their first literature— a translation of the Bible (carefully edited, it was said, so as to omit certain Old Testament passages that might arouse warlike instincts among the tribesmen). To accomplish this task, the zealous bishop even invented an alphabet, derived from the Greek but with additional letters to accommodate Germanic sounds."⁴⁵⁰

By the 4th century, the apostasy was well under way, & the different church leaders must have had to admit that things were not going good for unity & stability within the church:

"At every point foreign ideas were creeping into Christian belief, and Christian believers were deserting to novel sects. The Church felt that its experimental youth was ending, its maturity was near; it must now define its terms and proclaim the conditions of its memberships. Three difficult steps were necessary: the formation of a scriptural canon, the determination of doctrine, and the organization of authority."⁴⁵¹

367, Athanasius, in his annual Easter letter compiled the books of the New Testament exactly as we have them today. Was he an inspired prophet who had authority to settle canonization issue? No, he was an early Christian who had his own particular view points. Still this did not settle canonization issues, for the books of the New Testament were to still go through several more changes, down to 1611.⁴⁵²

5th c., CODEX SINAITICUS was used & contained what we now have in the New Testament, plus the Epistle of Barnabas, & the Shepherd of Hermas.⁴⁵³

THE CLERMONT LIST was found in the 6th century & it contained: Old Testament books from Genesis to Tobit, the Gospels, the letters of Paul, except Philippians, 1-2 Thessalonians, & Hebrews were not included. Shepherd of Hermas, Acts of Paul, & the Revelation of Peter, were included.⁴⁵⁴

527–65, under the 'Caesaropapism' of Justinian's reign, Imperial regulation of Christian scriptures was probable, as in other cases: "In Palestine the Jews had lost their centre of revolt, & submitted, under protest, to the regulation by Imperial decree of their text of Scriptures; but the Samaritans, goaded by excessive taxes and Christian persecution, broke into riot on their hill-tops, and were almost exterminated by severe punitive measures."⁴⁵⁵

540–604, "St. Gregory himself is credited with having destroyed many volumes of classical literature, even whole libraries, lest they seduced men's minds away from the study of holy-writ. And in this he was certainly not alone. What with prejudice and destruction, it's surprising that literature of pre-Christian antiquity was preserved at all."⁴⁵⁶ The irony of this is how some of the later clergy in the Roman Catholic church's attitudes about encouraging the study of scriptures changed, for some during the 16th century, burned the extra copies of the scriptures, & made it illegal for the common folk to have copies, or translations in their own languages. Also, some in the later Roman Latin clergy, on purpose, kept the scriptures in Latin texts, so that the common people couldn't read or understand them. Had they been able to, they, like those during the 16th century Reformation, would have also seen just how far the Roman Catholic church, & other Christian sects, had departed from the basic teachings, & rituals of Christ, & the scriptures of his prophets, & apostles. Which is perhaps why one clergyman is reported to have contended, when copies of the bible started to be printed more & distributed during the 16th century: "We must root out printing, or printing will root out us."⁴⁵⁷ Plus, they also said the ceremonies of the Catholic church in Latin, which most people couldn't interpret or understand also. When the scriptures were decreed to be illegal to have, except only the clergy, there also arose secret thought police, that secretly searched out in homes, confiscated & burned the copies of scriptures they could find. Doing the Devil's work in the name of Jesus! For said Cardinal Campeggio, in reporting to Rome of burnings of William Tyndale's English translation, & copies of his Bible, smuggled into London: "No holocaust could be more pleasing to Almighty God."⁴⁵⁸ This was during the Fall of 1526, when the bishop of London, had purchased all the copies he could, & publically burned them at St. Paul's Cross. Much later, perhaps reflecting on this type of thing, the German writer, Heinrich Heine, 1821–22, wrote: "That was mere foreplay. Where they have burned books, they will end in burning human beings." (German: Das war

Vorspiel nur. Dort, wo man Bücher verbrennt, verbrennt man am Ende auch Menschen." - Heinrich Heine, Almansor (1821).⁴⁵⁹ This was certainly what happened during the witch hunting, heretic hunting days,⁴⁶⁰ & later, Jew hunting days of Nazi Germany, 1930s–1940s.⁴⁶¹

The long harsh battles & deadly penalties, & death sentences against those charged with "heresies," raged on during the early centuries, on down to the 1700s. Heretical books & heretical ideas, became thought policed issues that many early to later Christians felt justified in allowing, or encouraging different Emperors, Royalty & militant Christian Knight Orders, to enforce the "legal" use of harsh methods of force. The battles over non-scriptural creedal formulas unfortunately included the political-theocracies' use of militant tactics to suppress, purge, thought police, & destroy, some times by fire, their rivals' "scriptures," & sometimes their rivals. Plus their other holy books, art works, labeled "heretical," or containing "false doctrines." Plus, tortured, fined, property confiscated, beaten, whipped, expelled from communities, drawn & quartered, forced to confess "crimes," imprisoned, sometimes banished for life, burned at the stake & made to recant their beliefs before the early to later theocracies' court systems. Such methods became parts of the sad tales of the Christological Controversy & why the Dark Ages were considered to be spiritual darkness. Plus, how on into the Reformation, the different Christian sects continued fighting with each other for theocratic control, & it was when the scriptures were suppressed & held back from many of the common folks & peasantry.⁴⁶²

COPIES OF THE BIBLICAL TEXTS: DO THEY CONTAIN ERRORS? HAVE SOME BEEN TAMPERED WITH? ANY ORIGINALS WRITTEN BY APOSTLES?

Written versions of the traditions concerning Christ's life & teachings almost certainly existed before the times Gospels & epistles were written, but none survived. They may have been compilations of Jesus' sayings and parables or collections of key passages from the Scriptures with notes giving interpretations of them. Collections might have contained passages from the psalms & prophets showing how they were related to each other, and to Christ, & such collections were called testimonia, or testimonies. The materials committed to writing, were originally said to be handed down by word of mouth, or oral testimonials that had higher prestige than any writing. Even the epistles and Gospels, when circulated, were not as powerful as the spoken testimonials. During those days, books had to be copied laboriously by hand. Manuscripts were expensive and hard to get a hold of, and people were used to learning stories and teachings by heart. Early Christians memorized lengthy passages of Jesus' words or deed & continued to relate their traditions about Jesus mostly in short pieces, retelling individual stories or groups of sayings for a particular purpose. For the most part, they relied on for references, these authoritative words, rather than from a book. Almost a century after Mark wrote the first Gospel, the bishop of Hierapolis, in Asian minor, Papias, 70–155, believed that the ear and the heart were much better carriers of tradition than papyrus: "Things out of book," he averred, "did not profit me so much as the utterances of a voice that lives and abides." Papias, is said to have been associated with Polycarp, in the friendship of St. John himself, and of others who had seen the Lord. Thus, Papias wrote: "...For I imagined that what was to be got from books was not so profitable to me as what came from the living and abiding voice."⁴⁶³ As Christendom aged, people felt a need to preserve the oral tradition by writing them down. The Gospels & important sections of Paul's letters were the product.⁴⁶⁴

"...When we turn to the earliest Christian sources, we enter a terrifying jungle of scholarly contradictions. All were writing evangelism or theology rather than history, even when, like Luke in his gospel, they assume the literary manners of a historian and seek to anchor the events of Jesus's life in secular chronology. Moreover, all the documents have a long pre-history before they reached written form. Their evaluation was a source of acute puzzlement to thoughtful Christians even in the earliest decades of the second century and probably before. Indeed, the puzzles began as soon as any Christian had access to more than one account or source, written or oral. This was happening increasingly by the closing decades of the first century, for oral accounts continued to circulate long after the earliest written gospels appeared in the two decades 60-80, and were attaining written form well into the second century. The canonical documents (let alone those later judged apocryphal) thus overlap with the earliest writings of the Church Fathers. They are products of the early Church and they are tainted in the sense that they reflect ecclesiastical controversy as well as evangelistic motivation, the difficulties of reducing oral descriptions of mysterious concepts to writing, and a variety of linguistic traps. The four gospels declared canonical, for instance, were circulated, but not necessarily first written, in colloquial Greek; but Matthew was almost certainly translated from Hebrew, and all four were either thought in Aramaic, or transcriptions from tales which were Aramaic in original circulation, yet which drew on Hebrew quotations and, to a lesser extent, on Hellenic or Hellenized concepts." [From Greek thought]. "The possibilities for misunderstanding are infinite. Moreover, we cannot assume that the gospels we have reflect the earliest oral traditions. The prologue to Luke makes it clear that they are based on earlier written accounts, themselves derived from the words of eye-witnesses: Luke is thus the third or possibly even fourth link along a chain stretching back two generations. The first Christian to comment on the problem was Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, who flourished in the first decades of the second century...." ⁴⁶⁵

"The original copies of the various books in our canon, as they came from the pen of their respective authors, were free of all errors and discrepancies is a pure postulate. The Bible nowhere claims that to be that case, and no autograph exists to allow the postulate to be tested. The text of Scripture as we now possess it, even in the best critical editions, contains errors and discrepancies." ⁴⁶⁶

"Other divergences in wording arose from deliberate attempts to smooth out grammatical or stylistic harshness, or to eliminate real or imagined obscurities of meaning in the text. Sometimes a copyist would substitute or would add what seemed to him to be a more appropriate word or form, perhaps derived from a parallel passage (called harmonization or assimilation.) Thus, during the years immediately following the composition of the several documents that eventually were collected to form the New Testament, hundreds if not thousands of variant readings arose." ⁴⁶⁷

Dr. I. M. Price wrote about some of the unintentional errors that entered into the text. "Texts had been copied over and over again by the hand of man for hundreds, and, in the case of the Old Testament, for thousands of years. There must invariably be mistakes by scribes and copyists that have never been corrected. No one of us could copy even ten pages of manuscript without making some errors. We would at least forget to dot some 'I's' or cross some 'T's'; But the most of us would leave out words, write some words twice; leave out some lines, repeat some lines and make many other blunders that would cause our copy to vary from the original.

Just these things have happened with manuscripts of the Bible..." "A slip of the pen, an error of sight, and of hearing, or an error of memory on the part of a scribe or copyist, would be preserved and perpetuated with the same care as that exercised in preserving the best text. Subsequent copyists and translators would not only perpetuated earlier errors, but would add some of their own. This kind of multiplication of manuscripts, extending down through the centuries, opened the door to untold possibilities of many kinds of errors in the text that was thus treated." ⁴⁶⁸

One of the things that challenged the early Church too was that some were tampering with the different writings of some Christians, in some cases. For example, Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, who wrote concerning the tampering of his letters: "...when Christians asked me to write letters I wrote them, and the apostles of the devil filled them with tares, by leaving out some things and putting in others. But woe awaits them. Therefore, it is no wonder that some have gone about to falsify even the scriptures of the Lord when they have plotted against writings so inferior." ⁴⁶⁹

Another challenge is that we do not have any of the original letters, or books which were written by the apostles & prophets themselves. What we do have are later copies, the earliest of which dates back to the 2nd century A.D., & is called the "Rylands" fragment of John. And then 3rd Century fragments called "The Chester Beatty fragments"; then the 4th Century, Codex Vaticanus; the 4-5th Century "Codex Sinaiticus," this text had several copyists & a series of correctors. 5th Century copy called, "The Codex Alexandrinus"; then the 5th Century "Codex Ephraemi rescriptus," the New Testament text was scrubbed off & replaced with the writings of St. Ephraim the Syrian church Father. Thus, the original text is barely legible. From the 6th Century, a large number of manuscripts are available from this point on.⁴⁷⁰

Another challenging problem was that: "When books were copied by hand, as was everywhere the case before the invention of printing, every manuscript usually repeated whatever errors or alterations had crept into its immediate ancestor, the model from which it was copied. As time passed and as still more copies and copies of copies were made, certain family resemblances became obvious, though...copies belonging to other families were introduced sometimes into the line - with the result that a "mixed" type of text arose, whose errors or other peculiarities would be perpetrated...Such phenomena are found in all textual history - whether of secular or sacred books... Of the new testament writings the period of greatest textual change and alteration was the 2nd century...Of the abundant variations and disagreements between manuscripts (John Mill in 1707 estimated them at 30,000!) the vast majority are merely errors due to mistaken copying... The foregoing are accidental or unintentional alterations. More serious are the intentional alterations introduced by scribes...and owners of manuscripts, who wished to improve or to correct their text by reference to some other manuscript which they preferred...Finally, the work of revisers who worked in the interest of some dogmatic view..." ⁴⁷¹

"...All four gospels, being literary documents some 1,900 years old, suffer from the problems created by handwritten transmissions. For most of the history of Christianity, scholars and theologians had to work from corrupt late manuscripts (most of them without realizing the dangers). Few medieval writers made any effort, when copying, to find ancient models; this was primarily a Renaissance concern. Even so, Erasmus's Greek New Testament (1516) and Robert Etienne's (1551) came from Greek medieval manuscripts which contain innumerable accumulated errors. Earlier manuscripts emerged only gradually.

In 1581 Theodore Beza found in the sixth-century Graeco-Latin text known as the Codex Bezae; in 1628, a fifth-century codex, the Alexandrinus, containing the whole Bible, was transferred to western Europe; this was followed by an incomplete fifth-century codex, the Ephraemi Rescriptus, and, more important, by the nineteenth-century discoveries of two fourth-century codices, the Vaticanus and the Sinaiticus. This does not take us further back than the days of Jerome and Augustine, still leaving a huge 300-year gap. Unfortunately, most of the earliest manuscripts were not in codex form, that is, parchment bound in leather volumes, but were in highly perishable papyrus. Fragments survive only in the dry climate of Egypt: there, in recent years, ancient rubbish dumps have yielded portions from the third, and even a few from the second century. The earliest of all, only two inches square, but containing verses from the eighteenth chapter of John on both sides, has been dated to the early second century. No first-century fragment has yet been found. These early versions of New Testament texts can be supplemented by biblical quotations from the earliest manuscripts of the patristic writings, some dating from the second century, and from church lectionaries which, though late themselves, reflect very early texts. Altogether there are about 4,700 relevant manuscripts, and at least 100,000 quotations or allusions in the early fathers."

"Analysing this mass of evidence in the search for the perfect text is probably self-defeating.... Some alterations can be identified with reasonable certitude. Thus the end of Mark (16:9-20) is not authentic."⁴⁷²

Curtis Vaughan, Th. D., notes that after Mark 16:8, "The text of Mark was apparently broken off here. While many manuscripts have the remaining verses, these witnesses are not of superior quality." "...Some ancient witnesses have, after verse 8, the following: But they reported briefly to Peter and his companions all they had been told. And afterward Jesus himself sent out by them from the east to the west the sacred and incorruptible message of eternal salvation—Gspd."⁴⁷³

SCRIPTURES, LATER NEGLECTED & SUPPRESSED:

In later centuries, it was the Roman Catholic church that did what the Roman Pagan authorities did, that of confiscating & destroying scriptures, for they wanted a monopoly on the word of God by having the only copies, keeping them in Latin, & saying the church ceremonies in Latin, even in different countries that didn't speak Latin. Was this so that the common folk wouldn't understand & see from the scriptures, just how far the clergy were slipping away from the original gospel preserved to a certain extent in the scriptures? Thus, one of the weapons of thought policing later dogmas, & theocracy policies of the state run churches was to have the clergy withhold copies of the scriptures from the common peasantry, most of which couldn't read or understand Latin, & the other languages of scripture anyway.

If many had been able to read, & had the scriptures to see what was taught from the beginning, in contrast to what the churches were teaching in later centuries, would they have revolted, or at least pointed out how far astray things had gotten? Even early on, different ones had noted the departure of some, & so, how much further had they gone in later centuries? Polycarp (69-156), to the Philippians: "Wherefore let us forsake the vain doing of the many and their false teachings, and turn unto the word which was delivered unto us from the beginning." (The Apostolic Fathers, 97). What happened to the common folks' understandings of the gospel & scriptures, if many of them wouldn't have even been able to read them, even if they had access to them? For, in some, if not many areas, by the year "600 literacy had become a luxury of the clergy."⁴⁷⁴

Consequently, would the common folks, have naturally turned many beliefs into blended culturally tainted fables? Would they have naturally turn many aspects of the gospel, into superstitions, & ignorant versions of their oral traditions? Many of which may have retain some aspects of many gospel themes, but of which got legendized even further, as they got passed down from one illiterate generation to the next. Such things did happen in many areas of historic Christendom.

Consequently, as earlier, so also during the 16th century, one of the weapons of thought policing later dogmas, & theocracy policies of the state run churches was to have the clergy withhold copies of the scriptures from the common peasantry, most of which couldn't read or understand Latin, & the other languages of scripture anyway. But in the event that some amongst them had learned to read somewhere, the lesser chances of there being copies on the loose, the lesser the chances of the common folk finding out what was in them. Another tactic was to claim ultimate authority to be able to interpret the scriptures "correctly," over any other common folks', & even learned folks' interpretations. The Roman Catholic church also employed their own commentaries, & rivals against the Reformers' & Protestants' interpretations. Thus, the Popish doctors appealed to their declarations of superior authority, & superior traditions, & to the authority of the holy fathers, as they usually style them. However, they didn't seem to have consulted the real doctrines taught by the sacred writers, & many at the church of Rome did put their own words into the mouths of the fathers to make them appear to back the interests of the court of Rome. Their interpretations were forced upon each passage of scripture with the use of 4 kinds of interpretive methods: Literal, Allegorical, Tropological & Anagogical, which ignorance, superstition, blends of paganism & philosophy tainted dogmas had first invented. Such interpretational methods produced what was to then become sacred, the acceptable "doctrine," & policies to be obeyed, because it was claimed to have been given by God to through the Popish authorities.⁴⁷⁵

But as the knowledge of the bible, if not by word of mouth, or from those who could read the scriptures, became more & more knowledgeable to the common folks, the more that the common people & other learned ones, began to see through the facade that was being created by these methods of interpretations, & the continual attempts to suppress the scriptures from getting out in translations in the languages of the common folks' own countries text. Also, the obvious ever increasing gaps between what Christ & his apostles had taught, & what the church was enforcing as "doctrines" & practices, became more & more clearer. Also, the corruption, & the vast difference between what the church was then teaching, & what the scriptures said, shouted out for there to be reforms, & a return back to the original teachings & rituals. Thus, as the Roman church sought to suppress the scriptures, & claim the ultimate divine authority, as to how the scriptures should be interpreted, different ones began to rebel & civically & religiously not follow the Roman pontiffs' decrees & canonical laws.⁴⁷⁶

The Council of Trent, started 1545, attempted to reenforce & regain their powers, & was a time when the Popes continued the practices of claiming to have superior interpretation abilities than the common folk, & thus sent forth decrees, canons, as to what the scriptures meant, but learned in languages claimed to know differently & as the scriptures got translated into the languages of the common folks, they also began to not differences too, for: "As soon as the popes perceived the remarkable detriment their authority had suffered from the accurate interpretations of the holy scriptures that had been given by the learned, and the perusal of these divine oracles, which was now grown more common among the people, they left no methods unemployed that might discourage the culture of this most important branch of sacred erudition. While the tide of resentment ran high, they forgot themselves in the most unaccountable manner. They permitted their champions to indulge themselves openly in reflections injurious to the dignity of the sacred writings, and, by an excess of blasphemy almost incredible,... [did dare] to declare publicly that the edicts of the pontiffs, and the records of the oral traditions, were superior, in point of authority, to the express language of the holy scriptures. But as it was impossible to bring the sacred writings wholly into disrepute, they took the most effectual methods in their power to render them obscure and useless. For this purpose the ancient Latin translation of the Bible, commonly called the Vulgate, though it abounds with innumerable gross errors, and, in a great number of places, exhibits the most shocking barbarity of style, and the most impenetrable obscurity with respect to the sense of inspired writers, was declared by the solemn decree of the council of Trent, an authentic i.e. a faithful, accurate, and perfect [note L] translation, and was consequently recommended as a production beyond the reach of criticism or censure. It was easy to foresee that such a declaration was every way adapted to keep the people in ignorance, and to veil from their understanding the true meaning of the sacred writings. In the same council, farther steps were taken to execute, with success, the designs of Rome. A severe and intolerable law was enacted, with respect to all interpreters and expositors of the scriptures, by which they were forbidden to explain the sense of these divine books, in matters relating to faith and practice, in such a manner as to make them speak a different language from that of the church and the ancient doctors [note M]. The same law farther declared, that the church alone, (i.e. its ruler, the Roman pontiff) had the right to determining the true meaning and signification of scripture. To fill up the measure of these tyrannical and iniquitous proceedings, the church of Rome persisted obstinately in affirming, though not always with the same impudence and plainness of speech, that the holy scriptures were not composed for the use of the multitude, but only for that of their spiritual teachers; and, of consequence, ordered these divine records to be taken from the people in all places where it was allowed to execute its imperious commands [note N].”⁴⁷⁷

The Dark Ages, are named such, because there was a decline in not only spiritual light, due to illiteracy, but also a decline in morals, cultural, or educational pursuits. (2 Cor.4:4, Eph. 5:14, 1 Thess. 5:5, John 8:12, 1 John 1:5-6, gospel as a type of light. Isa. 60:2, Micah 3:6, John 9:4, loss of that light to darkness).

Had the church continued with the light, with a long line of true prophets, generation after generation, with new revelations, new visions, & had an open-canon of scripture producing spiritual gifts. The course of history would have been different. Instead of a Dark Age of illiteracy, there would have been educational & scriptural enlightenment & spiritual growth, with answers to controversies settled, rather than continual waves of one controversy after another, of which also didn't ever seem to get resolved, despite one church council after another, ran by Emperors & no true prophets, but contending church leader. There would have been fresh new scriptures, which like the old would again be profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, instruction in righteousness, helping in perfecting them, encouraging them to all types of good works, (2 Tim.3:15-17). There would have been more freedoms, instead of serfdoms. Been more religious tolerance, instead of religious persecutions, & inquisitions' torture chambers & forced conversions. Spiritual music would have flourished, education, sciences, & peace would have helped combat sorcery & superstitions.⁴⁷⁸

When the spiritual light is lost, darkness follows, & so also declines in other aspects of life follow too. The scriptures suffer corruptions, & passages are manipulated to be made to appear to offer scriptural proof text that supports whatever dogmas dominate the times. Because, without true prophets & on going new revelations, or a clarifying voice from the divine source, the scriptures get interpreted in ways that those who misinterpret them want to have them mean, according to their dogmas. During a Dark Age, like that experienced in Christendom, the church also exercised an oppressive tyranny on the minds of the common folk & shackled them with their chains of false traditions. Ignorance, evil & superstitions prevailed during this age, & those who sought to retain what light they had, & put into good works, the love & charity that they wanted to do, were faced with the challenges that the darkness often brings down on saintly people.⁴⁷⁹

LETTERS FALLING FROM HEAVEN? As it was, the new scripture producing had stopped offering new revelations, because many believed that the heavens were sealed, no new real revelations could be reported, only false ones, such as the so-called “letters from heaven,” at least as early as the 6th century. Were the people so desperate for any word from heaven, that they started to manufacture alleged communications? Whatever might be the case, reports of a letter, that fell from heaven, about 583 in Iviza, the smallest of the Balearic Islands, caused a great sensation. It was read by the Bishop of Cartegena, who declared it to be a silly thing, inelegant in language, & unorthodox in doctrine. Vincent, the Bishop of Iviza, accepted the letter as genuine, & because he did, he was rebuked by the Bishop of Cartegena, & was later banished, for accepting the letter as “new scripture even after the prophecies of the prophets, the Gospels of Christ, and the letters of his apostles.”⁴⁸⁰

As if others got similar ideas, reports of other letters fallen from heaven, usually upon the altars of churches, and usually in some remote & inaccessible part of the world, started to turn up everywhere. The letters were of the same types, they began with a solemn attestation that the letter was written by the hand of Christ or from Heavenly Father, & not by any man. They contained discourses about such things as not working on Sunday, denounced wickedness & vice in the church, promised impending disaster unless the people repent. Some of the letters, boldly testified of being from Heavenly Father, & warned that those who resisted the letter would be cursed, if they should dare say the letter wasn't from Heaven.⁴⁸¹

The news spread, ‘the heavens are open again!’ ‘Real’ communications from the Father & Christ were again given, as of old! So while the common folk welcomed the news, the Church fought against such trends, but in vain, for more letters from heaven were reported in other areas. This meant that the church couldn't control the monopoly on the word of God that they must have thought they had established in their church councils, in seeking to come to an agreement, which they couldn't, on what was to be in the canon of scriptures, for different canons of scriptures varied throughout Christendom, as to what was included & what was rejected as scriptures.⁴⁸²

After the letters from heaven trend started, in every century after the late 6th century, these letters continued to circulate with great enthusiasm & general belief. As late as 1846, a letter caused great sensations in Bohemia, for not only did the uneducated receive it, but also churchmen did too. During the Middle Ages, a letter in Rome was said to be read in the temple of Paul. Before an assembled group of people, Theodoton, the assistant of the Roman patriarch, saw the letter first, hanging in the air, over the heads of the people, written on a tablet of ice. As the story goes, 47,000 people were overwhelmed with weeping, the day supposedly turned to night, the people put on white garments & purified their hearts. All the while, the “miraculous” ice letter, didn't melt, but finally descended upon the mantle of the patriarch himself, who was so overcome that he couldn't speak. What did it say? What about these other letters? Some suspicious aspects to the stories suggest to scholars that they are forgeries. In many instances, for example, those who behold it are blinded with tears. If so, for how long? The message of the letters contain the same commonplace, unoriginal, little messages that displays lack of inspiration. But what gave them their overwhelming popularity through 14 centuries were the on going claims that they were reported to be a direct communication from God!⁴⁸³

By the 11th into the 12th century, the amount of which the bible was read in church, was falling away, readings from the bible, once a big part of the monastic experience, began to fade somewhat, & the biblical lessons everywhere, inside & outside the monasteries, were thoroughly disturbed by the interjection of special lessons for a large number of saints' day. Cranmer during the 16th century, deplored the state of affairs, which had already in the 12th become an established fact: "These many years past, this godly and descent order of the ancient Fathers [by which the whole Bible, or the greatest part thereof, was read over once every year] hath been so altered, broken, and neglected, by planting in uncertain Stories, and Legends, with multitude of Responds, Verses, vain Repetitions, Commemorations, and Synodals; that commonly when any Book of the Bible was begun, after three or four Chapters were read out, all the rest were unread." While in the colleges the biblical interpretations of the Fathers were collected, texts studied & commentaries made, & discussions of many kinds were done.⁴⁸⁴

About 1170–85, Peter Waldo, a wealthy merchant of Lyons, must have been rich enough to have a copy of the scriptures, or either commissioned a cleric from Lyons to translate the New Testament into the vernacular —the Arpitan (Franco-Provençal), or could have been involved in the translation. Another source says that he paid two of his friends, who were priests, to translate the New Testament from the Latin. After he studied, & then preached, a movement began, known as the Waldensians, & they caught the attention of the thought policing Roman clergy. 1179, Waldo with a disciple, at Rome were welcomed by Pope Alexander III and the Roman Curia, & their beliefs were heard before 3 clergymen, but eventually were rejected later by the Third Lateran Council, March 5—19th, 1179, attended by 302 bishops. Disobeying the Council, the group continued to preach according to their own understanding of the Scriptures. By the early 1180s, they were excommunicated and forced from Lyon & declared heretics. The group continued to preach & accepted as true only what they found in the Bible. They also took copies with them in their missionary efforts, despite extreme oppositions, as they traversed both Austria & Germany.

1545, the Waldenses were massacred at Cabrieres & Merindol. Many that remained joined in the movement of the French Reformation & furnished it the first translation of the Bible into French, a translation made by Oliverton, a cousin of Calvin.⁴⁸⁵

1200, Pope Innocent III, ordered a French Bible, current in Metz, to be burned.⁴⁸⁶

Late 12th early 13th c., neo-Manicheans, the Albigenses, also called Cathars, in southern France, rejected the Old Testament.⁴⁸⁷

By the end of the 1230s, a combination of forces raged against public access to the scriptures, such as papal letters, local conciliar legislation and the Inquisitors, for they all prohibited translations in the lay persons' languages. Some of the reasons for suppression were that sectarian biblical interpretations combated orthodox ones. Some rejected scholastic interpretations, & those of the Latin Fathers. Those with scriptures, based their arguments on them alone. This annoyed those of the clergy who sought to continue to present to lay folks the Latin versions. Meanwhile, the lay folks were learning that there were becoming more and more available, translations they could understand in their own language, & thus hostilities grew towards Latin, which the people couldn't understand, but they still wanted to continued the traditions.⁴⁸⁸

However, different ones sought to change this, one of them was scholar & theologian, John Wycliff, (born about 1324 in Yorkshire), 14th century, who believed in the need for the common folks to have available to them an English Bible. In his De Veritate Sacrae Scripturae, he argued that Priests should teach from the bible & that it should be done in the language of the common people & everybody should study it. As Wyclif went against the papacy's effort to suppress the bible, he had the Latin Vulgate translated into English, (some suggest he translated it). Thus, the complaint made against him was that he had made the Bible available for the vulgar laymen. This move had gone against the church's practice that had gone on for centuries that regarded the Bible as a closed book, forbidden to be read by the common people.⁴⁸⁹ Thus, going against these policies, Wyclif & his followers, the Lollards, helped get copies of their version of the bible out to the common peasantry, noblemen & clergy. Despite on going attempts to suppress "unauthorized" translations from getting out, the flood of scriptural knowledge couldn't be stopped & continued with improvements in type setting & the printing press. One such attempt to suppress the scriptures was in 1408, when a council was held at Oxford, England that specifically forbade translations of the Scriptures into English. It also tried to make it so that the possession of an English bible had to first be approved by diocesan authorities.⁴⁹⁰

It should not be forgotten that "John Wycliffe had been accused of heresy by the Roman church for his English translation and that many Christian martyrs had been burned to death with Wycliffe's bible tied around their necks. They knew that their translation had been bought with blood. They also anticipated harsh criticism from those of their own nation and faith." ⁴⁹¹ Sure enough they got what they feared & expected, a lot of opposition in having the translation available, but also a lot who welcomed them too.

About 1454, Gutenberg, a German Craftsman, having experimented earlier with moveable typesetting & printing, released sample pages of his version of the Bible, called the Gutenberg Bible. But because the Bible had been translated, & printed about 1456, & because by 1500, printers at work in more than 250 European towns, had printed more than 90 editions of the Bible, some of the clergy & common folks that could read or heard what was read from the bible, noted how far the churches had gone away from scriptural basic beliefs. Thus, bibles, & the possession of bibles became an issue, they were suppressed & withheld by some of the clergy from being allowed to be mass produced through the printing presses invented.⁴⁹²

John Huss, born 7-6-1369, at Husinec, a Bohemian village near Bavaria, & burned to death about 7-6-1415. Huss, influenced by the ideas of Wyclif, he also noted the abuses of the church, when he contrasted the teachings of the bible with the practices of the Catholic papacy. Huss also got in trouble with the suppression policies of the papacy, how that they were holding back the Bible from the common folks, & not allowing it to be available to the lay persons. How they'd forbade the Bible to be translated, (besides Latin), in "the vulgar tongue," or into languages of the common folks in different areas of Europe, so that the people could read & understand the Bible in their own languages. This, Huss was charged with doing this, of allowing the lay persons or common folks to hear & understand what was in the Bible, in contrast to what the Catholic church had been forcing people to believe for years. Thus, he was condemned for it at their court hearings, & he was burned alive for his efforts to try to reform the church & point out its abuses.⁴⁹³

1440s, Johann Gutenberg improved & built upon printing concepts, the first effective printing-press that had a huge impact in Europe.

1453, onwards, with the capture of Constantinople by the Mohammedans, Greek scholars fled to the West, mostly Italy, & a revival of learning produced what is known as the Renaissance, that then eventually opened up the scriptures in the original Greek. It also enabled people, or those who had access to the scriptures to compare the church of the New Testament with the contemporary church with its class distinctions, relics pilgrimages, indulgences, & other practices & policies. To contrast the peaceful, loving teachings of Christ with the harsh & ruthless war like thought policing tactics of the papacy, as an absolute ruler, forcing obedience. A new movement was spreading abroad in the world, it opposed absolute authority, which prescribed the text of the scriptures to be read, the Vulgate version of the Bible, and prescribed the books not to be read, called the Index, and that dictated the opinions to be accepted on pains of excommunication & death. Out of this era was born the Reformation.⁴⁹⁴

1517, when Martin Luther began preaching against the Catholic abuses, after nailing his 95 objections, which later got printed up & distributed. The Catholic church "...allowed the Bible to appear only in Latin. That way educated priests could make sure they controlled how God's word was heard and interpreted by the illiterate masses. Luther and his fellow Protestants believed individuals should read the Bible for themselves in their own languages. Printing made this possible, and by 1500, printing presses throughout Europe had issued over nine million books of all sorts. The more Protestantism spread, the more people learned to read and used the press to spread ideas."⁴⁹⁵

1520, there were 18 German, 2 Dutch, 11 Italian & 4 Bohemian translations of the Bible. The printing press made it possible to distribute these translations out to into many different peoples' hands.⁴⁹⁶

1513–23 (reigned) Pope Leo X, in a bull contained the first prohibition, universally accepted, on books. 1542, the censorship, thought policing was taken charge of by the Inquisition. 1543, the first general Index of prohibited books appeared in print in Venice. During the reign of Pope Paul III, (1542–45), he also worked on counter Reformation efforts to include a rigorous censorship of books, & publications of the Index in 1545.⁴⁹⁷ Was it revised & enlarged?

1547–53, in England, The Statute of Six Articles, helped cause that all restrictions on printing and use of the Bible to be removed, at least in England.⁴⁹⁸

9-7-1558, Philip II ordered that all those who would buy, sell, or read prohibited books, even the Holy Books in the vulgar tongue, should be condemned to be burned alive.⁴⁹⁹ The Inquisition, having taken charge of censorship earlier, (1542), published the Index in 1559.⁵⁰⁰ Did they revise & enlarge that edition?

1555–59, (reigned) Pope Paul IV, earlier, (as Caraffa), led a group that insisted that the church should undertake to "suppress heretical tendencies with all the material force at her command."⁵⁰¹

1571, Pope Pius V, instituted a commission to assure the observance of the rule of the Index. These rules remained in force until Pope Leo XIII, for in 1897, he had them abrogated (or done away with, or formally repealed under a law or agreement). But to also replace them in a new form. So thought policing, censorship & suppression tactics continued.⁵⁰²

1611, the King James Bible translators, for the English bible & church of England, in a letter addressed to the King, & published as the preface in the King James bible, they rightfully anticipated being "traduced by Popish Persons." "So that if, on the one side, we shall be traduced by Popish Persons at home or abroad, who therefore will malign us, because we are poor instruments to make God's holy Truth to be yet more and more known unto the people, whom they desire still to keep in ignorance and darkness..."⁵⁰³

MISINTERPRETATIONS, & MISUSE OF CERTAIN PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURES TO TRY & JUSTIFY EVIL, MURDERS & TORTURE:

During the Spanish Inquisition, & witch hunting era of the Middle Ages, a number of passages from the scriptures were used to try to justify the horrors, thought policing, religious intolerance, forced conversions, & tortures to get confessions from Jews, Conversos (those of Jewish heritage & descent that converted to Christianity, but were suspected of secretly practicing their Jewish faith). Plus, the Moors, (Muslims), also targets of thought policing too, by fanatical prejudice religious intolerant later Christians of the Middle Ages. Revelation 20:12–15, was used to justify burning non-believers. The Apocryphal preaching of St. Peter, (2nd century writing), was also used to justify burning those judged as blasphemers, & adulterous, etc. During the late 15th c., Spanish Inquisitor, Friar Hernando de Talavera, gave sermons that ignited the flames of hatred against the Jews in Spain. Matthew 10:11 was used to try to justify hunting out all the "unworthy" for questioning, thought policing, forced confessions, spying out on them suspected of practicing the Jewish "superstition," while appearing to be Christians. Those found out were treated badly in the name of Jesus, because they were accused of having rejected, mocked & blasphemed Jesus. Matthew 7:15, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." This was also used to hunt down heretics, & Conversos, or those who were suspected of being apostates, or secret Jews. (Or ones pointed out during someone else being tortured to give intelligence to the Inquisitors about fellow accomplices. Or others secretly practicing "illegal" faiths, like Moors–Muslims, or the Jewish faith). These were considered the wolves in sheep's clothing, as acting like they were true sincere Christians, who appeared to be, but who accused or actually were secretly practicing, their original faith, after being forced to be baptized, & join the Catholic Christians. In other areas of Mediaeval Europe, the passage of Old Testament scripture, sometimes used to justify burning witches, or those alleged, & accused of being a witch & practicing the dark arts, was Exodus 22:18: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." (Also, 1 Samuel 15:23, 'rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft,' also might have been used against those thought or accused to be "rebellious" against the Catholic church, & thus could suffer the same punishment as a witch might). During the late 15th c., in Spain, Friar Alfonso de Ojeda, of the Monastery of San Pablo, also an Inquisitor, used Matthew 25:31–32, in a twisted manner, thinking that they were acting out, in their Inquisitional purge & ethnic cleansing of Spain, an earthly version of Judgment Day. In that they were hunting out & separating the sheep (true Christians), from the goats, (or the false Christians, or those appearing to be Christians, but who were secretly practicing, & reverting back to the faith they were before being forced to convert to the Catholic faith).⁵⁰⁴

PART 4: WHEN & HOW THE EARLY CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF THE PRE-EXISTENCE, FADED OFF INTO LATER LEGENDS & FABLES

One of the doctrines that suffered as a results of the legendization process during the Great Apostasy, was the pre-existence of souls. Some modern scholars & current day Christians, who try to argue, reason, reinterpret, or get around the many early Christian texts on the pre-existence, will also have to face other areas where evidences are found. Plus, despite how other cultures' pre-existence themes blended in with early Christians' versions, from time to time, & place to place. Those blends still offer evidences for early Christians' own versions, backed by scriptures too. Critics also have to then try to deal with the monumental evidences in different types of art works all over Christendom. Then the evidences from earlier bible illustrations, & then the evidences still retained in legends, & traditions. It's also humorous to note how some modern critics of the pre-existence, will use pre-existence themes to try to demonize the doctrine as being Satanic! For when one starts to investigate where Satan comes from, one will start to run into pre-existence themes, how Satan is a fallen angel. How? Because of the war in heaven he helped cause? Again, pre-existence themes.⁵⁰⁵ Moreover, the earliest Christian doctrine of the pre-existence, also answered many of the early critics' charges that the early Christians' god neglects those before the time of Christ, as noted already. Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Eusebius the church historian, Athanasias, & many other early Christian Fathers told how Christ, his pre-existing spirit, before being clothed in flesh later during his birth to Mary, had appeared to all the prophets of old, & that the gospel was preached to & preached by Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, & the prophets after him, to name a few, before the time of Christ.⁵⁰⁶

Pre-existence themes also answered the ancient to modern critics' parallel hunting games, & claims that early Christianity was borrowed from the heathen & pagan nations that pre-date Christ.⁵⁰⁷ The early & some later Christians answered by noting pre-Christian Christianity before Christ, in that the prophets taught many things that pointed to Christ & that sounded like Christ's gospel. Pico della Mirandola, when translating an apocryphal manuscript of Ezra, related with astonishment: "I see in it (as God is my witness) the religion not so much of Moses as of Christ."⁵⁰⁸

Pre-existence themes, helped open the horizon of knowledge of what went on before earth life, & answers the origins of evil. Plus, it helps put in perspective the basic questions: Why are we here? Where did we come from? What is the whole point of life? However, the pre-existence doctrine is not reincarnation, or a recycling of births, deaths, & rebirths into different physical bodies along different life time lines.

The basic to this ancient doctrine was as follows:

1. We all existed as spirits before we were born into mortal bodies. (Gen.2:4-5, a number of earlier bibles start with pre-existence themes & illustrations).
2. We existed as part of a family in heaven with God. (Eph.3:14-15; Acts 17:29).
3. As angelic/spirits of God, we lived & grew in light, knowledge, truth, & love, etc. Were free to choose good or evil.⁵⁰⁹
4. A plan was presented in a council in heaven.⁵¹⁰
5. In this council, the creation of the earth, & our mortal bodies, etc., was discussed. Job 1:6; 38:4-8.
6. For further growth, & experiences, we needed to enter into another realm of existence by going to a world to gain a mortal body. Thus, this earth was created for this very purpose. (Job 38:4-7, etc.). Pre-existence themes answer creation questions.
7. In the pre-earth life council in heaven. One of the subjects discussed there, was a plan that was presented concerning free-agency, that would allow the human family on earth to maintain the right to choose good over evil.

8. Because there was a great possibility that the human family would choose evil, rather than good, from time to time. But would later want to repent or change their evil ways, & turn-back to God. A Messiah was needed to come to earth to atone for the sins of the whole world.

9. Christ, as the "first born" spirit in this "family in heaven". Was chosen to become the Redeemer in earth life. While others were chosen to become prophets, & apostles in earth life.⁵¹¹

10. One of the other angel/spirit sons of God. Who later would come to be known by a number of names, such as Lucifer, satan, the devil, or "the evil one", etc. For he, as one of God's angel-spirits who would later become a "rebel" angel-spirit. And an "apostate" against God, & a "fallen angel." This spirit also presented a plan. (Job 1:6-7). But of which plan would have taken away our freedom to choose. He would see to it that we would all return back to our heavenly home, but by force, in turn he wanted all the credit, & glory. However, his plan was rejected. After which he rebelled & caused 1/3 of the angel-spirits to follow him. (Isa.14:12-19; Ezk.28:13-19; 1 Jn.3:7-11; Rev.8:10, 12:4-9; Jude 6; 2 Pet.2:4.)

11. Thus, there was a war in heaven. Michael (as the chief archangel), & his angels fought against the "dragon" & his angels. (The dragon was symbolic of the devil. Rev.12; Luke 10:18.) Those angel-spirits who also rebelled & followed Lucifer-- (satan- or the devil, etc.) They were cast out of heaven with the devil & thus also became apostate fallen angels. For they kept not their "first estate." (Isa.14:12-19; Ezk.28:13-19, Jude 6; 2 Pet.2:4; Jn.9:1-4).

12. These fallen angels were not allowed to be born into physical bodies. And thus, many of them have sought to enter into the bodies of different members of the human family from time to time. And in some cases, they have sometimes succeeded throughout the history of time on earth. (Luke 4:33-41, 11:14-22; Jude 9, Mark 3:11-12).

13. The Human family would come to earth to live & grow. With the memory of the life before life veiled or blocked off, so that we could have a fresh start, & learn to develop faith, etc. One of the ways that we regain some of the basic knowledge & understanding of this life before life is through the true prophets & apostles of God. They have, during different dispensations of time, revealed different bits of knowledge concerning the pre-earth life. Doing so, as they were & now are so moved by the Holy Spirit to reveal truths. (Amos 3:7, Eph.1:3-14, 3:3-15, 4:10-14; 1 Pet.1:19-21, 1 Cor. chap.12; Heb.10:14-22, 11:13-16.)

Thus, in having a fresh start, & a new beginning in mortal life, the human family could be tested to see how we would react to what little bits of knowledge we might have been given, or would obtain in earth life. As we grew, part of the test in mortal life was to attempt to discern between truth & error. Thus the many opposites in this life, which gives us the conditions upon which to make a choice from. And to see if we would choose good over evil. If we used what little bits of knowledge that we learn for good, rather than for evil. We would be able to obtain higher gifts of knowledge, & would continue to develop and grow. If, however, the different members of the human family should happen to choose evil, rather than good. These would regress, become like unto the fallen angels, if they refused to repent.⁵¹²

14. Pre-existence themes also include Satan, the devil, or lucifer's & the fallen angels-demons' post-fall from heaven activities amongst the human family to tempt, lure, seduce them, & try to possess human bodies, or animals at times. Such activities became legendized in later centuries & the subject of later traditions, lore, superstitions, art works, & stories about saints' battles & encounters with them. Further on, in later centuries, saint "magic" was believed, along with relics, to keep demonic-forces away, or counter their evil doings.

15. Pre-existence themes, also includes how in the post-fall from heaven activities, the devil & his fallen angels were believed to serve a purpose in God's plan. They were to provide the opposition to God, thus creating the opposite path, choices, & settings to choose from. But they were to be limited in their powers, & abilities to tempt, lure & seduce, or that would make the test of physical life unfair. In the on going war between God and the Devil over the souls of the human family, God could not fairly use His omnipotence to deprive the Devil of the rights he had acquired over Man by Man's consent.⁵¹³ There were sort of rules of engagement, rules of justice that must be observed even in fighting the Devil. Or in the devil & his demons in fighting against God & the progress of the human family. If they were permitted, they would probably try to kill everyone, so there were guardian angels to keep them in check and allow the permitted levels of tempting to go on, which was that the fallen angels could only tempt the human family up to the levels that they could stand, but not beyond it. But to be fair, the good side, couldn't force the human family to be good either. Life was a test, & it was to be as fair as possible, & choices, & the sum of those choices made from the beginning would ripple down through the centuries & would create the good or bad environments, living conditions, good or bad families, plus other settings into which spirits would be born into.

16. Pre-existence themes in protective lore: In later centuries of Christendom & later pre-existence themes concerning the post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, it was the saints, in addition to Christ, God, the Virgin Mary, St. Michael & other angels, that were called upon for help in different difficult situations. Such as in combating the many demons believed to be everywhere. For in much later superstitious minds of the Middle Ages & later on, many believed that some insect type little devil, or dark-devilish-creature, could be behind every eerie howl of the wind, bump in the night, strange unusual stirs of the water out on the lakes, & dark creatures in the shadows of the woods.⁵¹⁴

EARLIER BIBLES CONTAINED MANY PRE-EXISTENCE THEMES: Jer.1:5, Rom.8:29, 2 Tim.1:9, John 3:13, 9:1-2, Eccles.12:7, Acts 17:28, Heb.12:9, Eph.3:15, Gen.2:4-5. The Ethiopian Bible in North Africa, includes the Book of Enoch, that contains many pre-existence themes. Earlier Bibles start with pre-existence themes, & historiated letters & arts: Genesis A & B, 7th & 10th c., Bible of William Devon, 1275, Bible of Robert de Bello, England S-E- Canterbury, 1240-53 A.D., (located in the British Library). Historiated Bible Guiard Des Moulins, 6 parts depiction, council in heaven, war in heaven, fall of the rebel angels, 1410 A.D. Bible Octateuch 1350s, (located in British Library), pre-existing Christ with Adam & Eve. Winchester Bible, 12th c., in letter B, pre-existing Christ casting out devils from heaven. In illuminated art of bibles are pre-existence themes, for example a 13th c., bible in Paris, shows angels falling. In the Burgundian Library at Brussels is a bible, 15th c., with miniatures illustrations of a crowned Lucifer grieving over becoming the Prince of Darkness. Also: The Shepherd of Hermas, (160 A.D.), in earlier Christian canons & read as scripture by many early Christians, talks of Christ pre-existence & being in the council in heaven, before the creation of the world.⁵¹⁵

SINS DONE IN PRE-EXISTENCE BELIEVED TO AFFECT THE TYPE OF BODY THAT SOMEONE MIGHT BE BORN INTO:

One of the earliest Christian pre-existence themes, which might have been from other cultures' versions of the pre-existence, (Jewish, Greek, Roman?) Is the controversial belief that the good or bad choices made in the pre-existence, affected the type of body, type of good or bad conditions that one might be born in to. Case in point is in John 9:2, when Christ's disciples asked if the man or his parents sinned that he was born blind. Thus, it must have been believed by many, even if wrong, controversial & even including some of Christ's disciples. That birth defects, dark skin colors, or conditions, good or bad, that a person might be born into, are all based on the different types of pre-mortal life styles lived as a spirit, & that someone might have lived, while in the pre-existence. Be it a sinful, rebellious life, like some of the angels, before their fall, or a good life.⁵¹⁶ An authoritative source that may have helped early Christians shape this belief, is Wisdom of Solomon, 1st or 2nd c., BCE. It was included in the first known listing of Christian canonical writings, the Muratorian canon of the 2nd c., AD, & was later considered a deuterocanonical book of the Bible (Apocryphal to the Protestants): "As a child I was naturally gifted, and a good soul fell to my lot; or rather, being good, I entered an undefiled body." (Wisdom of Solomon, 8:19-21).⁵¹⁷ In later centuries, during the 6th c., this version of pre-existence themes, was one in many that was very controversial. It got passed down to later centuries, so that it became an issue during the Council of Constantinople, 553.⁵¹⁸ By that time, in different areas where Christians were, many associated black skin races with devils. Satan & the fallen angels were depicted in many art works as black skinned devils. Thus, this later council tried to correct this view & anathema those who still held to the belief that pre-mortal sins as spirits, had thus cause such sinners to be born with black skins.⁵¹⁹

William G. T. Shedd, D.D., wrote that the "...views of the Ancient Church concerning the origin of the soul ran in three directions; though not with equal strength, or to an equal extent. The three theories that appear in the Patristic period are: Pre-existence, Creationism, and Traducianism.... The theory of Pre-existence teaches that all human souls were created at the beginning of creation,—not that of this world simply, but of all worlds. All finite spirits were made simultaneously, and prior to the creation of matter. The intellectual universe precedes the sensible universe. The souls of men, consequently, existed before the creation of Adam. The pre-existent life was Pre-Adamite. Men were angelic spirits at first. Because of their apostasy in the angelic sphere, they were transferred, as a punishment for their sin, into material bodies in this mundane sphere, and are now passing through a disciplinary process, in order to be restored, all of them without exception, to their pre-existent and angelic condition. These bodies, to which they are joined, come into existence by the ordinary course of physical propagation; so that the sensuous and material part of human nature has no existence previous to Adam. It is only the rational and spiritual principle of which a Pre-Adamite life is asserted."⁵²⁰

The traducianism opinion & theory, that attempts to explain the origins of the human soul, is "...that this immaterial aspect is transmitted through natural generation along with the body, the material aspect of human beings. That is, an individual's soul is derived from the souls of the individual's parents."⁵²¹ In that the spirit is created at the same time as the body is through earthly parents.

"The most commonly accepted theories of the origin of the spirit of man were: the Traducian theory, the spirit of man ...originates with the body from the act of procreation, and therefore through human agency...."⁵²²

Most Christian churches believe that Christ existed as a spirit before his mortal life. Likewise, they believe that divine personages in the form of angels existed in the pre-earth life, & that Satan was a pre-mortal being. But they don't believe that the spirits of mortals existed during this premortal realm. Rather, they believe that each person's spirit was created at the time of their mortal birth, (traducianism). Unfortunately, the doctrine of a premortal existence for the human mortal family "was banned by the on the on going church. The scriptures and some early Christian writers, however, teach the contrary."⁵²³

Celsus lumps the different early Christian sects into a sweeping generalization to mock the early Christians for their beliefs in a war in heaven in which "two sons of God" had been locked in combat with each other. Origen responded with his own views concerning the war in heaven, etc. He objected to how Celsus had used Marcion's war in heaven story, in order to generalize what "the Christians believed." However, Origen does not seem to object to the idea that 2 brothers had fought against each other in a war in heaven. For though he rejected to Celsus using heretic Marcion's opinion in this case, he does not argue against this element of the pre-existence story.⁵²⁴

According to many early to later Christian Fathers, one of the reasons why Satan fell from heaven, was because he was jealous of man whom God created. Tertullian, Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, St. Cyprian, and Gregory of Nyssa were among some of the Fathers who seem to have passed this Jewish element on among their Christian followers.⁵²⁵

In a Slavonic text, Eve against Satan asked him: "Why are you our enemy? Did we take away your glory? Yes, answered Satan to her great surprise, it is all your fault. Formerly I was one of the great angels. When Adam was created, the decree went forth that we must all worship him. Michael obeyed at once and summoned me to do likewise. But in my pride I refused to worship a young & inferior being, and the angels subordinate to me followed my example."⁵²⁶

We read that there is a spirit in each of us. (Job 38:4-8, 32:8). That we are the "offspring of God," (Acts 17:29). In the Book of Enoch we learn of this "Lord of spirits." (The Book of Enoch the Prophet, p.46-7, & Num.16:22, 27:16). We read how the spirit will return to God who gave it. Does not return mean to go back to a place, or in this case, realm, that we had been in before? (Eccl. 12:7). God made our spirits, (Isa.57:16). Or formed our spirits that are within us, (Zech. 12:1). We also read that we should obey the "Father of Spirits" (Heb.12:9). Jeremiah was chosen to be a prophet, & ordained as such, before he was formed within his mother's womb, (Jer.1:5). The Spirit itself bears witness with our spirits "that we are the children of God." (Rom.8:16). Certain things were promised "before the world began" (Titus 1:1-2; 2 Tim.1:9). But what did all this mean, in the times that they were written, & to those who wrote them? To those who later read it? Such as the earliest to later Christians sects, in the following centuries after Christ & the apostles?

Christ was also in the beginning before the creation of the world, He was a spirit before he gained a body, (John 1:1-14; Heb. chaps. 1-2). Before Christ had come to earth, He was with the Father in glory. While on earth in his body, Christ prayed that the Father would let Him obtain that same glory that He had with the Father, "before the world was." Christ repeatedly says that he would go back to the Father who is in heaven. Which was where he had come from. Such saying as these reflect the doctrine of the pre-existence. There are others to consider. Christ was loved by the Father "before the foundations of the world." Christ said that He came from the Father, & was now (at the time He lived on the earth), in the world, for He had been "sent into the world," but also, others had been sent from the pre-existence too, (John 17:18). Christ was not the only one who had been sent. For "...no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." (John 3:13). Christ is symbolically called the "bread" of God which came down out of heaven to give life unto the world. (John 6:33 & 51-3). He came down out of heaven to do the will of the Father that sent Him. (6:38-40, 12:44, 49, 16:5, 20:21). He said that he had also "proceeded forth & came from God..." (8:42). He upset & shocked the Jews of his time by declaring that He was the "I am" of Moses, (the name which God had called Himself when Moses asked what He should be known by, (Ex.3:1-14). Christ had lived as the pre-existing spirit or angel of God that had appeared to Moses, but was also before Abraham. "Before Abraham was, I am." (John 8:57-59; Acts 7:1, 30, 38, Isa.63:9, 15-16, Heb. c.1). He asked them, "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" (Jn.6:62). Later, He would go back to the Father. (Jn.7:28-33; 16:28; 17:5, 24). John symbolically identified Christ as the "Lamb" of the sacrificial law, thus Christ is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, (Rev.13:8).

One of the earliest Christian writings claimed to have been possibly written by Clement of Rome, A.D. 30-100, reads: "Our one Lord Jesus Christ, who has saved us, being first a spirit, was made flesh..." (2nd Clement, chap. 4:2, Philippians 2:6-8). Like the Shepherd of Hermas, & written by an unknown author, about the same time, 2 Clement also presents the pre-existence theme of the pre-existing church. For if we "do the will of God our Father, we shall be of the first church, that spiritual one, that was created before the sun and the moon." Also, noting that this pre-existence theme was in their books & was a saying of the apostles, he adds how Christ also pre-existed too, for "the books and the apostles say that the church not only exists now, but has done so from the beginning. For she was spiritual as our Jesus also was."⁵²⁷

One of the pre-existence themes that faded off into legends, stories, & fables are the post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels-demons, or the Devil & his fellow devils. When Christ was on the earth, the devils that encountered him knew who he was, but knowing that Jesus was the Son of God, didn't change their evil life style as demons, (Acts 19:15; James 2:19). Thus, these post-fall from heaven encounters with demons, is what later fables are filled with. These fables will be placed into the time line according to about the time when they were told by the common folk, in their folk-lore. But also, fables also mention the good angels helping, protecting, guiding, & teaching different mortals too, so this would be post-war in heaven themes & activities of God angels helping the human family.⁵²⁸

The Pre-mortal Council in Heaven

Another different reading of Psalms 82, is from the Qumran 11th cave fragment, in line 9-10, of Ps.82:1, 'God (Elohim) has taken His place in the divine council; in the midst of gods He will hold judgement'. This is said to be referring to Melchizedek. Line 25 ends by saying, 'Your God, that is....' the fragment cuts off at this point, but scholars think that the missing word is Melchizedek, in reference to his divinity.⁵²⁹ Thus, is he one of the "gods" taking part in the council in heaven?

The Shepherd of Hermas, tells us that the Son of God, is indeed more ancient than any creature; inasmuch that he was in council, with his Father at the creation of all things. Another version of The Shepherd of Hermas, [160 A.D.], reads: "This rock," he answered, "and this gate are the Son of God." "How, Sir?" I said; "the rock is old, and the gate is new." "Listen," he said, "and understand, O ignorant man. The Son of God is older than all His creatures, so that He was a fellow-councillor with the Father in His work of creation:" (Jn.1:3, Col.1:15-16), "for this reason is He old."⁵³⁰

The council of heaven is mentioned by Theophilus of Antioch, [A.D. 115-168-181], in response to an early anti-Christian named Autolytus. The Word or Christ, is God the Father's Son. "For before anything came into being He had Him as a counsellor, being His own mind & thought. But when God wished to make all that He determined on, He begot this Word, uttered, the first-born of all creation, not Himself being emptied of the Word [Reason], but having begotten Reason, & always conversing with His Reason. And hence the holy writings teach us, & all the spirit-bearing [inspired] men, one of whom, John, says, "In the beginning was the Word, & the Word was with God," showing that at first God was alone, & the Word in Him...." ⁵³¹

Clement of Alexandria, [153-193-217 A.D.], wrote of Christ's pre-existence & mortal existence in these words: "...The Spirit calls the Lord Himself a child, thus prophesying by Esaias: "Lo, to us a child has been born, to us a son has been given, on whose own shoulder the government shall be; and His name has been called the Angel of great Counsel." Who, then, is this infant child? He according to whose image we are made little children. By the same prophet is declared His greatness: "Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace; that He might fulfil His discipline: and of His peace there shall be no end." (Isa. 9:6). Here Clement used the words of Isaiah to show the pre-existence of Christ. Christ is called "the angel of great Counsel." And one of his titles is "Counsellor."⁵³²

In another translation of Clement of Alexandria, we read: "For ignorance touches not the Son of God, who was the Father's counsellor [Job 15:8; Isa. 40:13; Rom.11:34] before the foundation of the world, [Eph. 1:4] the Wisdom in which the Almighty God rejoiced. [Prov. 8:22—30] For the Son is the power of God, as being the original Word of the Father, prior to all created things: and he might justly be styled the Wisdom of God [1 Cor. 1:24] and the Teacher of those who were made by him."⁵³³

Apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus (Wisdom of Jesus Son of Sirach), the personification of Wisdom, has pre-existence themes, in that Wisdom moves from a pre-mortal existence to embodiment amongst Israel: "Before the ages, in the beginning, he created me, and for all ages I shall not cease to be." Other writers have suggested that Wisdom is personified as a personal being that raises her voice in the council of God, & enters into existence in the beginning of time.⁵³⁴

In the Clementine Recognitions 1st – 4th centuries? One of the earliest Christians who is said to have known & talked with Peter, was Clement, not Clement of Alexandria, but an earlier Clement. "...One of the first things Clement asks Peter upon being introduced to him, in the Clementine Recognitions, is, "Shall those be wholly deprived of the kingdom of heaven who died before Christ's coming?" Clement could have been thinking of his own family line before him. Peter's answer, answered also the ancient critics' charge of neglect: "...Christ, who always was from the beginning, has visited the righteous of every generation (albeit secretly), and especially those who have looked forward to his coming, to whom he often appeared. Still it was not yet time for the resurrection of bodies that perished then,... but those who pleased him and did his will were translated to paradise, to be preserved there for the kingdom, while those who were not able to fulfill the complete law of justice, but had certain traces of carnal weakness in their nature, when their bodies died went in the spirit to be retained in good and happy places, that at the resurrection of the dead each might be empowered to receive an eternal heritage for the good he had done."⁵³⁵

PRE-EXISTENCE THEMES ANSWERED CREATION QUESTIONS: Different pre-existence themes, that developed over the years in earliest Christianity, sought to answer the reasons, whys & main points about the creation of the universe, stars, earth, & all types of life forms, plus the human family. Beyond the arguments about how the creation was done, be it by different modes, creation out of nothing, (creation ex nihilo), as some argued. Or creation by organizing already existing-matter in the universe, as others argued.⁵³⁶ The creation drama was connected in many ways to pre-existence themes. For examples: In numerous art works, & moral-mystery plays,⁵³⁷ creation themes follow pre-existence themes, with depictions showing the council in heaven, war in heaven, the thrusting out of Satan & the rebellious angels. Then, the creation of Adam & Eve, in sequences of events. In some cases, angels instructing Adam & Eve about the war in heaven, & other pre-existence themes, as though they had forgotten what happened, & thus needed to be reminded of it in order to put into perspective why they were on the earth, & who to watch out for. Thus, post-war, post-fall from heaven activities of the Satan & the fallen angels in tempting Adam & Eve & attempting to teach them counterfeited-mysteries & has Adam & Eve worship Satan as "god." Satan is exposed, as the fallen angel that he is, & his monstrous form & darkness is detected by Adam & Eve. Adam & Eve, are promised, by the pre-existing Redeemer, that he will redeem them. He promises to descend & rescues them from death & resurrect them, & brings them back to their former state of glory & regain their former brightness, but only after the Redeemer has become incarnated, live his own life on earth, dies, descends to them & resurrects them out from their underworld grave. Then they will return to their former state of glory, or the pre-existence, the heavenly realms they came from.⁵³⁸

RETURN TO GLORY ON A GARMENT: Pre-existence themes & types were seen in what happens to the heavenly garment or robes. The soul's return back into the place of origin, or the return home to God, & the ascension of the soul back into heaven, is where the soul is often clothed in a garment or robe.⁵³⁹ Or rides-up on a white garment, or are clothed in ones, like his pre-mortal spirit was clothed in a physical body in being sent down from heaven. In The Pearl, from early Christian Syriac writings, the hero returns home to his heavenly house, his mission accomplished. Thus, the hero is returning back to his pre-mortal existence.⁵⁴⁰

In the Pistis Sophia, we read of a garment that belonged to a certain "hero" "...It is the garment which belonged to you in the pre-existence, from the beginning, and when your time is come on earth, you will put it on and return home to us." This garment is also said to have five symbolical marks on it.⁵⁴¹

The Shepherd of Hermas symbolically calls the pre-existing Church "an old woman". "Old", because of how the Church dates back before the world was created. For "she," the Church, was created first of all. The same early Christian writer also hints to hand clasps, & garments, & color symbolism to suggest the degree of sins, or the degree of righteousness of those who are clothed in different colors of garments.⁵⁴²

"...The garment also represented the preexistent purity of the initiate, and as such is represented blessings stored up in heaven to which souls returns. In The Pearl, that all-important early Christian work, the soul is reared in its preexistent palace of glory but it must leave behind this glory in order to sojourn on the earth for a period of probation. Upon his leaving the preexistent palace, says the poet, "they removed from me the garment of light which they had made for me in love, they also removed my purple robe, made exactly to fit me." ⁵⁴³

One of the beliefs that caused Origen to be rejected by other Christian Fathers was how that he believed that eventually, "all beings, including the devil himself, would be reconciled and restored to God." ⁵⁴⁴

"Often the Devil appears monstrous and deformed, his outward shape betraying his inner defect. He is lame because of his fall from heaven..." ⁵⁴⁵

In a German work, the creation story of Genesis doesn't start with the creation of light, the heavens, etc. It shows different events in the pre-existence, such as the fall and demonification of Satan and his angels who are seen falling out of heaven to the earth below. ⁵⁴⁶

An Old English poem, Christ and Satan, the story goes into the moment "...when the fallen angels find themselves established in hell...." Satan tells his followers. "...We have lost our glory,...and exchanged it for the shadows of hell, bound in torment among fires that give no light. Once we sang amid the joys of heaven; now we pine in this poisonous place. The other cruel spirits blame their lord for leading them into the disastrous rebellion. You lied, they complain, in making us think that we could become our own lords and not serve the Savior. Well, here you are now, an outlaw bound fast in fire, and we your followers have to suffer with you...." ⁵⁴⁷

Satan rehearsing the reasons why he rebelled says to his followers, now in hell. "...I used to be a high angel in heaven, he mourns, but I plotted to overthrow the light of glory. Now God has thrust me down here; very well: he has merely confirmed me in my hatred. There is no place in this deep darkness for us to hide from God, for though we cannot see him any longer, he can see us. It would be better had I never known the brightness of heaven, which is now taken from me and give to Christ...." Satan is allowed, at times to ascension from the prison to tempt the human race. The 2nd portion of Christ and Satan deals with the harrowing of hell, where the holy dead await the time of Christ's descent into hell, at which time they were set free. ⁵⁴⁸

During the Middle Ages, in some cases the Devil in literary works, in the theater, in mystery & miracle plays, the chronology of the Devil's activities from his creation to his final ruin were considered. In one of these plays God is said to have made 9 orders of angels & created Lucifer the highest angel of the highest order. In this particular case Lucifer was "...second in glory only to God himself. "I make you closest to me of all the powers, master and mirror of my might; I create you beautiful in bliss and name you Lucifer, the bearer of light." When God appoints Lucifer the "governor" of the whole host of heaven, the bright angel's grouped around it singing their songs of praise. When God rises and proceeds to exit, Lucifer contemplates the vacant throne and muses upon his own glory: Aha, that I am wonderous bright... All in this throne if that I were, then I should be as wise as he. ⁵⁴⁹

Lucifer, after he scorned the angels for praising God, bids them to look at him instead & behold the beauty of his glory. He then seeks to have the angels to worship him instead of God. The good angels refused to do this, saying that they would not go along with Lucifer & his pride. Lucifer sought to take over God's throne, & said that he would sit in God's throne. Lucifer's accomplice, the angel Lightborne, encouraged Lucifer further with flattery. "The brightness of your body clear is brighter than God a thousandfold." The good angels again, for the last time, attempt to stop Lucifer in pride. Lucifer, however, ascends to the throne. In his pride he speaks of his own glory & brightness. And then says: "...I shall be like him who is highest on high." Lucifer, now upon God's throne, & in his shining brightness, he invites the angels to come forth and worship him on bended knee. The good angels refuse, but the weaker ones fall at his feet. Satan, Beelzebub, Astaroth, and the others welcome him as their leader. It seems that in these accounts, the different names of the Evil One are considered as if separate characters, when they perhaps represented the negative characteristics of the one being.

Lucifer, upon the throne, says that when God returns, he would not leave, but rather, he would sit there before God's face. This blasphemous attitude of Lucifer sealed his doom. For when God appeared he was furious. He asked Lucifer who had set him on his throne while he was gone? He asked him how could he have offended him when he had made him his friend? Why now must you become my foe by offending me because of your pride? God then tell him that because of this attitude, he would fall out of heaven into hell. Plus all those who took part in this too. Never again would they be allowed to dwell in bliss with me, God says. During Lucifer's fall & expulsion from heaven, he is transformed from a beautiful angel into a ugly fiend. Thus, some of these plays, etc., hint to the demonification of lucifer during his fall. ⁵⁵⁰

God proceeds to fashion the material world while the fallen angels in hell, shocked by their sudden ruin & demonification, mourn over their fate. They are horrified at looking at themselves to discover that they have lost their former glory as angels of God, & now have turned into "black fiends." One of them lamenting says: Look at us now, lucifer, how could you have fallen? We were once angels so fair, who sat so high above the air. Now look at us, we have become as black as coal, & is ugly, etc.

In the Devil's view, God had acted unjustly against them when, He hurled them from heaven & then had created the human family to eventually fill or take their places & ranks in heaven. God had also added to the insult when he planned to made humanity in his own image & take on human form rather than that of the angelic form. Satan complained: Why would God do this, we were fair and bright, it seems to me that he ought to have planned on taking on that shape, but instead he plans to be of human-shape!

The fallen angels gathered in hell & in an infernal council they discuss their predicament & plan revenge. They planned to bring about the destruction of the new creation, (Adam and Eve), by tempting them with jewels. One of the demons is chosen to go forth to tempt them. In most of these versions it is Satan who is chosen. And the post-war in heaven, & post-fall activities of the Devil & his angels are presented in different ways in these plays.

Another infernal council is gathered in hell, when the demons had discovered that the annunciation by the angel to Mary had just taken place. They gathered together to discuss and argue about what it all meant. ⁵⁵¹

There is a "psalm" said to have come down to us from St. Francis. It was for Christmas day at Vespers, from a portion a translation by Father Paschal Robinson, Christ's pre-existence is hinted to in the words: "Our King, before ages sent His Beloved Son from on high, and He was born of the Blessed Virgin, holy Mary." St. Francis makes reference in music to Christ as "our sweet little brother." In this case it may be that he may (and may not) have had in mind the concept of Christ's pre-existence in the heavenly family. Another hints to the eternal Lord of all things who came down from heaven, again hinting to the pre-existence of Christ. Another song during the Advent services hints to the pre-existence & ascension of Christ out of the spirit prison too. "Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down the Righteous One. Let the earth open, and let her bring forth the Saviour." ⁵⁵²

In The First Book of Adam & Eve, we read of how Adam & Eve had lifted up their hands in prayer to God. God answered their prayer by sending them the Word,

(Jesus Christ) to explain to Adam & Eve why they had been banished from the garden & had been deprived of their bright nature. They learned that it was because they had not followed the commandment with regards to the forbidden fruit. Adam and Eve are then told about "...the wicked Satan who continued not in his first estate, nor kept his faith; in whom was no good intent towards Me, and who though I had created him, yet set Me at naught, and sought the Godhead, so that I hurled him down from heaven,..." he was the one that had tempted you to eat of the forbidden fruit.⁵⁵³

This narrative goes speak of a covenant which God made with Adam & Eve. They are taught about their pre-mortal bright natures before their fall. Their bright nature was withdrawn, & they were left with the abilities to see things after the ability of one who is in the body. Later in the narrative, Adam is told that while he was under God's command he "...wast a bright angel,..." & didn't need water to sustain his life.

Later in the narrative, the pre-existing Christ is said to have promised Adam that there was a way back for them, for they would be able to be restored once again to their former state of glory if they would keep the covenant that they had made with God after the time that they had been banished from the garden. The way back into the garden, the abode of light was made possible because Christ would come into the world and would "...become flesh of thy seed, and take upon Me"– [says the pre-existing Christ to Adam], the infirmity from which thou sufferest, then the darkness that came upon thee in this cave shall come upon Me in the grave, when I am in the flesh of thy seed.⁵⁵⁴ These are just small samples of pre-existence themes that run throughout historic Christendom.

CHRONOLOGY OF LEGENDIZATIONS TOWARDS LATER FABLES ABOUT THE PRE- EXISTENCE

1ST CENTURY A.D.: "Blessed is he who was before he came into being" (Logion 17).⁵⁵⁵ New Testament references to the devil call him "ho diabolos" ("the slander," "false accuser") 37 times, "ho Satan" ("the adversary") 35 times, & Beelzeboul 7 times. While in the Synoptic Gospels, Satan is the prince or chief of demons or evil spirits in the kingdom of evil. He tempts Christ, (Mark 4:15). He is the one who sows tares (Mark 4:15). He entered into Judas, & sought after Peter, (Luke 22:3, 31). Eventually he will be thrust down into the eternal fire with his angels. (Matt.25:41). Satan caused Ananias to lie to the Apostle. (Act 5:3). In Paul's writings satan is the "tempter", the "god of this world", "Belial", "the prince of the power of the air", & "the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience", & the "evil one." (1 Thess.3:5; 2 Cor.6:15; Eph.2:2, 6:16.) In Peter's writings, Satan is like a lion on the prowl. (1 Pet. 5:8). A number of other passages, mentions his fallen angel & warn us of him.⁵⁵⁶

60–80 AD? One of the polemical situations that John⁵⁵⁷ is said to have responded to was early Gnosticism that was on the rise. Some early Christian Gnostics heretics, used the writings of the Old Testament & had claimed that Jesus was the messenger sent from the supreme god who would teach them how to pass by the inferior god of the Old Testament, the god of the Hebrews, and avoid the heaven that that "god" had planned. These types of selected misinterpretations of the Old Testament were accepted by many, & thus caused conflicts in certain areas of the early church. These Gnostics interpreted the Old Testament god, to be mean, angry, jealous, etc. While in the teachings of Jesus, they found, a loving, kind, forgiving, merciful God. John is said to have written in response to such views by pointing out that Christ had pre-existed, & had been the same God of the Old Testament, the creator who had come down to earth to take upon himself a body. In contrast, many Gnostics' doctrines were anti-body, they looked upon the physical body as a type of prison for the spirit.⁵⁵⁸ "The Wisdom books represent the relation of Sophia to God as his spouse and the Messiah as their son. Many Gnostics used the terms Sophia, Pneumsa, and Logos as names for the second person of the Deity, who represented the divine motherhood of the God-man. But during the first period of the development of the Christian Church, the ideal of a God-mother was abandoned, the Logos was identified with God the Son, who now became the second person of the Trinity; and the name Pneuma or spirit was alone retained for the third person. The Gnostic Trinity- conception, however, left its trace in the Christian apocrypha, for the "Gospel according to the Hebrews" Christ spake of the Holy Ghost as his mother."⁵⁵⁹

"...Some biblical scholars are of the opinion that the Gospel of John was written to destroy this argument, as well as that of the Docetists. [They believed that matter was inherently evil because it was the creation of an evil or inferior god.] In his first chapter John declares that the pre-existing WORD (Logos) had been the creator of the world and all that was in it. He then declared that this same WORD had become flesh and dwelt on earth and it was he who had been baptized by John the Baptist. For the true follower of Christ there could be no Gnostic interpretation. Jesus was identified as the pre-existing creator, not as one who had come to save mankind from an evil or creator god."⁵⁶⁰

Ever Wondered Who You Were, As a Spirit, Before You Were Born? The Veil of Forgetfulness: The New Testament shows the continued feud between the forces of Satan– together with his fallen angel-demons, against Jesus & his followers! A feud that began at the foundation of the world, or in the pre-existence. In the New Testament, Jesus recognizes the adversary, & the adversary recognizes Jesus as being each others' rival and old opponent. Jesus also seems like he doesn't want the devils he casts out of people, to give it away that he, Jesus, is the Son of God. Testimonial witnesses from demons, & his true identity, with them about to give more details, must have been because they had not had a veil of forgetfulness blocking their memories of the pre-existence, especially about them knowing & remembering who had fought against them in the war in heaven. Those spirits were now then mortals, or in each their own physical body. Those then living had something blocking, or causing them to forget their pre-existence self, if not they would have remembered who & what they were, before they were born into each their own physical body. Who they were & the choices they made as a spirit son or daughter of the Divine Parents.⁵⁶¹ Did the physical body have some type of memory loss? Blocking off the memory? Or, as some have suggested, the spirit had passed through the veil of forgetfulness? Or as other pre-existence themes attempt to answer this, we had taken a drink of forgetfulness. But because demons-devils (the fallen angel), were not born into each their own physical body, or not permitted to. Was this why they sought to possess a body, even numerous ones at the same time? But, when in such a body, did they still remember whom different ones' spirits were, before they were born? Did Jesus know that the demons-devils also would remember? Thus, was this why, or at least one reason why Jesus told the demons to not talk about how they knew him, & who he was, plus other details that they remembered?⁵⁶²

An early question that must have been asked back then, as now, is: Why would the demons be able to remember who Jesus was, but not the spirits having physical experiences in each their own mortal or physical body? Or the people around Jesus during his life time. Why do most of us not remember anything about a pre-existence? How these questions were answered in ancient times may have been more than these following examples: As mentioned, our memories of the pre-mortal existence, were blocked by a veil of forgetfulness. In rituals, in the mysteries, cloth veils were hung to block off seeing into other places that represented other realms of existences. In passing through these veils, it was like going into another realm of life.⁵⁶³ Thus, a veil is passed through from the pre-existence, through birth, into a mortal-physical body, where the body forgets the pre-existence, who we were before we were born, & what they did. One of the early beliefs that was said to offer clues as to the type of life that one lived, be that pre-mortal life good or bad, was the belief held by even some of Christ's disciples. How that each of the different types of bodies that different ones were born into reflected the types of pre-existence life that each one had lived, good or bad. Case in point was the man born blind. Christ was asked if the man sinned, or his parents, that the man was born blind, (John 9:2). This was a controversial question that would disturb & be debated over for centuries, & later rejected by later Christians. But, because the veil had blocked off the memory of good deeds done, it had also blocked off sins to be judged by, like there was to be a judgment after mortal life too. Thus, it was reasoned, even though perhaps not a true or correct belief, that if a person was born with defects, or with a black skin, or in areas not as favorable as others, then such conditions suggested that the person had done things in their pre-existence that merited the type of body or condition, they were born into. Many, however, had issues with these aspects of the pre-existence themes, & argued that the spirit was pure before entering into the physical body, or being "clothed" in a body. By the time of the bishop of Hippo, St. Augustine, 354–430, this view still troubled many, including this bishop who wrote against it. Then, later during the Council of Constantinople, 553 A.D., the Emperor, Justinian, thought policed the later church, by threatening to anathema anyone who said that those born into black skinned bodies were because of sin done in the pre-mortal existence.⁵⁶⁴

Irenaeus, 120–202 A.D., objects to the different answers given by the Greek version of the pre-existence, as to why we can't remember the pre-existence. Instead of a veil of forgetfulness, there is suppose to have been a drink of oblivion that was administered by a demon, before the soul entered mortal life, which upon drinking, made it so that the soul forgets the pre-existence. However, Irenaeus reasoned that if they could remember the demon & drink, then they ought to have remembered other details. The whole answer might have been a legendized one that had been handed down from different sources, such as the Egyptians, to the Greeks, at least, it was used by Plato in attempting to answer the question.⁵⁶⁵ Whatever caused the forgetfulness, what was the point of it? Was this so that the human family could have a fresh new start, as part of the tests & lessons of mortality?

Gnostic versions of the pre-existence mention both a veil of forgetfulness, &, or, the drinking of the water of forgetfulness. But then, having moments in mortal life of a shock of recognition. This is where the mist of drunkenness of darkness that is blocking the light of memory, like a veil, is suddenly at times removed. But only for a moment of remembering. It may be triggered by seeing something, like in the case with Adam, upon seeing Eve's beauty. According to the Gnostic Secret Book of John, Adam is said to have had a shock of recognition, like sobering up from the drunkenness of darkness. He remembered something about Eve, as though having a flash back about the pre-existence.⁵⁶⁶ Did this version of the pre-existence themes, filter down to later 14th–15th centuries? Or was the following metaphorically presented & liked unto later mysticism, or a vague or ill-defined religious or spiritual belief about likening divine love under the image of drunkenness, & memory loss, after a time of drunkenness? Whatever might be the case, Jan Brugman, a popular Dutch preacher, compared "...Jesus, taking human form, to a drunkard, who forgets himself, sees no danger, who gives away all he has. 'Oh, was He not truly drunk, when love urged Him to descent from the highest heavens to this lowest valley of the earth?' He sees Him in heaven, going about to pour out drinks for the prophets, 'and they drank till they were fit to burst, and David with his harp, leaped before the table, just as if he were the Lord's fool'..."⁵⁶⁷

We note in John, other possible passages that hint to the pre-existence of Christ who came down from heaven to live on earth, (John 1:1-3, & 14, KJV). John the baptist was perhaps one of the ones who was pre-ordained to be the prophet to bear witness of Christ. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." (John 1:6, KJV). John was "sent from God" in that he came down from the heaven, having also preexisted too.

"He [Christ] was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1:9). The words "cometh into the world" suggest that mankind had also, like Christ, like John the Baptist, had also been sent from God, & thus had pre-existed. John goes to write about how Christ came into the world but many have not known who He really was & is, for He came unto his own & was not received by many. "...But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1:12-13).

Hebrews 12:9: "Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?" (KJV). Portions from other versions read: "submit ourselves to the Father of our spirits and live" (RHM). "willingly be under subjection to our Spiritual Father,..." (Lam). "yield submission to the Father of souls,..." (TCNT). "be under the authority of the Father of spirits, and have life" (Bas).

Hebrews 11:13-16, where the Elect are referred to as "strangers" and "pilgrims," searching for their heavenly home (for, as 2:11 pointed out, their origin was in One, ex henos, God the Father)...⁵⁶⁸ Heavenly home, suggest pre-existence themes & types.

The Odes of Solomon, Syriac text, 1st, 2nd–3rd c., has other pre-existence themes, Ode 22:1, 3, 5: "He who brought me down from on high, also brought me up from the regions below... He who scattered my enemies had existed from ancient and my adversaries... He that overthrew by my hands the dragon with seven heads: and thou hast set me over his roots that I might destroy his seed."

"All those will be astonished that see me. For from another race am I: For the Father of truth remembered me: He who possessed me from the beginning:... The Son of the Most High appeared in the perfection of His Father; And light dawned from the Word that was beforetime in Him; The Messiah is truly one; and He was known before the foundation of the world, That He might save souls forever by the truth of His name..." (Ode 41:7-9, 14-17). "He who created me when yet I was not, knew what I would do when I came into being." Ode 8: "And before they had existed, I recognized them; [says the Lord to his people], and imprinted a seal on their faces [and] I fashioned their members."⁵⁶⁹

"...By the first century of the Christian era the evil spirits usually went by the name of daimonia. "demons." This Hellenistic classification would lump Satan with the other evil spirits in the category of daimonia...." [There were other concepts that were blended, for another] "...source of blending was the late Hebrew tradition of the fallen angels. The Hebrew malakim or angels occupied a space in the chain between God and humanity, just as the Greek daimonia did. The blending of malakim with daimonia was encouraged by the Septuagint's translation of a wide variety of Old Testament words for evil spirits into the Greek daimonia. Finally, Apocalyptic literature was beginning to perceive the Devil as the head of the host of evil angels. Christianity adopted that tradition for itself and made the Devil the prince of the fallen angels in their struggle against God (Matt.9.34, 12.24-28, 25.41; Mark 3.22-26; Luke 11.14-15, 13.16; Acts 10.38; 2 Cor.5.5, 11.4, 12.7; Eph. 2.2, 6.12; Col. 1.13)." ⁵⁷⁰

APOSTOLIC FATHERS, ON ASPECTS OF PRE-EXISTENCE, 1ST-2ND CENTURIES

Who were the Apostolic Fathers? These were some of the earliest Christian writers that we know of, who lived & wrote during the first 2 centuries of Christianity. Some of them, it is said, knew some of the apostles. One of the versions of 1 Clement, chapter xvii: 5, makes reference to: "The Creator and Father of spirits, the Most Holy..." ⁵⁷¹ Another hint to the pre-existence is found in the words: "He that made us, and formed us, brought us into his own world; having presented [note 6- "Prepared for..."] us with his benefits, even before we were born." ⁵⁷² (1 Clement XVII:40). Christ's pre-existence is also noted, "being first a spirit, was made flesh," or was clothed in a body through birth, (2 Clement IV:2). ⁵⁷³

"The gospel and the church were planned before the creation of the world. From the Apostolic Fathers it may be seen that this was the belief of the early church: "She (the church) was created the first of all things... and for her sake was the world established." [The Shepherd of Hermas, Vis. ii. iv. 1.] "And moreover the books of the apostles declare that the Church belongs not to the present, but has existed from the beginning." [II Clement, XIV:2.] "Thus, brethren, if we do the will of the Father, God, we shall belong to the first Church, the spiritual one which was created before the sun and the moon." [II Clement, XIV, 1). ⁵⁷⁴

In the writings of Ignatius, 30-107 A.D., we see hints to the war in heaven concepts. Ignatius may have also been a fellow-disciple with Polycarp under St. John. In his letter to the Ephesians, Ignatius wrote: "...Nothing is more precious than peace, by which all war, both in heaven and earth is brought to an end." Another longer version reads: "...Nothing is better than that peace which is according to Christ, by which all war, both aerial & terrestrial spirits, is brought to an end. "For we wrestle not against blood & flesh, but against principalities and powers, and against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in heavenly places." (Eph.6:12). ⁵⁷⁵

Ignatius, on Christ's pre-existed, & later physical birth: "...For the Son of God, who was begotten before time began ["before the ages,"] and established all things according to the will of the Father, He was conceived in the womb of Mary, according to the appointment of God..." ⁵⁷⁶ Ignatius, to the Magnesians, wrote how Christ was with the Father before the beginning of time, or before the ages. Another version tells how Christ, being begotten by the Father before the beginning of time, or before the ages, was God the Word, the only-begotten Son, and remains the same for ever; for of His Kingdom there shall be no end. ⁵⁷⁷

Ignatius to the Philadelphians: Mentions the war in heaven, according to a longer version of this letter, calling one of the rivals against early Christianity, a false teachers of Judaism, as having "...the apostate dragon dwelling within him." This reminds us of the words of John's 12th chapter in Revelation. Satan is considered an apostate fallen-angel, symbolized as a dragon, who caused war in heaven in the pre-existence. ⁵⁷⁸

"One could not express more energetically than does Ignatius ... the unity of the divine plan of salvation from the beginning of the world and the central place occupied in it by Jesus." ⁵⁷⁹

In a rather questionable & possible "spurious" letter, believed to have been fabricated, a letter to the Philippians, Ignatius wrote again about the war in heaven, & the apostate angels. Plus, of Satan's audacity towards Christ. And how Satan, a spirit more wicked than other wicked spirits, had tempted Christ. Satan's fall "as lightning" (Luke 10:18), was mentioned earlier. Also, how the Lord has "trodden down under" his feet, the apostate angel-serpent Satan. What had been the negative traits, that helped cause Satan's fall? Satan's own appetite, vain-glory, avarice and ambition all had brought him to dishonor & thus to draw away others to ungodliness. "Thou, O Belial, dragon, apostate, crooked serpent, rebel against God, outcast from Christ, alien from the Holy Spirit, exile from the ranks of the angels, reviler of the laws of God, enemy of all that is lawful..." [did tempt the Christ to worship you!]? In Christ's reply he says that He was "...acquainted with the only [Lord] from whom thou [Satan] hast become an apostate." Christ said, speaking of himself, how that he is not an enemy to the Father, & thus, he would not give into the temptations of an apostate, rebellious & fallen-angel, that Satan had become. The "trodden down under" feet is a symbol of victory, often seen within early to later Christian art works of the militant Christ, of also of his descent into hell. ⁵⁸⁰

2ND CENTURY: BARNABAS, writing about A.D. 100-118? The Epistle of Barnabas, the work of an unknown author, was written about 118 in the Jewish-Christian community of Egypt. Barnabas wrote from the perspective of the Hellenistic, allegorized Jewish thought that the rabbis tended to reject. He hints to the doctrine of the "two roads" the 2 ways. The Evil One was also symbolically called, "the Black One," color symbolism in use, with white being symbolic of purity, & black, symbolic of evil, & negative traits. ⁵⁸¹ Those who followed the evil one, or the Black one, would find they're on the side of evil darkness, cut off from Christ. "...Barnabas made the explicit symbolic connection between evil, darkness, and blackness, symbolism that was to have a long and sinister history in Christian civilization." ⁵⁸²

One version of Barnabas presents the pre-existence theme in that God the Father had said to Christ, before the beginning of the world, [Gen.1:26] "Let us make man after our own image and likeness." ⁵⁸³

Mathetes to Diognetus, 130, the "anonymous" writer, is said to have been a "disciple" of the Apostles: "...The immortal soul dwells in a mortal tabernacle; & Christians dwell as sojourners in corruptible [bodies], looking for an incorruptible dwelling...in the heavens..." ⁵⁸⁴

In later centuries, perhaps this aspect of the pre-existence, that of sojourners and wanders on the earth, was passed onto wandering pilgrims, who went on long pilgrimages. Whatever might be the case, it is still interesting to note how some have suggested that "all of earthly life was rightly to be seen as a pilgrimage, reflecting the Patriarchs' view that we are but wanderers & pilgrims on this earth rather than permanent sojourners here." ⁵⁸⁵

PAPIAS, 70-155: Blends pre-existence tradition themes of the early Christians, in with the Jewish Apocalyptic story of the Watchers angels. Thus, suggesting that God appointed angels to govern the earth and its nations, with each nation having its ruling angel, but these angels had abused their power and fallen under the sway of the evil prince of this world, a circumstance that explains the warfare and persecutions of the nations. Many of these angels failed in their commission, so this blend goes. There is also a possible hint to war in heaven themes, or "the arraying of the evil angels in battle against God."⁵⁸⁶

Gnostics' & Apologists' Pre-existence

"Towards the end of the 1st century, and during the 2nd, many learned men came over both from Judaism and paganism to Christianity. These brought with them into the Christian schools of theology their Platonic ideas and phraseology, and they especially borrowed from the philosophical writings of Philo. [Hellenistic Jewish philosopher who lived in Alexandria, in the Roman province of Egypt. 25 BCE – c. 50 CE.] As was very natural, they confined themselves, in their philosophizing respecting the Trinity, principally to the Logos; connecting the same ideas with the name λόγος [the uttered word] as had been done before by Philo and other Platonists. Differing on several smaller points, they agree perfectly in the following general views, viz.: the Logos existed before the creation of the world; he was begotten, however, by God, and sent forth from him. [Emphasis added.] By this Logos the Neo-Platonists understood the infinite understanding of God, belonging from eternity to his nature as a power, but that, agreeably to the divine will, it began to exist out of the divine nature. It is therefore different from God, and yet, as begotten of him, is entirely divine...."⁵⁸⁷

During these early centuries, as Greek philosophies, Hellenistic world views, & their strange interpretations of the prior world of spirits. Plus, philosophized man-made attempts, answers to the purpose of mortal life. Plus, their anti-matter views were spread into early Christian communities, or already were rooted in the areas that early Christianity spread too. It was inevitable that Christ's warnings, & the prophesied spoiling & contaminations of pure early Christian doctrines became a problem for many early Church leaders to deal with, & counter, (Matt.24:9–15, 24, 2 Pet.1:16, 1Tim.4:7, 2Tim.4:3–4, Col.2:8, Eph. 4:10–14).

During the 1st into the mid-second century, & after, Christendom suffered from dissension within, & also attacks from non-Christian outsiders, from without, as noted earlier. Many Gnostic Christians that split off from the main churches, or started up on their own, rejecting the authority of early church leadership, were considered to be heretics, apostates & false teachers by many of the early Christian fathers. Gnosticism, it was noted, were blending Greek thought or were being Hellenized, becoming more ever mythologized, and more radically dualistic. But so was the main church, it was starting to become contaminated by cultural blends in the areas to which it spread to, especially when the apostles & prophets were martyred.⁵⁸⁸

In the case with different Gnostic sects, what fragments of pre-existence themes, that they blended in with their strange versions, had become so distorted, by 150 A.D., & later, that they were beyond simple understanding & easy comprehension. Pure pre-existence doctrinal themes were easy to understand & explain, when presented by divinely inspired prophets & apostles, or by Christ himself, such as during post-resurrection 40 day teachings. Through the simple clear & pure doctrine of the pre-existence, the church could offer many answers to many of the polemics of the times raised by early anti-Christians, honest investigators & new converts. The doctrine opened up the horizons concerning the whole bigger picture of the purpose & reasons for mortal life, by understanding each aspect of the whole journey of souls through different realms of existences. This was especially the case with understanding the prior spirit realm before mortal life. It answered the question as to: What was the whole point for pre-existing spirits to be born into each their own physical body? It answered, as noted already, what happens to those whom critics said were neglected, but who weren't, because they did get to hear the gospel, in other nations, because Christ pre-existed, & visited the prophets of old, & in other nations, before the time of Christianity. But, in Gnostics' claims to also having that prior earth realm chapter in the whole journey, it created more rivalry between those who also claimed to have the true teachings too. Different Gnostic sects claimed that they had the authentic 40 day sayings of Jesus as taught to Thomas, John, Philip & other apostles. These claims, were of course, challenged by other early Christian sects, each competing with their own claims to having the correct & pure teachings of Christ & his apostles. As it was, during those first few centuries, any type of an official canon of scriptures was not yet decided upon, or near being settled, that would have to wait till about the 4th century, & still wouldn't ever be agreed upon or settled by the different sects who came up with their own versions of conical lists of sacred books for what would later become different versions of The New Testament.⁵⁸⁹ But, even though some of the Gnostic sects might have been in possession of some authentic sayings of Jesus, despite this, it was what their Gnostic teachers then did with such 'sayings,' that shows us that they were uninspired & without the spiritual gifts needed to keep the teachings pure, & undefiled from cultural contaminations. For what they ended up producing were pre-existence stories, & other themes, that were to eventually become so garbled that they lost their simplicity. The garbled, & at times, incomprehensible nonsense that came out of the results of Gnostic teachers' blends of Greek philosophy, & other Hellenistic world views. Plus, some adding Roman religious thought from their mystery religions & pagan versions, some adding some aspects from Jewish pre-existence themes too. That they ended up making such a mess of the once simple doctrine, that they were no longer recognizable to be purely the earliest Christians' doctrines about the pre-existence.⁵⁹⁰ Thus, it was no wonder that other early Christians named them as heretics, false teachers, false prophets, & the predicted wolves that had entered into the churches to devour the sheep, or new converts.⁵⁹¹ As different Gnostic sects' teachers took what they would, from the different schools of thought, & mystery religions of the different areas they were in. They came up with such distorted blends that it must have been difficult, at times, for new converts & outsiders, to attempt to distinguish between official earliest church doctrines, & Gnostics' counterfeits. While in other cases, it was not only shockingly obvious to those more informed, but obviously confusing as to what aspects of their doctrines were supposed to mean, perhaps even for insiders. While outsiders must have been wondering what to make of the garbled mess created by different Gnostic sects & their renegade apostate leaders.⁵⁹² What had been created in the confusions, were man-made & incomprehensible distorted versions of pre-existence themes, which caused the more simplified pre-existence themes to start to fade out of their sects. The results of such apostate settings, & cultural contaminations, combined with other negative aspects, created by the apostasy, resulted in faster legendizations processes of doctrines quickly morphed into strange fables, far removed from their simple doctrinal themes. This process is faster, in contrast to the much slower processes of other areas of Christendom. For although they were suffering from what stages of the earlier falling away of others' can produce. Not enough time had gone by required to cause many things to have been completely lost, or turned to fables. Moreover, there still were many whom, despite what they inherited from others' earlier apostasy, they were determined to hang on, endure with what spiritual light they had & knew to be true. They were also inspired by Christ's teachings, to do their best to shine forth with as much light of spiritual goodness that they gleaned from the best spiritual gift of all, charity, (1 Cor. 13). Despite how wicked the world got around them, & despite what negative conditions got produced during dark ages of apostasy, there always seems to be a few throughout Christian history, that seem to be able to hold on to many good traits that their conscience reminds them to follow. Plus, what truths they retained, taught them to do. Thus, as they enjoy the benefits of what charity, kindness & other positive Christ like traits produce, & the problems that get solved before they get started, by so living good lives, despite their human weaknesses too. It was amongst these gifted saints throughout Christian history, & in the different sects, that we see many of the different aspects of the doctrines being preserved, to a certain extent, though they varied too. For even during the Great Apostasy, there still were pockets of spiritually gifted saints, who were also dedicated to preserving their own limited spirituality by following what they knew of Christ's, & his prophets' & apostles' moral teachings. For although they no longer had the spiritual gifts that could produce scriptures, like apostles & prophets, they still could at least do their part to preserve their earlier teachings in manuscripts, books, art works & monuments. Thus, much credit is due to those early to later Christians who did what they could to preserve what they had inherited from their fore-fathers & good faithful leaders, & saints. We have to give much thanks to all the artists that preserved many aspects of many of the basic doctrines put to art, including pre-existence themes.⁵⁹³ These writers, artists, manuscript makers, stone carvers, monument makers, stone-masons, & good clerics, & other faithful Christians amongst the different sects, that sought to improve themselves, in contrast to those who didn't. These good people are thus to be credited for creating rich supplies of thousands of art works, that tell & depicted most every aspect of the whole basic stories, behind pre-existent themes, plus other doctrines we shall consider in these time-lines. But sadly, they also had to admit that with the loss of the Apostles & prophets, the heretics were polluting the simple & easy to understand teachings of Christ, plus other doctrines, besides the pre-existence. They noted the on going distortions of the gospel message going on by many in positions of power & authority. They noted & mourned over the moral-decay, especially amongst those who permitted & even taught all kinds of vile immoralities, that their critics, the early to later anti-Christians kept track of, & had noted too. Which collections of long lists of alleged, or real crimes committed by extreme apostate heretical "Christian" sects, were used to vilify also the good early to later Christians, as if they were part of what the renegade heretical sects were reported to be doing. During all these polemical settings, the pure doctrines of Christ & his prophets & apostles were bound to become distorted even further, which is what happened to different versions of different sects' pre-existence themes, later deposited in much later scattered Christian legends.⁵⁹⁴

The Gnostics blended the Mazdaist view of a cosmic battle between spirits with the Orphic view of a struggle between goodness of spirit and the evil of matter. The human body was considered by them to be a prison created by satan. Evil spirits were called archons or eons. They believed that sense matter was created by evil, the creator "god" of the physical universe in the Old Testament must have been the devil. This view was one of the interpretations that many other Christians rejected. The Gnostics believed that originally humans were created as pure spirits by God, but the Evil One entrapped these spirits into physical bodies. Christ was sent to teach us of our true being, origin, & destiny.⁵⁹⁵

Some of these gnostic heretics were, Marcion, leaders of Marcionites. Valentine, was another. Some Gnostic tell how the spirit had descended at birth into a gross body that became its physical prison. Both worlds, the one of humanity, the other of the cosmos, are battle grounds in the war between the good spirit of light and the evil spirit who rules matter. Originally humans were pure spirit, but, entrapped by the evil eon, they became earthly creatures imprisoned in matter, or each their own physical body. Evil spirits feel it to be their opposite duty to tempt us to abandon our spiritual heritage and to pursue gross material pleasures.⁵⁹⁶ In these versions of pre-existence themes, are hints to the war in heaven, and the role of evil spirits in the pre-mortal, but on going cosmic battles. These anti-body beliefs, as noted earlier, would later influence other early to later Christian doctrines, such as the resurrection, Christology issues & controversies about the nature of Christ's physical body, if he had been born at all, or not. Or was even resurrected into a physical body, or not, or if he needed a body at all, or not. If he was born of sex as Mary's & Joseph's son, or not. If he was a mere man, who was adopted as Son of God, because of his righteousness, thus it was also argued that he didn't pre-exist before his birth. But, as others argued, if he did pre-exist, & was divine, & was the Son of God, then Joseph wasn't his father. These were the types of issues that rival early Christian sects argued over & asked questions about during the Christological controversy of the 2nd & 3rd century. Plus, different versions of deification, the purpose of life questions, & the nature of God the Father, Christ & controversies over the Godhead.⁵⁹⁷

Gnostic pre-existence themes of the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven, activities of the fallen angels-devils, is seen in how they viewed matter, the physical body as a creation of the devil, to which spirits are imprisoned in at birth.⁵⁹⁸

The challenge with many different documents, books, & fragments of ancient writings, that have been found, is for different scholars to try to classify them, according to the different diverse sects that they think they belonged to: "If we attempt to classify a document by its teachings we run into a hopeless situation for half the Gnostic teachings—the pre-existence plan, this world as a place of probation, eternal progression, the spiritual creation, the withholding of certain teachings from the world, the divine parentage of man, the pre-existent glory of Adam, etc.—were held by the Primitive Church."⁵⁹⁹

2nd c. text from the Nag Hammadi, the Gospel of Truth, tells how, "each one will speak concerning the place from which they have come from, and to the region from which they have received their essential being they will hasten to return again and receive from that place, the place where they stood before, and they will taste of that place, and be nourished, and grow."⁶⁰⁰

Other Gnostic texts talk of pre-existence themes, & because they often did, their rival Christians, that polemically wrote against them, called the Gnostics' versions as heretical. These rivals sought to vilify the Gnostic Christian sects to discourage others from joining them, & to defend their own versions of what they understood was the true gospel. Moreover, because of how reports of these extreme sects activities, their alleged sexual perversions, & distorted mysteries, beliefs & practices were giving the regular Christians a bad name, amongst non-Christians, & early anti-Christians. The distancing continued to widen further, as different early Christian apologists wrote to the civil & state authorities of the Roman government about what true early Christians believed. Thus, at times, in their polemical zeal, they misinterpreted, misunderstood & mis-stated Gnostics' variable beliefs in their polemics against them. Just as early anti-Christians had, sometimes generalizing & mixing up Gnostics' variable beliefs with their rivals' variable versions, to argue against the early Christian "cult," in general. For example, one belief made fun of by the early anti-Christian Celsus, (about 170-80 AD), was pre-existence themes, the war in heaven between two divine sons, & another aspect, the fallen angels, how it was said that they were punished with chains, after their fall. Origen complained that Celsus had mixed in Marcion's version with his rivals' versions,⁶⁰¹ when he should have made distinction between the rivals' beliefs, but didn't. What Celsus might have had available to him, when he wrote about 170-80 AD, or heard reports of, by word of mouth, or obtained copies of their confiscated books, is questionable. He was one to boast that no better arguments against the early Christians could be found & made, than from citing their own books. So the question would then be: Did he also have copies of Marcion's & other rival Christians' writings? Perhaps even Gnostic texts? If he did, to what extent might he have been honest, & willing to sort out all of the conflicting & strange versions of the same variable doctrines & beliefs, from one sect to another? Or would he have not bothered to, & in fact took advantage of the polemics between different sects? Used their rivalries, & strange versions of different beliefs, like Gnostic pre-existence themes, to his advantages, adding his own vilification methods, & twists in vilifying early Christians in general?⁶⁰²

But, as polemics went amongst rival Christian sects, they continued distancing themselves between each other in not only doctrinal themes, but their ritualistic counterparts. The rivalry sometimes got real heated too, as rival Christian sects, thus competing for converts, widened the gaps between each other. Moreover, these polemics might have been one of the reasons why pre-existence themes, because they were popular with the Gnostic sects, fell into disfavor with later Christian church fathers, the Gnostics' rivals. Plus, one of the reasons why about the 3rd-6th c., or so, the rivals against the Gnostics, started to questioning their own versions of pre-existence themes, such as the meanings about how spirits lived in the pre-existence? While others got rid of many of their own pre-existence themes, while retaining, others aspects. Others tried to talk their fellow later Christians out of their beliefs in what had survived & was becoming another faded version of a once pure & simple doctrine, which by those later centuries, late 4th into the 6th c., were in the process of becoming more sounding like fables & taking on more legendized forms. Thus, the later church fathers, who wrote against Gnostic "heresies," distanced themselves from popular Gnostic pre-existence themes, & their strange versions, by making their own versions of the pre-existence to become more & more unpopular, & questionable. These anti-pre-existence themes could have thus been started with the good intentions of trying to sort out versions that contained too many Gnostic elements, as different ones went back & forth between the rivals sects, like Tertullian, 155-240, did. He was a notable early Christian apologist in the Latin west, from Carthage in the Roman province of Africa, & had polemically argued against heresy & contemporary Christian Gnosticism. Tertullian, being of the beliefs of traducianism, (that the spirit didn't pre-exist, but was created at the same time as the body). Was one of the apologists who must have argued against Gnostic pre-existence themes, & others in other sects that did believe in the pre-existence of souls.⁶⁰³ However, he did leave the church sect he once belonged to, to join the Montanists. Thus, he is one example in many of those who went from one sect to join another. Thus, there might have been some exchanges between different sects' members becoming dissatisfied with the teachings of one sect, to then try another, like what goes on today. Gnostics could have left, to join other Christian sects, bringing with them, what they thought was the good from their former faith, & visa versa. As it was, former pagans brought with them some similar beliefs & blended them with the Christian sect they joined, while Christians also became "apostates" from early to later Christianity, to become pagans again. Jews converted to Christianity, & visa-versa.⁶⁰⁴

The results of these types of exchanges, blending, & their bringing in Hellenistic influences, as the Gnostics also had done, with pre-existence themes, etc. It ultimately resulted, (as other areas of early to later Christendom), in cultural contaminations of the doctrines, rituals, & customs. An aspect of the apostasy, which Christ & his prophets & apostles tried to counter, knowing already, as they prophesied, that the contaminations of their teachings were already underway in their days, & would speed up, once they were gone. Which is why they continued to warn against, & wrote letters against the contaminations from false teachers, philosophy, & heretics, (Matt. 24:21-24, 2 Pet. 1:16, 1 Tim. 4:7, 2 Tim. 4:3-4, Col. 2:8, Eph. 4:10-14, etc). But, now that they were gone, the flood gates of blending was open even more, despite efforts being made to try to stop the blends & keep the doctrines, rituals, & traditions, purer. Under these on going conditions, many beliefs suffered cultural blending contaminations, & pre-existence themes were one of the doctrines that suffered, as different versions developed.⁶⁰⁵ But, before this, the earlier Christians still retained many beliefs in many basic elements about the pre-existence. However, there were those who felt they had to be talked out of it, & felt the need to so distance themselves from Gnostic radical versions of the pre-existence, that the whole doctrine that the church still held to, should be abandoned. Especially Origen's version, for some reason, during the anti-Origenists' movement of the 6th c., his version of the pre-existence became unpopular to believe in, & so different clergy tried to stamp out Origen's interpretations, while many of the same ones who did, still retaining other aspects of pre-existence themes in their later Christian teachings, art works & rituals.⁶⁰⁶

Other Gnostic texts, The Gospel of Philip, & ones like A Valentinian Exposition, also, the Apocryphon of John, plus, the Revelation of Adam, contain numerous pre-existence themes, blended with the journey of the soul themes, & the earthly test themes, plus the rewards for passing the tests in mortality, that of the return to glory ßNit's descent from heaven to start his human experience, after being clothed in a mortal body, or formed from the dust of the earth. A possible example of Adam's spirit's descent from heaven is in an art work that depicts him passing through the mandorla symbol, an almond shaped passage way, in the shape of, & attributed in other cultures as a female's genital-vagina.⁶⁰⁷ () Adopted by historic Christendom, it became the popular symbol for suggesting other realm travel, birth & re-birth, resurrections, descents, ascensions, etc., for they are often seen in realm traveling cases in art works all over historic Christendom, (Adam's descent to life through mandorla, 14th c., Filippo Rusuti, The Creation).⁶⁰⁸ Another example, is of the baby Jesus, depicted in a mandorla type pattern of light that radiates from & around what could perhaps be the spirit of Christ, he having descended from heaven into his mother to be, into Mary's womb, ("Christ in the Virgin's Womb," German carved & painted wood, ca. 1400).⁶⁰⁹

Pre-existence themes continue on, even in creation themes' hand & wrist grips, for God the Father, or the pre-mortal Christ, or a three-faced one body trinity, or trinity with three heads on one body, (as in other cases, still suggesting fragments of Christ's pre-existence, being there as part of the creation, & in the traditional trinity). They, with hand & wrist grips, pull Adam out of the dust of the earth, then later, Eve out of a sleeping Adam's side. Then, there are scenes of baptism by different modes, & baptism's ritualistic counterparts, the white garment, or other colors of garments or baptismal robes. Then baptismal ritualistic types: Christ's descent into hell, the resurrection, which again have their own hand & wrist grasping, like in also Christ's ascension back into heaven, where he is depicted as having descended down from.⁶¹⁰ In some cases, art works were unveiled, during special occasions, to present their holy messages, or, as in later centuries, radiate their relic-magic type powers, so some believed.⁶¹¹ All these images, types, & ritualistic counterparts, helped with illustrating different aspects of the whole journey of the souls. Thus, the journey of the soul included the unveiling of sacred knowledge about the pre-existence, physical life, & where the spirit goes after physical life. At least the mysteries did, like amongst the Gnostic Christians, & in other Christian sects that rivaled each other, on down to later centuries. But then, when pre-existence themes began to be discontinued, argued against, rejected & dropped, they started to fade out of the ritualistic dramas, to a certain extent, except in mystery plays. In many areas, they also started to fade off into later legends & myths, after Emperor decrees, like those of Justinian, who outlawed different aspects of pre-existence themes, during the Council of Constantinople, 553 A.D., as we shall see. Having passed through to the other side, by different types of hand & wrist grips, illustrated in thousands of art works, the initiates or those ascending, are on their way towards understanding the whole journey of their souls from the pre-existence, advancing towards deification. Thus, in art & monuments, the hand & wrist grips sometimes symbolize the assurance that loved ones, married couples will be together again, & that they will greet each other in the after life realms, as depicted on old grave stones. They also are greetings between angelic guides, in some cases, hand & wrist grips done with Christ, or also God the Father's extended hand, or helpful protective saints, like St. Peter at the door to paradise, welcoming souls on Christ's right hand of judgment. Or of being raised up out of the fires of purification, during descents into the lower realms & rescues out of them. They can also symbolized advancements towards deification, like in the resurrection themes of the Anastasis, in iconography. While in pre-existence themes, they can represent the final part of the journey, of going back of the worthy souls, to where their spirits came from, thus, a return to glory. The ultimate reward for enduring the trials, tribulations, tests, sufferings, & as the martyrs' rewards for having endured to the end while going through the mortal tests in each clothed spirits' own physical-body in mortality. The return to glory themes were also passed into the Gnostic Christians' versions of pre-existence theme of the return to glory too. For example, "the presence in man of a divine 'spark' [or spirit, pneuma]... which has preceded from the divine world and has fallen into this world of destiny, birth and death and which must be reawakened through its own divine counterpart in order to be finally restored." The Gnostic version of return to glory themes are tainted with their anti-body beliefs, in that their pre-existence themes are tainted with a version of the spirits' descent from the divine world to have fallen into matter. Their true origin, their pre-existing god-like status, is what has to be re-awakened in them. They must arrive at a point where they find out their close relationship or kinship with the Highest God, & the spark of divinity within themselves, that they'll return to. In another version, God first produces man as a heavenly being of a nature like himself, who then becomes the pattern for the earthly being. In each their own worthless body, they have to struggle out of that prison to be restored again back to their divine origins. The pre-existence themes, blended with deification themes, in the return to glory, after the souls experiences the hard lessons of mortal life, is also in the Hymn of the Pearl.⁶¹²

Like in other branches of Christendom, these different versions blend two concepts, & is also found all over historic Christendom, though in fragmented forms, as time went by. For different pre-existence themes with deification themes, became topics of debate, rejection by many later Christians, & were influenced by the Christological Controversies.⁶¹³ Also, the symbolical hand & wrist grasping in connection with the return to glory themes, that blends pre-existence themes & deification themes, are a big part of the ritualistic, artistic & theatrical dramas for initiates into early to later Christian mysteries. They are also amongst Gnostic Christians' versions of the whole drama, as strange & distorted as they might get from one Gnostic sect, to the next: "Primitive Christianity had its grip, passwords, & degrees of initiations. The innumerable Gnostic gems & amulets are weighty proofs of it. It is a whole symbolical science..."⁶¹⁴ Some of the early to later Christian mysteries & ritualistic types take place, during passing through veils, curtains, or canopies, or in some cases, doors or gates, or in the parting of clouds, like in the case with art depicting many ascensions into heaven.⁶¹⁵ The hand of God, or Christ extends his wounded hand down to not only to receive, but to give, such as blessings, & other finger language symbols. Extends also, if not in receiving souls, then perhaps in art, rare cases of giving pre-existing souls might exist somewhere in historic Christendom. Like the handing down of the law, to Moses, where just a hand extends a book, or tablet.⁶¹⁶ The other areas of the churches, or ancient temples' holy areas, on up to the holy of holies, had curtains to separate different areas being used for further training & enlightenments, of the initiates, & for the prophet-seers.⁶¹⁷ But there were areas that were being blocked off from the unworthy, or from those not doctrinally instructed with the basics & not ready for the higher knowledge, until they had proven themselves more ready to receive the higher instructions in the mysteries. (1 Cor.2:7-10, 3:1-3; 4:1-5, Matt. 7:6, 13:10-13, 16-18, John 16:12, 25).⁶¹⁸ But, upon being proven worthy to thus become part of those initiates who join in knowing more about the pre-existence, the mysteries were also to present the whole-journey of souls, to answer, as the Gnostic versions tried to, to a certain extent, the questions about: Where we came from, why are we here & where are we going after death, & what is our divine potential? The reasons for not remembering the pre-existence, varies, so also do explanations as to the ways & how those memories were blocked off, when spirits entered each their own physical body. In some versions, such as those influenced by the Greek versions of a pre-mortal existence, there's a memory block through a drink of oblivion, or drink of forgetfulness.⁶¹⁹ In other versions, each spirit that descends from heaven to mortal life, passes through a veil of forgetfulness. This is like in ritualistic versions, also illustrated in thousands of art works, of passing through curtains, canopies, doors or gates, or a combination of curtains to come to a door to be knocked on, in ritualistic realm travels. Be they descends down from heaven of spirits who have not yet been born. Or returning spirits going back. Or descents into the lower regions, such as Christ's, prophets,' angels,' John the Baptist's, the Virgin Mary's & saints,' descents into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis.⁶²⁰ These veils, curtains, doors, clouds, etc., represent the divisions of different realms of existences. While different types of hand & wrist grasping are symbolic of passing through those divisions from one realm into another, with sometimes hand symbols giving the pre-existing soul, as in a few modern examples, of heavenly hands giving the baby spirit, & the same hands, receiving the spirit at dead. Or of heavenly hands hand clasping small hands of a child, symbolic of handing down the pre-mortal soul to those in mortal life.⁶²¹ Or receiving back the returning soul at death, as in ancient to modern examples, such as hand symbols on grave stones. Couples greeting each other again, symbolized by hand & wrist grips, in the after life realms, as seen on thousands of hand clasping tomb stones & funeral monuments all over historic Christendom. But, the forgetting process, as far as I know, is for souls, not yet born, whom upon entering mortal physical life, forget their pre-existence self, as to whom they were before they were born. Where as returning souls, upon having a life review of choices, call the encounter with deeds, or weighing of souls in the scales of Judgement, have a recall of all the memories of their mortal life, & perhaps even might recall the memories of their pre-existence life too. As to the reasons for this memory block, or loss, it is done so that it gives us mortals a fresh brand new start, as infants, in a new life, a new school type experience, a new test. For even Christ, our example, also was an infant, & increased in wisdom & stature, & in favor with God & man too, which suggests that even the Son of God, as an infant, had to also learn who he was before his birth, & what his mission was in being born too, to this earth. (Matt. 1:23, Luke 2:40, 52).⁶²²

Mid-2nd c., Gnostic teacher, Theodotus, taught that the Gnostic meaning of one who "knows" is one who has arrived at knowledge of "who we were, and what we have become, where we were or where we were placed, whither we hasten, from what we are redeemed, what birth is and what rebirth."⁶²³ Some Gnostic versions of the whole journey of the soul through different realms of existences, thus lays out for their initiates the full range of the soul's history, from pre-mortal realms in the divine presence, through imprisonment in a degrading tabernacle of flesh, (their anti-body views), and on to a sublime reintegration into the heavens. The whole pre-existence theme, the mortal test--(punishments?). Plus, the eventual deification themes are found in the texts & teachings of different Gnostic sects, even though somewhat distorted, blended with other cultures' versions. And yet, in their various forms, somewhat strange, they still retain, to a certain degree, fragments of themes about the divine nature of the human family, our origin, & our ultimate destiny towards eventual deification, this was their knowing.⁶²⁴

These ancient Gnostic texts, like the Revelation of Adam, or Apocalypse of Adam, John's Apocryphon, the Exegesis on the Soul, the Hypostasis of the Archons, show how prevalent & popular pre-existence themes were interweaved with deification themes too, all with in different Gnostic sects: A multitiered, or several levels & layers of a cosmology of different dominions & areas, are said to be peopled by preexistent angels & eons, or supernatural entities emanating from the Supreme Being. Adam explains how they (Adam & Eve), came from the eternal realm, where they resembled the great eternal angels. Different pre-existence scenarios have some of the angels being cast out of the pre-existence to become descendants of Cain, while others that followed Adam & Eve in their fall into mortality, become descendants of Seth. Even amongst some of the damaged texts, some present pre-existence themes in the ideas that various groups of spirits fall into mortal bodies, & to gain their own experiences in their own good or bad lives in the lineages that they become descendants born into. Keeping in line with Platonic thought & influences, the Gnostic types with pre-existence themes in metaphorical examples of how harsh the soul's fall into a mortal body can be.

How degrading it is for the spirit to be incarnated, for it's like it had lost its protection from being harmed, for as long as the soul was alone with the Father, she remained a virgin. But once fallen into a body, into this mortal life, fallen amongst many robbers, she was defiled, & eventually prostituted herself, giving into one & all. But the Father taking pity on her, & helps her regain & become again as she formerly was. In the Hypostasis, an archon, one in many, learns that she, together with her offspring, are from the Primeval Father, from above, for out of the imperishable Light, that is where their souls had come from. As in other Gnostic texts, the underlining themes are the whole journey of the soul, descent from the pre-existence, challenges, sins, trials of earth life, the cleansing with divine help, to get ready for the return to glory, to return to the former state of deification, Gnostic styles! Again, pre-existence themes blended with deification themes.⁶²⁵

About 200, or later, text, possibly from Greek, translated into Coptic, & like other Gnostic accounts of the fate of the soul. The Exegesis on the Soul, from The Nag Hammadi Library: "Now it is fitting that the soul regenerate herself and become again as she formerly was. The soul then moves of her own accord. And she received the divine nature from the Father for her rejuvenation, so that she might be restored to the place where originally she had been. This is the resurrection that is from the dead. This is the ransom from captivity. This is the upward journey of ascent to heaven. This is the way of ascent to the Father."⁶²⁶

From the Nag Hammadi Library, comes the Gospel of Thomas, "Blessed are the solitary and elect, for you will find the Kingdom. For you are from it, and to it you will return."⁶²⁷

By the 3rd c., the pre-existing church theme, had been assimilated by Christian Gnostics, as was by other earlier Christians too. As different versions of the pre-existence themes developed in different branches of early Christendom, it became one in many points of contentions & rivalries between orthodoxy & Gnostics' definitions & descriptions that competed for acceptance in their textual forms & traditions that were polarizing different ones who came in contact with the different versions, down through the centuries.⁶²⁸

Gnostic versions of the pre-existence were tainted with all kinds of influences & strange interpretations, which upset their rivals, who felt they had distorted the teachings, & made up their own sayings of Jesus, counterfeiting & substituting the truth for apostate "knowledge." The reason for birth, in Gnostic thought, was almost like a descent of the spirit into hell to be imprisoned in "evil matter," the body. Their abhorrence of physical matter, of the physical body, tainted all the physical aspects of Christ's teachings about his own pre-existence, his own physical birth, his physical resurrection, & physical deification. For many Gnostic Christians had argued against all the physical aspects of Christ's & his apostles' teachings, by distorting the meaning of their physical aspects into non-physical, & by distorting their counterpart reminders in the rituals, into their own non-physical symbolism. The physical aspects were interpreted as being spiritual, or illusionary, allegorical, not literal, so that Christ only appeared to have descended from the pre-existence into a body, because in their beliefs, the divine can't be corrupted by taking upon evil matter, or a physical body. Thus, they distorted Christ's incarnation into claiming that it was only a phantom type bodiless form, appearing to be a man, but not one clothed in a physical body.⁶²⁹ The Old Testament God, in Gnostic views, was an demiurge, or the creator of the evil physical world, and those who became awakened through gnosis were redeemed: "In a Gnostic ritual designed to declare independence from the demiurge, the initiate reads: "I am a son of the Father— the Father who had a pre-existence.... I derive being from Him who is pre-existent, and I come again to my own place whence I came forth."⁶³⁰ There are also Gnostic versions about a female producing all things, the spirits of the universe. But in Gnostic writings, like the Great Announcement, mentioned by Hippolytus, in writing against the Gnostics, in his Refutations of All Heresies, there is a male-female power of some kind. The diversity of Gnostic teachers' twists & distorted interpretations, didn't clear up matters of doctrine & beliefs either, but only added to the contradictory confusions. If any, it sounds like fragments of pre-existence themes of the divine parents of a family in heaven concepts were warped into a Father-Mother combined sharing in universal governance & creation. This "divinity," is said to be consisting of a "god" both male-female power. But there are amongst the Gnostic teachers such diversity of interpretations that it gets so confusing & clouded as to what is meant, & what is not meant, what is literal, & what to others was metaphorical. For some say that the divine is to be masculofeminine—the great male-female power. While others claim it's metaphorical, because the divine is neither male nor female. While still another adds to the confusion by suggesting that one can describe the primal Source in either masculine or feminine terms, with the divine to be understood, (if it even can), in terms of a harmonious, dynamic relationship of opposites, (whatever that means). In all this Gnostic mess & confusions are fragments of pre-existence themes, even though blended & distorted amongst their various versions of pre-existence themes' interpretations. Which is further evidences of what happens to doctrines, beliefs, & their ritual counterparts, when different heretics rejected church authority, & there was no living apostles & prophets to keep in check & counter false doctrines, or variants of true ones being distorted by those who have entered into the churches. Or have went off on their own, drawing away disciples, into extreme practices & rituals, that also allowed further misunderstandings of basic pre-existence themes to become strange blends of nonsense, to be retrogressed further on their ways to becoming further legendized beliefs & myths in later centuries! (Eph.4:10-14; 1 John 2:18-26, 1 Cor. 11:18-19; 3:3-5, 2 Pet.1:16, 2 Tim. 4:3-4, 1 Tim.1:4, 4:7, Titus 1:14, Jude 1:4, Col.2:8).⁶³¹

End of 3rd beginning of 4th c., probably composed in Alexandria, a text from Codex II, & parallel text from Codex XIII, a tractate with the modern title of: On the Origin of the World, is another garbled Gnostic blend, suspected of being influenced by all kinds of cultural contaminations & influences of the area & times it is said to possibly be from. The blend of influences includes: Jewish thought, Manichaean motifs, Christian ideas, Greek or Hellenistic philosophical and mythological concepts, magical and stroligical themes, and elments of Egyptian lore, which may have been where the original Greek text was composed. Its from an unknown Gnostic sect, but tainted with reminiscences of Sethian, Valentinian, and Manichaean themes. Some of the possible garbled pre-existence themes here blend so much from different cultures, that it becomes difficult to figure out where one culture's influence begins, & another is mixed in to run along side the theme, or end it. There are references to light's triumphs over darkness. Of immortals and those who came into being after them, like what is above, which is a veil which separates men and those belonging to the sphere above. Whatever that's supposed to mean, but it seems some possible veil lore might have been thrown into the mix. Slight fragments of possible war in heaven themes with one Yaldabaoth, thinking & boasting he's the only god & that no other exists. Almost arriving at a coherent pre-existence theme of like how

Satan sought to take over God the Father's throne, this Gnostic concoction has the First Father exalted himself, and was glorified by the whole army of angels. And all the gods and their angels gave him praise and glory. And he rejoiced in his heart, and he boasted continually, saying to them, perhaps gathered around as if in a council not mentioned, that he didn't need anything. He boasts that he was god & no other existed. In saying this, it was a sin against all of the immortal imperishable ones, and they protected him. Pistis Sophia spoke up angrily, "You err, Samael," she goes on to point out that there is an enlightened, immortal man who existed before him, & that will this will appear in "your molded bodies." Thus, possible hints to a fragment of a pre-existence theme, if this immortal man existed before appearing in molded bodies. Or is representing humanity, then the immortal spirits of humanity existed before their bodies were molded. She goes on to warn that he will be trampled by him & will go down to his mother in the abyss. Further on a sort of garbled fragment of a war in heaven is hinted to in that some get jealous of others light & powers, so they made a great war in the seven heavens. Pistis seeing the war sent seven archangels from her light to one Sabaoth, who had received light & great authority. The results of the victorious are the establishments a kingdom & changes in ranks amongst the gods, some now lower than before. More creations take place, supposedly in an eighth heaven, & amongst different creatures & animals are formed, is what sounds like a hint to the pre-existent church, (thus, from early Christians contributions into this who mix). For its "an angelic church— thousands and myriads, without number, (belong to her)— being like the church which is in the eighth [heaven]. And a first-born called "Israel" i.e. the man who sees god," and (also) having another name, "Jesus the Christ," who is like the Savior who is above the eighth, sits at his right upon an excellent throne...." On his left is the virgin of the holy spirit. They are surrounded by 7 virgins and holy spirits & 30 other virgins, and all the armies of angels that glorify him with praise and musical instruments. So the assembly is like a possible fragment to the pre-existence theme, that of the council in heaven. A somewhat clear creation of Adam & Eve theme, is included, & yet also containing blends from other cultures. Another fragment of pre-existence hints is in the closing line: "For it is necessary that everyone enter the place from whence he came. For each one by his deed and his knowledge will reveal his nature."⁶³²

JUSTIN MARTYR, 110-65 A.D., attempts to explain to the Rulers of the Roman Empire, that evil demons had misrepresented early Christians' doctrines, etc., because the demons had counterfeited the divine things of God. He went on to argue how Christ's mission was predicted by the true prophets, & the predictions were also counterfeited by the demons, or fallen angels.⁶³³ "And these things were said both among the Greeks & among all nations where they [the demons] heard the prophets foretelling that Christ would specially be believed in; but that in hearing what was said by the prophets they did not accurately understand it, but imitated what was said of our Christ, like men who are in error, we will make plain."⁶³⁴ Note that the demons-fallen angels (pre-existence themes), counterfeited the prophecies & what was said by the true prophets among all nations! There were prophets in other nations, & they had foretold of Christ, thus other nations weren't neglected! If those fallen angels had counterfeited what the true prophets said, & set up counterfeits of their own, then that's why there were parallels to the true things the true prophets preached, & what Christ later restored, during his earthly ministry. Consequently, these were the answers to at least a few early anti-Christian charges: The charge that Christ neglected other nations. That other nations didn't have prophets. Plus, that early Christianity was but a copy of pre-Christian time paganism that sounded similar in many ways to what Christ did.⁶³⁵ Hence, Justin's use of pre-existence themes in other areas too, has him amongst the early Christian fathers that supported the beliefs, although some have suggested that his ideas about the human soul are difficult to determine. Having been schooled in philosophy, he admires Plato's version of the pre-existence, & accepts his doctrine that "the soul [is] also divine and immortal, and a part of that very regal mind." Some modern sources refer to Justin as one of the "pre-existiani," or supporters of the belief in human pre-existence.⁶³⁶

In his 2nd Apology, addressed to the Roman Senate, Justin wrote about the fall & transgressions of some of the angels of heaven. Justin reflects rabbinical ideas in some of his comments about the fallen angels who had demons from captive women on the earth. He wrote that the demons had set up magical arts, & perverted the human family evil works. Justin also suggests that Christ is the first born of all creation. He pre-existed, & was a 2nd God, but not above the Father, for the Father was the Most High God. An early anti-Christian Jew named Trypho couldn't accept this early Christian doctrine that Christ had pre-existed, had talked to their prophets of old, & had then come to earth. Justin cites from the scriptures to show how this was so. Christ's atonement makes it possible for them to be able to be healed of the ill effect of sin, & thus the soul would be restored to the realm from which it came from, or would be able to return to God who gave it. Justin mentions the fallen angels again, & then later suggests that the "Us" mentioned in the scriptures (Gen. 1:26), showed a plurality of Gods in a literal way, & not in a symbolical way as others had suggested. He also says that it shows that the pre-existing Christ was involved in the creation of our first parents.⁶³⁷

Toward the end of his Dialogue With Trypho, Justin wrote that God, made men and angels free. But he wrote of them as having "...not existing formerly, [but] do now exist..." There is no indication that Justin was teaching Traducianism, the belief that the soul & body were created at the same time, thus, no pre-existence for the soul. However, if he was, then he was like other early Christian fathers, like Tertullian, who taught other aspects of pre-existence themes, while suggesting that the spirit was created at the same time the physical body was.⁶³⁸ For, Justin, if one, he is like other Traducianism early Christian Fathers, who go on with other aspects of the pre-existence themes: Men & angels are therefore free to choose, & sometimes they sin. In which case they will be judged accordingly, thus teaching the aspect of the pre-existence about free-agency.⁶³⁹

Justin, like Irenaeus, Tertullian, & a few others, believed in many aspects, sometimes having differences of opinions on different aspects. However, in the case with Justin, instead of Traducianism, does he mean that the angels & the souls of men do not exist in the pre-existence until the time that they were created by God, in that pre-existence? Whatever might be the case, it's a reasonable question when we also considered other themes about the pre-existence that is found in his & other Traducianism early Christian fathers. Such as how that Christ is often called "the first born." This is understood to mean that he was the first born spirit to be born before all others in the family in heaven.⁶⁴⁰

In other areas of Justin's writings, he at least, indicates that he was contemplating the possibility of the soul's existence before mortal birth: "If the world is begotten, souls also are necessarily begotten; and perhaps at one time they were not in existence, for they were made on account of men and other living creatures, if you will say that they have been begotten wholly apart, and not along with their respective bodies" (ANF, 1:197).

Reflecting Rabbinical traditions, Justin Martyr wrote in his 2nd Apologia, that: "God confided the care of men and of things terrestrial to angels. But the angels, violating this order, had commerce with the women and had by them children who are the demons."⁶⁴¹

"...God, when He had made the whole world, & subjected things earthly to man, & arranged the heavenly elements... [God] committed the care of men & of all things under heaven to angels whom He appointed over them. But the angels transgressed this appointment, & were captivated by love of woman, & begat children who are those that are called demons; & besides, they afterwards subdued the human race to themselves, partly by magical writings, & partly by fears & punishments they occasioned, & partly by teaching them to offer sacrifices, & incense, & libations, of which things they stood in need after they were enslaved by lustful passions; & among men they sowed murders, wars, adulteries, intemperate deeds, & all wickedness. Whence also the poets & mythologists, not knowing that it was the angels & those demons who had been begotten by them that did these things to men, & women, & cities, & nations, which they related, ascribed them to god himself, & to those who were accounted to be his very offspring, & to the offspring of those who were called his brothers, Neptune & Pluto, & to the children again of these their offspring. For whatever name each of the angels had given to himself & his children, by that name they called them." Justin also wrote that it was by the name of Jesus, the Christians had exorcized demons out of people who were possessed. He went on point out that even though the demons had opposed the work of Christ, they will eventually be shut up in the eternal fire, as the prophets had predicted.⁶⁴²

Justin's The Discourse To The Greeks: The soul upon making its pilgrimage to earth life, had become ill because of sin. But that the Word, Christ, drives these ills out, & other negative vices of sin, to the point where the soul becomes calm & serene. And in being thus set free from these ills, the soul "returns to Him who made it. For it is fit that it be restored to that state whence it departed, whence every soul was or is."⁶⁴³ The return to glory themes is a common theme in ancient Christianity that blends pre-existence themes in with deification ones. For, the soul would be glorified with the glory which it had "before the world was" (John 17:5) As in the case with Christ? Plus, as in the case with Adam & Eve, who are told that after Christ comes to rescue them, & lift them up by hand & wrist grasps, out of the underworld, they would be restored to their former state of glory, being bright glorious beings before their fall.⁶⁴⁴

Ecclesiastes 12:7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Later, Origen, (3rd cent. A.D.), wrote in his response to Celsus, about the total destruction of evil, & a restoration to righteousness of every soul. This was one of the beliefs that got Origen in trouble with later Christians.⁶⁴⁵

Christ prayed to the Father that He would restore Him to His former state of glory that He had step down from, while in the earthly body of His birth to Mary, (Phil. 2:5-15). Thus, the glory that Christ had before his birth, & while in the pre-existence, would be restored. "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world began." John 17:5.

Justin Martyr, Hortatory Address to the Greeks, Justin points to parallels between the Greek traditions. Plus legends, writings, & that of the sacred scriptures. Justin attempts to show the Greeks that they had similar beliefs. Thus the Greeks should not be so quick to reject Christianity, or they would also have to reject some of their own beliefs as well. He argues that some of their Greek stories and legends are imitations of the things found in scripture. During Justin's time on into the early centuries: "The Greek gods were regarded as demons by the early Christians, but the ideas which found expression in the mythology of Greece, in the tales of Greek deities and heroes, were retained and Christianised. The old Greek saviours changed names and became Christian saints, or at least contributed important features to the legends of their lives."⁶⁴⁶ Justin notes parallels already in existence, between early Christian beliefs, pagans, & Greeks, etc., but used pre-existence themes, when he attributes them to post fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels. Consequently, the demons had set up the counterfeits. They'd been working themselves in as counterfeited gods amongst the Greeks & other nations where they'd heard the true prophets preaching, & thus counterfeited what was said by them.⁶⁴⁷ After giving some parallels as examples, Justin wrote: "And the same holds good regarding the enemy of mankind who was cast out of heaven, whom the Sacred Scriptures call the Devil, a name which he obtained from his devilry against man, & if anyone would attentively consider the matter, he would find that the poet, [Homer] though he certainly never mentions the name of "the devil," yet gives him a name from his wickedest action. For the poet, calling him Ate, says that he was hurled from heaven by their god, just as if he had a distinct remembrance of the expressions which Isaiah the prophet had uttered regarding him. [Isa. 14:12-20]. He wrote thus in his own poem:-- "And, seizing by her glossy locks the goddess Ate, in his wrath he swore that never to the starry skies again, & the Olympian heights, he would permit the universal mischief to return. Then, whirling her around, he cast her down to earth. She mingling with all works of men, caused many a pang to Jove."⁶⁴⁸

Justin compares the writings of Moses with Plato,-- an early Greek Philosopher, claiming Plato borrowed from Moses. Thus, the Greeks' versions of the pre-existence were derived from Moses: "God created the heaven & the earth." An "...earth which we perceive by the senses, & which God made according to the pre-existent form.... And so also concerning man: Moses first mentions the name of man, & then after many other creations he makes mention of the formation of man, saying, "And God made man, taking dust from the earth." (Gen. 2:7). "He thought, accordingly, that the first so named existed before the man who was made, & that he who was formed of the earth was afterwards made according to the pre-existent form."⁶⁴⁹

Trypho the Jew, rejecting Christ's pre-existence, said to Justin that their (Trypho's) teachers had taught them that the early Christians utter "...many blasphemies, in that you seek to persuade us that this crucified man was with Moses and Aaron, and spoke to them in the pillar of the cloud; then that he became a man, was crucified, and ascended up to heaven, and comes again to earth, and ought to be worshiped."⁶⁵⁰

Justin: Christ "...was before the morning star and the moon, and submitted to become incarnated, and be born of this virgin of the family of David, in order that, by this dispensation, the serpent that sinned from the beginning, and the angels like him may be destroyed, and that death may be contemned, and forever quit, at the second coming of the Christ Himself, those who believe in Him and live acceptably,... shall exist in freedom from suffering, from corruption, & from grief, & in immortality."

Justin later on: "...He pre-existed, and submitted to be born a man of like passions with us, having a body, according to the Father's will in this last matter alone is it just to say that I have erred, and not to deny that He is the Christ, though it should appear that He was born man of men, and (nothing more) is proved (than this), that He has become Christ by election."

Justin, further on: "...this Offspring, which was truly brought forth from the Father. Was with the Father before all the creatures, and the Father communed with Him; even as the Scripture by Solomon has made clear, that He whom Solomon calls Wisdom, was begotten as a Beginning before all His creatures and as Offspring by God, who has also declared this same thing in the revelation made by Joshua the son of Nave (Nun)." (Josh. 5:13 & 6:1-2).

Justin testified: "...this [Christ] existed before the sun, and those of your nation who are saved shall co-endure with the sun, and before the moon unto all generations; and so on until, 'His name endureth before the sun, and all nations shall call Him blessed.... [By David] it is declared that He would come forth from the highest heavens, and again return to the same places, in order that you may recognise Him as God coming forth from above, and man living among men; and (how it is declared) that He will again appear, and they who pierced Him shall see Him..."⁶⁵¹

The Wisdom of Solomon also seems to reflect the idea that a person's pre-mortal life can influence how they enter mortal life. If they had sinned in the pre-existence, they might enter into less favorable conditions & circumstances in mortal life. Just like how what one does in this life has a say in the conditions & outcome of what happens in the next life. "As a child I was born to excellence, and a noble soul fell to my lot; or rather, I myself was noble, and I entered into an unblemished body..." David Winston, in his commentary, says that "we must conclude that the words "I entered an undefiled body" are meant to suggest the preexistence of souls of varying spiritual capacities, and that in the case of Solomon it was a noble soul that had taken the initiative of entering an undefiled body."⁶⁵² The comment is made concerning verse 19 that: "This is as clear a statement of the concept of preexistence souls as one could wish, and there is no need to explain it away as many commentators have done."⁶⁵³

Though this might not be a correct belief, it still was one held by even some of Christ's disciples, as noted, for some believed that the conditions of different body types, such being born blind, (John 9:2), reflected the types of sins done in the pre-existence. Justin Martyr follows this line of belief too when he suggested that the "fallen angels have grosser bodies than do good angels."⁶⁵⁴

Later, Origen wrote about this same type of belief, and then later at the council at Constantinople, 553 A.D., this issue about the type of body, dark skinned fallen angels, was rejected by this council. The belief, by this time was so wide spread that thousands of art works depicting demons, often showed them as dark skinned, often black skinned monstrous subhuman type creatures, especially as beliefs faded off into later fables.⁶⁵⁵ Justin say that the reason why some of the angels fell from grace, was because they had misused their free will.⁶⁵⁶

Trypho charge of the many "blasphemies" against the early Christians was that they "...assert that angels sinned and revolted from God."⁶⁵⁷ Justin gives numerous scriptural examples, from Zechariah, Job, & David, to illustrate pre-existence themes found in Jewish scriptures about how the angels came to stand before the Lord, and the devil came with them. Here is reference to the common pre-existence theme of the council in heaven, sometimes depicted in numerous early to later Christian writings, art works & mystery plays.⁶⁵⁸ All of these examples were mentioned to show how the wicked angels sinned & had fallen because they had revolted against God.⁶⁵⁹

Justin: Christ's pre-existence as "...the first-begotten of all creation [who] should become incarnate by the Virgin's womb, and be a child..."⁶⁶⁰ Trypho wonders how early Christians maintain that Christ can be demonstrated to have been pre-existent, who is filled with the powers of the Holy Ghost, which the Scripture by Isaiah enumerates, & could be born a man to the Virgin. Justin mentions the 'free will' that both the human family & angels were endowed with. Thus, making reference to another pre-existence theme, free-agency. But in having free-will to choose, they would also be judged according to their choices, as with all. Satan, having chosen to become an apostate angel, was thus named Satan, which means the apostate.⁶⁶¹

Justin goes on to present more evidences for the case, that Jesus pre-existed, was "the angel of the Lord," Son of God, who ministered the will of God the Father. How Christ, was born of the Virgin, conversed with Moses, & thus pre-existed. He was the divine messenger from the presence of the Father. Christ is the Word, who carries the tidings of the Father. How that there was more than just one God involved in the creation, for the Father was one of the Gods, & the Son Jesus Christ was the 2nd God. In the Genesis account of the creation drama, the Father was there, but also the Son Jesus Christ was there too. He interpreted the Genesis account, (Gen.3:22), as being literal, & not figurative as "the sophists" claimed. In citing this scripture, Justin builds his case for the pre-existing Christ, as being one of the "Us" mentioned, in that the plurality of the wording suggested a plurality of Gods. From the Book of Wisdom, he shows not only the pre-existence of Christ, but to also show that Christ was numerically distinct from the Father who had begotten Christ, before the creation of the world. Justin used Proverbs 8:22 as scriptural proof text to testify that Christ was before the earth was formed & before other things on it were made. Justin followed with: "When I repeated these words, I added: "You perceive, my hearers, if you bestow attention, that the Scripture has declared that this Off-spring was begotten by the Father before all things created; and that that which is begotten is numerically distinct from that which begets, any one will admit." For Justin, "wisdom" was one of the titles for the pre-existing Christ. Hinting to the war in heaven drama, he charged the Jews & Trypho as being part of the "...host of the devil, through the aid ministered to them by you..."⁶⁶² Justin believed that the when the early Christians died in the faith, they go "...to fill up the heavenly ranks left vacant by the fallen angels."⁶⁶³ Some later Christian artworks, depicting the council in heaven, show vacant seats, & some angels in the process of falling out of them, others falling, others crashing down into the world to crash through into the underworld. One belief was that God created the human family to fill the vacancy created by some of the angels' fall from heaven.⁶⁶⁴

Different early church fathers argued that the Greeks had taken many of their concepts from the Hebrew scriptures, which is why they had their own version of the pre-existence. "So Numenius of Apamea (fl. 150 CE) could implicitly suggest that his teachings, like the doctrine of the soul's descent into the world, while found in Greek philosophy, were actually biblical in origin."⁶⁶⁵

More on ancient Gnostic Texts. Other world or realm pilgrimages & travelers are often mentioned in ancient documents as descents, ascensions, passers-by, pilgrims, strangers, wanderers, & seeds, etc. Because souls came from another world, they are only "passersby" in the present one (Gospel of Thomas, Log. 42). The soul's descent into a body emerged as one of the leading themes in the newly-discovered Nag Hammadi library, found in Upper Egypt in 1946. They give us some samples of Gnostic versions of early Christian doctrine during the early second through fourth centuries. The Gospel of Philip 140 A.D., says: "Blessed is he who is before he came into being. For he both was and shall be" (Saying 57). The Gospel of the Egyptians says that the souls of the

Elect are from "the great incorruptible race which has come forth through three worlds" (60:25- 61:1). Together with their offspring, they "are from the Primeval Father; from Above, out of imperishable Light, their souls are come" (Hypostasis of the Archons 96:19-22). "They came forth from the Father like children who are from a grown man" (Gospel of Truth 27:12-15). In other documents, those that get to learned of their pre-existence, say: "...I am from the Pre-existent Father, and am a son of the Pre-existent One... (I go) to the place from which I have come; there I shall return" (1st Apocalypse of James 33:21-34:19).⁶⁶⁶

In ancient ritual settings of both Gnostic, early Christianity, & Jewish versions, what happens to ritualistic garments, are types of what happens to the soul & body. In some cases, the garment being a type of pre-existence soul that is clothed upon in a body, when it descends from the heavenly realm. Keeping the garment clean, or if soiled by sins, but washed clean, such things are types of keeping the soul unspotted, or if spotted by sins, thus cleansed. Thus, the different types of washing rituals, & often, the white-garments, as types of purity.⁶⁶⁷

The Gospel of Philip: Mid second to third century, in Greek, possibly in Syria, the Coptic translation, found in the Nag Hammadi Library, contains New Testament passages with Gnostic Valentinian notions. Thus, the pre-existent form or type of body preserved in the Chamber of Creation, with which the spirit is invested when about to go down into life earthly, is similar to the form of the physical body. However, the spirit is said here to be "winged." There are two classes of spirits, "the spirits that have been created and have returned" and "the spirits that have not yet been created".⁶⁶⁸ "The light and the darkness, life and death, right and left, are brothers one for another."⁶⁶⁹ The two extremes, two ways, of battles between heavenly & earthly family members: Or between brothers, sisters, fathers & mothers. Some choosing the light, other the darkness, some going down the right path, others the left. These ancient themes show up in not only Gnostic versions of the whole pilgrimage of the souls of the family, through different realms of existences, but also in early to later Christianity. The war in heaven was between pre-mortal life family members, a war that continues in mortal life & other realms too.⁶⁷⁰

The second century Gnostic heretical sect, the Elcesaites: At its head was one Saturninus of Antioch, who was one of the first Gnostic chiefs. But its founder was one, Elxai, a Jew, during Emperor Trajan's reign, 98-117 A.D. Whatever might be their leadership, as a Jewish or early Christian Gnostic sect, their pre-existence theme blends Platonic anti-body type dogmas in with different pre-existence themes from other questionable sources. Like others, who rejected the physical birth of Christ as being real, the Elcesaites' version has the pre-existing Christ being sent down into a body that only appeared to be a real human body. According to Saturninus, this Being was sent to destroy the empire of the material principle. Saturninus was said to have preached these sorts of things in Syria, but mainly at Antioch, during the 2nd c. A.D.

Thus, Saturninus of the Elcesaites Gnostic heretics: "...He held the doctrine of two principles, from which proceeded all things; one a wise and benevolent deity; and the other, a principle essentially evil, which he supposed to be under the superintendence of a certain intelligence of a malignant nature." The world and its first inhabitants were (according to the system of this raving philosopher) created by seven angels, who presided over the seven planets. This work was carried on without the knowledge of the benevolent deity, and in opposition to the will of the material principle. The former, however, beheld it with approbation, and honoured it with several marks of his beneficence. He endowed with rational souls the beings who inhabited this new system, to whom their creators had imparted nothing more than the mere animal life; and, having divided the world into seven parts, he distributed them among the seven angelic architects, one of whom was the god of the Jews, and reserved to himself the supreme empire over all. To these creatures, Whom the benevolent principle had endowed with reasonable souls, and with dispositions that led to goodness and virtue, the evil being, to maintain his empire, added another kind, whom he formed of a wicked and malignant character ; and hence arose the difference observable among men. When the creators of the world fell from their allegiance to the Supreme Deity, God sent from heaven, into our globe, a restorer of order, whose name was Christ. This divine conqueror came clothed with a corporeal appearance, but not with a real body ; he came to destroy the empire of the material principle, and to point out to virtuous souls the way by which they must return to God. This way is beset with difficulties and sufferings, since those souls, who propose returning to the Supreme Being after the dissolution of this mortal body, must abstain from wine, flesh, wedlock, and, in short, from every thing that tends to sensual gratification, or even bodily refreshment." Saturninus taught these extravagant doctrines in Syria, but principally at Antioch, and drew after him many disciples by the pompous appearance of an extraordinary virtue."⁶⁷¹

IRENÆUS, 120-202 A.D. Anti-heretic & early Christian Apologist, wrote Against Heresies, 182--188 A.D. He presents his own versions of the pre-existence. He, like Tertullian, seems to have believed some aspects of the stories of the pre-existence, while rejecting other aspects, & those versions as told by some of the Greeks, & other rival Christians whom he considered to be heretics.⁶⁷²

Dr. Hugu Nibley notes that "...the editors of the Patrologiae Graecae note that various fathers of the church represented every interpretation of the doctrine, [the pre-existence], from absolute acceptance to absolute denial. Most of the fathers temporized somewhere in between. Again, this is a good indication that we are dealing with an authentic teaching of the early church, since the early fathers are all for it. The later ones don't know; they are not so sure."⁶⁷³ If the later Christian fathers started to not be so sure about the interpretations about the pre-existence, what might the later Gnosticism & other heretics might have done to further legendize their different blends of the beliefs?

Irenaeus wrote of "...the angels who transgressed & became apostates, together with the ungodly, & unrighteous, & wicked, & profane among men..." Again, the fallen angels are called apostates.⁶⁷⁴ Later on in his first book, Irenaeus objects to other rival Christians' interpretations: "...And they instruct them, on their reaching the principalities & powers, to make use of these words: 'I am a son from the Father -- the Father who had a pre-existence, and a son in Him who is pre-existent.... For I derive being from Him who is pre-existent, & I come again to my own place whence I went forth.'..."⁶⁷⁵

Gnostics' versions claim that: "...I derive my being from who was pre-existent, and I go again to that which is my own, whence I came from."⁶⁷⁶ Irenaeus, opposed to the gnostic views, replaced the demiurge by the Devil, of which he thought was "a rebel angel, having fallen by pride and arrogance, envying God's creation" (Adv. Haer., No. 40). But, he agreed with them on other points, that the Devil had claims on the human family because of our sins. Jesus, however, having paid the debt, has power to redeem us from the Devil's clutches. This judicial system, of Christ paying the debt, & bailing souls out of the spirit prison, was to become a popular theme in thousands of art works. Satan & the demons, often dishonest & corrupt wardens of the spirit prison, try to tip the judgment scales, sometimes by hanging on the left hand side of them, in their post-fall from heaven activities. They failed in their attempts to keep Christ out of hell, for his atoning blood tips back the scales fairly, & thus the soul gets a fair judgment of deeds done, good or bad, when the soul encounters its works. Also, the doors or gates of the spirit prison are kicked down, or burst asunder before Christ glorious presence, when he harrows hell & liberates the spirit prisoners that he's ransomed, or paid their bails. He grasps their hands & wrists & pulls them out of the clutches of the demons, many of which retreat down into the darkness, but can't because Christ's power & brilliance is like unto a thousand suns, lighting up all of the spirit prison.⁶⁷⁷

Irenaeus believes, or at least taught some aspects of the doctrine of the pre-existence, such as how Christ was the first born spirit in a family in heaven. The war in heaven & the fall of Satan & his angels, etc. While at the same time rejecting the interpretations of rival Christian sects. How well did Irenaeus know the doctrines of the rival sects he was writing against? Was he fair in his presentation? Or was he biased? Further evidence of how wide spread the doctrine of the pre-existence was in those days, is seen in how Irenaeus objects to the versions of the Ophites & Sethians. Creation dramas of angels coming down from heaven to fall in love with the first humans on earth, & to eventually have children by the women. Hints & fragments of the story of the fall of the angels, is blended in with what might be rabbinical Jewish elements, of the Nephilims, sometimes spelled Nefilims.⁶⁷⁸

Pre-existence themes had been blended in with others' versions, and were probably added with early Christians' versions to form strange versions of the creation drama. Thus, Adam & Eve were cast out of paradise, Eve is sought after by Ialdabaoth who wants to have children by her. But his wish was opposed by his Mother who secretly emptied Adam & Eve of the light which they had been sprinkled, in order that that spirit which proceeded from the supreme power might participate neither in the curse nor opprobrium, caused by transgression. Irenaeus continued to note how the authors of these heresies, "also teach that, thus being emptied of the divine substance, they were cursed by him, & cast down from heaven to this world." Such a version is said to reflect rabbinical conceits & follies. Irenaeus continues to present these heretical versions: "But the serpent also, who was acting against the father, was cast down by him into this lower world; he reduced, however, under his power the angels here, & begat 6 sons, he himself forming the 7th person, after the example of that Hebdomad which surrounds the father. They further declare that these are the 7 mundane demons, who always oppose & resist the human race, because it was on their account that their father was cast down to this lower world."⁶⁷⁹

Irenaeus objects to what he must have thought was some of the old Greeks' myths & their versions of the journey of the soul into earth life, from a pre-existence: "We may subvert their doctrine as to transmigration from body to body by this fact, that souls remember nothing whatever of the events which took place in their previous states of existence." Irenaeus was of the opinion, that the spirit & body were created at the same time. But, should he thus be included amongst others that held to the traducianism opinion & theory, that the spirit & body was generated at the same time, by the earthly parents?⁶⁸⁰ This version, that sought to answer the origins of souls, as being generated by mortal parents, that the human soul is transmitted from the parents to the children. Such a view, if held by Irenaeus, as it was by Tertullian & Apollinaris, & even some heretics, were not held by other early Christian Fathers that taught the pre-existence of souls, or spirits.⁶⁸¹

Irenaeus elsewhere adds to the evidences of his traducianism type views when he suggests how "the soul was not anterior to the body in its essence, nor, in regard to its formation, did the body precede the soul: but both these were produced at one time."⁶⁸² Consequently, although many pre-existence themes were still intact by the mid 2nd & early 3rd century, many others aspects wouldn't be for long, for the legendization process of turning doctrines into fables was already underway by the second century. But so also was the abandoning of many basic pre-existence themes too. The questions about the lengths of the life of the soul were being challenged, for some thought it couldn't have been like God, who had lived from all eternity before, & would live from all eternity after. As to the soul, then, even though it was believed by different ones like Irenaeus that it could live forever after being created at the same time as the body. It was doubtful that if the soul was immortal before. Only God had a monopoly on the immortality before.⁶⁸³

The immortality of the soul, then, must have been one of the questions of the ages. Where does the soul come from? Was it born to the gods? Was it created at birth, or at the same time as the body? Was it created before birth, living with Divine Parents who created or gave birth to a new being, a spirit son or daughter of those Divine Parents, thus living with them in their glorious heavenly realms, before that spirit was later clothed in a mortal body? Clothed in a body, on some world, as on other inhabitable worlds throughout the universe? Was that which was taking place on this world, also taking place on other far away worlds? Was this why Christ was called the "first born," because he was the first born in a family in heaven? These might have been some of the questions that different early Christians, & others, in other cultures that had pre-existence themes, probably asked, though we now might not have all those types of questions, except a few here & there in the ancient records.

Irenaeus also noticed that his rivals were using the lack of memory of any pre-existence, as evidence for a pre-earth life. In response to this, Irenaeus suggested that the lack of memory, is really "evidence" against the idea of a pre-earth life. Irenaeus must have known that there were some people, who we might speculate, could have been asking during his day, the logical question: 'If the soul had a pre-existence, or lived before birth, why can't we remember that pre-mortal life?'

Irenaeus: "...For if they were sent forth with this object, that they should have experience of every kind of action, they must of necessity retain a remembrance of those things which have been accomplished, ...for the mere union of a body [with a soul] could not altogether extinguish the memory & contemplation of those things which had formerly been experienced... & especially as they came [into the world] for this very purpose.... For if that which is seen only for a very brief space of time, ... is remembered after she has mingled again with the body, & been dispersed through all the members, much more would she remember those things in connection with which she stayed during so long a time, even throughout the whole period of a bypast life."⁶⁸⁴

Irenaeus wasn't alone in dealing with the pre-existence theme of souls being require to forget their pre-mortal life, when clothed in a mortal body. For Tertullian, also part of the opinion of traducianism, also tackles the difficult questions about memory loss. "I cannot allow that the soul is capable of a failure of memory." Tertullian argued. He then goes on with a series of objections as to why. His questions are logical, like those of Irenaeus. Tertullian asks, if the soul is eternal, how can its passage into mortality make it suddenly subject to the passage of time and its vicissitudes (a difficulty or hardship attendant on a way of life), which forgetfulness implies? How &

why does the soul forget, only to remember again? Tertullian continues with wondering how the body might impede recollections. How can forgetting be universal amongst the human family, & yet children are said to have the best memories of some aspects of the pre-existence, being "fresh, unworn souls," but then, Tertullian asks: Why is it to philosophers that Plato imputes the greater power to recollect pre-existence memories?⁶⁸⁵ Centuries earlier, some of the Greek writers had attempted to give an answer to these questions, but of which answers were clouded in mythical stories. Irenaeus challenged these views in a logical manner, reasoning that the spirit would communicate to the body any knowledge or memory of a pre-earth life. He charged that Plato couldn't give a real good answer, & so he invented the notion of "...a cup of oblivion, imagining that in this way he would escape this sort of difficulty. He attempted no kind of proof [of his supposition], but simply replied dogmatically [to the objection in question], that when souls enter into this life, they are caused to drink of oblivion by that demon who watches their entrance [into the world], before they effect an entrance into the bodies [assigned them]. It escaped him, that [by speaking thus] he fell into another greater perplexity. For if the cup of oblivion, after it has been drunk, can obliterate the memory of all the deeds that have been done, how, O Plato, dost thou obtain the knowledge of this fact (since thy soul is now in the body), that, before it entered into the body, it was made to drink by the demon a drug which caused oblivion? For if thou hast a remembrance of the demon, & the cup, & the entrance [into life], thou oughtest also to be acquainted with other things; but if, on the other hand, thou art ignorant of them, then there is no truth in the story of the demon, nor in the cup of oblivion..."

"...If, therefore the soul remembers nothing of what took place in a former state of existence, but has a perception of those things which are here, it follows that she never existed in other bodies, nor did things of which she has no knowledge, nor [once] knew things which she cannot [now mentally] contemplate. But, as each one of us receives his body through the skillful working of God, so does he also possess his soul. For God is not so poor or destitute in resources, that He cannot confer its own proper soul on each individual body, even as He gives it also its special character..." Though Irenaeus seems to not believe other aspects of the pre-existence, such as how the soul did not "previously exist." In the case with Christ, he did believe Christ pre-existed. If so, then a logical question would be if Christ's memory of his pre-existence life as a spirit, was veiled, blocked off, or forgotten? If so, was it so that he would have to also learn of it, & have to find out who he was, as the first born spirit of our Divine Parents, before he was born in a physical body to Mary? Plus, so that he too would also have to "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man"? (Luke 2:52).⁶⁸⁶

Irenaeus: Christ, "...the Word, who existed in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, who was also always present with mankind, was in these last days, according to the time appointed by the Father, united to His own workmanship, inasmuch as He became a man liable to sufferings, [it follows] that every objection is set aside of those who say, "If our Lord was born at that time, Christ had therefore no previous existence." For I have shown that the Son of God did not then begin to exist, being with the Father from the beginning; but when He became incarnate, & was made man, He commenced afresh... the Word of God, descending from the Father, becoming incarnate, stooping low, even to death, & consummating the arranged plan of our salvation..."⁶⁸⁷

Irenaeus: "He [Christ] had a pre-existence as a saving Being, it was necessary that what might be saved should also be called into existence, in order that the Being who saves should not exist in vain.⁶⁸⁸ Irenaeus, like many others, accepted the portion in the pre-existence drama, that speaks of the war in heaven & Satan's apostasy, the doctrine of the "2 ways," & "the left hand path." Irenaeus cites scriptures when he also wrote how the "...Lord also says in the Gospel, to those who are found upon the left hand: 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which my Father hath prepared for the devil & his angels... [Matt 27:41] who is chief of the apostasy, & for those angels who became apostates along with him..."⁶⁸⁹

Irenaeus: Christ defeated his enemy "the dragon," and the "serpent," of which enemies Christ had trampled down under His feet. This theme also shows up in early to later Christian art works with pre-existence themes carried over into Christ's descent into hell dramas, where Christ's old enemies are trampled, or seen under his feet, during the harrowing of hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis, which are based on a number scriptures also.⁶⁹⁰

Irenaeus: The devil is one of the angels that became apostate, who was an enemy on the day when he became jealous of God's creature and sought to get Adam to go against God. He is of the angels meant for the air, they raised up counterfeit mysteries & doctrines amongst the heretics, such as the Valentinians.⁶⁹¹

Irenaeus: Christ, the Son, administering all things for the Father, works from the beginning even to the end, antecedently to Adam, but also before all creation, & is the Word. He cites Enoch's mention of the angels, when they had transgressed, fell to earth for judgment.⁶⁹² Before, during & after Christ's time, ancient scriptures cited to support the early to later Jewish & Christians' versions of pre-existence themes, later Christ's pre-existence, were from the writings of Enoch, & books known as the Pseudepigrapha: "And their dwellings were with the righteous and holy and elect. And at that hour that Son of Man was named in the presence of the Lord of Spirits... [Thus has] He been chosen and hidden before Him, before the creation of the world and forever more."⁶⁹³ Another source for Irenaeus on Christ's pre-existence was Proverbs 8:22-31.⁶⁹⁴

Irenaeus: The human family & angels have free will to choose obedience to God or not. Matthew 13:38, about tares amongst the wheat, was used by Irenaeus as a type of how there were tares, or apostate angels amongst the obedient angels. Thus, eternal fire is prepared for all those who are the tares-children of the wicked ones, who freely choose to follow the devil & his angels' disobedient apostasy.⁶⁹⁵

Irenaeus: The fallen angel-Satan, led Eve astray, so that she fled from God when she had transgressed His word. He claims the name Satan in Hebrew signifies an apostate, who was exposed by Christ, the Word, who showed the apostate angel's true colors, (probably black, as ancient color symbolism of black was often symbolic of negative traits, of the devil & his fallen angels, of death, & of evil deeds). Thus, the apostate angel was destroyed by God's voice, The Word, who vanquished him by keeping God's commandment. For as in the beginning the Devil enticed man to transgress his Maker's law, & thereby got him into his power; yet his power consists in transgression & apostasy, & with these he bound the human family who disobeys God to himself. The Devil, an apostate angel, who caused the apostasy of the angels, also thus darkens the hearts of those who would endeavor to serve him, & gets them to forget the true God, as the Devil has the darkened to adore him as God.⁶⁹⁶

In the Lost Fragments of Irenaeus: Again, he hints to possible disbelief in a "previous existence," for the human family. While other fragments hint to Christ's pre-existence, who proceeded from God as first-begotten of every creature, & how Christ existed before Abraham.⁶⁹⁷

As different beliefs spread & collided, or blended with each others' in the polemics of different early Christian sects, the different aspects of pre-existence themes also were contrasted & thus caused different questions. One issue was the chronology of Satan's fall from heaven.⁶⁹⁸

When and how some of God's angels fell; the sequence of events was different and varied among different early Christian sects. Some believed that the fall of the angel took place before the creation of the world, others, say it took place because Satan was jealous of Adam, hence, it was after the creation. Others believed that some angels fell when they lusted after the daughters of men, and when they had sex with them and produced a race of giants. Others, like Irenaeus, said that other angels fell, at the time of Noah.⁶⁹⁹

Other Fathers on Pre-existence Themes

PASTOR OF HERMAS, 160, considered scriptures by many earliest Christians, & even bound with the New Testament in some codices,⁷⁰⁰ has this on pre-existence themes: "The holy preexistent Spirit which created the whole creation, God made to dwell in flesh that he desired." [Similitude V.6:5]. "And elsewhere he identifies the Spirit with the Son of God." [Hermas, IX.1:I]. Thus, Hermas believed in the preexistence of Christ as the 2 Clements, Barnabas & others did. Thus, "...the preexistent Son of God is identified with Christ..."⁷⁰¹ Shepherd of Hermas, metaphorically calls an "old woman" as being the church that was created first of all, & for her sake the world made. Hinting to the pre-existent church, as noted earlier. Also, Christ's pre-existence as being in the heavenly council with his Father, before the creation of the earth, was noted earlier too. There, God's plan for the future human family was presented, in midst of great glory and rejoicing.⁷⁰² Carl Gustav Adolf von Harnack, (May 7, 1851 – June 10, 1930), a German Lutheran theologian & prominent church historian. Upon noting pre-existence themes in early Christianity, as such themes were also found in the writings of Greek & Jewish Apocalyptists, before earliest Christians, wrote: "...The idea of a kind of pre-existence of the people of Israel... We can still see this process of thought very plainly in the shepherd of Hermas, who expressly declares the world was created for the sake of the Church. In consequences of this he maintains that the Church was very old, and was created before the foundation of the world."⁷⁰³ During the time of the Shepherd of Hermas, the creation out of nothing, dogma, had crept into the teachings of the early Church, & was blended with pre-existence themes too. Thus, in one of his visions, a beautiful lady appears & tells the Shepherd to hear the words of God, who dwells in the heavens & made out of nothing the things that exist. What is pointed out here, is how the church has its roots in the pre-existence, & the type explained is that the Church, (typed as an old woman), was created first of all. On this account is she old, and it was for her sake, or the pre-existing Church, that the world was made.⁷⁰⁴

TATIAN, THE ASSYRIAN, 110-72: In writing to the Greeks, he wrote, God the Father is a spirit which did not begin to be in time. The Father alone is without beginning, and He Himself is the beginning of all things, & is the maker of spirits, & of the forms that are in matter. The Spirit that pervades matter is inferior to the more divine spirit; and this, even when assimilated to the soul, is not to be honored equally with the perfect God. God was in the beginning, the power behind the Logos. The Logos is the first-begotten for before him, no creature was yet in existence. As for the human family, it had not existed before birth. In the case with the Logos it was a different matter, for the Logos had pre-existed with the Father, & been the Framer of angels who were also made free to make choices. Some supposed, (some of the Greeks?), & regarded Satan as the first born, & had declared him to be God, though he was resisting the law of God, then the power of the Logos excluded the beginner of the folly and his adherents from all fellowship with Himself. Was Tatian noting other versions of the pre-existence of his time? He goes on to point out how Christ was made in the likeness of God, since the more powerful spirit is separated from him, becomes mortal. While the first-begotten one, in this case not to be confused with Christ whom Tatian said is the first-begotten. Thus, those whom Tatian suggest think that Satan was the first-begotten? Did they also have a version of the pre-existence where Satan, through his transgression and ignorance becomes a demon? Also, they who imitated him, his illusions, are become a host of demons, and through their free agency to choose, have been given up to their own infatuation.⁷⁰⁵

"God was in the beginning ; but the beginning, we have been taught, is the power of the Logos. For the Lord of the universe, who is Himself the necessary ground (ὑπόστασις) of all being, inasmuch as no creature was yet in existence, was alone ; but inasmuch as He was all power. Himself the necessary ground of things visible and invisible, with Him were all things ; with Him, by Logos-power... the Logos Himself also, who was in Him, subsists.... by His simple will the Logos springs forth; and the Logos, not coming forth in vain, becomes the first-begotten work of the Father, Him (the Logos) we know to be the beginning of the world. But He came into being by participation, not by abscission ; for what is cut off is separated from the original substance, but that which comes by participation, making its choice of function, does not render him deficient from whom it is taken.... [Thus] the Logos begotten in the beginning, begat in turn our world, having first created for Himself the necessary matter, so also I, in imitation of the Logos, being begotten again, and having become possessed of the truth, am trying to reduce to order the confused matter which is kindred with myself. For matter is not, like God, without beginning, nor, as having no beginning, is of equal power with God ; it is begotten, and not produced by any other being, but brought into existence by the Framer of all things alone."⁷⁰⁶

Tatian wrote that there is a spirit in the stars, angels, plants, waters, men, animals, each with their own differences. He also wrote that at death the ascending spirit enters into union with the Divine Spirit, is no longer helpless, but ascends to the regions whither the Spirit guides it. He also warned the Greeks about the demons who would attempt to interrupt their ascension because they were accustoming themselves to follow demons as if they were mighty. For just as a robber seeks to overpower those on a journey, so the demons, going to great lengths in wickedness, have utterly deceived the souls among you Greeks which are left to themselves by ignorance and false appearances. The demons, according to Tatian, set up deceptive scenic representations in order to trick the spirit, & cause the spirit to go down the wrong path during the spirit's ascension & migration to heaven at death. Thus the demons attempt to disable the spirit from rising to the path that leads to heaven. The demons had lost their wings as former angels of God because they had sinned. Like nestling that flutter out of the nest they fall to the ground. Having left the heavenly companionship, it hankers after communion with inferior things. Thus, they were driven forth to another abode & were cast down from heaven. It seems that Tatian believed certain aspects of the pre-existence, while not accepting other aspects.⁷⁰⁷

Theophilus Of Antioch, 115-168-181 A.D., wrote in response to a early anti-Christian named Autolycus, that God created all things out of nothing. "...God, then, having His own Word internal... within His own bowels, begat Him, emitting... Him along with His own wisdom before all things. He had his own Word as a helper in the things that were created by Him, and by Him He made all things." Thus, the pre-existing Christ, is called governing principle, because he rules & is Lord of all things fashioned by Him, he being Spirit of God, & power of the highest, who came down upon the prophets & through them, spake of the creation of all things and the world. Theophilus suggests that though the prophets "were not when the world came into existence," [as to their physical bodies, or as spirits, before each their own mortal birth?] But, Christ the Word was, being Spirit of God. Does this mean that he didn't believe, like other Fathers, that the prophets pre-existed, but that Christ did pre-exist? Proverbs 8:27, & writings of Moses became scriptures that Theophilus used to point out how Christ was the pre-existing Word of God that spoke to & through the Prophet Solomon, & Moses, for examples.⁷⁰⁸ Suggesting, what other early Christian Fathers thought of, God the Father, as not being contained in a single place? But suggesting that it was the pre-existing Christ that was the Word, through which all things were made & who upon assuming the person of the Father and Lord of all, went to the garden of Eden, in the person of God, and conversed with Adam.

"...But what else is this voice but the Word of God, who is also His Son ? Not as the poets and writers of myths talk of the sons of gods begotten from intercourse [with women] ,but as truth expounds, the Word, that always"⁷⁰⁹ exists, residing within the heart of God. For, before anything came into being He had Him as a counsellor, being His own mind and thought. But when God wished to make all that He determined on. He begot this Word, uttereds the first-born of all creation, not Himself being emptied of the Word[Reason], but having begotten Reason, and always conversing with His Reason. And hence the holy writings teach us, and all the spirit-bearing [inspired] men, one of whom, John, says, " In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God," showing that at first God was alone, and the Word in Him. Then he says, " The Word was God ; all things came into existence through Him ; and apart from Him not one thing came into existence." The Word, then, being God, and being naturally produced from God, whenever the Father of the universe wills. He sends Him to any place ; and He, coming, is both heard and seen, being sent by Him, and is found in a place." [Naturally produced is said, in the foot note 7: "That is, being produced by generation, not by creation."⁷⁰⁹

Thus, Theophilus seems to suggest that Christ was a counselor to the Father, before the creation of all things, & was first born, a doctrine that was taught, as noted, by other early Christian Fathers, as were hints to God the Father not being contained in one place. Does he mean that God the Father is a divine spirit without a body, like later Origen suggests?

Early Christian father, Quintus Sepimus Florens Tertullianus, or TERTULLIAN, 145-220 A.D., of Carthage, believed that "...our spirits had no premortal existence, but are propagated, like our mortal bodies, by our mortal parents." Thus, he was amongst the early Christian fathers that believed in Traducianism, that the spirit & body are created at the same time, no pre-existence for the soul.⁷¹⁰ The "...Traducian theory, the spirit of man ...originates with the body from the act of procreation, and therefore through human agency... it is decidedly suitable to the doctrine of original sin; and hence, since Tertullian, it has been adopted by most western theologians in support and explanation of that doctrine."⁷¹¹

Tertullian's reading of Genesis suggests that other pre-existence themes seen later, in Bible illustrations, would be topics that he'd agree with, but only up to a certain point, like the war in heaven & the fall of the rebellious angels. But as to souls' pre-existing? No! For Tertullian, Adam's soul began when God breathed on Adam, it was then that Adam became a living soul, for Adam's soul "originates with the breath of God" and dates to the birth of the body; at the same time, "all souls are derived from one." Adam alone received his soul from God, while on down the line, Adam's descendants' souls, from their parents, both soul & body being created at the same time.⁷¹² Later art works that show Adam coming down from Heaven in the mandorla symbol, the realm travelers' symbol, would have been rejected by Tertullian if he had lived in later centuries, for he argues & refutes all those who "suppose that they came down from heaven" or that "the soul had formerly lived with God."⁷¹³ Yet, Tertullian's inconsistencies in his own teachings of some aspects of the pre-existence, while rejecting others, what he rejects suggests that even in his rejections, we still have evidences for such themes going around Christendom, in order for him to reject their versions. In his The Soul's Testimony, Tertullian seems to note the strengths & weakness of those who present the soul's prehistory, as to "...whether thine existence begins with that of the body, or thou art put into it at a later stage."⁷¹⁴ However, like others early Christian Fathers, he also believed other aspects of the story of the preexistence themes, accepting the writings of Enoch, as restored through Ezra, to be scripture. Thus, he make references to the apostate angels, who transgressed against God, & who became the fallen angels, or "rebel angels". These demons also set up counterfeits against the divine things of God, by counterfeiting baptism & the sacrament, etc.⁷¹⁵ Thus, Tertullian is amongst those, who like in later centuries, wrote about pre-existence themes, that of the post-war in heaven, post fall from heaven activities of the fallen angel-devils at work doing different things amongst the human family. Such as counterfeiting the divine things of Christ, amongst the people of earth, in order to confuse, & discredit, in many minds,⁷¹⁶ the divine true ones revealed by the Prophets, Apostles & Christ. Plus, these apostate angels, notes Tertullian, & others, were attempting to pass their own demonic counterfeits as the "true" ones, & had thus been able to draw away different ones to their devilish counterfeit mysteries, as taught in heretical immoral versions, & secret societies. Tertullian noted that some Christians before & during his time were blending pagan philosophy and scriptures and encouraged adamantly a separation from this type of blend. Consequently, because pre-existence themes were being thrown into the mix, certain aspects of the pre-existence also was rejected by Tertullian. Even the questions people must have been asking, because Heretics had their own versions of the answers, by bringing in their own versions of the pre-existence, to explain the origins of the soul, Tertullian questions their questions. Those who asked about the origins of the soul & in what way does the soul arrives into existence, were asking the very questions that make men heretics. Heretics like Gnostics & their versions of pre-existence themes, such as those of Saturninus, the disciple of Menander, Carpocrates, & Apelles, & Valentinus. Their versions of pre-existence themes, reports Tertullian, were inspired from Plato, who suggests that they came down from heaven. While others tell of how souls were enticed by earthly baits to descend down from their super-celestial abodes, & that a fiery angel did the enticing. Again, deification themes & pre-existence themes also got thrown into the Gnostic mix, for the soul is fortified with divine Wisdom & can recognize in earthly objects echoes of deific powers, or aeons.⁷¹⁷

Tertullian must have noted this theme of counterfeits, in his study of the Enoch literature available to him during his time. But debates were underway during Tertullian's time & onward, that eventually rejected many pre-existence themes, while preserving other aspects, especially ones about fallen angels & their activities on the earth in tempting the human family.⁷¹⁸

Jeffrey Burton Russell notes how that the early Christian "church fathers moved decisively in the direction of defining the Devil as a fallen angel. But this definition left other questions open. To what extent was God responsible for the evil actions of this angel whom he had created? To what extent did God order Satan's activities and to what extent merely tolerate them?"⁷¹⁹ Tertullian notes that even though God had created the Devil, he cannot be blamed for evil, because the Devil had first been created good in his nature. "God created an angel; that angel made himself into the Devil. By his own act he became corrupt."⁷²⁰

Eventually, Tertullian left the early church to join an early Christian sect, to adopt the philosophy of Montanus, who made claims to the spiritual gifts of revelations & prophecies. "The ironic coda of Tertullian's own career in the church was that, having placed himself on the right side (historically speaking) of the pre-existence controversy, the scourge of heretics was himself later denounced as a heretic for joining the Montanist sect in North Africa, then broke with that group to found his own variety of ascetic Christianity."⁷²¹ In Tertullian's The Apology, dated between about A.D. 198–204, & written to the rulers of the Roman Empire: Christ was the first-begotten Word that pre-existed as a Spirit. Then Christ's spirit descended into a certain virgin, and was made flesh in her womb. "...We have been taught that He proceeds forth from God, and in that procession He is generated; so that He is the Son of God, and is called God from unity of substance with God. For God, too, is a Spirit..." Tertullian, being one of the early Fathers to dogmatically write of the Trinity & their oneness, also suggests that Christ's spirit descends into a certain virgin, and was made flesh in her womb. In this, his birth, God and man were united. The flesh formed by the Spirit is nourished, grows up to manhood, speaks, teaches, works, and is the Christ, who is the Logos of God, that primordial first-begotten Word.⁷²²

Later Tertullian acknowledged the fact that certain spiritual essences exist. He notes how the philosophers acknowledge there are demons too. Socrates for example waited on a demon's will. An evil spirit is said to have attached itself to Socrates even from his childhood. The poets were all acquainted with demons too. The common people frequently use the demons for cursing, calling upon Satan, the demon-chief. Plato knew of the existence of angels. Also, those who practice magic come forth to witness that there are 2 types of spirits.⁷²³ However, in the pre-existence controversy, that effected Tertullian's & other later Christians' acceptance or rejection of different aspects of the different pre-existence themes, one of the popular surviving aspects agreed upon by many early to much later Christians, concerned the origins of demons as being fallen angels, though the chronology times of their fall varied.⁷²⁴ However, though demon-evil-spirits existed, Tertullian wasn't willing to admit that the human soul existed prior to the body, for in his stand against Greek philosophy that suggested that souls did pre-exist before each their own physical body, that aspect of pre-existence themes, Tertullian rejects & counter argued against. This he did in different areas of his writings, even though Tertullian also uses Greek philosophers for the parts of the pre-existence that he looked for supportive sources for, in other areas of his writings. Thus, Tertullian opposed Plato's doctrine of pre-existence, when Tertullian wrote his work on the Resurrection, about c. 208. His anti-pre-existence traducianism views had him again suggesting that the flesh & soul had a simultaneous birth, both generated in the womb at the same time, for they are so entirely one, that neither is before the other in point of time.⁷²⁵

Tertullian also write elsewhere: "...We are instructed, moreover, by our sacred books how from certain angels, who fell of their own free-will, there sprang a more wicked demon-brood, condemned of God along with the authors of their race, and that chief we have referred to. It will for the present be enough, however, that some account is given of their work. Their great business is the ruin of mankind. So, from the very first, spiritual wickedness sought our destruction. They inflict, accordingly, upon our bodies diseases and other grievous calamities, while by violent assaults they hurry the soul into sudden and extraordinary excesses...." Tertullian: Demons or fallen angels bring about the ill-effects in nature, killing different fruits as they grow, they spread poison around in the air, etc. Both the angels and demons are able to travel from place to place, & the world is as one place to them, because of their wings. The demons, upon hearing the readings of the true prophets, take & use those words to set up counterfeit & rival imitations of the things of God. For "...they gather them still from their [the true prophets'] works, when they hear them read aloud. Thus getting, too, from this source some intimations of the future, they set themselves up as rivals of the true God, while they steal His divinations." They had counterfeit miracles too, in so doing this, they attempt to pass themselves off as "gods" when they are not.⁷²⁶

More pre-existence themes about the fallen angels, make up Tertullian's version: Those who consult astrologers, soothsayers, augurs, and magicians, are delving into the arts made known by the angels who sinned, arts forbidden by God, which early Christians do not even make use of in their own affairs.⁷²⁷ In An Answer to the Jews, Tertullian wrote to the early anti-Christians amongst the Jews how that Christ, the Son of God, pre-existed, for he spake to Moses. The "angel" that went before the people of the exodus, who protected them, was the Christ.⁷²⁸ He equated Lucifer with Satan in his Against Marcion.⁷²⁹

Father Louis Coulange notes that many early Christian fathers, did not think of enlightening us as to the state of Satan before his fall. And that those who did pay attention to this subject, indicated, that Satan was, in the beginning, the first of the angelic spirits. Tertullian saw a type of Satan in the King of Tyre, mentioned in Ezekiel 28:12. How the Devil was born the wisest of all the angels, was good, but became evil by his will, before being the Devil. Hence, before his fall, Satan-the Devil, according to this type was full of wisdom and perfect in beauty, because he was the most eminent of the angels, even the chief of the angels, the wisest of all. But, acting out of Free will, or free agency, & choosing evil, he fell. Many other early Christian Fathers saw a type of Satan in the King of Tyre too.⁷³⁰

Minucius Felix, 150–210 A.D., towards the end of the second century, was a rhetorician and lawyer at Rome, who drawing upon Platonism, blurred the distinctions between classical Greek versions of demons, & the versions of the early Christians. The philosophers, like the Christians, recognized the existence of unclean and wandering spirits degraded from their heavenly status by earthly filth and lust.⁷³¹ Another belief, that was a controversial one, but of which shows up in later art works, is the one that illustrates what happened to the angels when they fell from heaven. "When the evil angels fell, they lost their simplicity of substance and took on a substance half-way between mortal and immortal."⁷³²

PRE-EXISTENCE THEMES REJECTED, ABANDONED, & AFFECTED BY DIFFERENT CONTROVERSIES

Over the centuries that followed, the doctrine of the pre-existence, with different pre-existence themes, would be met with different levels of acceptance, modifications, & rejection. Especially, as different early to later Christian sects sought to establish their versions, & widens the gaps between those they called heretical, (each calling the other heretical, apostate, false & against the truth, (their versions of truth). Some also allowed themselves to be polemically influenced to not only abandon some aspects of the pre-existence, to widen the gap between their sect & their rivals. But allowed even the removal, altering, & rewording of the different New Testament manuscripts (in the Greek & Latin), to counter their rivals' versions of Christological concepts. Some changes were made to dogmatically defend Christ's divinity & pre-existence. While other changes were made to claim he was not divine, didn't pre-exist, but was a mere man, born to Joseph & Mary, but was adopted later, because of his unique righteousness, as the Son of God, (either at his baptism or resurrection), as "Adoptionists" argued.⁷³³

During the first two centuries, the pre-existence themes, or of "sent ones," or being "sent down," or "he went down," from heaven, (all pre-existence themes),⁷³⁴ crashed into Christological issues, such as the anti-body dogmas. Thus, phases that conflicted with anti-body themes, were changed: "Phrases like "he saw" or "he went down" were changed to "he revealed himself". For the ascetic reformers must have reasoned & asked: 'How or why would God need to go "down" if he is already everywhere, without shape or form of a man?'⁷³⁵

Pre-existence themes were inseparable with the understanding that God is a personal being, as taught & defended by the earliest Christians. While in contrast, with later Christological controversial issues: A God who is a spirit essence can hardly be the Father of spirit children in any but the most mystical of senses. Consequently, "when the one doctrine [anthropomorphic deities] is lost, the other [pre-existence] will be lost also. In its place came the notion that each individual spirit was created from nothing at or about the time of the creation of the physical body of the infant in its mothers' womb."⁷³⁶

Moreover, both the Christology & later Trinitarian controversies affected deification & pre-existence themes, in that what Christ was believed to be like, & how one might become like him, was viewed differently, according to the answers that the different Christian sects might give to what Christ's nature, in relationship to the Father, was like. Or if Christ actually had a body, or only appeared to have one. Or if Christ was actually resurrected, or not. Or if there was 2, or 3 or 3 in 1 & only 1 God in the Godhead, & what their bodies, if they did have ones in human form, were like. For would the early Christians therefore become like them, when being deified themselves, or not? Or was there just a spiritual-resurrection, & not a physical one. The controversy over Origenism (late 4th c. & 543 & 553),⁷³⁷ also affected pre-existence themes, for as Origen was a big supporter of the pre-existence, to accept the pre-existence as doctrine, could mean to many that such a one must also be accepting Origenism, or even heretical Gnosticism.⁷³⁸ Thus, different church fathers got talked out of abandoning many pre-existence themes, as they rejected Origenism & Gnostic sects, in general too.⁷³⁹ During Augustine's day, (354–430), as bishop of Hippo, issues over grace & works were also part of the preexistence controversy & Origenism, as Augustine dealt with the Pelagian heretics about free will issues, God's grace & pre-mortal merits acquired, or lack thereof, were counted towards souls' diverse mortal conditions, that were because of pre-mortal free will choices made in the preexistence, be they good works or sins. Consequently, they were assigned different lots, or conditions in life according to the merits or punishments assigned them by God's justice. Thus, part of the controversy was over Grace, works, God's mercy & Justice, & punishments or forgiveness, as different ones attempted to solve different issues over different preexistence views & themes. Ones that sought to answer why different members of the human family are born into such diversities of good or bad circumstances. Another controversy blended in with the preexistence controversy was Augustine's "original sin," issues, in that if the original sin of Adam & Eve tainted the human family, could also all mortal, including babies, there by be tainted by their pre-mortal sins? These were some of the issues knocking against each other, as many others were too.⁷⁴⁰

As the mixture of philosophy and revealed religion spread through the early Church, the first generation of early Christian scholars & writers struggled to juggle the blends that came out, & to elaborate what was 'heretical,' what was doctrinal & what was speculative, or what was what they'd been taught, but of which was not according to what was then being accepted. Thus, as with other doctrines, the doctrine of the pre-existence, depending on who was writing, would be placed under different categories: 1. Doctrinal. 2. Speculative. 3. Clearly outside the pale or norm, & thus to be discarded, abandoned, or rejected.⁷⁴¹

Ironically, we see different early Church fathers accepting & writing about some clearly pre-existence themes, (such as Tertullian, Irenaeus & others), while rejecting other aspects. One of the dogmas that challenged some pre-existence themes was the concept that somehow, God held the monopoly on immortality. Thus, it was believed by many early Christians that the doctrine of the pre-existence had to be abandoned, rejected, & argued against, because for the spirit to have lived before the creation of the body, (rather than both being created at the same time at birth, as Tertullian & others argued), meant that God wouldn't hold that monopoly. It meant that the human family would also have to be immortal, if they had an eternal past, for: "A preexisting soul, like an eternally subsisting one, can be seen to threaten that monopoly.... Irenaeus, a generation older than Tertullian, had found these arguments convincing enough to decide conclusively against preexistence."⁷⁴² Another similar concept that got in the way of the acceptance of different versions of the pre-existence of souls is that God was believed to hold all divine sovereignty. "The battle against preexistence turns recurrently on the implications of the doctrine for God's sovereignty." God was not born, the human family are, for the soul & body come into existence at the same time at birth, argued Tertullian & others. If the human family preexisted, this meant that God couldn't hold supreme divinity and absolute sovereignty. Tertullian thus refutes also the pre-existence theme that the soul came down from heaven, & that the soul had formerly lived with God. Augustine, was "...less prone to see in human preexistence a threat to divine sovereignty."⁷⁴³

RECOGNITIONS OF CLEMENT [First Four Centuries? Variable dates have been given for when this important writing should be place in the time lines of historic Christendom]⁷⁴⁴ This early writing is said by scholars to be "erroneously" attributed to Clement of Rome,⁷⁴⁵ 3rd successor to Peter, believed to be the 1st "bishop," although Peter was an original Apostle to Christ, higher in rank than a bishop. Clement, born in Rome, had questions about the origins of life in the universe, life after life, and even wondered "whether I did exist before I was born."⁷⁴⁶ After Barnabas introduced him to Peter, he remembered how that Peter had answered many of his questions. Some of the elements of the pre-existence story are the ways that Peter had revealed to Clement about the decree that God made in "the presence of all the first angels." How they were governed by laws, but who also had free will because they would be eventually be judged according to the choices they made, and thus awarded accordingly. Some "souls" were to be "consigned to eternal fire for their sins" while those souls who did good works would be rewarded with eternal gifts. This might remind us of the passage in the New Testament, said to be written by Peter, about the angels that sinned (2 Peter 2:4).⁷⁴⁷

In answer to how that God had created many things, among which he "made man, on whose account He had prepared all things, whose internal species is older, and for whose sake all things that are were made, given up to his service, and assigned to the uses of his habitation." Footnote 1, after the part that says that the human family is the "internal species" which is "older" than the other things created, says: "That is, his soul, according to the doctrine of the pre-existence of souls."⁷⁴⁸ Thus, the reason why the human family is the older species, is because that species pre-existed before the creation as the angels in heaven. Clement remembered what Peter said about some of the choices that these angels had made, how that "righteous men, who had lived the life of angels, being allured by the beauty of women, fell into promiscuous and illicit connections with these".⁷⁴⁹ Hence, like Justin Martyr, A.D. 110—165, and others, this version of the fall of angels, seems to be derived from, or have elements of Jewish influences.⁷⁵⁰ Christ pre-existed, because he is "the true Prophet" who appeared to, and talked with Abraham, Moses and many others, before Christ's incarnation among mortals.⁷⁵¹

In the Clementine Recognitions, the world has existed through the ages "so that the spirits destined to come here might fulfill their number, and here make their choice between the upper and the lower worlds."⁷⁵² Another source puts it this way: "...And on this account the world required long periods, until the number of souls which were predestined to fill it should be completed." Following the post-descent to earth, pre-existence-themes, of earth being testing ground for spirits clothed in physical bodies, & after which, the deification theme of their return to glory: "Following a period of testing, "the souls of the blessed, being restored in their bodies, should be ushered [back] into light." The two ways theme, "...but the souls of the wicked, for their impure actions being surrounded with fiery spirit, should be plunged into the abyss of unquenchable fire, to endure punishments through eternity."⁷⁵³

Clement asks Peter: "...If those shall enjoy the kingdom of Christ, whom His coming shall find righteous, shall then those be wholly deprived of the kingdom who have died before His coming?" Then Peter answered by saying: "Know then that Christ, who was from the beginning, and always, was ever present with the pious, though secretly, through all their generations; especially with those who waited for Him, to whom He frequently appeared."⁷⁵⁴ Note here that a portion of Peter's answer to Clement's question, includes the idea that Christ had pre-existed, had talked or appeared unto the pious, throughout the generations of time before Christ's own birth in the flesh to Mary. Thus, the people of pre-Christian times could be saved too. Upon answering Clement's question, Peter goes on to mention paradise & hints to those who would eventually be able to escape the fires of hell too. (1 Peter 3:15-22, 4:5-6).

Clement of Alexandria, [153-193-217 A.D.], Origen's teacher. As noted earlier, Clement wrote about a number of pre-existence themes, such as how Christ's soul pre-existed & was in the council in heaven.⁷⁵⁵ Christ is called "the angel of great Counsel," & entitled a "Counsellor."⁷⁵⁶ Clement, like Origen, were influenced in their schooling by Platonic ideologies & philosophies that tainted their blending of Greek pre-existence themes, with Christian versions that were still surviving, but becoming more & more faded by their times, & in different areas, while being preserved in other areas of Christendom, as noted here in sources presented. Clement, then, as Augustine later, were not wholly committed to a doctrinal position of human-pre-existence, as with also other doctrines they were taught. Like others, these early to later Christian Fathers, inheriting from those who went before, what was the result of what was left over, as to beliefs, from who had lost the spiritual gifts, & that no longer had true prophets & apostles heard of in existence amongst them. In such religious environments, they began to have reservations about different beliefs passed down to them, & different versions of them, as time went by, & as the old beliefs faded out, in favor of whatever cultural contaminated versions that were taking their places. Such as how Greek philosophical versions, that became more dominating than the earliest church doctrines about the pre-existence, Christ's descent into hell & Christological issues, etc. All these factors, plus more, were all affected by later versions of the other doctrines & their ritual counterparts that were developing in these later centuries. Each schism, issues, & dogmatic struggles between different sects in the different spread out areas that Christendom was spreading to; all played a part in the different types of versions of doctrines that were created, including different types of pre-existence themes.⁷⁵⁷ In fact, the Greek pre-existence themes, as with other Hellenistic thought, were considered by Clement to be like the Hebrew law, both were schoolmasters, preparatory to bring people towards the truer Christian version revealed through Christ. However, Greek thought, Clement suggests, was derived in part from even barbarian thought, & thus Clement notes: "For according to Plato, 'they think that good souls, on quitting the supercelestial region, submit to come to this Tartarus, and assuming a body, share in all the ills which are involved in birth, from their solicitude for the race of men.'" From this, some scholars suggest that Clement was one amongst many other early Christian fathers tainted by ancient Greek philosophers, that shared a belief in the pre-existence of humans' souls.⁷⁵⁸ Clement continued to use pre-existence themes, backing his version up with Greek philosophical pre-existence themes & blends in even Egyptian versions, in responding to & in refutations of the Marcionites, & to the Pagans. With Heretical versions of the pre-existence then being argued against, & with other Christians, like Clement, seeking to distance themselves from their versions, Clement claimed to have the "true Gnosis," & though it was becoming so tainted with Greek philosophical versions, he still retained many aspects that still were manageable, although also almost impossible to separate what was blended in from Greek versions. Still considered a supporter of the doctrine of pre-existence, Clement clouds the beliefs at times with vagueness, but then offers fragments of pre-existence themes in hints, such as in interpreting Jeremiah 1:5 as being likened unto early Christians who are likewise "destined in the eye of God to faith before the foundation of the world."⁷⁵⁹

Clement, in his Exhortation to the Heathen, he uses pre-existence themes, as he reminds the Heathens about the post-war in heaven, post-fall from activities of devils amongst the people. He illustrates, in types, how Christ, the Word, was before David, hinting to Christ's pre-existence: "And He who is of David, and yet before him, the Word of God..." Clement goes on to liken Christ unto a new song that drives away demons, like David's music did. So the pre-existence theme of protection is used to point out how Christ the Word seeks to do a lot of good things, including driving away demons, & protecting people from them: "The Lord pities, instructs, exhorts, admonishes, saves, shields, and His bounty promises us the kingdom of heaven as a reward for learning; and the only advantage He reaps is, that we are saved.... And do not suppose that the song of salvation [Christ, the Word] to be new, as a vessel or a house is new. For "before the morning star is was;" [Psa. cx. 3] and 'in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.'" [John 1:1] Then further use of pre-existence themes, Clement confidently suggests that the Phrygians, Arcadians, and Egyptians all claim ancient descent or noble origins, from the gods, & claim to be older than the moon, or to be of the land that first gave birth to gods and men: "...yet none of these at least existed before the world. But before the foundation of the world were we, who, because destined to be in Him, pre-existed in the eye of God before,—we the rational creatures of the Word of God, on whose account we date from the beginning; for "in the beginning was the Word." Well, inasmuch as the Word was from the first, He was and is the divine source of all things; but inasmuch as He has now assumed the name Christ, consecrated of old, and worthy of power, he has been called by me the New Song.... the manifestation of the Word that was in the beginning, and before the beginning. The Saviour, who existed before, has in recent days appeared.... The Word, who in the beginning bestowed on us life as Creator when He formed us, taught us to live well when He appeared as our Teacher; that as God He might afterwards conduct us to the life which never ends. He did not now for the first time pity us for our error; but He pitied us from the first, from the beginning." Clement goes on with further pre-existence themes of protection, likening the fallen angel Satan to that wicked reptile monster, to the wicked tyrant and serpent, a seducer, to which the human family needs protection from. Clement also points out why the pre-existing Christ, the Word, came down from heaven to become a God-man. "And now the Word Himself clearly speaks to thee, [the Heathens] shaming they unbelief; yea, I say, the Word of God became man, that thou mayest learn from man how man may become God."⁷⁶⁰ The whole point of the journey of the soul from the pre-existence, to earth life, & the after life, was to bring to pass the deification of those who make it through the whole journey of the soul to return back home to God. Clement, as do other early Christian fathers, & others, seem to know this basic concept.

The pre-existence theme of noble souls' descents from the heavenly realms to take part in each their own ensoulment, or embodiment at each their own birth.⁷⁶¹ These also became part of some pre-existence themes, illustrated in art works, as we shall see. For the later art works were inspired by these earlier blends of pre-existence descent themes, as found in Clement's, & other church fathers' versions, which in art, in some cases, became souls descending down in & through the mandorla symbol, () the realm travelers' symbol. Often depicted as a glorious portal, lit up by protective auras of glorious heavenly light that shines around those realm travelers descending or ascending from one realm of existence to another.⁷⁶²

Pre-existence themes, as by way of Protection, for souls descending into bodies, for souls clothed in bodies, living out each their own mortal life. Plus, protection for when they exit their own body, after death. Why souls need protection on this whole journey of the soul, is better understood when we consider the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of Satan & the fallen angel-devils. Because the fallen angels are still at war against God, Christ, prophets, apostles, saints & the righteous & good angels. Because they know who Moses was going to be, who Christ was going to be, & others, they've tried to kill them, when they were babies, (Exod.1:15–22, 2:1–10, Matt.2:12–22, Jude 9). Because the devils seek to also take over bodies, & enter into some, they sometimes have to be cast out, exorcized, (Matt. 4:10, 8:16, 31-32, 9:33-34, 12:24-28, 43-45, Luke 4:35, 41, 8:29, 10:7, 11:14, 18-20, Mark 1:34, 39, 3:22, 5:8, 7:26, 9:25, 16:9). Because the devils might try to tempt us above that which they are allowed, mortal life being the testing grounds for souls having physical experiences, (1 Cor. 10:13). Because: "Another somewhat different account of the demons states that they are spirits who desire to enjoy the pleasures of food, drink, & sex. These delights they can experience only by entering the bodies of men & using them for their own gratification." "But the reason why the demons delight in entering into men's bodies is this. Being spirits, and having desires after meats and drinks, and sexual pleasures, but not being able to partake of these by reason of their being spirits, and wanting organs fitted for their enjoyment, they enter into the bodies of men, in order that, getting organs to minister to them, they may obtain the things that they wish, whether it be meat, by means of men's teeth, or sexual pleasure, by means of men's members." [Or sexual organs]. "Hence, in order to the putting of demons to flight, the most useful help is abstinence, and fasting, and suffering of affliction. For if they enter into men's bodies for the sake of sharing pleasures, it is manifest that they are put to flight by suffering. But inasmuch as some,... being of a more malignant kind, remain by the body that is undergoing punishment, though they are punished with it, therefore it is needful to have recourse to God by prayers and petitions, refraining from every occasion of impurity, that the hand of God may touch him for his cure, as being pure and faithful."⁷⁶³ Because of these different types of activities of the fallen angels, plus the disembodied spirits of those who have lived wickedly unrepentant lives, when they were once alive on earth at different times. Amongst some of these spirits, they perhaps were forced to join in with the activities of the fallen angels, or willfully joined. Or, they might be amongst the class of spirits who just hang around their old haunts. It's these different types of spirits that mortals living on earth, plus spirits descending to be born, & ascending after their mortal life is over at death, that all such realm traveling souls need constant protection from. (1 Pet. 5:8, Job 1:6-7, 21, Eph. 6:10-19; Tobit 5-7, etc). Thus, these pre-existence protection themes were parts of the whole drama, which Clement of Alexandria, & others must have known about, especially from the ritualistic types of protection that the early Christian mysteries were believed to offer.⁷⁶⁴ Clement of Alexandria: "Being baptized, we illuminated; illuminated, we become sons; being made sons, we are made perfect, being perfect, we are made immortal. "I" says He, "have said that ye are gods, & all sons of the Highest." [Ps. 82:6] (ANF 2:215). The different types of protection were symbolized in different ways, such as the ways radiant auras are depicted in art, when around souls & saints.⁷⁶⁵ The more righteous & faithful, the more brighter & powerful their auras, haloes, or mandorla glory, especially during realm traveling. Which may be why, until souls advance more & more towards different levels of sanctification, glorification, & deification, & over come the challenges & pass the tests along the journey of the soul, during realm traveling, that the soul often needs protection along the way,⁷⁶⁶ until that soul becomes more sanctified, glorified, & deified, inheriting as a god or goddess, (like in the cases with prophets & St. Mary), God's glorious protective powers & glory. Or in the case when John mistook a glorious radiant fellow prophet, as a bright angel, or even the glorious Lord himself, (Rev. 19:8, 10, 14).

Clement of Alexandria understood these pre-existence protection themes, & the ritualistic aspects of the purification process of the spirit in repentance that retraces its steps, is purified by baptism, to speed back to the eternal light, children to the Father.⁷⁶⁷ This journey back, Clement must have known, requires another pre-existence theme, the protective garment as a type of souls later clothed in glorious resurrected bodies, where they put on the white ascension robes, God's power & glory! For he cites from "the scriptures" or from a copy of scriptures, but which we perhaps don't have yet, except in similar wording in other sources, the following: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power."⁷⁶⁸ Thus, also becoming a protector of other souls on their own journeys too. As in the case with the Virgin Mary, often depicted with souls under her large protective cape, or cloak.⁷⁶⁹ This doesn't mean that mortals are always protected from martyrdom & suffering caused by devils that tempt evil mortals to commit murders & do all kinds of harm. But it also doesn't mean that protection will never be given also, such as in many ancient to modern cases of divine & angelic protection & help.⁷⁷⁰ For those who were prophetically foreseen, like Christ, to suffer, or like others, it's because that might be the earthly mission of those souls that descended, to become witnessing martyrs, sealing their testimonies which will stand as bright witnesses before God's judgement. But in the much bigger picture of the whole drama of souls treks through realms, are the assurances that life doesn't end after death, for their souls' journeys continued, & martyrs will also be rewarded martyrs' rewards, that of perfection & deification! As often symbolized by the white robes, cloths, or blankets often held in the hands of angels descending down towards the scenes of martyrdom.⁷⁷¹ For in principle, & in their symbolical meanings, they are the ritualistic & artistic protective glorious white garments of baptism, & ascension robes, cloths, blankets or napkin type sized cloths, as in later centuries & protective garment lore.⁷⁷² Though light isn't depicted glowing from them all, in all cases, the protective garment themes are still suggested, as also in many cases as to how guardian guiding angels are clothed in white.⁷⁷³ They are often depicted in battle the devils attempting to get at souls. Plus, the white clothing that naked souls are often seen being wrapped up in, by different angelic saints, that also seem to be assigned to protect descending souls from heaven, & ascending souls returning naked as they descended, & thus get clothed in an ascension robe, often white in color, (1 Tim. 6:7, Eccl. 5:15, Job 1:21).⁷⁷⁴ These combined combinations of protection, from St. Michael, who is often also depicted in other art works, fighting off demons, or defeating the devil.⁷⁷⁵ Plus, the Virgin Mary, who wraps souls under her protective large cloak. Together with other angels wrapping souls up in white blankets, plus more, all adds to the protective garment themes, & pre-existence themes. For it was because it was believed, from the beginnings of earliest Christianity, that the fallen angels sought to continue the war in heaven, after being cast out of heaven, & after their fall. And believed that they've continued that war by making war with the human race on earth, as part of their post-war, post-fall from heaven devilish activities. Thus it was also believed that the human race often needs the continual divine protection against them. This pre-existence theme of protection was symbolized as being divine light, or protective auras, because light always lights up darkness, chases it away. Another symbolical reminder of protection was the presence of guardian angels, who offer an additional form of protection by helping souls, or the human family to cross over hazardous areas, such as bridges,⁷⁷⁶ lakes, rivers, the dangerous deep, or other places where there are "fall hazards," slipping hazards. Thus also the protective hand or wrist grasping angelic guide, faded left overs of the early Christian mysteries, which later became symbolic of keeping the non-winged soul, prophets, or those passing over dangerous areas, from "slipping," or falling, like the fallen angels, or those whose wings had failed them, or had not yet "earned their wings," like in later lore & movies.⁷⁷⁷ Another symbol of protection was how in the mysteries, the white garments represented purity, spotlessness, innocence, & righteousness, which if mortals had first stripped off the negative traits of sin, etc., & been washed clean through the mysteries, & clothed upon in the Christ like traits, of love, kindness, etc., this was the best form of protection, because upon the mortals' deaths, the fallen angels couldn't claim them. They wouldn't be able to drag them down, because the guardian angels would protect the righteous souls, put white ascension robes on them, to cover their nakedness, & battle with the devils, & ascends with the righteous into heaven. These types were understood by the early Christians before they became legendized in the art works & later lore. Clement of Alexandria knew of these types & used them in his lecturing on the early Christian mysteries.⁷⁷⁸ This protection also was needed, so it was believed, when souls did their own realm traveling adventures, descending down to each their own body, or ascending into paradise, after death. Because the fallen angel devils' post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven devilish-activities, includes pestering souls, & mortals, like in later pre-existence lore, when the fallen angels are depicted as insect type critters.⁷⁷⁹ The protective lore also includes such pre-existence themes as little devils attempting to get at & destroy, or carry off, or harm, even kill, if they can, the souls of those who descend, those in mortal bodies, o& the souls of those after death, that ascend.⁷⁸⁰ These different protective themes also carry over from ritualistic types, to artistic types & symbolism. Thus, the different elements of protection, & the combinations that vary, as to what is included as part of the protection required. At any rate, different forms of protections, causes the fallen angel devils & unclean spirits to back away from those traveling through the realms, thus clothed in brightness & divine glory.⁷⁸¹ This theme will be continually looked at, in the course of this study. Some of the later art works show signs & evidence of contaminations of early to later Christian versions of pre-existence themes, blended in with other cultures' versions, notably from Greek philosophical elements, as in the case with some later Christian art works during the Renaissance, when translations of Greek philosophy & other cultures became popular to study.⁷⁸²

ORIGEN; PRE-EXISTENCE & HIS RESPONSE TO THE 2ND C., CRITIC, CELSUS

ORIGEN, 185-230-254 A.D., defends and taught many aspects of the story about the pre-existence, for which he later got in trouble for, when later Christians started to reject the doctrine, & get other later church leaders to abandon Origen's version. By his time, he acknowledged that the doctrine of the pre-mortal existence had become obscure by the beginning of the 3rd c.: "What existed before this world, or what will exist after it, has not become certainly known to the many, for there is no clear statement regarding it in the teaching of the Church." (ANF, 4:240-41). He believed that the human family pre-existed as spirits before we came down to earth. Christ is the first born of all creation. For although Christ had been born into a body, He did not start his existence then, for He had been with the Father in the beginning, & it was to Him that the Father said, 'let us make man in our own image.' (Gen.1:26). There was a council in heaven, & Christ was not simply an angel, but He was the "Angel of the great counsel", & the "Angel of God" which came into the world for the salvation of the human family. There was a war in heaven which resulted in the casting out of the apostate angels, or the devil & his angels. Celsus, the early anti-Christian writer about 170-80 A.D., mock the early Christians of his time for their beliefs in the war in heaven, & the fall of the angels who "...became wicked, and were cast under the earth and punished with chains,..." Celsus asked why God would need to fight with one of his own creations? Origen notes how Celsus blends the opinions of a heretic Marcion, plus the opinions of those against Marcion, not knowing that they were against Marcion. For "the same Christians speak of two divine sons, locked in combat with one another. They fight like quails, the two sons, since their fathers are in their dotage and too tired to fight." Another translation: "...two sons of God, one the son of the Creator, and the other the son of Marcion's God; and he portrays their single combats,... the Fathers are like the battles between quails; or the Fathers, becoming useless through age, and falling into their dotage, do not meddle at all with one another, but leave their sons to fight it out." ⁷⁸³

Origen may have accepted the idea that two divine sons had fought with each other in a war in heaven, but not the way that Celsus had presented Marcion's version of the story, and generalized it was how the early Christians believed. In later centuries, about the 12th-13th centuries, in Germany, "the Rhenish Luciferians lauded the fallen angels, proclaiming that Lucifer was God's brother who had been unjustly cast out of heaven..."⁷⁸⁴

Celsus, upon rejecting the pre-existence & the descent from heaven of Christ's spirit into the body of His birth to Mary. He also mockingly asked the Christians: You Christians mean to tell us that this Jesus created the world & the universe, to then descend from on high to earth to work with wood, as the wood-working man's son? Why would the God of heaven pick such a life? Why would he lower himself to such a condition & in such a low-ranked manner? How come a number of "Christs" were not sent down from heaven into every part of the earth, instead of just that one spirit, or the one Christ, who came down to just one corner of the earth amongst the Jews? ⁷⁸⁵

Answering Celsus, Origen wrote that there really was no need, at the time of Christ's birth for a number Christs to have also been born into every corner of the world. For if Celsus had wanted to see "Christs" he should have noted that God had sent out representatives whom are termed "christs," by the scriptures, or anointed prophets into all lands! Origen's response includes the idea that Christ had eventually entered into different parts of the earth, also.⁷⁸⁶ Origen also believed that the reason why some people had come down from the pre-mortal existence & were born into conditions & circumstances which were not as good as others was because they had not been as faithful as others in the pre-existence. This belief got Origen in trouble with later Christians. ⁷⁸⁷

In his De Principiis, Origen explores the question of whether or not the "...their souls came into existence at the same time with their bodies, or seem to be anterior to them..."⁷⁸⁸ There is also the question as to whether or not Origen knew the symbolical language of the Book of Enoch, or the writings attributed to the Prophet Enoch. If Origen had known of the copies of Enoch during his life time., did these earlier copies have as one of its symbolical metaphors, "stars", which meant in some cases- "spirits"? We know that later versions of Enoch contain this metaphor, but did the earlier versions contain it? Was it preserved to a certain extent in later copies? For Origen considered the question as to whether or not the "stars" or "...those beings... we have discovered to possess life and reason, were endowed with a soul along with their bodies at the time mentioned in Scripture, when "God made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night, and the stars also," [Gen. 1:16], "or whether their spirit was implanted in them, not at the creation of their bodies, but from without, after they had been already made. I, for my part, suspect that the spirit was implanted in them from without..."⁷⁸⁹

Or could it be that Origen, like Tatian the Assyrian, 110-172 A.D., believed that there are "...a spirit in the stars,..." etc., as with other things that God created? We might also keep in mind that Origen, at least in one translations of Origen Against Celsus, suggests that "...the books which bear the name Enoch... do not at all circulate in the Churches as divine,..." Origen seems to have believed that the copies circulating were not to be considered as official Christian books. While Tertullian suggests that the Book of Enoch as restored through the prophet Ezra, is genuine. He notes that although it is not consider scripture by some because it is not in the Jewish canon, despite this, Tertullian calls it "scripture." Whatever the condition copies of the Book of Enoch were in during those early centuries, it was valuable enough for many of the earliest Christians, like Jude & others, to be cited as scriptural support for pre-existence themes.⁷⁹⁰

Origen goes on to say how he would like to show that his opinion about how the spirit is implanted into bodies, etc., from without, is scriptural. He then wrote that if the soul of a man was formed at the same time rather than having been implanted from without, much more should be the case with living heavenly beings. In I Enoch 93, & other Old Testament & New Testament writings, the metaphors "plant," & "sown," in that the pre-existing elect ones were to be "sown." Family trees or descendants are often called "plants" etc. Thus, we might wonder if Origen had used similar type of metaphors to suggest that the spirit had been "implanted" into the body from without.⁷⁹¹

Origen continues to explore the issue: "...For, as regards man, how could the soul of him, viz., Jacob, who supplanted his brother in the womb, appear to be formed along with his body? Or how could his soul, or its images, be formed along with the body, who while lying in his mother's womb, was filled with the Holy Ghost? I refer to John leaping in his mother's womb... How could his soul and its images be formed along with his body, who, before he was created in the womb, is said to be known to God, and was sanctified by Him before his birth?..."⁷⁹² Was Origen suggesting here that the pre-existing spirit of John the Baptist, had entered or leaped in his mother's womb, from having been "implanted"? Or had the baby leaped in the womb because John's spirit had come down from heaven, and had known Christ's pre-existing spirit before they were both born? And thus, when their earthly mothers to be had met, on this occasion, John the Baptist's spirit had somehow recognized the Christ, & thus had moved or had leaped for joy? Or was did the baby just simply move, as normally happens? (Luke 1:26-56). Whatever might be the case, Origen seems to suggest this story was one of the scripture on the pre-existence of spirits.

He goes on to argue against Traducianism, or their "...defense of those who maintain that souls come into existence with bodies."⁷⁹³ By Origen's day in time, it was evident that in some areas of Christendom, many pre-existence themes were fading out, being rejected, reinterpreted, abandoned, & or argued over. While different surviving aspects were also being preserved to a certain extent, in other areas, such as in art works, writings, & traditions that were developing. As if hinting to how pre-existence themes were fading out, Origen notes: "With respect to the soul, whether it is derived from the seed by a process of traducianism, so that the reason or substance of it may be considered as placed in the seminal particles of the body themselves, or whether it has any other beginning: and this beginning itself, whether it be by birth or not, or whether bestowed upon the body from without or no[t], is not distinguished with sufficient clearness in the teaching of the church."⁷⁹⁴

Origen offers different evidences for the pre-existence, such as an ancient pre-birth experience, PBE, which like modern Pre-Birth Experiences, consists of experiences that humans have with the spirits of their children to be. Case studies, during the 1990s onwards, gets into the many different types of PBEs, that have many pre-existence themes to them, as different souls, makes himself, or herself, known to their parents to be, or to relatives of the family that they will be born into. Also, in Near Death Experiences, NDEs, different ones have said, that when they died, it was like returning back home, or returning to heaven, or going back to a realm they'd come from. While others said they saw spirits lining up to be born. Others, tell of seeing, or encountering the spirits of their children to be, before they were born, during which different types of loving communications took place between them. Thus, there are numerous different types of PBEs too, & the ancients seem to have had the same types of experiences also, such as pre-mortal spirits entering into their body that is forming inside their mother's womb. Mothers feel this & have talked about these types of PBEs.⁷⁹⁵ Thus, Origen, if he's hinting to an ancient PBE, he used it as evidences for his own version of the pre-existence: "If the soul of a man... was not formed along with his body, but is proved to have been implanted strictly from without, much more must this be the case with those living beings which are called heavenly. For, as regards man, how could the soul of him, viz., Jacob, who supplanted his brother in the womb, appear to be formed along with his body? Or how could his soul, or its images, be formed along with his body, who, while lying in his mother's womb, was filled with the Holy Ghost? I refer to John leaping in his mother's womb."⁷⁹⁶ (Luke 1:41-44). In later art works of this, there are also other pre-existence themes, that connect up with realm travel themes, that of souls entering physical life, the same types of ways they exit the physical life. For some of the symbols of entering & exiting are the different types of hand & wrist grasping. Thus, with all of the hand & wrist grasping depicted in thousands of art works, hinted in scriptures, & dramatized in rituals, such as art works showing Christ, saints, prophets, angelic guides, & souls' traveling through different realms of existences, in & out of different after-physical-life realms.⁷⁹⁷ With all the hand & wrist grasping seen in Eve being pulled into physical life, out of Adam's side, by God, or the Godhead, or by the pre-existing Christ, as in other cases.⁷⁹⁸ There are other hand & wrist grasping symbols in depictions of souls descending down from the pre-existence. This seems could be the case with the many depictions of Mary being greeted by Elisabeth, when the spirit of the future John the Baptist, leaped inside Elisabeth's womb, as though the pre-existing spirit of John recognized the pre-existing spirit of the then future promised Messiah, Jesus Christ, not yet born, but who was in Mary's womb. Another symbol of realm travel is the almond shaped mandorla symbol, () that is sometimes also seen in depictions of the hand clasping greetings between Mary & Elisabeth. These symbols are seen around the baby Christ in the womb of Mary, & the baby John the Baptist in the womb of Elisabeth.⁷⁹⁹

Origen presents a universe that is filled with multiplicity & diversity, a cosmos that consisted of the divine to demonic types of beings, with every gradation in between those two extremes. Where each entities, at that moment of their existence, had arrived to be where they were at because of each, their own choices freely made along the way. Moreover, because choices can be infinitely varied, so also were the consequences.⁸⁰⁰

In other areas of his writings, Origen wrote of those who asked: "If the world had its beginning in time, what was God doing before the world began? For it is at once impious and absurd to say that the nature of God is inactive and immovable, or to suppose that goodness at one time did not do good, and omnipotence at one time did not exercise its power." To this, Origen responds: God causes worlds to come into existence, & causes them to pass out of existence, to create new worlds. There were worlds before this one, & after the destruction of this world "...there will be another world, so also we believe that others existed before the present came into being...." He cite Isaiah 66:22 & Ecclesiastes 1:9-10 to show scriptural evidences for this belief. "...By these testimonies it is established both that there were ages... before our own, and that there will be others after it. It is not, however, to be supposed that several worlds existed at once, but that, after the end of this present world, others will take their beginning..." Origen suggests that there are different ages or periods of time which this world will pass through. He cites Matt.24:21, & Eph.1:4 to point out situations that happened before & since the beginning of the creation of the world. Was Origen suggesting here that the tribulation, the war in heaven, since the beginning, took place in another age of time? Origen goes on write about how rational creatures had existed before in the different ages, even from the beginning of those ages which are not seen but which are eternal. "...And if that is so, then there has been a descent from a higher to a lower condition, on the part not only of those souls who have deserved the change by the variety of their movements, but also on that of those who, in order to serve the whole world, were brought down from those higher and invisible spheres to these lower and visible ones, although against their will..." Origen is said to have believed that during the ages past known as the pre-existence, some of the spirits sinned, & were not as faithful as they should have been, & thus they were forced to descend into lower conditions. However the sons of God who fell away and were scattered abroad would be gathered after they had fulfilled their duties in this world. But also, this world was created so that it could contain "...not only all these souls which it was determined should be trained in this world, but also all those powers which were prepared to attend, and serve, and assist them..." Other pre-existence themes that later became unpopular, or considered heretical by later Christians, during the anti-Origenism days of the fourth– sixth centuries, were how the ranking system, mentioned by Origen, was considered by many, to also reflect the conditions of mortal life that spirits might be send down into, be they born blind, crippled, or born into dark skins, or less favorable circumstances, etc. Thus, there are also those who have been place here at different ranks. Others were chosen before the foundation of the world, (Eph.1:4). Other pre-existence themes & dogmas prior to Origen's time, & handed down to his time, were questions about the ranking system of mortal life. The different good or bad conditions that different people are born into. People wanted to know why, & so a pre-existence theme that wasn't too popular that sought to answer why some seemed to be born in more favorable conditions than others, was about sins done in the pre-existence. Were they ranked & chosen according to their choices made in a pre-existence? Some ranked lower & put into lower conditions because of their pre-mortal sins, as the disciples of Christ had asked him, upon wondering about a man born blind, (John 9:2)? While others were chosen for different missions, for having chosen to be more faithful, having also not rebelled against God, as the fallen angels did? ⁸⁰¹

Origen: With "...respect to Jesus we would say that, as it was of advantage to the human race to accept him as the Son of God—God come in a human soul and body – and as this did not seem to be advantageous to the gluttonous appetites of the demons which love bodies, and to those who deem them to be gods on that account, the demons that are on earth (which are supposed to be gods by those who are not instructed in the nature of demons), and also their worshipers, were desirous to prevent the spread of the doctrine of Jesus; for they saw that the libations and odors in which they greedily delighted were being wept away by the prevalence of the instructions of Jesus. But the God who sent Jesus dissipated all the conspiracies of the demons, and made the Gospel of Jesus to prevail throughout the whole world for the conversion and reformation of men, and caused Churches to be everywhere established in opposition to those of superstitious and licentious and wicked men; for such is the character of the multitudes who constitute the citizens in the assemblies of the various cities...." ⁸⁰²

In Origen beliefs, there were the angels that fell, but there were also the good angels that were the pre-existing spirits that went down into all the nations. He read the Septuagint and seems to find in the verse Deut. 32:8, (about the division of the nations that took place "according to the number of the angels of God" kata arithmon angellon theou), that it was an indication that these "angels" referred to the pre-mortal souls who would inhabit the various nations. And he found that unsurprising since he was sure that men & angels both preexist the earth & in fact can refer to the same kind of being. ⁸⁰³

In response to Celsus & concerning the fall of the Devil, Origen wrote: "...No one, moreover, who has not heard what is related of him who is called "devil," and of his "angels," and what he was before he became a devil, and how he became such, and what the cause of the simultaneous apostasy of those who are termed his angels, will be able to ascertain the origin of evils. But he who would attain to this knowledge must learn more accurately the nature of demons, and know that they are not the work of God so far as respects their demoniacal nature, but only in so far as they are possessed of reason; and also what their origin was, so that while converted into demons, the powers of their mind remain...." ⁸⁰⁴

And: "In my opinion, however, it is certain wicked demons, and, so to speak, of the race of Titans or Giants, who have been guilty of impiety towards the true God, and towards the angels in heaven, and who have fallen from it, and who haunt the denser parts of bodies, and frequent unclean places upon earth, and who, possessing some power of distinguishing future events, because they are without bodies of earthly material, engage in an employment of this kind, and desiring to lead the human race away from the true God, secretly enter the bodies of the more rapacious and savage and wicked of animals..." ⁸⁰⁵

Origen goes goe to present Celsus words, & then gives his response: "We have now, then, to refute that statement of his which ruins as follows: "O Jews and Christians, no God or son of a God either came or will come down (to earth). But if you mean that certain angels did so, then what do you call them? Are they gods, or some other race of beings? Some other race of beings (doubtless) and in all probability demons." Origen responded by pointing out that Celsus had repeated himself, & then he wrote that Celsus, "...in asserting generally that no God, or son of God, ever descended (among men), he overturns not only the opinions entertained by the majority of mankind regarding the manifestation of Deity, but also what was formerly admitted by himself. For if the general statement, that "no God or son of God has come down or will come down," be truly maintained by Celsus, it is manifest that we have here overthrown the belief in the existence of gods upon the earth who had descended from heaven either to predict the future to mankind or to heal them by means of divine responses; and neither the Pythian Appollo, nor

AEsculapius, nor any other among those supposed to have done so, would be a god descended from heaven...." ⁸⁰⁶

Origen argues for Jesus, whom the prophets had prophesied as having come down to the human race as God, and the Son of God. "...For the Son of God, 'the First-born of all creation,' although He seemed recently to have become incarnate, is not by any means on that account recent. For the holy Scriptures know Him to be the most ancient of all the works of creation; for it was to Him that God said regarding the creation of man, 'Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness.' The pre-existence theme of descending down from heaven, sometimes depicted in art too, is repeated by different early to later Christians. Like Origen, St. Jerome wrote of Christ's descent into a human body: "No other soul which descended into a human body has stamped on itself a pure and unstained resemblance of its former stamp."⁸⁰⁷ What fragments of this particular aspect of pre-existence themes remained, if any, in later art works, seemingly depicting, descents of spirits into each their own bodies? A possible later example of this dates to 1425–30, when Robert Campin, 1375–1444, (Master of Flémalle), depicts what could be symbolic of the Christ-child's spirit, descending with the light, as if his pre-incarnate spirit had passed through the window, to go towards his mother to be, Mary, sitting down reading. The tiny naked infant Jesus descending, is also holding a cross over his shoulder, in this Mérode Altarpiece.⁸⁰⁸

Origen to Celsus, by presenting first his argument: "Let us then pass over the refutations which might be adduced against the claims of their teacher, and let him be regarded as really an angel. But is he the first and only one who came (to men), or were there others before him? If they should say that he is the only one, they would be convicted of telling lies against themselves. For they assert that on many occasions others came, and sixty or seventy of them together, and that these became wicked, and were cast under the earth and punished with chains..."

Further on Origen cites Celsus & follows with his response. Celsus "...considers that he makes a concession in saying of the Saviour, 'Let him appear to be really an angel,' we reply that we do not accept of such a concession from Celsus; but we look to the word and teaching, as each one of His abherents was capable of receiving Him. And this was the work of one who, as the prophecy regarding Him said, was not simply an angel, but the 'Angel of the great counsel: for He announced to men the great counsel of the God and Father of all things regarding them, (saying) of those who yield themselves up to a life of pure religion, that they ascend by means of their great deeds to God; but of those who do not adhere to Him, that they place themselves at a distance from God, and journey on to destruction through their unbelief of Him. He then continues: 'If even the angel came to men, is he the first and only one who came, or did others come on former occasions?' And he thinks he can meet either of these dilemmas great length, although there is not a single real Christian who asserts that Christ was the only being that visited the human race. For as, Celsus says, 'If they should say the only one,' there are others who appeared to different individuals."

Origen wrote that: "In the next place, he proceeds to answer himself as he thinks fit in the following terms: 'And so he is not the only one who is recorded to have visited the human race, as even those who, under pretext of teaching in the name of Jesus, have apostatized from the Creator as an inferior being, and have given in their adherence to one who is a superior God and father of him who visited (the world), assert that before him certain beings came from the Creator to visit the human race.' Now, as it is in the spirit of truth that we investigate all that relates to the subject, we shall remark that it is asserted by Apelles, the celebrated disciple of Marcion, who became the founder of a certain sect, and who treated the writings of the Jews as fabulous, that Jesus is the only one that came to visit the human race. Even against him, then, who maintained that Jesus was the only one that came from God to men, it would be in vain for Celsus to quote the statements regarding the descent of other angels, seeing Apelles discredits, as we have already mentioned, the miraculous narratives of the Jewish Scriptures; and much more will be decline to admit what Celsus had adduced, from not understanding the contents of the book of Enoch. No one, then, convicts us of falsehood, or of making contradictory assertions, as if we maintained both that our Saviour was the only being ever came to men, and yet that many others came on different occasions. And in a most confused manner, moreover, does he adduce, when examining the subject of the visits of angels to men, what he has derived, without seeing its meaning, from the contents of the book of Enoch; for he does not appear to have read the passages in question, nor to have been aware that the books which bear the name Enoch do not at all circulate in the Churches as divine, although it is from this source that he might be suppose to have obtained the statement, that "sixty or seventy angels descended at the same time, who fell into a state of wickedness." ⁸⁰⁹

Origen: In the book of Genesis: "...the sons of God, seeing the daughters of men, that they were fair, took to them wives of all whom they chose," (Gen. 6:2). "...But whatever may be the meaning of the 'sons of God desiring to possess the daughters of men,' it will not at all contribute to prove that Jesus was not the only one who visited mankind as an angel, and who manifestly became the Saviour and benefactor of all those who depart from the flood of wickedness. Then, mixing up and confusing whatever he had at any time heard, or had anywhere found written – whether held to be of divine origin among Christians or not – he adds: "The sixty or seventy who descended together were cast under the earth, and were punished with chains." And he quotes (as from the book of Enoch, but without naming it) the following: "And hence it is that the tears of these angels are warm springs," -- a thing neither mentioned nor heard in the Churches of God! For no one was ever so foolish as to materialize into human tears those which were shed by angels who had come down from heaven. And if it were right to pass a jest upon what is advanced against us in a serious spirit by Celsus, we might observe that no one would ever have said that hot springs, the greater part of which are fresh water, were the tears of the angels, since tears are saltish in their nature, unless indeed the angels, in the opinion of Celsus, shed tears which are fresh."⁸¹⁰ Origen on the creation drama that contain a certain secret and mystical doctrine (far transcending that of Plato) of the soul's losing its wings, and being borne downwards to earth, until it can lay hold of some stable resting place.⁸¹¹ Soul losing its wings was part of pre-existence themes too. There are suppose to be whole nations of souls stored away somewhere in a realm of their own, with an existence that is comparable to our body life. So long as these souls continue to abide in the good, they have no experience of union with a body. However, 'by some inclination towards evil these souls lose their wings and come into bodies.'⁸¹²

Origen mentions Christ as the Logos who was the first-born of all created nature. Celsus must have known that the pre-Christian time pagans had their own versions of war-in-heaven dramas, for he charged that the Christians had borrowed from these versions. He gave examples of the ancients that alluded to wars amongst the ancient gods, before the early Christians' versions. Heraclitus speaks of a general war and discord, as did Pherecydes earlier, who relates a myth of one army drawn up in hostile array against another, and names Kronos as the leader of the one, and Ophioneus of the other. Other examples are of the

Titans and Giants, plus, the Egyptian mysteries of Typhon, and Horus, and Osiris. These types of war in heaven themes, Celsus charges, were what the early Christians' versions were copied from. Origen points out the differences in the early Christians' version of the war in heaven, to contrast them, & claims Moses had pre-existence themes older than those of the Greek writers, Heraclitus and Pherecydes, & even Homer, who mentions this wicked one, and of his having fallen from heaven. He turns the charge of borrowing around to claim that the creation drama, with pre-existing themes, in Genesis 3, was from whom the Ophioneus spoken of by Pherecydes, is derived. Origen notes how the serpent-or destroying angel had offered Eve a counterfeit version of deification, as one of the temptations, having deceived the woman by a promise of divinity and of greater blessings; and her example is said to have been followed also by Adam. Origen give numerous examples of scriptures to build his case to identify the destroying angel was the devil, pre-existence themes being older than sources Celsus had used. (Ex.12:23), Job chapters 1-2, the devil is distinctly described as presenting himself before God, asking for power against Job. Ezekiel .32:1-28, Isaiah 14:4, the Babylonian king was a type of one who had lost his wings, how it derived its existence from some who had lost their wings, and who had followed him who was the first to lose his own. Thus, hinting to those who fell from heaven, in having lost their wings. Such were later pre-existence themes that would later conflict with later legendized versions, in that some art works about the fallen angels, show them without wings. While in others, with wings, especially in the legendized myths about fairies & insect type creatures that are seen in later art works, & mentioned in later myths, depicting the war in heaven, & the fall of the rebellious angels. Such winged creatures, that look like flying insects, were believed in later fables to be those fallen ones, who fell down into the lakes, deep places of the earth, to haunt the wooded areas, rivers, swamps, lakes as underwater spirits, or goblin type dark creatures, believed by the common folk to be the rebellious fallen angels.⁸¹³

Further on Origen continued to expound on the devil's fall, his loss of wings, wickedness, apostasy, but how God used the situation as a way to place him in a part of the universe where a training school of virtue could have the opposition required in order to test those placed in the training school type world: "...For it became God, who knows how to turn to proper account even those who in their wickedness have apostatized from Him, to place wickedness of this sort in some part of the universe, and to appoint a training-school of virtue, wherein those must exercise themselves who would desire to recover in a lawful manner [2 Tim.2:5,] the possession (which they had lost); in order that being tested, like gold in the fire, by the wickedness of these, and having exerted themselves to the utmost to prevent anything base injuring their rational nature, they may appear deserving of an ascent to divine things, and may be elevated by the Word to the blessedness which is above all things, and so to speak, to the very summit of goodness...." Origen goes on to use a number of scriptures to interpret "Satanas" or Satan's name in the Hebrew, & Greek as being the "adversary" to the Son of God, who is righteousness, and truth, and wisdom. How this "adversary" was one of the first that "were living a peaceful and happy life to lose his wings, and to fall from blessedness..." How he had at first walked faultlessly in all his ways, "until iniquity was found in him," [Ezek.28:15]. How this Satanas or Satan, had fallen from goodness to wickedness, because he had first had the "seal of resemblance" and the "crown of beauty" in the paradise of God, being filled as it were with good things, and yet, fell into destruction. (Ezek.28:19).⁸¹⁴

The doctrine of the pre-existence is sometimes connected up with the doctrine of deification. Such as in the case with the "return to glory" concept. In this case, Origen speaks of the "2 ways" or "2 paths" which people can go by, according to their choice in going through the fire type challenges they are placed in, which wickedness creates, in order to offer the opposition & challenges for the tests of mortal life. In Origen's defense of the pre-existence, it is "a preexistence in which we freely choose our destinies."⁸¹⁵

In ancient pre-existence themes, free will, is sometimes used by others, besides Origen, to attempt to answer the age old question about why there are different levels, grades, environments, variables, diversities, & circumstances that souls find themselves in, when they are placed into different areas between one extreme of goodness on down the scale towards total badness. The human family, so the ancient reasoned, has no one else to blame but their own sum of their own choices, as they acted on the free-agency, given them in the pre-existence that resulted in the diverse types of circumstances & extremes, souls might be born into. Just like the choices freely made in mortal life determine, when judged, as to where & what areas in the two extremes that they ended up at, in the afterlife. Origen, thus absolves God of any blame for the present, uneven distribution of pain & blessedness, & this compelling problem & question with God's justice, that to many seems unfair & unjust.⁸¹⁶

Thus, free agency, is one of the major rationales, in debates over different pre-existence themes, that continued to show up, from the beginnings of Christianity, on down to Origen's time & after. For: Why was a man born blind? Asked Christ's disciples, in John 9:2. Was it because he sinned (during his pre-existence), or that his parents did, that he was born blind?⁸¹⁷ This rationalized "answer," that tried to explain defective bodies, as being derived from choices made in the preexistence, (a good body meant good choices, a bad body, meant bad choices were made in the pre-existence). Such views could have been inspired by such passages, plus more, as for example, from the Wisdom of Solomon, 43:197: "I was, indeed a child well-endowed, having had a noble soul fall to my lot; or rather being noble I entered an undefiled body." Thus, was Jeremiah foreordained to be a prophet because he was also noble & good, before his birth? Was also Moses? "He [God] designed and devised me, and He prepared me before the foundation of the world, that I should be the mediator of His covenant."⁸¹⁸ The Odes of Solomon, Ode 8: "For I do not turn away my face from them that are mine; for I know them, and before they came into being I took knowledge of them, and on their faces I set my seal." Abraham, (Abram), must have also been shown his pre-existence, how he was a noble & good spirit before his birth too. He must have learned this during his own SODE experiences. (A SODE experience, is Hebrew for "secret deliberations," where a prophet is returned to the Council in Heaven & taught afresh what assignment he was given, his foreordained mission, for him to fulfill during his mortal earth life).⁸¹⁹

By Origen's time, he too notes that certain beings are called earthly, some are, from the hour of their birth, are reduced to humiliation, subjection, & slavery, while others are brought up in freedom, reason, with sound bodies. Others, not so good, they are born into bodies diseased from their early years. Origen asked why he should enumerate all the horrors of human misery, from which some have been free from, while others not? Origen acknowledges the diversity in how some explain why this is so. For, before he offers an explanation, he points out how when they say that, this world was established in the variety in which we have above explained, that it was created by God, and when we say that God is good, and righteous, and most just, there are those who object to us, such as Marcion, Valentinus, & Basilides & those from their schools of thought. For they complain that it cannot consist with the justice of God in creating the world to assign to some of His creatures an abode in the heavens, and to make others 2nd or 3rd, or of many lower and inferior degrees.⁸²⁰ From the schools of those considered heretical, had come objections to the answers given, before & after Origen, that he & others had offered. But what might have been an answer to Origen & others, might not have satisfied others' views, who held to the opinions of how this mortal world of the flesh, the physical, with all its pains, sorrows & sufferings, must have been created by the devil. That was the reasoning that many anti-body Gnostic "heretic" early Christian sects were giving.⁸²¹ While Origen propounds an explanation that solves the dilemma, but only by asserting "a time prior to mortality in which free will had free rein: "When He in the beginning created those beings which He desired to create, i.e., rational natures,... He created all whom He made equal and alike, because there was in Himself no reason for producing variety and diversity. But since those rational creatures themselves... were endowed with the power of free-will, this freedom of will incited each one either to progress by imitation of God, or reduced him to failure through negligence. And this... is the cause of the diversity among rational creatures, deriving its origin not from the will or judgment of the Creator, but from the freedom of the individual will.... God, who deemed it just to arrange His creatures according to their merit, brought down these different understandings into the harmony of one world."⁸²²

It must have been not too popular of a belief, by Christ's disciples, & in Jewish communities, followed by early to later Christians, down to the 6th century, & beyond the Council of Constantinople, 553, for different ones to attribute the type of body that a person might be born into, if blind at birth, or diseased, or crippled, etc., or with black skin, that different ones believed these conditions were all reflective of persons' pre-mortal choices, their sins, or lack of good merits not acquired during their pre-existence life's free-will choices. To many, it must have seemed harsh, & unfair to put many thus born in those ways to then be at such disadvantages from the moments of their birth. But these were the attempts many made at dealing with these questions, while during the council of Constantinople, the Emperor Justinian attempted to rid Christendom of this particular pre-existence theme. Threatening to anathema, (which is a Church decree excommunicating a person, or denouncing a doctrine), all those, who might continue to believe in those particular pre-existence themes.⁸²³

Thus, racking up the right amounts of good merits before a person is born, was Origen's answer to this dilemma, again, casting the blame on those who neglected, through free-will, to choose to try harder, to do better, just like in the case with after mortal life judgment settings. Origen: "There were certain causes of prior existence, in consequences of which the souls, before their birth in the body, contracted a certain amount of guilt," while conversely, these pre-mortal actions "furnish grounds for merits even before they do anything in the world."⁸²⁴ Thus, such things, it was Origen's opinion, have to be factored into the sum of their own free will choices in the previous existence, in order to understand what the persons were prepared to experience in proportion to the degree of his or her merits.⁸²⁵

Origen suggests that one path way, the right-hand-path, as promoted by the Word-Christ, & his prophets, in the ultimate end, brings the person to deification. While the other "extreme," promoted by Satan & his fallen angels, the wicked demons, those that choose their way, that are thus on the left-hand-path, ends with the demonification of them that go down it. This was one of the whole points of God allowing or placing wickedness in some part of the universe, and to appoint a training-school of virtue for those to have the opposition, the challenges needed to be tested with. For in having past the test in the training-school of virtue, & in having exerted themselves to the utmost to prevent anything base injuring their rational nature, they may appear deserving of an ascent to divine things, or the ascent to deification. Elevated by the Word, or Christ, to the blessedness which is above all things, even to the very summit of goodness.⁸²⁶

Origen brings 2 themes together, pre-existence & deification. In the words "man received the dignity of God's image at his first creation..." Origen takes us back to the pre-existence in the heavens, & then the anticipated perfection in God's likeness, being made in the image of God.⁸²⁷

Celsus challenged & mocked Christ for being called "the Son of God," & to this Origen notes how Celsus had avoided a quote from Plato, a Greek Philosopher, that Celsus had used earlier. How Plato, had referred to Him who so beautifully arranged this world. Origen goes on to suggest that the sources of Plato should have offered to Celsus evidences for the earlier knowledge of there being the Son of God, & how the architect of this world is the Son of God, and that His Father is the first God and Sovereign Ruler over all things. Plus of the perfect man, and of him who is joined to the true Lord, Word, and Wisdom, and Truth, and Righteousness, & the soul of Jesus, the first-born of every creature.⁸²⁸

Origen defends the pre-existing Church, as others have, joining in oneness with the earthly church, just like Christ with the Father are one. But this oneness is in unity of a oneness of purpose, not literally a Trinitarian type of oneness. It wasn't time yet for the oneness of the Godhead, dogmatically debated over, as the later fourth century church Fathers did, during the Nicene Creed of 325 A.D. Where they came up with confusing terms that were enforced by the Emperor, Constantine. But then dropped, then enforced again, as those with opposing views, were banished, exiled, then recalled, & so forth, back & forth.⁸²⁹ Origen uses the earthly body as a type for the pre-existing Church, that type of oneness, being in agreement with each other, (see: Ephesians 5:21-32, 1 Corinthians 12:12-28). Not to suggest here that Origen used this type, the body, to suggest that God the Father had a body, for Origen taught that God the Father didn't, but was incorporeal, without a body, a divine spirit only.⁸³⁰ But, here he uses a body as a type, like Paul did, earlier. Both of these, the earthly & pre-existing body (church), should be "one" in unity.

Thus, Origen further on, wrote about how Celsus had mocked certain terms used by the Christians: "...If, however, holy Scripture says that the perfect man is joined to and made one with the Very Word by means of virtue, so that we infer that the soul of Jesus is not separated from the first-born of all creation, he [Celsus] laughs at Jesus being called "Son of God," not observing what is said of Him with a secret and mystical signification in the holy Scriptures.... [And there by] declare the body of Christ, animated by the Son of God, to be the whole Church of God, and the members of this body-- considered as a whole -- to consist of those who are believers; since, as a soul vivifies and moves the body, which of itself has not the natural power of motion like a living being, so the Word, arousing and moving the whole body, the Church, to befitting action, awakens, moreover, each individual member belonging to the Church, so that they do nothing apart from the Word.... [For] as the soul of Jesus is joined in a perfect and inconceivable manner with the very Word, so the person of Jesus, generally speaking, is not separated from the only begotten and first-born of all creation, and is not a different being from Him?..."⁸³¹

Origen wrote in support of the Mosaic cosmogony, which Celsus had said was "silly" & "sheer nonsense". Origen also notes that Celsus used to represent early Christians' beliefs, some of the versions of the war in heaven, as presented by some of the heretics: "...Misunderstanding, moreover, another impious heresy, has said: 'If, indeed, there did exist an accursed god opposed to the great God, who did this contrary to his approval, why did he lend him the light?' So far are we from offering a defense of such puerilities, that we desire, on the contrary, distinctly to arraign the statements of these heretics as erroneous, and to undertake to refute, not those of their opinions with which we are unacquainted, as Celsus does, but those of which we have attained an accurate knowledge, derived in part from the statements of their own adherents, and partly from a careful perusal of their writings."⁸³²

Celsus asked: "... 'Why, when he [God] lent (his spirit), was he ignorant that he was lending it to an evil being?'... [And:] 'Why does he [God] pass without notice a wicked creator who was counter-working his purposes?'"⁸³³ Celsus seems to be hinting to some of the early Christians' versions concerning how Satan had opposed God, & started to counter-working against God.

Celsus, wrote Origen, mixed up together various heresies, & not observing that some statements were the utterances of one heretical sect, & others of a different one, Celsus brought forward the objections which other rival Christians had raised against Marcion. Origen suspects that Celsus had probably heard them from some paltry & ignorant individuals, & then assailed the very arguments which combat them, but not in a way that shows that he had much intelligence. Celsus quotes the arguments of rival Christians against Marcion, & not observing that it is against Marcion that Celsus was speaking. Celsus goes on to ask a number of questions, that suggest that he was still attempting to mock the idea of the Christians' dualism in heaven.⁸³⁴

Origen: The Persians' "Gods," & their "first-born of all creation," are false gods, for all the gods of the nations which are demons, are not like the true Christ, the real first-born. Origen, again expounds on the devil & his demons' apostasy, their disobedience to God. For they were not demons originally, but they became so in departing from the true way; so that the name "demons" are given to those beings who have fallen away from God. Accordingly, those who worship God must not serve demons, or use incantations & work magical arts, for the demons are the ones that answer the call of those who perform such works.⁸³⁵

Origen also makes reference to the counterfeit works of the demons, the Christians should not be partakers of the demons' table, or counterfeit ritualistic meals. There are good angels & bad fallen angels, & points out that Celsus was wrong in not making a distinction or contrasting between them. We shouldn't pray to demons, but should pray to the Most High God alone, and the Only-begotten, the First-born of the whole creation. Thus, pray to His God and our God, to His Father and the Father of those who direct their lives according to His word. Origen mentions again how Jesus is the "Angel of the great counsel." He hints again to the war in heaven.⁸³⁶

"For Origen, 'the eternal creation had fore its object, beings equal in faculties and in gifts, but free. They were not all equally faithful to God, and from that were born all the differences which exist among them. Some became the angels, others human beings, and other the demons.'"⁸³⁷

For support for pre-existence themes, one of the sources that Origen uses with approval, is a 1st or 2nd c.e., work, the Prayer of Joseph. A fragment of it has Jacob saying of Abraham & Isaac, how they were created before any work. This text describes some of the patriarchs as great souls, even angels, who descended to assume human nature. Says the patriarchs: "I Jacob, who speak to you, and Israel, I am an angel of God, a ruling spirit, and Abraham and Isaac were created before every work of God.... I am the first-born of every creature which God caused to live." Origen thus understood & interpreted this as meaning that Jacob was a chief captain among the angels before his birth, who had to be reminded of that heritage by the archangel Uriel "while doing service in the body."⁸³⁸

ORIGEN'S VERSION OF THE PRE-EXISTENCE REJECTED BY LATER CHRISTIANS

"Origen and his teachings of the pre-existence had been condemned. However, though a few still accepted the teaching, for them too God was entirely responsible for man, since, though God had created the spirits of men before the beginning of this world, they thought he had nevertheless created them out of nothing."⁸³⁹

One of the factors that added to many reasons why later Christians abandoned, rejected, & didn't know what to believe & think about many pre-existence themes, was how that as the centuries aged Christendom, the doctrine started to become more & more obscure, faded out, transformed, & was in legendization process. Even Origen, a defender of the faith, one of the brightest men of his age, & a great scholar & respected teacher, at least during his time, & was one who had expounded on many aspects of the pre-existence. Perhaps even more than other church Fathers of his time. Still, despite all this, he wasn't totally sure about what to think about some aspects of the doctrine of a pre-existence, as with other doctrines. For the doctrine concerning the origin of the soul was not distinguished with sufficient clearness in the teachings of the church, he notes. Other aspects, like how the devil and his angels exist, he said, had not been explained with sufficient clearness. Moreover, that the doctrines of the premortal existence, & what will exist after it, or the world, he notes, had not become certainly known to many, for there was no clear statement regarding it in the teaching of the church. It was also not clear in the church teachings if the Holy Ghost was a son of God, or not. There was too many gaps & holes in the teachings of the Church, Origen admits, to satisfy all of the doctrinal questions of his time.⁸⁴⁰

One of the first serious attack was made by Methodius, bishop of Patara in Lycia, early fourth century. He wrote against Origen's First Principles, & against his followers, who also taught the pre-existence of souls. Athanasius & the Cappadocian fathers, Basil & the two Gregories, admit Origen's works were not wholly free from error, yet regarded him as orthodox in the main & defended him.⁸⁴¹

Origen wasn't alone in expounding & defending the pre-existence themes about "the Logos," or Christ's pre-existence, before his birth, or incarnation to Mary.⁸⁴² The pre-existing-Jesus remained absolutely faithful to God, & thus was chosen, because of merit, to be the leader in the Gospel plan. He was the leader, not only while on earth, but also in Old Testament times, for the Son arranged all things from the beginning.⁸⁴³

Origen, one of the last Christian writers to teach the doctrine of pre-existence, affirmed that all humans had a pre-existing soul (spirit), that had once been in the presence of God. But he adds his own versions of the story accordingly, what he read of Satan, and a third of the host of heaven being cast out of heaven. He concluded that they were cast down to this earth and those who inhabit the earth are the embodied spirits of the rebellious who are here to learn the differences between good and evil. Thus, the Pre-existence in Origen's teachings had become perverted, during the apostasy raging in Christendom, into a relationship which identified human beings with the fallen spirits.⁸⁴⁴

Another teaching of Origen on pre-existence themes on free agency, was how that he taught how humans can become angels. Angels too may change: an archangel may become a demon, for an archangel could fall, like the once good angels, & Satan had fallen from their high positions. But, what got Origen in trouble with later Christians was how he also taught that Satan may rise again to regain his place in heaven, this belief is called apokatastasis.⁸⁴⁵

Origen, a "Neoplatonist in background, his system embraces both the notions of the pre-existence of souls, with their fall and final restoration. . . [While] At Alexandria, itself, Peter, who became bishop c. 300 and composed theological essays of which only fragments remain, attacked Origen's doctrine of the preexistence of souls and their return into the condition of pure spirits."⁸⁴⁶

Though historic Christianity often expounded on their own versions of deification, they also note how the devil had went about it the wrong way, rather than God the Father's way. The devil, when a once good angel, fell because he had seen the glory of the Father & wanted it for himself. Thus, in some pre-existence themes that blend the doctrine of deification, the devil fell because he sought to exalt himself above God the Father, rather than go through the plan set forth for the angels to follow, as discussed in the council in heaven.⁸⁴⁷

Some scholars suggest that because Origen affirmed the eventual restoration (apokatastasis) of all spirits—even that of Satan himself, that both beliefs, the pre-existence theme of a fall of the angels & their restoration, were close enough pre-existence themes to reject both, though they might appear to be two separate issues. Some speculate that it was this latter belief, more than the less objectionable doctrine of preexistence, that tainted Origen's reputation among the orthodox theologians.⁸⁴⁸ Logically, in light of preexistent themes connected up with other doctrinal themes, it might have been asked: Just how far of a restoration of former fallen angels-demons, were Origen & his disciples willing to take that belief with other themes, like deification? For because both doctrines of a preexistent fall & eventual restoration were thought to be connected, Origen's disciples & opponents either embraced both, or damned the pair of themes. If they were making connections between those two separate issues, they must have also factored in deification. For often-times, pre-existence themes are explained along with deification themes.⁸⁴⁹ That was the whole point of spirits of the family in heaven, coming down from heaven to be born into the human family. They were to be tested, & because they would choose, through free-will, to sin at times, would need to be cleansed, purified & restored to their former bright nature, before their fall; as they were becoming deified, perfected, & becoming as like to God as possible.⁸⁵⁰ So logically, it must have been asked anciently. Just how far would, God & Christ, plus the heavenly warrior-angels, (like Michael), would permit their former rivals to be let back into heaven? After all, they had fought against those fallen angel-demons, & Satan, in numerous on going wars that went from many realms of existences! They'd fought against them in the wars in heaven, on earth & in the underworld, during Christ's descent there, & after his post-resurrection victory march throughout the world! These fallen angel-demons, under Satan, had reigned with havoc, suffering, & unspeakable horrors, & carnage, as they tempted the human family to give into their negative traits! So were all these types of things factored into the equation, when Origen, his disciples & rivals considered the implications of apokatastasis? For, after all that Satan & the fallen-angels had done, they were to be later, eventually allowed to return? Would they be forgiven all of their sins, all the sufferings they caused & the damage done throughout time, then to eventually be deified? Former demons, former fallen angels, cleansed of their sins, repented, & eventually, deified? Certainly they wouldn't be allowed back into heaven without them repairing, as much as possible, all the damage they'd done! Or without making restitution, changing, being rehabilitated, being tested to see how sincere & repentant they really were. For why would God & Christ allow them back into heaven if they were just going to cause another war in heaven like before? They would have to have then been changed, redeemed, cleansed & unspotted from all their filth, sins, & blackness of their demonification. Have gone from the one extreme in the two ways, to the complete opposite extreme along the right hand path, as all who had gone before them had. Was this logically thought through by Origen & his disciples? If not, it must have been by Origen's rivals who then because of this combination of connecting the dots between all the different themes had decided at least to cut out Origen's version of the pre-existence & the restoration of the fallen angels, while still accepting their own versions of deification. That, unlike Origen's version, didn't include the restoration & possible eventual deification of former fallen angels, & Satan himself! Such logical connecting up of all the different themes must have been considered blasphemous, by Origen's later rivals! If, that is, Origen's rivals ever did make the connections. But then again, just how far gone of mortal sinners would Origen & his disciples have allowed as part of apokatastasis, for those who not been fallen angels, but just ones who were like them, having chosen demonification down the left hand path extreme? Whatever might have been the case, it was the combination of pre-existent fall & the eventual restoration of the fallen back into heaven that got Origen & his disciples in trouble in later Christians, during the Origenism Controversy, of the late 4th–6th centuries. "As the tide fully turned against Origen and his doctrine of preexistence, the divinity and inherent immortality it attributed to the human soul were major catalysts to opposition. This is ironic given that, ultimately, Origen's anthropology blames human weakness and a tendency toward earthiness for our cosmic catastrophe. Other versions of preexistence were extant, though not as influential as Origen's, in the early Christian centuries. And it would be a century and more before the myriad versions, defenses, and attacks on preexistence would coalesce into full-blown controversy. When the final, official blow came, it would be almost anticlimatic."⁸⁵¹

As different versions of different doctrines developed in the different early to later Christian sects. Plus, as different controversies around those different versions raged on in different areas of Christendom, each of the different themes within those different doctrines would affect other themes in other doctrines. Pre-existent themes would affect Christological themes, & visa versa. Trinitarian themes would affect Christological, preexistence & deification, & visa versa. For examples: Tertullian, 3rd century, raised the alarm against pre-existence themes mentioned, how that they threatened to put the soul "on a par with God," who alone had the monopoly on immortality, (Thus affecting deification & immortality themes). Neo-Platonists' immortality themes affected preexistence & deification themes, as Greek Philosophy influenced early to later Christian doctrines. Later, apologists like Arnobius of Sicca (died 330), alarmed that such conceptions of immortality suggested divinity as well, attacked the whole idea, for if the soul was pre-existent as being immortal before mortal birth, that would mean the soul would have to be divine, before descending from God their Father, (affecting pre-existence, immortality & deification themes). For Arnobius, & many Christians of his time, immortality was an attribute of the divine alone, unless made contingent upon God's grace.⁸⁵² As these waves of controversy crashed into each other, the blends of the influences on the doctrines turned the doctrines into mixtures that would be passed down to later generations of Christendom. These blends to also pass through different cultural contaminations that produced further retrogressions away from the original doctrines, as different versions of Christendom spread out into other areas of the world. Such things are inevitable products of times of apostasy.⁸⁵³

More Early-Later Christians on Pre-existence Themes

Hippolytus, 170-236, hinted to Christ's pre-existence when he wrote that Christ was born, "the Word of God, before all (ages); and of things on earth".⁸⁵⁴

251-356, St. Anthony of Egypt, founder of Christian monastery system, is reported to have experienced with, encounters with, & battled evil spirits. Thus in some pre-existence themes, turning into legends, the post-fall from heaven activities of the Devil & demons are how they go after the Saints & battle with them on earth. At least this is what Athanasius tells us about Anthony, how that when Anthony was in the desert near Thebes, he'd battle & struggle with the demons, perhaps for real, or perhaps of his imaginations. Whatever might be the case, in art works depicting him fighting with the Devil, we might be tempted to wonder if he had bad close encounters of the bad alien kind, the kind now depicted in movies. In the After Salvador Rosa, p. 239-240, St. Anthony is depicted fighting the Devil with the cross. It shows the Devil as an alien looking creature, tall, with long thin legs, a long thin tail in back, long thin arms, with long sharp fingers, and a long sharp beak type nose, sharp teeth, & a strange curled nob with a hole in the middle on the back of the neck behind the head.⁸⁵⁵ This is what we start to note in the art works, when pre-existence themes of post fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels start to become legendized, deposited in superstitious customs in folklore, which get also illustrated in art works, down through the centuries as Christendom aged.

205-270, not an early Christian Father, but one who would influence later Christianity that would blend Greek Philosophy in with many of its teachings. Plotinus, one of the founders of Neo-Platonism, presents platonized pre-existence themes, & some deification themes too. Souls have a divine origin, & in a sense are individual entities that is present to bodies since it shines in them and makes them living creatures, but not by physically imparting its substance, but by remaining itself, & only by giving off an image of itself, like a mirror image type. In this way, birth involves a descent of the Soul, when something else comes to be from it which comes down in the soul's inclination. It's like a light casting a shadow, the shadow comes into existence by virtue of the light and therefore can be said to originate in that light and depend for their subsistence on that light. Plotinus hints to the divinity of the One, & of the quest for mortals to know the means by which a human soul can achieve a kind of ecstatic union with that source of all being, & also: "Try to bring back the god in you to the divine in the All." The souls of humankind originated in the "Soul of All," & souls departed the heavens to be, dragged down, (not by force but by its own reluctance to freely descend, in some cases), to the lower existence, for: "That world has souls without bodies, but this world has the souls which have come to be in bodies." The journey of the soul theme is also part of the scheme of Plotinus, for souls have divine origins, descend to experience earthly purification, and reintegration with the divine in a mystical union, thus hinting to deification themes too. The soul, originally divine & pure, becomes evil through being born into a physical body. Following the anti-body ideology of Greek thought, Plotinus felt ashamed to be in a body, & it was through the purification of all bodily desires & attachments, that the soul starts on the journey to return from where it came from, back to the levels of being, & draws upon divine powers to re-ascend in the soul's pursuit of unity with the One. Pre-existence themes are worked out in his writings, Ennead, about how the soul comes to be in a body, how mortality is a kind of fall, like a leap downward from the Supreme. This fall into a body is a degradation, & this fall appears to be universal by choice, & preordained destiny, (unlike Plato's scheme). No spirit is forced into the lower plane of existence, it was by free choice & preordained, thus, some souls are reluctant & unwillingly go. The conditions of the body, the type of goodness of the life it will live are not based on the type of life lived in the pre-existence. (Thus, unlike in some versions of early to later Christian pre-existence themes, were sins done in the pre-existence, can determine the type of body & life conditions a spirit is born into mortality in). Plotinus has a version of Neo-Platonism's pre-existence themes that suggests that the spirit enters the body pure, & is defiled by the flesh, thus the purification that needs to take place before returning to the divine One. The rate of descent of the spirit from the pre-existence, depends on their nature, their degree of self-mastery, and their susceptibility to heaviness and forgetfulness. Thus, hinting to the pre-existence theme, not too common in other cultures, including early to later Christianity, about becoming forgetful about the prior life as a spirit.⁸⁵⁶

Another neo-platonist, Iamblichus, had his own version of the whole journey of the soul through the whole drama of descent from the pre-existence into mortal bodies, & the journey through the fallen realm of earth life, & the eventual ascension with divine help to then reach upward toward theosis, or deification, transforming of the person to a divine status. Having done all they could to escape from earth to heaven, & thus becoming as like God as possible.⁸⁵⁷

To what extent did Greek philosophy have on the Christological controversy? Was their a chain reaction of effects that rippled out from the Christological controversy to effect pre-existence themes? For if there is only One God, or 3 in 1, & only 1, how would Christ's pre-existence fit in with the later formulas of the Nicene Creed? Or of Christ being part of the One God, fit in with the council of the gods being in council with the Most High God, the Father? Or that the One God could have spirit children, children of God, or have an "only begotten Son"? Is this why many pre-existence themes fell by the way side as time aged Christendom?

The results of Greek pre-existence themes' influences on later Christian pre-existence themes, & the acceptance of different blends in the thinking & attitudes of later Christians, is a mixture of shifting back & forth in acceptance, to rejection. To rekindled interest, like during the Renaissance, when Greek texts were found & translated & distributed. Thus causing ones, like Michelangelo, 16th c., to include a blend of Greek influenced pre-existence themes in with later Christian left overs of faded pre-existence themes, in with his art works, like in his Creation of Adam.⁸⁵⁸ Thus, to later Christians, the blends are accepted as valuable ancient wisdom, while others will revile it as a pernicious myth. Still, others will tolerate it as promising, if not speculative, & a dubious concept. Mean while, in other areas of Christianity, pre-existence themes will continue to be preserved in moral & mystery plays, in texts, poems, legends, art works on church walls, & in bible illustrations, amongst illumination manuscript making monks. While also, different aspects of pre-existence themes will continue to become fragmented in superstitious fables about different races of the fallen angels. Such as fables about some of their post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities. Their devilish doings, & temptations of the human family on earth, & about their haunts under the earth, or near rivers, underwater as part of the water spirit lore in marshes, & lakes. These aspects will grow in time, as the fables develop in later Christendom amongst the illiterate peasantry, & will continue to suffer more cultural contaminations, wherever the beliefs spread to.⁸⁵⁹

LACTANTIUS, 260-330 A.D., makes references to the deceptions of the devil, – the pretended deity. He explains the origins of evil to have its beginnings in Satan's apostate & rebellious attitude. "The first angel created, according to Lactantius, was precisely that one who was to become the chief of the bad angels, the devil."

Jesus was Satan's Elder Spirit Brother: Lactantius also believed that lucifer caused a war in heaven because he was jealous of his spirit brother Jesus Christ. This idea was passed down & legendized in later centuries.⁸⁶⁰ "The first angel created, according to Lactantius, was precisely that one who was to become the chief of the bad angels, the devil."⁸⁶¹

Lactantius explores the issue & question concerning the origins of evil, why God, in the very beginning had allowed the prince of the demons to bring about works of evil. He answered by saying that the oppositions help us to comprehend the differences between the two extremes. "...At the very beginning, "before he made anything else, God made two sources of things, each source opposed to the other and each struggling against the other. These two sources are the two spirits, the just spirit and the corrupt spirit, and one of them is like the right hand of God while the other is like his left." In the beginning too, there was a war between the good spirit & the evil spirit.⁸⁶²

Father Louis Coulange notes that Lactantius wrote about how God, before the creation of the world, had "produced a spirit similar to himself and filled with the virtues of God the Father. He then made another in whom the imprint of the divine origin did not remain. For he was tainted with the venom of jealousy and thus passed from good to evil.... He was jealous of his elder brother, who, remaining attached to God the Father, obtained his affection. This being who, from good which he was, became evil, is called Devil by the Greeks." "Thus, according to Lactantius, the Devil is a younger brother of the Word; but a brother who developed evilly, while his elder, by his goodwill, deserved his Father's affection."⁸⁶³

Early to later Christians that Reject Some Pre-existence Themes. Different Controversies that affected different views about the Pre-existence. Some Who Taught Other Versions becoming Legendized:

Apologists, like Arnobius of Sicca (died 330), alarmed that conception of immortality suggested divinity, as suggested by rival Christians of his time, as other had earlier, he, like Tertullian had earlier, also attacked his rival Christians' version of the blend of deification themes with pre-existence themes. For if the soul was pre-existent as being immortal before mortal birth, that would mean the soul would have to be divine, before descending from God their Father. For Arnobius, & many later Christians of his time, immortality was an attribute of the divine alone, unless made contingent upon God's grace.⁸⁶⁴ Thus, Arnobius objects to how that there were those who held the extravagant opinion of themselves, "...that souls are immortal, next in point of rank to God and ruler of the world, descended from that parent and sire, divine, wise." He goes on with a description of these opinions, how that if they were immortal-divine, having been produced by Him who is perfect, without flaw, then they must live unblameably, & are good, just, upright, nothing depraved, passions don't over power them by lust, for nothing degrades them, as they maintain all practice of virtues. Arnobius knows this couldn't be the case, because of (immortal-divines now in the flesh as) –mortals, have always lived imperfect lives. So with further sarcasm he points out his further rejection of this later version of pre-existence themes, and reproach against those who hold that the human family lived in heaven as God's spirit offspring before a fall into mortality: "Will you lay aside your habitual arrogance, O men, who claim God as your Father, and maintain that you are immortal, just as He is?... What excellence is in us, such that we scorn to be ranked as creatures?"⁸⁶⁵ However, was Arnobius, like Tertullian & others, only rejecting certain pre-existence themes, while inadvertently accepting others, like the origins of the Satan & the fallen angels? Arnobius also admired the Greek philosopher, Plato, & perhaps couldn't have rejected every pre-existence themes altogether, for Plato had taught his own version of them too.⁸⁶⁶ So Arnobius was one in many early to later Christians, & church fathers, who rejected others' particular pre-existence themes, while being caught between admiration for Plato and an inclination toward belief in the soul's pre-existence, on one side of the issue, the uncertainty about its harmony with the evolving doctrine of deity, on the other side. (Another example of the Christological & Trinitarian controversies affecting different themes about the Pre-existence & deification). "So, even as Arnobius decries the conflation of human and divine attributes, he asks rhetorically, "To Him do we not owe this first, that we exist, that we are said to be men, that, being either sent forth from Him, or having fallen from Him, we are confined in the darkness of this body?"⁸⁶⁷ So, ironically, like other church fathers, & apologists, Arnobius accedes to the Platonic & Origenist account of human origins, on one side, while he rejects what he believes to be the manifest blasphemy of reading into such accounts other controversial themes, such as the deification of the human soul. With the controversy over preexistence themes underway, & with Arnobius's own reservations about different themes, he had tacitly inclined to the idea that souls were either "sent forth from [God], or [had] fallen from Him" into "the darkness of this body." He also explores his uncertainty about such questions as: "By what sire have [souls] been begotten, and how have they been produced?..." He admits that the answer to this, they were ignorant of. "We do not say... from what causes and beginnings they have sprung. But what crime is it either to be ignorant of anything..."⁸⁶⁸

Theodore of Mopsuestia, (died 328), bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia, got caught up in the Christological controversy over if Mary was the "mother of God," or not. But if so, in what way? Thus, he argued that Mary gave birth to Jesus, but not to the Logos (Word), for the Logos had always been, he is without beginning. In a way, he "...reasoned correctly but on the false premise that the pre-existent "Word" and the spirit of man have nothing in common. In the sense that any mother is not the mother of the pre-existent spirit of her son and daughter, Mary also was not the mother of the pre-existent Logos (Word-Jesus)."⁸⁶⁹

By the 1st quarter of 4th century, preexistence themes, as in earlier centuries, that once "very important teachings, current at an earlier period, had either been completely, forgotten or were ignored: the pre-existence of the spirits of men, of whom God was the Father; Jesus (one of these spirits) "alone remained absolutely faithful to God"; and the world was "organized with pre-existing material elements.” Also: “The Council of Nicea, [325] inspired solely by the desire of saving the absolute divinity of Christ, had accepted the western omoousios, which in fact safeguarded the threatened point, but did not express the personality of the pre-existent Christ.” And: “In their consideration of the “Christological problem,” the theologians began their reasoning on the false premise of no pre-existence of man and that human nature and divine nature are entirely different.”⁸⁷⁰

In the Christological controversy, in some cases the preexistence of the spirits of men had been lost. There were theologians that thought the Word (the Logos—Jesus) had existed from all eternity, & was the same substance as the Father, and had not been created. In the case with the human family, they had been created & thus had a beginning. The Logos was immaterial & thus the nature of the Logos was different from the nature of man. With the idea of preexistence lost, questions arose over the origin of the spirit of man. In attempting to solve this, as in all debates, the theologians were influenced by Greek philosophy.

These later pre-existence themes about the Logos, may have also been influenced by the Jewish philosopher-theologian, influenced by Greek philosophy himself, Philo (ca. 13 B.C.- A.D. 45 to 50), born in Alexandria, Egypt. He had sought to reconcile the Jewish scriptures & customs, with Greek ideas & the ideas of Plato. Philo’s later influence on Christological & Trinitarian controversies was felt, as those waves crashed up against the pre-existence controversy! Especially as those waves mixed in with the whole drama behind the diverse interpretations about Christ’s pre-existence, or non-pre-existence issues in Christological issues.⁸⁷¹ That wave of Philo’s theology became very familiar, during his time & to later generations of early to later Christians, that also sought historical sources to support their conflicting & confusing blends of diverse versions of later anti-anthropomorphic interpretations of Deity, (or against descriptions of Deity as having human form or feelings, or human characteristics). Especially, as those views & dogmas became dominant in some areas, so also had to go out of the dogmatic scenes, different fragments of pre-existence themes, which affected also Christ’s preexistence themes. Especially also in later centuries, when confusion over the nature of the Godhead was argued over, before, during, & after the council of Nicene, pre, during, & post 325 A.D. (But even then, fragments of Christ’s preexistence themes had to be still retained to a certain extent, even in the later depictions of 3 faces on 1 head Godhead, or 3 heads on 1 body Godhead, as seen instructing Adam & Eve.⁸⁷² Certainly those types of art works would logically suggest that at least 1 of those faces, or 1 of those heads, if they represent the Christ part of the 3 in 1 Godhead, then that would have to mean that Christ pre-existed). But in the course of time, as these Philo theological waves, & said other waves, blended & affecting each other, they would continue to crash into the other controversial waves, like during the later pre-existence-anti-Origen controversy of the 5th into the 6th centuries of later Christendom. Earlier, it was from Philo & others influenced by Greek philosophy, that some early to later Christians, got some of their concepts of God as being incorporeal, indescribable, without limitations, and some kind of incomprehensible divine force, a non human, non-person entity-“God.” Earlier Jewish understandings about pre-existence themes, such as the council in heaven, with angelic-spirit sons & daughters of Divine Parents, there in when the foundations of the earth were made. Such concepts of pre-mortal spirits were later morphed into non-beings, by later generations of Jews & some early Christian sects. In Philo’s Greek influenced version, they weren’t real angels, but rather ideas, thoughts of God & thus existed only in the Divine Mind. The Logos (later associated with the pre-existent spirit of Christ, by some early to later Christians),⁸⁷³ was for Philo, thought to be a “person,” but not a real “person,” but rather a sort of personification of God’s ideas. It was like there was this conflict & tug of war in Philo’s mind, between the anthropomorphic Jewish elements still surviving in Jewish thought, during his time, of a coming Messiah in the flesh, which crashed up against the wave of the anti-anthropomorphic abstract Greek philosophy influences, tugging on his views of God, from the other direction. Thus, confusingly, Philo called the Logos, “the first-born of God,” conceived by the virgin Wisdom. (Influenced by Proverbs 8:22?) Thus, God, who is beyond man’s comprehension, could be revealed through the “person” of the Logos. Or, more literally, through reason, meaning the reasoning of the philosopher, which is the true Divine Wisdom. For it’s through the Logos God, that God has revealed himself to man. Moreover, with the soul being a part of God, it can through reason, rise to a mystic vision, not quite of God, but of the Logos. Philo’s anti-matter, anti-body theology also suggested that if we could free ourselves from the taint of matter and sense, and by ascetic exercises and long contemplation become for a moment pure spirit, we might for an ecstatic moment, see God himself. But if God could be seen, he wouldn’t be in the image of a male man, because God is not limited by being confined to a bodily shape. This is Philo’s attempt to mediate between Hellenism, (or relating to Greek culture from the death of Alexander the Great (323bc), to the defeat of Cleopatra and Mark Antony by Octavian in 31bc), & Judaism. A movement & blend, that the Rabbis (or Jewish scholars, teachers, leaders, especially of Jewish law), frowned upon, while many early Christians, including many church Fathers, admired & made use of.⁸⁷⁴

The earlier results of the Jewish apostasy from their earlier prophets’ plain to understand prophecies, about the pre-existing Messiah. The Jewish apostasy away from clearer understandings about the earlier anthropomorphic Elohim (Gods), & polytheistic understanding of the gods & goddesses in a pre-existing council, with the Most High God of gods. The early to later Jewish apostasy away from the clearer understanding of anthropomorphic Elohim (sometimes understood to be a combination of male & female deities), creating male & female in their images, (Adam & Eve). All these basic concepts got muddled (or brought into a disordered, or confusing state), by the time of the Greek infusion into Jewish traditions, & scripture copying of already tampered with Old Testament type texts. Consequently, by the time that Greek influenced Jews in Alexandria, like Philo, did inherited copies of their scriptures. They got already muddled out earlier pre-existence themes, & muddled & taken out many anthropomorphic themes, from those earlier copies of their scriptures.⁸⁷⁵ It was the ripple effects of these legendization processes of the Jewish apostasy, that no longer had, or could claim living prophets, that then produced different versions of deity, & that were factors behind why Christ, & his claims & testimony of having pre-existed, was rejected. How that he had come down from his & our Father in Heaven, to be, God the Father’s literal Son of God in the flesh. Those basic concepts were rejected by many of the Jew, then later rejected by many early Christians who had been infected by Philo’s blend of Jewish-Greek philosophy, especially, as Christendom was going through its own phases of apostasy, like the Jews had.⁸⁷⁶

The problems & questions in the Christological controversy was how to deal with the fact that Christ became a man, took upon himself flesh! For what was he before becoming flesh? Was it that he didn’t exist before birth? Just like other men didn’t too, if Christ was “a mere man,” & came into existence through the same manner as other men have? (As argued by Adoptionists: Those who believed Christ was not divine, didn’t pre-exist, was born a mere man to Joseph & Mary, (for most, born of a virgin). Then was adopted as God’s Son, for his unique righteousness, during his baptism, or resurrection). But as others argued & could be asked: Wasn’t he immaterial, a different nature than that of man’s? How would this immaterial Logos (Word) become a man? To become a man, wouldn't he also have to assume both a human body & a human soul? If Christ was an exception to the rule of Traducianism, (soul & body are created at the same time by their parents, no preexistence of the soul). Then, how could the Logos (Christ the Word), have then been immaterial, unchangeable, co-eternal with the Father, & one with the Father, but not have preexisted? Moreover, if Christ took on Himself the complete human nature, which grew, suffered and died, since, some said, God couldn't suffer, being unchangeable & eternal. How could he have not went through changes from his eternal nature, & of what he was before he took on human nature, if he didn't preexist & couldn't change? Especially if, as some argued with Traducianism, if Christ had a soul & a body, & it was created at the same time when he became flesh in Mary's womb & was born a man-God. But then, if there was only one God, & the Father, Son, & Holy Spirit descended into the womb of Mary to be born, as some argued, (if there was no preexistence), what of the Trinity before they were born? Or what was the Father before he was born? (Especially under Patripassianists, ("modalism"): Those who argued that Christ was God the Father himself, come down to earth in human flesh. Came down into the Virgin, was Himself born of her, Himself suffered, was Himself Jesus Christ. Or under Sabellianism: The belief that the Father, Son & Holy Ghost were only names for different manifestations of the one God. Now, if there was no preexistence, how could any of the above described "god(s)" have existed before being incarnated in Mary? Or were they the exception to the rule?⁸⁷⁷ With basic preexistence themes out of use with some, & forgotten by others, rejected by certain ones, & in some cases dogmatically defended & used by rivals against those who rejected Christ's preexistence, in the Christological issues, the polemical mess only grew. Especially as dogmas, debates, & Greek philosophical terms, descriptions, & concepts were blended into the mess to created, & causes more incomprehensible, illogical & mysterious versions of what the Godhead, what Christ, the Father & Holy Spirit, was said to be like, or not like.⁸⁷⁸

The pre-existence themes about the pre-existent family in heaven, our Divine Parents, the Fatherhood of God the Father, the spirit brotherhood of Christ as first born in that spirit family in heaven, & of Christ being the only begotten son in the flesh. All these pre-existence themes suffered when the waves of the Christological & Trinitarian Controversies came crashing down on them. These pre-existence themes had to be decreased, minimized, forgotten, abandoned, de-literalize, forced out by Emperor decrees, & rejected in order to make room for the different dogmas that conflicted with these themes. For how could God the Father have fathered Christ, if he didn't even have a body? How could there be a family in heaven of spirits, if there was only one God & no divine Mother in heaven? How could Christ be the first born to an un-begotten "God" who filled the universe, had no shape, no containment, but was formless? How could there also then be any type of pre-existence of spirits, if there was no real literalness to the titles of Father, Sons & daughters, or brothers & sisters? Or the 3 in 1 & only 1 god, or 1 in 3 Godhead couldn't have thus fathered any pre-existent spirits, let alone literally have fathered Christ incarnated into a body? These types of issues & factors, may be some of the reasons why many pre-existent themes had to go, & why, by the 4th century: "The doctrine of a premortal life was fast vanishing."⁸⁷⁹

As it was for this time, as earlier, the different controversies, (like the Christological and Trinitarian Controversies), crashed into each other to create more polemical haranguing settings for early to later rival Christian sects, & certain preexistence themes got caught in the middle of these on going controversies. For example, Arius, (born in Lybia, 250 or 256–336), head of one of the Alexandrian churches in Egypt, North Africa, & founder of Arianism (the doctrine that the Son of God was created by the Father, that Christ didn't pre-exist, but came into existence at his birth, & wasn't co-equal with the Father, but subordinated to the Father). Arius spoke forth boldly, declaring that "the Word was not co-eternal with the Father and was not of the same substance as the Father, that in the beginning the Father was alone, and that the Son was created out of nothing by an act of the Father's will."⁸⁸⁰ Thus, if Christ wasn't with the Father, in the beginning, what happened to Christ's preexistence in Arius' dogma? This was in opposition to the Catholic (meaning 'universal'), 4th century Christians, who, during the Nicene Creed era (1st quarter of the 4th century on up 325, Nicene Council, & beyond), had argued this: That the Father, Son & Holy Spirit, were co-eternal and equal in the Godhead, (does co-eternal then mean that Christ preexisted before his incarnation, or his birth in the flesh?) For as the rival of Arius, Athanasius (296, 298–373), had argued in Alexandria: Christ had existed as the equal of the Father from all eternity.⁸⁸¹

Did some fragments of the pre-existence of Christ survive in the Trinitarian controversial blender? Perhaps, in words that were to counter Arius, when first versions of the Nicene Creed read, how that Christ was "begotten not made," & that he "came down from heaven, was incarnate, was made man," (all pre-existence themes, that of how Christ's spirit, pre-existing with the Father, came down from heaven to be born into the body of a male-child, or thus was made man, God became man).⁸⁸² Moreover, as if to re-enforce these counters to Arius, appended to the Creed was an anathema (or a Church decree excommunicating a person or denouncing a doctrine), to those who held certain views: "As for those who say that "there was a time when the Son was not," or that "He was not before He was begotten," or that He was "made out of nothing,"... [etc., including other aspects argued over.] the Holy Catholic Apostolic Church of God declares to be anathema."⁸⁸³

By this time, influences of Adoptionism, (earlier Christological controversy issue were still at work, one in many dogmas that said Christ was a mere man, didn't pre-exist, wasn't born the Son of God at birth, but was born to Joseph & Mary, then later adopted, (either during his baptism or resurrection), as the "Son" of God, for his exceptional righteousness).⁸⁸⁴ This was passed down to influence Arius, who may have rejected, like the Adoptionists, that Christ's preexisted. Thus, a summation of some of Arius arguments: The Son of God, did not exist from all eternity, but was merely the first born of created men. If the Father begot the Son, then the Son would have a beginning & there would be a time when the Son was not. The Father is not begotten, but the Son is, hence there's a difference between them, for the Son had a beginning, while the Father did not. He who has a beginning is not an infinite perfect being, & is not properly the Son of God. Thus, only the Father is God, while the Son is the first and the principal creature that the Father has produced as with all other creatures, & thus is called the first born of all creation because he surpasses all other creatures in righteousness, thus he was adopted as the "Son" of God.⁸⁸⁵

312–321, Bishop Alexander of Alexandria, Egypt, North Africa, heard Arius talking about his doctrine in a meeting of the clergy, & forbade him to teach his beliefs. Arius kept teaching, & so by 321, Alexander convoked about 100 bishops from Egypt & Lybia to a council at Alexandria. Arius was condemned heretical, excommunicated & had to give up his church. By this time his views & the rivalry news had spread throughout Egypt & other places of Christendom. Arius left Alexandria for Palestine, and was well received by the historian, Eusebius of Caesarea, (260–337), "who held similar opinions."⁸⁸⁶ But, were those 'similar opinions' of Eusebius tainted from earlier Christological views of the Adoptionistic arguments, that seem to have influenced the Trinitarian controversial views of Arius, that Christ didn't pre-exist? The reason for this question is because Eusebius of Caesarea, the early Christian Church Historian, had wrote in favor of Christ's pre-existence! So did Arius get Eusebius to abandon that aspect of preexistence themes, like other church leaders did with other bishops, like during the anti-Origenism, anti-preexistence controversy? Or was it an aspect that was ignored, tolerated, or didn't come up in discussions between Arius & Eusebius, when they might have talked over the Godhead issues of the time, the Trinitarian controversy, when Arius was "well received" in Palestine, by Eusebius? Or were there other similar opinions they both held, but not those held concerning that aspect of the views of Arius, concerning Christ not being co-eternal with the Father, & thus, not preexisting? Whatever might have been the case, Eusebius, as a Church Historian, in his Church History, written about 323–325, he wrote that Christ pre-existed with the Father before the world began, & before the creation of all things.⁸⁸⁷ Eusebius had views similar, but also different from other early Christians. The gospel was now being preached in every nation, when it had not been earlier, says Eusebius. Other earlier Christians were of the opinion that the Gospel had been preached everywhere before the time of Christ, because Christ pre-existed.⁸⁸⁸

Eusebius testified that the Saviour, the God Word, was in the beginning with God, and was called the Son of man because of his final appearance in the flesh.⁸⁸⁹ Eusebius was amongst those who agreed that Christ had pre-existed, for Moses knew the name of Christ, & the types & symbols of heavenly things, etc. The name of Jesus had never been uttered among men before the time of Moses. Then, after him the prophets knew the name of Jesus Christ, & foretold what would happen to Him, such as the plots against him, how He would be rejected, and the calling of the nations through him. Jeremiah, for instance, speaks as follows: "The Spirit before our face, Christ the Lord, was taken in their destructions; of whom we said, under his shadow we shall live among the nations." (Lam.4:20.) He goes on to cite from, Psa.2:1-2, & adds, in the person of Christ himself, "The Lord said unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Psalm 2:7-8).⁸⁹⁰

Eusebius: Not only did Christ pre-exist, but his doctrines did too, for the Word of God, was called into being before all ages.⁸⁹¹ The pre-existing Christ appeared to Abraham, gave revelations to Isaac, talked with Jacob, Moses, & the prophets after them. Christ's teachings are the most ancient of all religions. Pre-Christian time prophets had seen Christ, & through his doctrines, all the nations of the earth would be blessed.⁸⁹² More pre-existence themes follow, with Satan's fall from heaven, for he who, after being the first to fall, made others fall, and is usually called the Dragon or Serpent. Isaiah 14 is cited to point out the cause of his fall, how that in the beginning jeweled with the divine virtues, he fell through his pride and through his revolt against God.⁸⁹³

"In the background to these concerns, Arianism, adoptionism, and kindred heresies of the era threatened to collapse the sacred distance between God and the human, making for special wariness in the face of similar developments.... In the meantime, this linkage among preexistence, self-sustaining immortality, sinlessness, and divinity will prove to be a prime factor in the growing resistance to the idea of preexistence. And it will be a decisive element in Augustine's retreat from the doctrine when the Pelagian threat makes these associations and implications even more vivid."⁸⁹⁴

When the Trinitarian controversy caused such division in the Roman Empire, the Emperor Constantine, (reigned 307–337), called numerous bishops to meet at Nicaea, near Constantinople, in 325, where the Nicene Creed was hammered out. But only after a lot of debating & controversial attempts to get the rivals' view points to be adopted, or to get them to make compromises on different aspects of formulas & words chosen for the Nicene Creed. In the midst of all these haggling, again, some preexistence themes, or at least little elements of them, got thrown into the mix. Again, Eusebius of Caesarea, in attempting to help solve the theological concept over the Godhead issue, proposed the baptismal formula in use in his own church, & it includes a part about Christ being the "only-begotten Son, the First-born of all creation, begotten of God the Father before all ages, by whom all things came into being, who became flesh for our salvation, and lived among men..."⁸⁹⁵

All these sound like they contain some of the old preexistence themes, of Christ preexisting, first born, his spirit becoming flesh at birth to live amongst the human family, or that his spirit then must have descended from heaven to be born. So why then would the Athanasians, who were against seemingly Adoptionist influenced Arius (who rejected Christ's preexistence), weren't willing to accept this baptismal formulas being offered by Eusebius? Was it the source? Was it because he had received Arius at Palestine, earlier, when Arius left Alexandria, after being condemned & excommunicated about 321? Was it because the Athanasians were compromising on some of the preexistence themes to distance themselves from Caesarea's offer? Just like the anti-Origenists had rejected many preexistence themes in rejecting Origen, because he taught in favor of a preexistence? Thus, in both cases, was it to distance themselves further from their rivals, or those who supported, or were collaborators with their rivals? For Eusebius of Caesarea & Eusebius of Nicomedia were both carefully in favor of Arius, as they had earlier, about 321, but were now cautious about it at the Council of Nicene, 325, because the Emperor Constantine was there too, but had shown his opposition to Arius. Eusebius of Caesarea was also in a possible tempted to compromise predicament in having been called upon to be one of the Emperor's advisors at the Council. While Eusebius of Nicomedia was of the moderate Arian party, but because the Emperor was against Arius, he was careful not to defend him directly.⁸⁹⁶ Whatever might have been the case: "The Athanasians were willing to accept the statement, "God of God, Light of Light, Life of Life" [in said baptismal formula of Eusebius of Caesarea's church,] but objected to the inference that there was lack of union of the Son with the Father— "each of these is and subsists." They also refused to accept the expression "the first-born of all creation" and "begotten of the Father before all the ages," since they claimed that the Son was co-eternal with the Father."⁸⁹⁷

Later on, during the late 5th into the early 6th century, other controversies affected different pre-existence themes: 1. The controversy over different views concerning there being, or not, a pre-existence of souls. 2. Pre-existence theme in connection to the Origenism controversy. 3. The dogma & controversy over "Original Sin." Augustine, (354-430), launched the controversy over original sin, claiming that Adam & Eve's original sin at the beginning, tainted even new born babies, who thus needed to be washed, by infant baptism, not only "original sin," but also any sins done in the pre-existence. This was challenged by the controversy raised by the British monk, Pelagius, who became, along with his disciple, Caelestius, powerful advocates of free will. For the first four centuries, the church had leaned towards the side of free will and accountability, rather than the side of inevitability and original sin. Free will, was part of pre-existence themes, as different ones had argued that the fallen angels had freely chosen to fall, that no one made them to choose negative traits like pride, etc., that attributed to their fall.⁸⁹⁸ But because free-will was given & practiced during the pre-existence, there was also pre-mortal sinning going on. The rise of Pelagianism had an impact on the different views about the origins of the soul, such as: 1. No pre-existence of souls before the creation of the body, (traducianism). 2. Plus, pre-existence themes, being “sent” down from heaven. Plus, pre-mortal free will, that allowed pre-mortal sins, God’s justice & post-pre-existence life punishments that were used to explain the diversity of human conditions. 3. Plus, souls created individually for each person who is born, & was used to explain the origins of the soul as being God’s creative act at the time of human conception, (creationism). All these, & more, were argued over along with original sin, inevitability, grace & accountability. This marked a decisive moment in the history of pre-existence. For the Pelagians reasoned that if God created each human soul individually long after Adam, then the doctrine of inherited spiritual depravity (original sin), is inconsistent with a pure and perfect God. In 410, with the fall of the Roman Empire, Pelagius & Caelestius ended up fleeing to North Africa, where Augustine was bishop. They continued to challenge infant baptism, for infants didn’t inherit sins, but were born sinless. If one followed pre-existence views this meant that no inherited or no pre-mortal sins were tainting them, (though post-pre-existent judgments, punishments, & diverse good or negative human conditions, souls found themselves in when born, challenged this view). But perhaps some reasoned that because all those born, into each their own infant body, they seem to also be given a fresh new start, can’t remember their pre-existence self, who they were, & what they did with their free will, while in the pre-existence. However, if one was a follower of creationism, with souls’ origin being fresh from the creative hand of God, unborn souls can’t be sinful, for “...it is an insult to their Creator to contend that, fresh from the creative hand of God, unborn souls can be sinful.” With the soul thus having a beginning at the time of conception with the body, Caelestius argued that a soul that has never known agency cannot be morally culpable. The Pelagian crisis, however, also celebrated human freedom of choice at the expense of not only original sin, but Christ himself, & his whole redemptive mission. Thus, Augustine & others countered this “heresy,” & promoted his views. For Augustine, it was a challenge to validate accountability, the necessity of grace, & even reject other views on the pre-existence, though he had considered those views earlier as viable options. With attacks on Origenism still underway, Augustine would also have to reject Origen’s particular theories, while still finding a way to rescue human choice by recourse to preexistence.⁸⁹⁹ Later Christendom would inherit the left over fragments of these ship-wrecked dogmas as they each had crashed into each other riding on the waves of numerous controversies over lapping each other during the first 6 centuries.⁹⁰⁰

Another controversy that influenced different versions of preexistence themes are how some argued over creation ex materia (creation with existing materials), in contrast to creation ex nihilo, (creation out of nothing). These views, like waves crashing together with the other controversies too, were the blends of polemical arguments going back & forth between different early to later Christian sects. In theory, if God could create a world, a soul, and a body out of nothing, (ex nihilo), as long as the soul was created before the body, that would mean a combination of the two themes: Ex nihilo & preexistence themes, & this combination would help with the survival of preexistence themes, though both were disputed points of beliefs.⁹⁰¹

Towards end of the 4th century, controversies about Origenism, subordinationism (the belief that Christ was created by and therefore is subordinate to the Father), grew beyond Origen’s views on the Trinity and preexistence to encompass other issues like human sexuality, the ascetic life, resurrection, & Origen’s & his disciples allegorical method of interpretation.⁹⁰²

Gnostic versions of pre-existence themes, also attributes to abandonments, by many early to later Christians, in maintaining certain aspects of their own pre-existence themes. Thus, many aspects suffered under the controversies, for & against adoptionism (that claimed no pre-existence for Christ). Plus, for & against Gnostic heresies, (their own cultural contaminated versions of pre-existent themes, blended with anti-body Greek philosophical concepts).⁹⁰³ Thus, those claiming to be of the true doctrines attempted to increase the dogmatic gaps between their rival sects, & the doctrine of the pre-existence got caught in the middle: “In the fathers’ zeal to purge church teachings of their [Gnostic heresies’] influence, it was natural that questionable Christian doctrines championed by the Gnostics were jettisoned. Chadwick noted that Tertullian “shows how fear of Gnostic myths about transmigration played a large part in arousing fear of the pre-existence theory.”⁹⁰⁴

In 331 A.D., Gregory of Nyssa was born, & later wrote a number of things throughout his life. His On the Baptism of Christ are said to have been written 376 A.D. Then later he wrote, On the Soul and the Resurrection, 380 A.D.⁹⁰⁵

“Gregory will not say, as Origen did, that human souls had a body when first created: rather, as we have seen, he implies the contrary; & he came to be considered the champion that fought the doctrine of the pre-existence of embodied souls. He seems to have been influenced by Methodius’ (died 311), objections to Origen’s views.... Origen’s doctrine of the pre-existence of the soul could not be retained; and we know that Gregory not only abandoned it, but attacked it with all his powers of logic in his treatise, De Anima et Resurrectione:” [On the Soul and the Resurrection, written 380 A.D.] for which he receives the applause of the Emperor Justinian. Souls, according to Origen, had pre-existed from eternity: they were created certainly, but there never was a time when they did not exist: so that the procession even of the Holy Spirit could in thought only be prior to their existence. Then a failure of their free wills to grasp the true good, & a consequent cooling of the fire of love within them, plunged them in this material bodily existence, which their own sin made a suffering one.... Why then was it rejected? Not only because of the objection urged by Methodius, that the addition of a body would be no remedy but rather an increase of the sin; or that urged amongst many others by Gregory, that a vice cannot be regarded as the precursor of the birth of each human soul into this or into other worlds; but more than that & chiefly, because such a doctrine contravened the more distinct views now growing up as to what the Christian creation was, & the more careful definitions also of the Trinity now embodied in the creeds. In fact the pre-existence of the soul was wrapped up in a cosmogony that could not no longer approve itself to the Christian consciousness. In asserting the freedom of the will, & placing in the will the cause of evil, Origen had so far banished emanationism; but in his view of the eternity of the world, & in that of the eternal pre-existence of souls which accompanied it, he had not altogether stamped it out.”⁹⁰⁶

Of the influence to reject the preexistence, that Methodius had on Gregory of Nyssa, some scholars note that it was probably Aristotelian arguments that were used more than Methodius’ “unconvincing” arguments. For although Methodius “...had attacked Origen’s theory of preexistence, even though he was himself a Platonist. Gregory found Methodius’ arguments unconvincing and easily dismissed them. Gregory produced his own refutation of preexistence by resorting to Aristotelian, rather than Platonic, argument, as shown in his work De hominis opificio, (The Formation of Man). He holds, in language reminiscent of Aristotle's work on the soul, that the self is a union of body and soul. "I cannot," therefore, "be both posterior and anterior to myself." as preexistence would require."⁹⁰⁷

Yet Gregory also believed & taught other aspects of pre-existence themes, or different versions of different aspects of the doctrine in under going the legendization process. Father Louis Coulange notes that Gregory of Nyssa shows us that "the Devil was, in the beginning, the first of the angels, that God confided to him the government of the earth."⁹⁰⁸ If this was the case, it must have been before the Devil's fall.

While Gregory objects to Origen's, & others' interpretations & views, that some souls had entered this world from the pre-existence at a disadvantage because they had sinned in the pre-existence. He still taught other interesting aspects, for by 376 A. D., though Gregory was being pressured by others to reject those types of aspects of pre-existence themes that had been passed down from earlier Christian times, he still taught other aspects, thus retaining his own understanding & passing it onto others, as to one of the purposes of the early Christian mysteries. Such as how that souls are righteous, & had been clothed in glory in the pre-existence. Upon entering earth life, the souls inside the body were clean & pure at birth. But then upon coming to earth it had, through the process of earth life, fallen into temptations, sinned, & thus had become unclean, but would be cleansed through the early Christian mysteries, back to the fairness of their "first estate."⁹⁰⁹

The pressures for Gregory of Nyssa to later abandon, then later attack different versions of Origen's & others' versions of different aspects of the pre-existence, must have happened between about 376–380 A.D. "...Gregory of Nyssa, one of the three great Cappadocians, writing about this, [the pre-existence, & our return back home to heaven], says that in his time, the Fourth Century, the church was very confused about these teachings. They were being rapidly lost. He says, "Christians are confused about the preexistence. Some say we lived in families there, and in tribes just as we do here, and that we lost our wings when we came down here and will get them back again upon earth." So they mix up tenable and untenable things; all sorts of strange ideas get in the picture. Regardless of what the true picture is, we know that the early Christians did believe very strongly in the preexistence."⁹¹⁰

Cyril of Jerusalem, (315–386), had a different unusual view on what pre-mortal souls are like, for he seems to suggest that there were no genders, for all souls were alike, both of men and women, for only the bodily parts are different. Also, Cyril "...was adamant in embracing preexistence while emphatically rejecting its Origenist formulation: "I would have you know this, too, that before the soul enters this world, it has committed no sin; but though we arrive sinless, now we sin by choice."⁹¹¹

Gregory of Nazianzus (329–389), Cappadocian father, and important theologian of the Trinity. He hints to Christ's pre-existence & varying degrees of spiritual progress there. Perhaps also aware of the 4th century disagreements over many pre-existence themes, he unambiguously, as if undecided about it, condemned some aspects of the pre-existence, while seemingly cautious about other pre-existence themes & warns his readers to be careful about the views about the good or bad conditions people are born into, is to be interpreted as a clue as to what the did in the preexistence, good or bad: "I fear lest some monstrous reasoning many come in, as of the soul having lived elsewhere, and then having been bound to this body, and that it is from that other life that some receive the gift of prophecy, and others are condemned, namely, those who lived badly." In other areas of his writings, he seems to be aware of the views held by many about a preexisting judgment which determined the body, the conditions that spirits might be born into, he also wrote that "a Jeremias is sanctified, and others are estranged, from the womb." But he continued, that such speculation is "unsafe for us to play with."⁹¹²

Evagrius of Ponticus, 354–399, archdeacon, student & disciple of Gregory of Nazianzus, complicated the abandonment of Origen's version of pre-existence themes by continuing on with them, but in modified form. Evagrius, unlike others of his time, vigorously embraced a doctrine of preexistence. Like Origen, he argued that intelligences (nous) originally existed in God's presence among other rational beings. They were pure spirit, rather than being clothed in a heavenly body. These fell to the plane of material existence, where the intelligences developed into souls (which remain immaterial). Evagrius' modified version attributed to fierce opposition in the Origenist crises.⁹¹³ He was later influenced by a work entitled The Life of Anthony, in which he gave demons an important role in the world. He was also influenced by Origen, & thus imagined ranks of demons, the lower ones having fallen further from grace than the higher ones. Some of these angels, upon dwelling close to God, the demons had possessed great knowledge and power, however they lost these qualities when they fell. Now fallen, they have not true knowledge, only superficial cleverness, & lack all understanding of that truth that proceeds from God. In their fallen state, they are unable to see God or the good angels anymore, but are still capable of discerning the material world. They are the scrutinizers of the daily lives of the human family, & thus they look for opportunities to attack us. Unable to penetrate our souls, which are protected by God's presence within, they watch for our actions, words, & body language to interpret, sometimes wrongly, our intentions. As demons, their understanding of truth & love has diminished, as they have fallen into tactics of cunning ways, skills to trick & delude in their temptations to get the human family to sin. The demons dwell & travel through the air on wings, can make themselves small enough to enter our bodies by the air that we breath in. They can see humans, but are unseen by humans, unless they take on false shapes for the purpose of deluding people with. The demons' colors are appropriate to their low status, which is at different levels, thus different colors or shades according to the hierarchy, & the different degrees of wickedness, & their abilities in doing evil. Evagrius followed Origen view, in that our souls, having fallen from heaven and now being embedded in the body, are bent, their vision of God blurred.⁹¹⁴

Other Christians were divided because of other situations which arose as a results of Origenism. And yet there were some Christians who defended the doctrine of the pre-existence, or at least their own particular views. For example: Nemesius of Emesa, defended the doctrine of the simple pre-existence of the soul, but not of its fall in a pre-existent state. The theory, however, was generally refuted & combated, so that by the latter part of the 4th century A.D., it had become obsolete.

Didymus the Blind (313–398), one of the greatest Christian scholars of his era in Alexandria, also a follower of Origen, believed that souls preexisted in heaven and descended into mortality either through an inclination and desire for fellowship with bodies, or in order to assist other souls. He allegorized preexistence themes in types, such as how the Fall of Adam and his clothing in skins was a metaphorical type for the soul's fall from heaven. In the case with Job's lamenting, Job is merely lamenting those evils that precipitated his soul's descent into the world as a painful day and worthy of a curse. Blending in Gnostic versions, anti-body dogmas seem to have also influenced Didymus' version of preexistence themes too. For if rational existence arose out of material life, that would entail that evil is prior to virtue. If the soul lived at no time apart from material life, reality would have begun from evil. Some note that his promotion of his version of the theory of preexistence didn't seem to be met with too much concerns from students, & even though in other areas of Christendom, the preexistence was polemically argued over, in Didymus' case, he doesn't seem to feel the need to argue & defend his teachings as orthodox.⁹¹⁵

Theodore of Mopsuestia is said to have been born in Antioch in which he led an ascetic monastic life. He also served as priest in the church of Antioch until he became bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia. It was not until after his death in 328 A.D., that his doctrines were condemned. He reasoned that the pre-existence of the "Word," and the spirit of man have nothing in common. In that any mother is not the mother of the pre-existent spirit of her son or daughter. Also, that Mary was not the mother of the pre-existent Logos, the Word-Jesus. These conflicting views were being quarreled over in different parts of Christendom, as with other issues. Such as those between Nestorius, patriarch of Constantinople, and Cyril, patriarch of Alexandria. Nestorius, like John Chrysostom, a famous preacher, was a priest of the cathedral of Antioch, & had studied there under Theodore of Mopsuestia, and shared the views of the school of Antioch. By 428 A.D., he was made bishop of Constantinople.⁹¹⁶

St. Hilary of Poitiers, 315-367, wrote, while commenting on Isaiah 14, that: "God the Word came down to earth after taking on a human nature and first lowered the summits of these mountains; [all the eminent powers that rise up and revolt against God,] I mean he broke the rebellious dignity of the Devil and of his hosts."⁹¹⁷

Controversy: Satan's Position in Heaven Before His Fall

During earlier centuries, different opinions were presented about the rank or position that Satan held in heaven before his fall. During Tertullian's time, 145-220 A.D., some believed that Satan was the foremost angel before his fall, others held the view that he was the greatest of the angels, while other church Fathers rejected it on the grounds that the lowest, not the highest, orders of angels were most inclined to sin.⁹¹⁸

Father Louis Coulange notes other conflicting controversies during these later centuries concerning different aspects of the pre-existence stories. One of the issues raised by the Areopagite, the pretender who passed himself off as a disciple of saint Paul, was how that the spirits of the superior orders had no contact with the earth. In the Areopagite, the concepts of John of Damascus (De fide orthodoxe, 2-4), and Gregory of Nyssa's comments about how Satan was, in the beginning, charged with the government of the world, these were used to support the Areopagite. Hence, the Devil, it was argued, was of the lower ranks of the angelic world. This, however, went against the traditional interpretations of these Fathers, for some continued to argue that the Devil occupied the first place. Much later, Saint Thomas Aquinas, 1225-74, wrote, in the Summa, I, 63, 7, that: "Gregory says that the angel who sinned was superior to all. And that seems the more probable."⁹¹⁹ Thus, even during the 13th century, this issue was one aspect of pre-existence lore that different Christian writers were divided upon in their opinions.⁹²⁰

In earlier centuries, such as during the times of Tertullian & Irenæus, differences of opinions were expressed over the time when Satan fell from heaven. Tertullian and Irenæus "set the time of Satan's fall not before but after the creation of man and woman."⁹²¹ During the fourth century, these variant opinions continued on to Gregory of Nyssa's day, as opinions continue to differ as to when the Devil fell from heaven. Some early Christian fathers believed that it was before the creation of the world, others said that his jealousy of Adam, was his first sin which caused him to fall. Others, argued that it was because of pride. While still others said that it was because he sought God's throne before the creation, according to Isaiah 14. Gregory of Nyssa was of the opinion that he fell through his jealousy for man. Origen differed by citing Isaiah to show that "his fall was previous to the creation of Adam."⁹²² Coulange thus notes that Origen concludes that "Satan was originally an angelic spirit who was led into sin through pride."⁹²³

St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, Latin Father, 340-397, wrote that: "It was through pride that the Devil himself fell from grace."⁹²⁴ Citing Isaiah 14, like many other early Christians, he then wrote that it was because he had sought to exalt himself above the Most High that "he was cast forth from the company of the angels."⁹²⁵ Elsewhere he cites Isaiah as suggesting that the Devil had boasted to be the equal of the Lord.⁹²⁶

The council in heaven & the plan of God was discussed in "...One of the most notable texts is the Discourse on Abbaton by Timothy, Archbishop of Alexandria (circa A.D. 380).... When the plan was voted on, according to this account and others, it was turned down...."⁹²⁷

400, Theophilus, the bishop of Alexandria, calls for a synod in Alexandria & persuades Pope Anastasius (flourished 398-402), to sign a letter condemning not Origen, but the teachings of his disciple Evagrius Ponticus. He reports to Jerome that he had cleansed Egypt of the Origenist monks.

Latin Christian Father, Jerome, 345-420 A.D., towards the close of the 4th century A.D., wrote previously with high regards & in praise of Origen. However, because it caused some conflicts among those who were anti-Origenists, & for other reasons, Jerome later determined that for the future he would say or do nothing to compromise himself. During the polemical fuss that was under way over Origenism, at that time, different ones took sides over accepting or declaring his teachings heretical.⁹²⁸ Augustine attempts to get Jerome to clarify & resolve different issues about different views on the pre-existence, but Jerome is said to have not responded.⁹²⁹ If he did, there seems to be no record of it that is known to this author. But this might be one example where Jerome determined not to say or doing nothing about this on going controversy over the pre-existence. "Jerome and Rufinus, both translators of Origen's works, became embroiled in the controversy [over pre-existence] on opposite sides. Jerome, who had been reticent [or not willing to reveal one's thoughts or feelings readily] when Augustine queried him on the subject of preexistence and had formerly embraced Origen's teachings (calling him "the greatest teacher since the apostles"), measured the shifting winds and lashed out vigorously, distancing himself from Origen and condemning Rufinus."⁹³⁰

Jerome may have accepted certain aspects of some of the stories concerning the pre-existence, as did others who rejected some aspects, while teaching other aspects. Thus, Jerome is said to have interpreted the "star of your god" as Lucifer, the Morning Star, in Amos 5:26.⁹³¹ In a letter to Eustochium, daughter of Paula, St. Jerome mentions how that pride had caused the Devil to fall.⁹³² In his letter to Oceanus he again notes that it was through "arrogance" that the devil was lost.⁹³³ Elsewhere he wrote how the devil fell because his tongue had uttered how he would exalt his throne above the stars of God and would be like the Most High.⁹³⁴

With the controversy over Origenism becoming more heated, different friends became enemies as different ones took opposites side, & this was the case with Jerome and Rufinus, (who felt Jerome had betrayed him). They both turned up the polemical heat on each other with searing apologias over pre-existence issues & Origenism. To vilify Jerome in the minds of those who rejected Origen's version of the pre-existence, all Rufinus had to do was to point out Jerome's earlier writings & examples of where Jerome had affirmed Origen's teachings on the pre-existence, such as in Jerome's biblical commentaries: "You say that in this world, along with the other inhabitants, that is the angels, there were also souls," Rufinus says, paraphrasing from Jerome. "You say that these souls, who in a former age had been inhabitants of heaven, now dwell here, on this earth, and that not without reference to certain acts which they had committed while they lived there."⁹³⁵

Rufinus was attempting to make an issue over Jerome's siding with Origen, but not so much to thus make an issue over the answers to different issues, as found in different versions of preexistence themes. Thus, Rufinus, as he adroitly tried to avoid either renouncing or endorsing Origenist preexistence, found ways to make Jerome look like a supporter of Origenism, which would then taint his former friend during a time when any association with Origenism could mean "guilt" by association. Rufinus must have thought that all he needed to do was to find in Jerome's own writings different things that showed Origenistic influences & favorable uses of them. These examples thus collected & presented, could taint his opponent during such a time, when Origenism was under attack. Thus, inasmuch as Jerome had used earlier Origen's answers to difficult & different issues that included pre-existence themes, Rufinus found them, & used them against Jerome. Thus, the answer became part of Rufinus's ammo, & that answer got lost in all the exchanges. It was an answer that tried to answer the issue over God's justice, mercy & punishments for pre-mortal sinning. One answer that Jerome, at one time thought amenable, was the assigning of merits, according to free will choices made, good or bad, as done in the pre-existence. This was the answer given, for many centuries now, for some pre-existence themes & issues, as to why, souls descending down from heaven, were born into the diversity of each their own mortal body, but under diverse circumstances, good or bad. Or, born with physical defects, handicaps or other challenges, or born into good or bad environmental & cultural conditions. Or born into different skin colors & races. Consequently, as to what types they might descend to, these were derived from, & based on their individual pre-mortal free will choices, & thus, they had their lots assigned them according to their individual merits. This was supposed to answer this on going dilemmas over diversities, then & now found affecting the human family, everywhere. To show Jerome once accepted this answer, as it was derived from Origen, Rufinus had Jerome's own writings to make his case. Thus, this answer got lost in the polemics over Origenism: How that it would be impossible to reconcile the disparate conditions of human life with the justice of God, "unless there are some antecedent causes for which each individual soul had its lot assigned according to its merits".⁹³⁶

Jerome response was to lamely explain away what had quite obviously & clearly been his own earlier pronouncements in support of preexistence. His even goes so far as to claim that he'd erred at times, but was in good company, for in Rufinus's parody, (or exaggerated imitation of the style of the writings of Jerome's)

retraction, he has Jerome implicating Clement of Alexandria, Clement of Rome, Gregory of Pontus, Gregory of Nazianzus, and Didymus as similarly upholding Origen's teachings on preexistence & other now disputed doctrines.⁹³⁷

410 or 412, Jerome writing to bishop Marcellinus, says he remembered him attempting to deal with the problem about the origin of the soul. Jerome then offers 5 theories still going around that attempt to offer answers. He lists the preexistence, which he associates with Pythagoras, Plato, & Origen. Another theory was that the soul is part of the divine essence, (according to Stoics, Manichees, & Priscillianists. A 3rd is from Talmudic Jewish answers about spirits reserved in a treasury. The 4th & 5th, he lists as creationism & traducianism. The Talmudic theory of preexistence, Jerome called foolish. Jerome then offers his own opinion as given in his Apology against Rufinus, 402, in which he again attacked Origen, whom he had earlier regards for, as he condemned the concept that human souls are lapsed angels. However, he had not definitively ruled out preexistence, nor any other theories.⁹³⁸

Did Jerome eventually settle for the Creation theory? "The creation-theory ascribes each individual soul to a direct creative act of God, and supposes it to be united with the body either at the moment of its generation, or afterwards. This view is held by several eastern theologians and by Jerome, who appeals to the unceasing creative activity of God (John 5:17). It required the assumption that the soul, which must proceed from the hand of the Creator, becomes sinful by its connection with the naturally generated body."⁹³⁹

With the answers to different issues that preexistence themes offered earlier, as to how God is not neglectful of earlier pre-Christian time peoples, as early anti-Christians charged that the early Christians' 'god' is. (The answer given earlier by Origen & earlier Christian apologists, was that Christ preexisted & manifested himself to other nations, thus he couldn't be neglectful). How was later Christianity going to answer these same issues when they were brought up again by later critics? Especially, inasmuch as many in Christendom, at that time, were ridding themselves of vital doctrines, such as the preexistence, that helped answer those issues, plus many other questions about where the human family originated from, & the purpose of mortal life, & why we are away from our heavenly home, & that family in heaven.⁹⁴⁰

373-414, Synesius of Cyrene, trained as a philosopher in the Alexandrine school of Neo-Platonism, embraced the cosmology and human anthropology involving the One (the divine source of all being) as source and origin, gradient emanations through layers of being, and the fall, or descent of the soul into a mortal body, & its anticipated return to its divine origin. Synesius, reluctantly served as bishop of Ptolomais, (a Greek city of Libya), & continued his version of a blend of Greek influenced versions of preexistence & deification. With the controversy over preexistence still underway, Synesius wrote that he will never be able to persuade himself that the soul is of more recent origin than the body. Thus, rejecting traducianism, (that argued that the soul & body are created at the same time, by the parents, during its conception), Synesius also rejected "creationism" (the view that souls are created individually for each person who is born). For him neither of these views accord to the soul the preexistence so firmly entrenched in the Neo-Platonism version he devoted himself to. As Neo-Platonism became entrenched in many areas of the later church, its influences helped to preserve some modified versions of pre-existence that later Christians inherited from earlier generations, which versions developed out of on going controversies in addition to ones over Origenism, Christologies, Trinitarianism & other issues. Thus, with such blends of preexistent themes, some didn't feel the need to argue against the pre-existence of souls, as others did.⁹⁴¹

Late 4th early 5th century, contemporary to era of Synesius of Cyrene, Nemesius of Emesa, a bishop in Syria, defended a simple pre-existence of the soul, but not of its fall in a pre-existent state. Taking the side of Origen, in the Origenism controversy, he professed the doctrine of preexistence. For his support, he used Platonic lines in his treatise On Human Nature (De natura hominis). He also had issues with the other views, such as Traducianism & Creationism, which to him had problems that were insuperable, or impossible to overcome. This was a time of many controversies, ones that attempted to explore, explain & answer the age-old question of human identity, human nature, humankind's role in & responsibility for sin, God's justice, and grace. All these issues, questions, & how they could be answered, help to shape later preexistent themes of the times. Versions inherited from earlier generations that had already developed different versions.⁹⁴²

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE PLAN THEME? Part of the Pre-existence themes was that God had a plan discussed in the Council in Heaven, with the pre-existent-Christ, & with the angels, the sons, & daughters of God.⁹⁴³ This plan was to bring about the eventual deification of the souls sent into mortal life to be tested, but that they wouldn't be deified in mortality, but in the later stages of the whole journey of the soul passing through different realms of existences, according to "the plan." While Satan, as one of the rebellious sons of God, who became one of the fallen angels, with his demons. They had their own plan to bring about the demonification of those who followed their left hand path. This pre-existence theme, "the plan," is part of the ancient doctrine called "the 2-ways," the right-hand-path, or the left-hand-path, the narrow way, or the broad road, legendized in later centuries as "the cross roads."⁹⁴⁴ However, as different controversies affected & tainted, different doctrines, so also did those waves of controversies affect other beliefs and dogmas, including this aspect of pre-existence themes. Consequently, this theme, which could have answered the purpose of life question, answered if there was a point to all that happens in life, & what oppositions, sufferings, & choices might teach us, & why. Plus, an aspect & theme that puts into perspective that aspect of a much bigger picture of the whole journey of the soul & the whole point of that journey: That the creation was for a purpose & according to an eternal plan, to have a school type world for our spirits to go away to. That mortal life was for a purpose & part of an eternal plan, mortal life being a probationary testing ground to see how we all will react & choose between the oppositions provided, the 2 ways, either the path of light, or the path of darkness. How that this eternal plan thus included what happens to those who walk, or travel along those 2 ways. How they are either deified & return to glory, or they are demonified, damned & become captives of the Devil & his fallen angels to retrogress, according to freely choosing that path, refusing to repent, & thus become like them, the demons, in the darkness, another theme legendized, like in the movie: Legend.⁹⁴⁵

Though many aspects of these pre-existence themes survived down to later centuries, they became tainted & legendized as the understanding of deification became tainted, & changed under the pressures of the Christological, Trinitarian & Pre-existence controversies. Thus, these themes about "the plan," were faded out with the rejection, loss, or neglect of these other aspects of pre-existence themes. Consequently, "the plan" theme, "...has no place in conventional Christian and Jewish theology, having been vigorously condemned by the doctors of both religions in the fourth and fifth centuries, since they would not tolerate any concepts involving preexistence of the spirit of man."⁹⁴⁶

The basic & plain reading of the scriptures, were later rejected by many later Christians. Especially when they talked about the plan that involved the roles that the literal "Son of God," & spirit sons & daughters of God would all play out in the whole drama of the "family in heaven." Of their coming down from heaven, like Christ, to be part of the human family on earth, in each their own body of flesh & bones, (John 3:13, 6:33, 38-40, 51-3, 62, 8:42, 12:44, 49, 16:5, 27, 17:18-24, 20:21, 2 Clement 4:2). Plus, how they all were to play out the whole drama of choices on earth in their journeys in the "two ways." Plus, those pre-existence themes in the whole drama of the journey of the souls through different realms of existences. Many of these aspects were all later challenged by Greek philosophized & tainted early to later Christians, that garbled in a confused and distorted way, the family in heaven concept, because they had also garbled the Godhead, Son of God, & Fatherhood meanings of God the Father, & Jesus Christ, His Son. Thus, while many aspects were also maintained in other areas, such as Satan & his fallen angels' post-fall from heaven devilish activities to provide the negative opposite choices in the two ways, as part of the plan, making life a testing ground. (Themes sometimes hinted to, in later dramatizations of some pre-existence themes in later moral & medieval mystery plays, with acts & scenes on the creation & Fall of Lucifer).⁹⁴⁷

While others aspects of this who drama, must have been rejected too, such as the different pre-existence themes about literal sons & daughters of the Divine Parents. How might such themes have caused difficulties for those involved in the Trinitarian & Christological controversies? If, as they were rejecting other aspects of the pre-existence, during the pre-existence controversy wave crashing in with the others. Could they have taken the above mention aspects, & made them go way through metaphorical, non-literal, & allegorical treatments of scriptures? Could some have neglected & ignored those aspects, if not out right rejected them? (Being such themes thus rejected as: The Fatherhood of God, Divine Parents in Heaven, spirit-sons, & daughters of that Divine Couple. Christ, as the literal Son of God in the flesh, & as God's first born spirit in the family in heaven). Could those themes have been rejected, etc., especially if they saw how such things didn't mix well with their concept of a "God," who was later thought to not have any sexuality, being without a body, parts, passions & who was everywhere present? Such as in the case with Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, 354-430, who was Platonized into thinking that probably "the true God has neither sex, age, nor body." (City of God, iv, 27). Plus, even considered & wondered if women, (perhaps men too), will retain her sex, (or his sex), in the next world.⁹⁴⁸ Could such dogmas have taken out the literal Fatherhood of God-the-Father-themes, & made them symbolic? While also doing away with the Heavenly-Mother themes, or at least changing them over to the Virgin Mary, as Mother in Heaven?

Ironically, many later Christians had no problems with the Virgin Mary being deified & thus being considered the Mother in Heaven, the Queen in Heaven. Of her having passed through a heavenly coronation ceremony, during her after life assumption towards being vested, crowned, & enthroned to sit with Christ in glory, sometimes even with the other 3 separate men in the Godhead, as seen in art works.⁹⁴⁹ So did many have no problems with this, while they had issues over if there is a Mother in Heaven, & there being Divine Parents? Was this perhaps one of the reasons why the Mother in Heaven pre-existence theme, didn't last too long & was thrown out as a sort of gnostic heretical view? But despite how many Gnostics butchered & blended the Mother in Heaven themes into strange concoctions, it still must have been an earlier belief, as part of the whole family in heaven pre-existence themes. But because such real family in heaven concepts wouldn't probably mix well with the Trinitarian & other controversies. How might they have treated the many different passages of scriptures that presented so many family types? Such as: References to God of spirits of all flesh, the Lord of Spirits, children of God, & Christ as the “only begotten Son,” in the flesh, & of him being the “first born.” Plus, Christ’s prayer that he ascends to ‘my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.’ (John 20:17). Also the many other scriptures that suggested that the human family on earth is patterned after a family in heaven. Did Christ, his prophets, & apostles, upon seeing the coming rejection of the body as evil, thus make it a point to establish a lot of examples & sayings that would become texts that would be a defense against this growing tide of anti-body dogmas? Consequently, in seeing this, did they want to leave as many references in their testimonials to other parental concepts, titles, other plain-readings of the texts that testified of the Fatherhood of God & that family in heaven? If so, then this defense made it harder for all these pre-existence themes, & more, that then had to be, in the course of time, either explain away, reinterpreted, rejected, or metaphorically explained differently to mean something less-literal. Or they had to be ignored, if possible, & even textually modified in some manuscripts, in order to make attempts to get different Christological & Trinitarian concepts to become the dominating dogmas over the other earlier beliefs, & pre-existence themes, later being rejected during the pre-existence controversy, added to the many earlier controversies.

It’s also interesting to note that even the earliest anti-Christians knew that Christ & the earliest Christians were interpreting Christ’s & his prophets’ & apostles’ law of Moses witness testimonials, (the two or three, or more witnesses-policy), about Christ being the ‘Son of God,’ as literal in meaning. For this was one in many reasons why they rejected them & sought to kill them, & even killed Christ for such literalism. That also, for the apostles, it was an anti-Christ doctrine, to reject Christ as the Son of God, to reject him as having descended from heaven into the flesh, or a body, (1 John 4:1-3, 2 John 7).

So why did later Christians selectively literalize the scriptures about Christ & the Father’s “oneness,” making them somehow become literally “one God,” but also some how 3? But then, de-literalize the passages about Christ being the “Son of God”? Plus, de-literalize, if they did, the ones when Christ talked of his “Father,” how that he was talking of his literal Father in heaven, not an earthly father. For Joseph wasn’t his father, though Mary was his mother. So why did they de-literalize, if some did, those many passages of scriptures too? Or was it easier to just ignore them, as the controversy over the pre-existence seems to have also taken out such heavenly family themes?⁹⁵⁰

394, Epiphanius of Salamis, a zealous heresy hunter, opposed Origenism & had John, the bishop of Jerusalem condemn a series of Origenist teachings, such as Origen’s concept of a pre-mortal fall into bodies for its implicit denigration, (or blackening, color symbolism?), of human reproduction.⁹⁵¹

About 5th c., or earlier & later, in Ethiopian & Arabic manuscripts entitled: Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan. God the Father sends to Adam & Eve, His Word, His firstborn. The Word, (or pre-existing Christ), tells them how he’s going to come down from heaven to become flesh.⁹⁵²

Fifth century, A.D: Cyril of Alexandria, Patriarch of Alexandria, 412 A.D., and Nemesius of Emesa, defend the doctrine of the simple pre-existence of the soul, but not of its fall in a pre-existent state. The theory, however, was generally refuted and combated, so that by the latter part of the 4th century it had become obsolete. Jerome, denominates it a stulta persuasio to believe that souls were created of old by God, and kept in a treasury. While Pilastrus enumerates it among the heresies.⁹⁵³

The Guf, Treasury of Souls, Legendized Pre-existence Themes: Some versions the pre-earth life as spirits,— said that souls were created by God & held in the pre-existing realm like a holding tank, room, vault, storage of souls, “treasury of souls,” also called “the chamber of souls.” They are held there until it was time for them to be born into earthly bodies. This may have been the type of version of the pre-existence story that Jerome had in mind. The Jews described the very chambers, in Hebrew as guf, araboth, in which these souls dwelled, awaiting their turn to descend into bodies. Some legendized versions have these spirits as sparrows-birds, that descend singing. Thus, early Christianity likewise continued to tell how the “chambers of souls” longed to deliver the spirits “entrusted to them from the beginning”, just as the womb longs to “complete its anguish of labor” (4 Ezra 4:33-43; Rev. 6:9-11). Such writings add that a definite number of souls exist (Deut. 32:8; Acts 17:26). Moreover, that the coming of the Messiah will be delayed until all have had their chance to come to earth from those chambers of pre-existing souls, to be born. Some early Christians took Christ’s statement in Matthew about the coming of the “Son of Man” (24:34), with a similar statement in Pistis Sophia (22), as suggesting that “fulfillment of the number of souls” and the “passing of this generation” was in reference to the promised “shortening of days” of the second coming, (Matt. 24:22; Pistis Sophia 22). Thus, with early Christian beliefs that Christ’s second coming was soon at hand, though it wasn’t, the pre-existing chamber of souls was fast being emptied.⁹⁵⁴

Aurelius Augustinus (born 354 at Tagaste (today Souk-Ahras) in northern Africa, died 430), ST. AUGUSTINE, former sinner, later repented & consecrated Bishop of Hippo, had entered Christianity during the different controversies going on & added to them more of his own controversies. In the case with preexistence themes: “Into the maelstrom of competing doctrines and rampant speculation, Augustine enters the controversies over preexistence in a state of indecision and apparent ignorance of how the winds are blowing.”⁹⁵⁵

386–387, Augustine had openly embraced Plato’s argument for preexistence in Soliloquies, wherein he attributed moral discernment for some kind of memory, as if a light had been kindled. How that sometimes, when we meet different people, it is as if a memory of having known them before somewhere, suddenly comes back to memory, he wrote in his Confessions. Towards the end of his life, (died 430), Augustine repudiated, or refused the Platonic doctrine of recollection and its related preexistence theme. Remembering or recollections are part of preexistence themes, as is the memory loss issue. Themes that others tried to resolve, while different ones like Irenaeus questioned, especially the Greek version of it as by way of a drink of forgetfulness, asking: If the drink made one forget their pre-existing self, how could anyone remember the drink?⁹⁵⁶

St. Augustine was responding to the belief that many pre-existing spirits had sinned before they had come to earth life. In so doing, the type of body that each would be born into would reflect &, hint towards the degree of seriousness of their sins. This was an issue & twist on the pre-existence that was around during Christ’s day, so it was nothing new, (John 9:2). Thus, some of the later Christians rejected this aspect of some of versions, & interpretations of the pre-existence story. Versions that attempted to justify & explain why different ones were born into more favorable circumstances than others, or were born with different shades of skin colors, all the way to black, or with handicaps & defects in each their own bodies.⁹⁵⁷

About 395, in his On Free Choice of the Will, Augustine, particularly concerned about how some view God’s justice in pre-existence themes about the human conditions that the human family experience, good or bad, in having preexisted first, made good or bad choices there, to then be born under different extreme good or bad diverse types of lives & bodies. He theorized possible answers & comes to the conclusion that it seemed inescapable, that these circumstances constitute a punishment according to some pre-mortal sins of ours. In that being pre-existing souls with free will of choice, sometimes choices are made out of ignorance, & a limited capacity for good. Thus, Augustine in attempting to answer this issue of pre-mortal justice & punishment, wrote: "But if, instead, souls that have been created elsewhere are not sent by the Lord God, but come to inhabit bodies by their own choice, it is quite easy to see that the ignorance and difficulty that result from their own wills are in no way to be blamed on their Creator since he is without fault even if he himself sends souls to dwell in bodies."⁹⁵⁸

397–398, Augustine's Confessions, he asked the age-old questions most people wonder about: "Where was I before I was in the womb?" Also, he begged to know whether his infancy followed upon an earlier age of his life that passed away before it. He goes on to ask again about his possible preexistence & even possible identity before he was born: "Was I anywhere? Was I anyone?" He also asked, when was he, was he God's servant, innocent?⁹⁵⁹ These must have been the logical questions that many, who believed in a pre-existence, must have asked themselves. Who was I before I was born? What did I do? Was I some great soul? Or was I one who had sinned & thus my physical life now reflects those bad choices made in the pre-existence? As Augustine developed his controversial dogma of "original sin," where the sins of Adam & Eve were believed to have tainted the rest of humanity after them, & thus even babies were believed to be tainted & in need of having original sins washed away in infant baptisms.⁹⁶⁰ Augustine also included pre-existence themes in with this mixture of dogmas. About a decade later, in his De peccatorum meritis et remissione (On Merit and Forgiveness), he presents the hypothesis of pre-mortal sinning. Thus, the fate of unbaptized children who died, were thus in trouble because of not only being tainted by the "original sin," of Adam & Eve, but their possible pre-mortal sinning.⁹⁶¹

Augustine attributes being all tainted with original sin because man, of his own free will, abandoned God, & thus he experienced the just judgment of God.⁹⁶² In The Enchiridion, he wrote how by Adam & Eve's sin the whole human race was corrupted in the original sin done by Adam & Eve. Thus, "...tainted with the original sin, and by it drawn through divers errors and sufferings into that last and endless punishment which they suffer in common with the fallen angels, their corrupters and masters, and the partakers of their doom."⁹⁶³ The mention of fallen angels suggests Augustine knew of this preexistence theme & used it in his attempts to explain "original sin."

Philip Schaff notes Augustine's reasoning thus: "In Adam human nature fell, and therefore all who have inherited that nature from him, who were in him as the fruit in the germ, and who have grown up as it were, one person with him.... He also supposed a sort of pre-existence of all the posterity of Adam in himself so that they actually and personally sinned in him, though not indeed, with individual consciousness ... our sin and guilt and physical death, is a penalty even upon infant children, as it was a penalty upon Adam. The posterity of Adam therefore suffer punishment not for the sin of another but for the sin which they themselves committed in Adam. This view Augustine founds upon a false interpretation of Romans 5:12."⁹⁶⁴

About 400–1, word came to Augustine about the debates going on over preexistence & Origenism.

Augustine soon joined the camp against Origen, but not so much against preexistence, at that time, & it is as if he is looking into how others are reacting to the different debates & controversy, as he writes to others, like Jerome, about what they think about preexistence & Origenism. Augustine must have also seen in preexistence themes the answers to different issues about guilt, accountability, God's justice, why the diversity of human conditions, & the purpose of life, & thus might have had reservations about denying all of the theories going around that he begins to understand more as he studied up on the issues.⁹⁶⁵ Besides, Augustine had to hold to some fragments of the preexistence in order to make his "original sin" dogma become more acceptable, as opposition to it was brought on by the Pelagian "heretics," (from Pelagius, a monk & missionary, born in either Ireland or Roman-ruled Celtic Britain, born around 360, & died about 420. He attacked original sin, & the practice of infant baptisms).⁹⁶⁶ The elements of preexistence themes that Augustine used were to suggest that mortals were not only tainted by Adam & Eve's original sin, but by each individual souls' "pre-mortal sinning," a sort of "forfeiture previous to birth," where preexisting souls enjoyed their rights, but by their free will choices, forfeit them through sinning before birth. This was worked into coming up with another reason why, according to Augustine, even babies were tainted, & thus needed infant baptism to not only wash away original sin, but to also wash away any "pre-mortal sinning." So by this, Augustine falls back on preexistence themes, while trying to avoid looking like he was in support of Origenism, & his version of preexistence.⁹⁶⁷

But, had the basics of pre-mortal sinning, & basic aspects of original sin concepts been something that Augustine had inherited from Greek influenced Gnostics' anti-matter beliefs? Whatever might be the case, earlier Christian writings combat these beliefs on the rise amongst different early Christian sects. As it was, this particular pre-existence theme was still causing controversies, even from the earliest days of Christianity. That of this issue over pre-mortal sinning (Jude 6, 2 Pet.2:4, John 9:2).⁹⁶⁸

As an on going issue, it was part of the many questions continually asked, even from the days of Christ's earliest disciples. For had pre-mortal sinning tainted new born infants? Or were we all born innocent, with a fresh clean slate, to begin each our own mortal life as innocent persons, despite what sins we might have done in the pre-existence, as spirits? The Apocalypse of Paul, though its authorship is questionable, was cited as scripture by Origen, & it suggests the infants slain by King Herod, were in heaven for their innocence. Though there's no mention of the later Augustine doctrine, the implications are clear: These infants, went to heaven when they died, for they hadn't been tainted by original sin, & thus didn't need infant baptism, so they wouldn't go to hell. Another pre-Augustine writing considered by many to be scripture, the Shepherd of Hermas, testified that infants remain in their innocence, are not defiled, & because their hearts know no wickedness, they do dwell in the kingdom of God, and are honorable before God. Pre-Augustine church father, Irenaeus, late 2nd c., argued that the earth, that Adam & Eve worked, the soil, was cursed, not Adam & Eve, for their transgression. Clement of Alexandria, late 2nd c., opposed the Gnostic belief in original guilt. "...Clement recognized that although the mortal state that man inherited from Adam is fallen, the spirit that comes from God to inhabit that mortal body is pure and without sin."⁹⁶⁹

Also, Cyril of Jerusalem, mid 4th c., had countered this pre-existence sinning issue, that was being used to suggest infants aren't born innocent: "And learn this also, that the soul, before it came into the world, had committed no sin, but having come in sinless, we now sin of our free will." ⁹⁷⁰

Gregory of Nyssa, about 331-395, before he got talked out of believing in some of the controversial aspects of the pre-existence, & before he later started attacking the belief, being also caught up in the anti-Origen, thus, anti-pre-existence controversy. He was another that responded to the pre-existence sinning issue. For in his, On the Baptism of Christ, (written about 376), he lectured on the mysteries, about how the soul was righteous, & had been clothed in glory in the pre-existence. The soul, upon entering earth life, the soul inside the body was clean & pure at birth. But, through the process of earth life, had fallen into temptations, & became unclean. But through the mysteries or ordinance, and through Christ's atonement, the repented sinner could be washed clean from his or her sins, & thus could be brought back into the fairness of his or her "first estate." ⁹⁷¹

But hadn't Augustine, earlier, (perhaps before he got caught up in the later anti-pre-existence-anti-Origen controversy. Plus, perhaps before he developed his "original sin," doctrine), at first believed that spirits come down from God created good, at first? For at some point, but when, had he opposed the doctrine of a fall in a preexistent state, as contradicting the Scripture statement? That: "God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was good." He also remarks that if earthly bodies were given to fallen spirits on account of the sins they had committed, the bodies should be proportioned to the degree of the sins; and that the devils, therefore, should have worse bodies than men, - which Augustine thinks is not the fact." ⁹⁷²

About 401 onwards, as Augustine acquires more understanding about the controversies going on about the preexistence, he notes the different views: 1. Traducianism, (soul & body are created at the same time, the soul has no preexistence before the body). 2. Souls are created individually for each person who is born (Creationism). 3. They already existed somewhere and are sent by God into the bodies of those who are born. "Sent" denotes preexistence. 4. They sink into bodies by their choice, ("fallen" preexistence). He then cautions, that it would be rash to affirm any of these. He admits that the Catholic commentators on Scripture have not solved or shed light on these issues & that he is not aware of writings, or has come across any yet that would resolve the controversy & different views. ⁹⁷³ He also notes the period of the Devil's fall was not altogether exactly agreed upon. He thought that on the first day, when God said "Let there be light," the angels, the spirits of the light, were called into existence. He also considered that on the second day when the rebellion had already taken place, the evil spirit fell, when He divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. ⁹⁷⁴

Pilastrius, places the beliefs of others' on the pre-existence among the heresies, while St. Augustine opposes the doctrine of a fall in a pre-existent state, as contradicting the Scripture statement that "God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was good." He also remarks that if earthly bodies were given to fallen spirits on account of their sins, the bodies should be proportioned to the degree of the sins; and that the devils, therefore, should have worse bodies than men,--which Augustine thinks is not the fact. ⁹⁷⁵

In his unfinished work, De Genesi ad litteram (The Literal Meaning of Genesis), he follows Jewish tradition in reasoning that the soul, along with the angels, probably were created during the 6 days when all things were made. For even before heaven and earth, there was a creature that passed through time by incorporeal movements, that time existed along with that creature, just as in the soul that has become used to corporeal motions through the senses of the body. ⁹⁷⁶

Concerning why some of the angels of God had fallen, Augustine suggested that the angels are not coeternal with God but creatures whom he made at the beginning of time, and all created beings are subject to change & corruption. This was one reason, among others, that the angels were free to choose. For the angels freely chose, without any cause of their choice, to prefer the limited good of their own will to the infinite good of God's will. Later, Augustine wonder about the possibilities that God could have created two classes of angels, but struggled over the idea of their free agency because of how he had given into the idea of predestinarian concepts. (The doctrine of predestination, a doctrine popularized by John Calvin, during 16th century Reformation era. Derived from Augustine, a belief that God has already selected those who will be saved & those who will be damned, no matter their choices, they are predestined to one or the other). ⁹⁷⁷

Concerning grades of angels: The angels, being limited and fallible as well as free, are capable of sinning, if left to their own devices. But God, not wishing them to fall, decided to strengthen them, to confirm them in their goodness by a gratuitous act of grace. Another group of angels were created good in nature, and with freedom to choose, but from this group God withheld the grace that confirms in goodness, leaving them capable of sin. These freely chose to sin and thereby became demons. God did not cause this defect of will, but he allowed it. He could have confirmed all the angels in goodness, but let them to their own devices. Thus, when the angel Lucifer fell, he became the Devil, and the other angels became the demons. The good angels, that remained with God, retained their natural intelligence enhanced by illumination. While the evil angels, shadowed by sin, lost the light of intelligence along with the light of love. The rational power retained by them, were darkened by their folly. The higher the angels stood in the grades or ranks of heaven, the farther down their plunges into hell. Consequently, Lucifer, prince of angels, sank to the lowest point of the universe, from which he cannot rise. Augustine also believed that pride had caused the devil's fall. ⁹⁷⁸ "It is solely because of pride that the Devil will be punished. He is verily the first of all sinners.... it was pride alone that made him fall." ⁹⁷⁹

Augustine, unlike Clement, & Origen of Alexandria, who believed that the devil & his angels could repent & thus eventually even be allowed to come back into heaven. In contrast, Augustine believed that even though Christ had atoned for the sins of the human family, he had not died to atone for the sins of the fallen angels, who were set immovably in their sin. ⁹⁸⁰

By Augustine's time, though Greek philosophers still had an influence on early to later Christians, because the doctrine of the preexistence was under attack by many, being rejected, ignored, or because some didn't know what to think of the later version they were inheriting from later generations of Christians. So also did Plato's Greek version of the preexistence, as used by Greek influenced later Christians, also in time, came to be questioned: "With the relative decline in prestige of the major philosophical authority espousing preexistence, Plato, and the ascendancy of the commanding authority of the Middle Ages, Aristotle, who clearly denied the independent existence of a human soul, the doctrine's fate was virtually sealed." ⁹⁸¹

About 401-410, Augustine's doctrines were opposed by Pelagius, a learned monk, Celestius, a Roman lawyer & later Julian of Eclanum. Had Augustine accepted, even if for a time, Traducianism, while accepting & using different aspects of preexistence themes as needed to try to answer different issues? Some have noted that Augustine, caught up in the controversy over Origenism & his preexistence themes, was cautious, like Jerome was, in how to treat the preexistence themes they accepted & used, (like the war in heaven & fall of the angels), & those aspects of preexistence themes they may have later rejected. (Was this to show they were also going along with anti-Origenists' pressures of the times, & so as to not get in trouble with them?): "For both Augustine and Pelagius, there is no existence of the soul before that of the body.... To assert the heredity of sin involved,... in the opinion of the Pelagians, the acceptance of the theory of the propagation of the soul (Traducianism), which they regarded as materialistic and horrible. Each soul is created pure and has a perfect freedom to do good or evil as Adam had. If sin is a man's own, it is voluntary; if it is voluntary, it can be avoided." And: "The respective errors of Augustine and Pelagius were unavoidable because of the false premise they both held: man was created perfect out of nothing, soul as well as body, and had no experience previous of this life."⁹⁸² That Augustine had varied in his doctrines, & abandoned earlier beliefs about some aspects of preexistence themes was pointed out by Augustine's rival, Julian of Eclanum, during the period of 418–430: "...He accused the Bishop of Hippo with having varied in his doctrine,—that which has at least appearances of truth,— & he accused him of professing Traducianism and Manicheism..."⁹⁸³

412, Augustine, writing to Marcellinus, refers to the 4 theories & views in the pre-existence controversy over the origins of the soul. He admits that each of these theories he is not close to a verdict, & has been cautious not to endorse any of them, & that there is no clear solution to them. 420, writing to Bishop Optatus of Milevis, he again mentions some of the views, condemned Pelagius, defends his "original sin," issue & rejects transmission of souls. He encouraged a quest for teaching each other & offering suggestions as to how these pre-existence issues, etc., can be answered.⁹⁸⁴

Like most early to later Christians that rejected many aspects of pre-existence themes, many of them also accepted other aspects. For most Christians, even today, not only believe in Christ, but that there was & still is Christ's rival at work in the world, called the Devil, Satan, or Lucifer.⁹⁸⁵ But where did the Devil come from? If modern Christians, who reject the pre-existence were to explore this, they can't help but run into pre-existence themes about Satan's, (or Lucifer's, or the Devil's), war in heaven, fall from heaven, & post-fall from heaven, devilish activities, here upon the earth, tempting the human family. Augustine also put himself in this category of almost rejecting, but later questioning some pre-existence themes, & asking others about other aspects of it, & being caught up in the anti-pre-existence-anti-Origenism controversy of these later centuries. For Augustine, the post-fall from heaven activities of demons & the Devil, was an acceptable part of pre-existence themes that explained why there was evil in the world. For the devil liked all the contentions, innumerable dissensions, & confusion, for it didn't matter to him, the king of confusion, & all these negative traits, or how they, (the conflicting schools of philosophy), wrangled themselves in contradictory errors, since all alike deservedly belonged to him on account of their great & varied impiety.⁹⁸⁶

The difficulty for those who reject pre-existence-of-souls, while accepting the existence of the Devil, is that you can't have the later chapters of the whole drama make much sense, if you reject the earlier chapters, or the ones in between. You have to have the whole story, all of the pre-existence themes. In other words, Satan & his fallen angels, the demons' post-fall from heaven activities, (that chapter), doesn't make much sense, if that's all Christians were to accept of the pre-existence story. For if there's no pre-existence of spirits, who would then be the Sons & Daughters of God in the spirit? Where would the demons have come from? Who were they, & what were they, before their fall? How did they become demons? Why are they here upon the earth, what is the point in God, letting them tempt us? What do their activities mean in the bigger picture of the world? So there are negative forces at work in the world, but why? If their activities include all kinds of temptations, attempting continually to do us harms, & to possess human bodies, if so, why so? What do they have against mortals on the earth? Against God? How did some of the devils recognize Christ, before he casts them out of those possessed?

As many aspects of pre-existence themes and Origenism continued to be rejected & attacked, the pre-existence themes in earlier Christians' scriptures, the Book of Enoch, also fell out of favor through the influence of Augustine & others of his era.⁹⁸⁷

However, with someone so influential as Augustine was on later Christian doctrines & dogmas, what later generations of Christian inherited from these earlier controversies were the continual loss of answers to difficult questions about not only the origins of the soul, originality of the gospel (it having preexisted before Christ's birth to Mary, because Christ preexisted). Not only how Christ wasn't neglectful of pre-Christian nations, (having preexisted & visited other nations before his birth). But also, the loss of other answers about: Why mortal life? As the continual abandonment of many pre-existence themes, continued in many areas, so also were preservation efforts underway, as manuscripts, bible illustrations, & art works preserved many aspects of the preexistence. Many of which would also be acted out in moral & mystery plays too. But another century would have to pass before Emperor edicts helped seal the fate of the doctrine of preexistence, when Justinian, 553, would again reopen the attacks on Origenism & many preexistence themes. In other areas, the legendization of preexistence themes were also distorting the original stories, & turning the doctrine unto fables.⁹⁸⁸

John Cassian, 360-435 A.D., wrote that the early Christians believed that pride caused Satan's fall, but also it was because of his envy for God. When Adam was created the Devil extended his hatred of God to hatred of the human family.⁹⁸⁹

There were some early Christians who rejected many of Origen's beliefs, while others still respected & held on to them. Theodore of Mopsuestia, who opposed the Origenism, helped spread the controversy from Egypt & it was renewed in Constantinople. When Nitrian monks were banished from Egypt, on account of their attachment to Origen, they took refuge at Constantinople, & were treated with clemency by bishop John Chrysostom. Thus, by the end of fourth – beginning of the 5th centuries, the controversies & Chrysostom's religious views, plus his bold declamations against the vices of the people, had fallen under attack by an outraged empress named Eudoxia, wife of Arcadius. They sent for Theophilus the Patriarch, & the Egyptian bishops, & called a council to inquire into the religious sentiments of Chrysostom, & examine his morals. This council was held at Chalcedon in 403 A.D., with Theophilus at its head. He declared Chrysostom unworthy of his high rank in the church, because he came to the rescue of the Nitrian monks, & had stood disposed towards Origen & his followers. These situations may have resulted in another attack & rejection of the doctrine of the pre-existence, & other issues, in the following sixth century.⁹⁹⁰

St. John Chrysostom, 347–407 A.D., wrote of the pre-existence of Christ, for in his Homily VII, on 1 Corinthians 2, he wrote: "As to the words, before the worlds,... they mean eternal. For in another place also He saith thus, Who is before the worlds. The Son also, if you mark it, will be found to be eternal in the same sense. For concerning Him he saith,... By Him He made the worlds; for it is plain that the maker is before the things which are made." He notes that none of the princes of the world knew who Christ really was, when he came into the world in the flesh. For had the Jews known, & where Christ came from, they would not have had the Lord of Glory crucified.⁹⁹¹

Mid 5th century, Roman Catholic Pope, Leo I the Great, (440–61), wrote 2 letters of censure, & an official denunciation & anathema, directed at those who accepted the controversial preexistence doctrine. If authentic, in 1 letter to Turribius, the bishop of Astorga, he wrote in response to the Priscillianists, a Gnostic-inspired group of extreme ascetics, how that they assert "...that souls which are placed in men's bodies have previously been without body and have sinned in their heavenly habitation.... This blasphemous fable they have woven for themselves out of many persons' errors." ⁹⁹²

449, Pope Leo I the Great, to bishop Julian: "And hence that which was deservedly condemned in Origen must be punished in Eutyches also, unless he prefers to give up his opinion, viz., the asserting that souls have had not only a life but also different actions before they were inserted in men's bodies." ⁹⁹³

Christ is depicted in a late 5th century mosaic as "...a triumphant warrior, dressed as a Roman legionary. He stands astride the heads of a serpent and a lion and holds a book inscribed in Latin: 'I am the Way, the Truth and the Life.' The symbol of victory seems to have been represented by depicting the triumphant as standing upon, or resting a foot on the fallen vanquished enemy." ⁹⁹⁴ Early Christian art works & scriptures present this theme over and over again, in not only war in heaven depictions, but also in depictions that show the descent of Christ into limbo, hades, hell, the grave, the Anastasis, the underworld, Christ & his angels, saints & prophets preaching & delivering souls from the lower regions, or the pit, etc. Thus, like Michael the arch-angel, standing over a fallen devil, in war in heaven themes, Christ, or his fellow deliverers, stand over a crushed fallen devil under their feet, or under the gates or doors of hell, hades, limbo, purgatory. Thus, the battle themes of the pre-existence, continued in the earthly ministry of Christ, & in post-crucifixion, & post-resurrection battle themes. ⁹⁹⁵

A Byzantine Guide to Painting, a 4th or 5th century Greek manuscript found by M. Didron at Esphigmenon, on Mount Athos, southern tip of Athos Peninsula in northeast Greece, and translated into French by M. Durand, is a copy of a yet older manuscript compiled by the monk Dionysius. In this are given minute directions to painters how the Fall of Lucifer is to be represented, thus: "Christ is a king, seated on a throne, holding the Gospel open at the words, 'I have seen Satan fall from heaven like lightning.' A multitude of angels stand around in great fear. Michael is in the midst; on his scroll is written, 'Let us stand in awe and here adore the King our God.' Mountains are beneath, and a great gulf in which is written TARTARUS. Lucifer and all his army fall from heaven. Above the forms are very beautiful; at a lower point they change to angels of darkness; lower still they are darker and hideous. At the bottom, under all the others, in the midst of the abyss, the devil, Lucifer, blackest and most terrible of all, lies prostrate on the ground, looking upwards." ⁹⁹⁶

By the end of the 5th century, the decline of the preexistence continued in many areas of Christendom, while still being preserved in other areas, such as in art works, etc., with legendization processes taking place in other areas too. The Platonic version of preexistence was challenged by some, while incorporated in preexistence themes in other areas of Christendom. ⁹⁹⁷ Theophrastus by Aeneas of Gaza, also attacks the preexistence of souls. Aeneas logically responded to the arguments then current of that time, that were in support of some aspects of preexistence themes, by asking: "If we deny the preexistence of souls, how is it possible for the wicked to prosper and for the righteous ones to live in dire circumstances? How can one accept the fact that people are born blind or that some die immediately after they are born, while others reach a very old age?" ⁹⁹⁸ Again, we see in that rejection, & those questions, evidence that some preexistence themes were still being used as answers to difficult questions. Such as the attempts made by those to explain why people are born into such extremely diverse cultural & environmental conditions, & with such diverse physical-conditions too. The ancient "answer" passed down from even Christ's disciples' day, to later centuries, was the preexistent belief that those who had been born into said circumstances, was because they'd been judged, & were being punished in mortal life for their pre-mortal sinning. ⁹⁹⁹ Thus, in response to these types of "answers," to try to get preexistence believers to logically take a look at their "answer," & thus polemically persuade them to also abandon, at least this aspect of preexistence themes, were these types of other questions, questioning their answers. Logical questions that might have been asked like these: If pre-mortal sinning & merits acquired can determine the type of body, (defective or good, that souls might be assigned to come down into, in that those born blind, or with other physical defects, or less favorable races), could mean they sinned before they were born, (John 9:2). Or, if they were born into other negative circumstances, that then suggests, (as preexistence believers of that time were suggesting), that they were judged as not having enough good merits to be assigned a better lot in mortal life. If these things are so, then why possibly may the righteous in mortal life sometimes be found living in dire circumstances, while sometimes the wicked are found to prosper? These seem to be the logical questions that different ones, like Aeneas of Gaza, were asking of those who believed that aspect of some preexistence themes, seemingly still in use by some during the end of the 5th century on into the 6th. They were thus questioning the "answers" that included different ones' understanding about God's justice for pre-mortal sins, just like there is going to be a judgment for good or bad deeds done in mortal life, when judged in the after-life, or during the Last Judgment. This was the logic of preexistence believers, on down through the centuries. How that there were all these different judgments that souls were passing through as their souls passed through the different realms of lives: 1. Post-Preexistence judgment. 2. Post Mortal life judgment. 3. The Final Judgment during the resurrection. These "answers" would also be questioned, & the decisions to reject them would become part of stronger attempts, by the Council of Constantinople 553, to enforce the rejection & abandonment of Origenism & those preexistence themes concerning those born with black skins, or other physical defects, for example. As color symbolism became more & more literalized, & with black often being associated with evil, ill health, bad thoughts, & other negative traits. Plus, with art works depicting the fallen angels as being blackened during their fall from heaven. Black skin races were being looked upon, by many, as somehow being associated with demons, or Lucifer, in that some believed that those with darker skinned races, must have sinned before they were born, to thus be born into a dark, or black skin body. This was one of the issues that the Council of Constantinople of 553 would attempt to address & change through Emperor edicts of Justinian. ¹⁰⁰⁰

Pope Gelasius, 492—96, during his time, some aspects of pre-existence lore celebrated the war in heaven, and Michael the archangel's militant part with a feast to his honor. Hence, on May 8th a feast commemorates the "appearance of St. Michael on the summit of Mount Gargano in Aquila". There was also another feast called Michaelmas Day, September 29th. ¹⁰⁰¹

6TH CENTURY A.D.: A number of art works show different aspects of Rev.12. This passage of scripture seems to have preserved many elements to the story of the pre-existence. But in later centuries, Greek lore influences, & pre-existence themes were being blended together in some cases. About 500 A.D., one example shows, a woman standing on sun and moon and crowned with twelve stars, facing the Dragon, which is sweeping down the stars. Another portion, the woman flying away, Tellus (Earth) swallows up the water the Dragon is vomiting at the Woman. Many sources speak of Rev.12:1-7 as representing symbolically Mary as perhaps a sort of type of the Mother Church or the heavenly Church. However, this art work may have hints showing possible Greek mythological influences, for the Sun and moon, darkened or not, are invariably Apollo and Diana, heads set in a halo of rays, inside medallions. The multiple-horned Dragon is a conventional hydra, scaled and winged, with minor heads, as in the Labors of Hercules. The Beast in the Temple is a bear squatting inside a small basilica. The Woman seen in the sky, entirely covered by a dark maphorion, and raising her hands in prayer, like an orant that resembles the Virgin in the scene of the Ascension, or in prayer. Here, she is standing on the medallions, with the heads of Appolo & Diana, and around her nimbus, the light that shines out in rays, are the twelve stars. The fallen angels only differ from Michael's warrior angels by the fact that they are in the processes of falling down. Mother Earth swallows the water spat at the woman by the Dragon, is a colossal Tellus, head and shoulders rising from the ground, with open-mouth. The winged woman is flying away above her, is again the Virgin.¹⁰⁰²

A number of Coptic manuscripts were written in the dialect of upper Egypt. In them we see hints to different aspects of the pre-existence, such as the war in heaven, the council, Michael's fight with the dragon,— (Satan), & how he & his followers were cast out of heaven for refusing to worship Adam whom they consider as an inferior being. A festival kept alive these stories. Theodore, the Archbishop of Antioch, symbolically called Satan the "dragon that dost dwell in the abyss!" Severus, Archbishop of Antioch, 512-19 A.D., said that he would like to say a few "...words of adoration to the Christ, Who hath existed before all worlds."¹⁰⁰³

Philosopher, Boethius, advisor to Theodoric (the Great, King in the Western Roman Empire, 493–526), was a champion of Platonism, & authored of The Consolation of Philosophy, but was imprisoned through unjust charges that he was a traitor to Theodoric, & consequently was executed in 525. Before this, while in prison, he wrote a dialogue between himself and "Lady Philosophy," that possibly has Christian/Platonic preexistence themes blended into the dialogue. Lady Philosopher, a messenger, promises to show him the way back home, & conjures the memory of "the heights of heaven," "the stars' own home," & that as an "exile from the light," the hope is that his memory of such things will be recalled.¹⁰⁰⁴

Theodosius, Archbishop of Alexandria, 536 A.D., in a speech entitled: "On Saint Michael the Archangel," he spoke of how Adam, in talking to one of his sons, spoke of how that after he (Adam), was created. God "...commanded all the hosts of heaven who were in truth under His [God's] power, saying, 'Come ye, and worship the work of My hands, My likeness and My image.'" And there was there [a hateful being], who was of the earlier creation, that is to say, Satanael,... who is called the Devil, and he was an archangel. Furthermore, when the command had issued from the mouth of God, Michael, the archangel, who was one of the Seven Archangels, and his host came and worshiped first of all God our King, Jesus the Christ, and afterwards they worshiped me; and they answered and said, "We worship Thee, O God the Creator of the Universe, and we worship the work of Thy hands, Thy likeness and Thy exact image. [Other ranks of angels & their hosts under them came to worship, each in their proper order.] ...Finally the Master said unto that Mastema, the interpretation of which is "hatter", "Come thou also, and worship the work of My hands, which I have fashioned in Mine own likeness and image, even as have thy companions all the other ministrants." And Satanael answered... "There is no rank under Thine which is superior to mine, Thine own alone excepted. And besides, I am in glory, and I am [of] the first creation, and shall I come and worship a thing of earth? Far be it from Thee to make me worship this thing! On the contrary, it is he who should worship me, for I existed before he was." Theodosius goes on to say that the Most High God, again wanted "Satanael" to come and worship Adam. But Satanael again refused, & said that he would not, neither would his legion do so, for they would not worship that which is inferior to them! "Moreover, we are beings of spirit, but this creature is of the earth, and we will not worship him." Later, Theodosius said that because "Satanael" & his followers refused again to worship Adam, God was angry, and He commanded a mighty Cherubim who then smote him and reduced him to helplessness. He also ordered Michael to take away from him his scepter, and his crown, and his staff which was of light, and removed from him all his glory. All these were replaced with a staff of darkness, and God expelled all those who were with Satanael from His kingdom. Michael did everything he was commanded, and he seized him, and he broke him by his power, and he cast him and all those who were with him, from heaven. Theodosius, again mentions how Satanael was cast out with his rebel angels, etc.¹⁰⁰⁵

In another Coptic document, the Encomium of Theodosius, Archbishop of Alexandria, On Saint Michael the Archangel. Thodosius is said to have ascended to the patriarchal throne about A.D. 536. Theodosius spoke of "...the great Archangel Michael, the Commander-in-Chief of the hosts of heaven...." He also said of Michael the Archangel that "...He is not one who taketh counsel about souls to destroy them, but he is a minister unto both souls and bodies at all times before God the Creator. He maketh no accusation, but is a messenger of glad tidings unto every one.... His rule is not over one order [of angels] only, but all orders of heaven are subject unto him, according to the command of the Almighty. In short, his station is not on the left hand, but he standeth on the right hand of God at all times, and taketh counsel for the salvation of man, who is the image and likeness of the Living God.... It is Michael who contended against and seized the Enemy who opposed his Lord, and chastised him... and cast out the Accuser who worked evil round about him...." Michael & his heavenly host had "...cast out from them him that made accusations against them, him that was the Enemy of Him that created them, the Enemy of all righteousness, the Hater and the Satan, that is to say, the Devil. Therefore this day do they celebrate the festival of the archangel, for it was he who fought and prevailed, and it was he who..." [humbled] the haughty one speedily. And when he had made him helpless he cast him out into a place from which there was no escape on the earth. And the Archangel Michael did not [only defeat] this [being] and set him down upon the earth, but he received power from the Lord in such wise that he came down and seized him, and bound him with fetters which cannot be loosed. And he did not leave him merely bound on the earth, but it is written that he cast him into the lake of fire,... wherein he shall be kept until the day of the Great Judgement.... But I think that when it is said that he was cast down into the lake of fire, and [into] the abyss, and [into] the darkness, it is [said] ...that thou mayest know the truth, for it is written, 'Those who are in the heavens, and those who are on the earth, and those who are... below the earth....' [Making reference to the underworld again where satan is said to dwell with his captives.]

This document goes on to explain why satan was able to inflict evil on Job, even though he had been put in fetters, or had his hands & feet bound. Satan had counterfeited the visible appearance of the true angelic nature of God's angels. For. "...The Devil taketh upon himself the form of an angel of light.' (2 Cor.11:14). He also cites from 1 John 3:8: "...From the beginning the Devil received disgrace, and was a worker of sin.'... However, at the moment when the Devil was cast out of heaven, a multitude of angels followed him; now these were they who loved cursing,... and they came to the end of their glory,... Moreover, the Devil had meditated so much upon his own greatness... in his heart that he dared to say concerning Him that created him, 'I will become like unto Him.' And in his pride he set himself to appoint certain orders of angels under his authority, and to make himself like unto his Lord. And straightway God sent His great Archangel Michael, and he bound him in fetters and placed him in a region of darkness under the earth, and those who were in his following became devils along with him. For this reason they are called by a name that indicateth their close association with him, that is to say 'demon', which is 'devil', and until this day they have assisted him in all his evil deeds; now in his pride he had massed armies under his authority, and he made himself to be like unto God. And straightway God sent His great governor, His Archangel Michael, [who] curtailed his power and placed him in a region of darkness which was under the earth, together with those who were in his following,..." [The evil ones, the wicked, & the abominable ones]. He goes on to talk about how the devil is "fettered". It is interesting to note that many early to later Christian art works also depict this sort of thing.¹⁰⁰⁶

Syriac authors present some of the legends concerning the creation of the first man in a work entitled: The Cave of Treasures, the author of this work is said to have belonged to the school of St. Ephrem, in the 6th century A.D. The ministering angels witnessed how the Creator had created man out of dust, water, air & fire. Upon see the great wondrous glory of the first man, the ministering angels bowed down to worship man. "...And when the chief of the lower order of celestial beings saw what greatness had been given unto man, he was very jealous of him and refused to bend his knee and to worship man. Turning to his hosts he thus spake: "Do not worship man, and praise him not as the other angels do. It is for him to worship me who am fire and spirit, and not for me to bow before a creature of dust." Disobedient and refusing to listen to the command of the All-Father, the rebel was cast out of Heaven, he and his hosts, in the second hour of the sixth day. He was divested of his garments of glory and was named Satana, because he had turned from God, and Sheda, because he had been thrown down, and Daiwa, because he had lost his angelic garment of glory. Then man was raised and brought into Paradise in a fiery chariot, and angels sang before him, and Seraphs sanctified him, and Cherubim blessed him." ¹⁰⁰⁷

Though dominating sects of Christianity, under the Emperors, sought to get rid of different believes, or change them. By these later centuries, Christendom had been flooded with those doctrines, thus it wasn't easy to get rid of them.

5TH ECUMENICAL COUNCIL
2ND OF CONSTANTINOPLE IN 553
ORIGEN'S INTERPRETATIONS ON PRE-EXISTENCE REJECTED

Origenists called the Protoktistoi (first createds), had their own Christology that blended in preexistence themes, for they believed that Christ was the firstborn among a host of souls. Their enemies accused them of turning the Trinity into a tetrad (fourth) through their own Christology. Origenists were looked upon as causing trouble again with their teachings & stirring up controversy again with their preexistence themes, so more drastic measures were called upon to deal with this 2nd Origenist "crisis." Appeals for stronger pressures & help, to bring about resolutions, went to the Byzantine Empire King, Emperor of the East, Justinian (reigned 527–65). He had already been thought policing & outlawing doctrines marked tainted with pagan influences. Thus, was preexistence thrown onto the chopping block again, because some might have charged it with being pagan tainted? But also, could some have pointed to Platonic pre-existence themes to suggest outside influences on Christians' versions of pre-existence themes? After all, Justinian took it upon himself to become both Sacerdotium & Imperium (Ecclesiastical & Secular hierarchy), to then go after the perceived enemies of Christendom, and shape & defend "orthodoxy" in the East. So pre-existence themes were again in trouble under the renewed attack on Origenism. As it was, the Manichaeans were outlawed, as were pagans, & a death penalty was issued for any lapsed Christians. Add to this, Justinian's advisor, Theodore Askidas, was in favor of disposing Origenism & many preexistence themes would be thrown out with Origenism. Especially as pressures were added to those influences upon getting Justinian to act, from the Roman legate Pelagius, 539, who also denounced Origenism. In 543, Justinian wrote 10 anathemas in Liber adversus Origenem, & called a local synod to confirm them. He got right to the point: "Whoever says or thinks that human souls pre-exist,... [etc.] shall be anathema."¹⁰⁰⁸

Consequently, the doctrine of a pre-mortal existence continued to have some viability until the mid-6th century, when Origen's teachings of a pre-mortal life were condemned by a church edit known as anathemas against Origen. To bring about this tragic event, a council of about 165 bishops, were gathered, & even though they were the very men who were entrusted to preach the gospel of Christ, they denounced the very doctrine that was one of the cornerstones of the gospel plan. Why? Some scholars suggest that because the Gnostics had their own versions, the mainline Christians had to distance themselves from them, & thus the preexistence doctrine fell into disfavor. Another reason suggested is that it was part of the secret traditions, & thus was taught as a sacred knowledge to be taught privately, not publically. Another factor or reason was that it may have fallen prey to the Platonic doctrine that the spirit was uncreated.¹⁰⁰⁹

544, the Synod passed the petition for censure, & then in 551, Justinian issued an edict, one of the issues condemned was the doctrine of preexistence, without mentioning Origen. Justinian held that "man is not soul apart from body, nor body apart from soul, but he was created from 'non-being' and brought into existence as body and soul."¹⁰¹⁰ Here, a Civic leader, (who took upon himself clerical powers, not according to the New Testament way of selecting church authorities), decreed church doctrine & official church policies.

"It was in A.D. 553 that an edict known as th Anathema Against Origen, promulgated by the Roman emperor Justinian and consented to by the pope under extreme duress, abolished the doctrine of our premortal existence. Up until that point in time it was understood that we were born the spirit children of God in a pre-earth estate."¹⁰¹¹

553, Origen's views & interpretations were again attacked & many of his writings were condemned by the fifth General Council.¹⁰¹² In the EXCURSUS ON THE XV. ANATHEMAS AGAINST ORIGEN, the teaching of Origen and a formal condemnation of him and of it to this council, rejected, amongst other things, his version of the pre-existence of souls. Anathemas as of him were discovered by Peter Lambeck, the Librarian of Vienna, in the sixteen hundreds, and bear, in the Vienna MS., the heading: "Canons of the 165 holy Fathers of the holy fifth Synod, held in Constantinople." However, others have been suspicious of the captions as being untrustworthy, and many others look upon this caption as untrustworthy. Some have decided on assigning the date for the XV Anathematism to A.D. 543. However, the 15th anathemas against Origen, in the condemnation at the council, the 3 Chapters had condemned at the same time, Origen and Theodore, who both had doctrines to get rid of. Such as Origen's doctrines of the consummation, and of spirits and matter, which were said to no longer be maintained.¹⁰¹³

"THE ANATHEMAS AGAINST ORIGEN.... I. If anyone asserts the fabulous pre-existence of souls, and shall assert the monstrous restoration which follows from it: let him be anathema."

"II. If anyone shall say that the creation ... of all reasonable things includes only intelligences ... without bodies and altogether immaterial, having neither number nor name, so that there is unity between them all by identity of substance, force and energy, and by their union with the knowledge of God the Word; but that no longer desiring the sight of God, they gave themselves over to worse things, each one following his own inclinations, and that they have taken bodies more or less subtle, and have received names, for among the heavenly Powers there is a difference of bodies; and thence some became and are called Cherubims, others Seraphims, and Principalities, and Powers, and Dominations, and Thrones, and Angels, and as many other heavenly orders as there may be: let him be anathema." ... VI. If anyone shall say that there is a two-fold race of demons, of which the one includes the souls of men and the other the superior spirits who fell to this, and that of all the number of reasonable beings there is but one which has remained unshaken in the love and contemplation of God, and that that spirit is become Christ and the king of all reasonable beings, and that he has created [note 1- The following is Hefele's note (Hist. Councils, Vol. IV, p. 226, note 1)] all the bodies which exist in heaven, on earth, and between heaven and earth... let him be anathema."

VII, seems to question certain interpretations of the pre-existence of Christ, & how he, the Word, humbled himself in these last days even to humanity. How he had pity upon the divers falls, which had appeared in the spirits united in the same unity of which he himself is part. How that to restore them he passed through divers classes, had different bodies and different names, became all to all, an Angel among Angels, a Power among Powers, has clothed himself in the different classes of reasonable beings with a form corresponding to that class. How that he took upon him the flesh and blood like ours and is become man for men. Thus, if anyone says all this, and does not profess that God the Word humbled himself and became man, such a one was to be anathema. Consequently, the pre-mortal Christ becoming a man with a body of flesh, blood & bones, was defended as being real. In Christology issues, this was one of the issues that had troubled the early church on up to this time, about Christ actually having a body, being actually born.

XIII seems to suggest that they reject the idea of those that say that Christ was no different from other reasonable beings, in wisdom, power, might & that all will be placed at the right hand of God, as also Christ. How that they were in the feigned pre-existence of all things. Who should say such things, let them be anathema.

XV. "If anyone shall say that the life of the spirit... shall be like to the life which was in the beginning while as yet the spirits had not come down or fallen, so that the end and the beginning shall be alike, and that the end shall be the true measure of the beginning: let him be anathema."

EMPEROR JUSTINIAN [527-565 A.D.], AGAINST ORIGEN: Further efforts were made by certain "Christians" at the time who were against certain opinions of Origen & others, concerning the pre-existence of human souls.¹⁰¹⁵

ANATHEMATISMS OF THE EMPEROR JUSTINIAN AGAINST ORIGEN. "I. Whoever says or thinks that human souls pre-existed, i.e., that they had previously been spirits and holy powers, but that, satiated with the vision of God, they had turned to evil, and in this way the divine love in them had died out... and they had therefore become souls... and had been condemned to punishment in bodies, shall be anathema. II. If anyone says or thinks that the soul of the Lord pre-existed and was united with God the Word before the Incarnation and Conception of the Virgin, let him be anathema." III. If anyone says or thinks that the body of our Lord Jesus Christ was first formed in the womb of the holy Virgin and that afterwards there was united with it God the Word and the pre-existing soul, let him be anathema." In IX, Justinian rejected Origen's opinions that even demons, & impious men would eventually be restored back into heaven eventually.¹⁰¹⁶

This return to former circumstances and conditions, called Apokatastasis, contained pre-existence themes that also got axed by Justinian, 553, in the 9th condemnation. The preexistence aspect of it was, for Origen, a return to the spiritual heights from which one fell out of preexistence into mortality and was often read as including Satan in the universal rehabilitation. As other interpreted it, clearly the council of Constantinople 553, is here reflecting the widespread habit of taking Origen's reading of apokatastasis, to thus imply a heavenly preexistence to which humanity will universally be restored.¹⁰¹⁷

Rev. Charles Joseph Hefele, D.D., on the edict of King Justinian, 527-565 A.D., against Origen. After the king-Emperor sent for Pelagius, the Roman deacon, and upon the return from Gaza and Constantinople, Pelagius fell in with monks from Jerusalem who had parts of Origen's writings with them. These monks sought to obtain from the Emperor, a sentence of condemnation against Origen. Pelagius and the Patriarch Mennas of Constantinople upheld them in this matter, and Justinian promotes the edict against Origen, that was first published by Baronius in Latin, then later, Lupus made the Greek text known. It was embodied in the Acts of the fifth Ecumenical Synod. That copy of the edict which has come to us was addressed to the Patriarch Mennas of Constantinople, and the Emperor. It told, among other things, the other leading errors of Origen, such as his version of the pre-existence. To add to its strength of rejection, it contained refutations with the insertion of many patristic passages from Gregory of Nazianzus, and of Nyssa, Chrysostom, Peter of Alexandria, Athanasius, Basil, Cyril of Alexandria, etc., who had all spoken decidedly in the rejection of Origen's teaching.¹⁰¹⁸ Because Origen's other teachings were rejected by later Christians, so also was his version of the pre-existence included too.

Justinian stated that he had written the same to the Patriarch Vigilius, the Pope of Old Rome, as well as to the other holy patriarchs—namely, of Alexandria, Theophilus of Antioch, and of Jerusalem, that they might also take precautions in the matter of 24 propositions of rejections of Origen's writings.¹⁰¹⁹ Which were reasons why they consider his writings to contain heretical teachings. Ten propositions were included on why Origen should be anathematized, the first three mention certain aspects of the pre-existence which were being rejected by this time, they are:

“1. Whoever says or thinks that human souls pre-existed, i.e. that they had previously been spirits and holy powers, but that, satiated with the vision of God, they had turned to evil, and in this way the divine love in them had grown cold (ἀποψυχεῖσας), and they had therefore become souls (ψυχάς), and had been condemned to punishment in bodies, shall be anathema.”

2. “If anyone says or thinks that the soul of the Lord pre-existed and was united with God the Word before the Incarnation and Conception of the Virgin, let him be anathema.

3. If anyone says or thinks that the body of our Lord Jesus Christ was first formed in the womb of the body of the holy Virgin, and that afterwards there was united with it God the Word, and the pre-existing soul, let him be anathema.”¹⁰²⁰

Other communications by letters and edicts between different Church leaders, and the Justinian, include the fifteen Anathematisms on Origen, which belong to the Constantinopolitan Synod, dated here as being A.D. 543, dated by others as 553 A.D. This was discovered towards the end of the 17th century by the librarian of Vienna, Peter Lambeck and was called the Vienna Codex. However, other authors differ in their opinions as to what time and Synod these documents belong to. Among the fifteen celebrated anathematisms, the pre-existence is rejected again: “1. If anyone maintains the legendary pre-existence of souls and the fanciful apocastasis (restitution of all things [including demons returning from their fallen state to God’s presence]), let him be anathema.”¹⁰²¹ The “restitution of all things” is in reference to the belief held by Origen, and perhaps others, that even the demons would eventually be restored to heaven in the long eternities of time. This was one of the things that the Justinian had complained about in the 9th of his ten propositions: “If anyone says or thinks that the punishment of demons and of impious men is only temporary, and will one day have an end, and that a restoration (ἀποκατάστασις) will take place, let him be anathema.”¹⁰²² In the fifteen anathematisms, number 14 we read about the rejection of “the fabled apocastasis only spirits alone will remain, as it was in the feigned pre-existence,— let him be anathema.” Number 15 says: “If anyone says that the life of spirits will then be like the earlier life when they had not yet descended [to earth to live mortal bodies] and fallen, so that the beginning and the end will be like each other, and the end the measure for the beginning, let him be anathema.”¹⁰²³

In the 2nd of these fifteen Anathematisms on Origen we read about a version of the war in heaven, and the fall of the angels, which was rejected during this time, how that these being “became satiated with the vision of God, and had turned to that which was worse, everyone according to the nature of his inclination, and had assumed bodies, finer or grosser, and received names, whilst, among these powers there was a difference both of names and bodies; so that some would be and be named cherubim, some seraphim, principalities, powers, dominions, and thrones, and angels, and however many heavenly orders there may be,—let him be anathema.”¹⁰²⁴

Also, another aspect of certain versions of the pre-existence, though it was rejected during this century, still shows up in later art works in later centuries, in which demons are depicted with dark-skinned bodies, and in which Satan and his fallen angels’ bodies are changed and darkened¹⁰²⁵ during and after their fall from heaven.¹⁰²⁶ Hence in number four we read that: “If any one says that spiritual beings, in whom divine love grows cold, are covered in grosser bodies like ours and called men, whilst others who reached the summit of evil had received cold and dark bodies, and are called now demons and evil spirits, let him be anathema.”¹⁰²⁷

Other versions of the fall of the angels were rejected too: “If anyone maintains that there are two kinds of demons, the one consisting of human souls, the other of higher, but so deeply fallen spirits, and that of the whole number of rational beings only one Spirit remained unaltered in the divine love and vision, and that this one became Christ, and King of all rational beings, and created all bodily things. . . . let him be anathema.”¹⁰²⁸

Bishop Domitian of Ancyra, the friend of Theodore Ascidas, and second head of the Origenists, wrote in a letter to Pope Vigilius that, “on account of the doctrine of the pre-existence and apokatastasis they had unjustly attacked and condemned Origen and other holy and celebrated teachers. Those who wished to defend such doctrines had not been able to do so...”¹⁰²⁹ The reason they weren’t able to defend some of the doctrines that Origen taught, & their own Origenistic versions of the pre-existence, as they later interpreted it, was because of this ever growing opposition against Origenism had imperial backing and force behind it.¹⁰³⁰ Hence, even some of Origenists leaders, such as Theodore Ascidas, arch-bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia, assented to the rejection of Origen in order that he might not lose his position and influence at Court, where he resided almost continually.¹⁰³¹ Others were forced to follow the decrees and politically pressured policies or lose their positions of leadership in the different areas of the churches that they were at too.¹⁰³² However, even though these versions of the pre-existence were suppressed, crushed and rejected under imperial and ecclesiastical pressures, they weren’t able to rid all of Christendom of the belief in different versions of the pre-existence as it was recorded in manuscripts, art works and traditions. Hence, these beliefs were passed down to later generations of Christians.

A number of things helped preserved many pre-existence themes in later Christianity: Art works, writings, mystery plays, songs, poems, symbols for fraternal or knight orders. Plus, earlier bible illustrations, & much more.

FRAGMENTS OF PRE-EXISTENCE THEMES IN EARLY TO LATER CHRISTENDOM

Mystery Plays were devised to instruct the people in Old & New Testament history, amongst other subjects, some of the shows presented the Fall of Lucifer. Thus, the actors’ parts were undertaken by the city trade guilds; the tanners, who tan animal skins to dark colors, for instance, would play the Fall of Lucifer, while other played different characters of religious history.¹⁰³³ Tanners fit the part because in tanning different animal skins, to darker colors, they were associating the color symbolism of dark colors with the dark evil forces behind the demons, or fallen angels. Thus, who better to fit the parts? According to traditions, writings & art works, etc., when the Devil & his angels were cast out of heaven, & upon having fallen from heaven, they lost their bright colors & would be blackened. In some cases, to depict the devil and his angels as dark skinned monsters, this symbolized their fallen conditions, their apostasy, rebellion, & retrogression from the light of God that they had once known before their fall.¹⁰³⁴

“Blackness and darkness are almost always associated with evil, in opposition to the whiteness and light associated with good. This is true even in black Africa. Blackness has an immense range of negative and fearful associations: death, the underworld,...” etc. “...The Devil is usually black, symbolizing the absence of light and goodness. His skin is black, or he is a black animal, or his clothing is black. Sometimes he is a black rider on a black horse. His next most common hue is red, the color of blood and fire; he dresses in red or has a red or flaming beard..." Green is another symbolic color which is associated with the devil, in some cases.¹⁰³⁵

St. Gregory the Great, 540– March 12, 604.¹⁰³⁶ Job xl:14 mentions a crocodile, under the name of Behemoth, this, according to Gregory, was a type of the Devil. Hence, he wrote that he is "called the chief of the ways of God because God began in him the work of creation and placed him above the other angels."¹⁰³⁷ Gregory also saw in Ezekiel 28:12 a prophetic type of Satan's fall. For he wrote that it refers to "the angel who was created first... This angel was above all the angelic orders who, by contrast, increased yet more his glory."¹⁰³⁸

In the Latin book, Dialogues on the Life and Miracles of the Italian Fathers, which contains a lot of superstitious thinking of the laity & clergy of these later centuries. It contains all kinds of post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, ridiculous tales, which were believed by the common folk, & which we might expect as early doctrine was becoming legendized by these later times. Thus, "...Gregory the Great, when consecrating an Arian church for Roman Catholic worship, successfully exorcised the Devil with the help of sacred relics; Satan flew before him in the shape of a huge pig & vacated the place completely the following night with great noise."¹⁰³⁹

6th-c. legends: St. Michael appeared to the Virgin Mary to announce to her the time of her death, and that he'd receive her soul and bore it to Jesus. St. Gregory, during a fearful pestilence raging in Rome, is said to have advised that a procession should be made, which should pass through the streets singing the service to become known as the Great Litanies. This was done for 3 days, and on the last day, when they came opposite to the tomb of Hadrian, Gregory beheld the Archangel Michael hovering over the city. He landed on the top of the Mausoleum and sheathed his sword, which was dripping with blood. This suggested that he had just been in battle with some evil forces somewhere near by. This also is a case in point about the legendization process going on that was turning doctrines into fables, reflecting upon Michael's traditional role as one of the main characters in war in heaven themes of the pre-existence. Thus, he was becoming a sort of guardian-angel who goes to battle against the forces of darkness. "Then the plague was stayed, and the Tomb of Hadrian has been called the Castle of Sant' Angelo from that day, and a chapel was there consecrated, the name of which was Ecclesia Sancti Angeli usque ad Coelos."¹⁰⁴⁰

Michael-the-archangel, is said here to have appeared to others too. Churches were built & pilgrimages were made in memory of these appearances, & for what Michael represented. Another depiction of Michael the archangel's battle with a monstrous looking dragon, is also depicted here too, but no date has been given to this particular art work. St. Michael is often represented as young and beautiful, and that's how he is represented in this one.¹⁰⁴¹

During the 6th century, the Catholic church both in the East and the West, invoked Michael the Archangel to do battles with the evil forces of darkness in "rebuking the devil." Thus, his role as militant leader in the war in heaven, and his bouts with the devil were still part of pre-existence lore. Pre-existence lore included feast days too, for Michael's was held on September 29, and is "probably the anniversary of the dedication of a church of St Michael and All Angels on the Salarian Way at Rome in the sixth century. He is depicted as an archangel in full armour, with a sword and a pair of scales, and piercing a dragon or devil with his lance."¹⁰⁴²

6th century, Metropolitan Museum of Art, a Coptic Christian work, a woolen woven tapestry shows a saint killing a dragon. Perhaps this particular work may be based on the traditional bouts with the dragon from war in heaven depictions & stories.¹⁰⁴³

495–570, Olympiodorus, (presumably, the Neo-Platonist), noted how infants both smile and cry in their sleep, then asked: Can this happen through the soul agitating the circulations of their animal nature, & in conformity with passions that the soul had experienced 'before birth into the body?'¹⁰⁴⁴

7TH c.: During the later centuries: "The warlike spirit among later Christians and the worship of belligerent archangels and saints were introduced into the writings of the early Church from pagan sources and the importance of this phase of Christianity grew with its expanse among the energetic races of the North. The Teutonic nations, the Norsemen, the Germans, the Anglo-Saxons and their kin..."¹⁰⁴⁵ As traditions & beliefs of the North blended in with the version of Christianity that spread Northward, the Teutonic versions of evil powers were also transferred to Satan and his host, as pre-existence themes, the post-fall from heaven activities of Satan & his demons became further legendized in such blends.¹⁰⁴⁶ "Teutonic legends and fairy tales frequently mention the Devil, and there he possesses many features that remind us of Loki. In addition, the ice giants of the Norsemen, the Nifelheim of the Saxons, the Nether-world of the Irish, all contributed their share to the popular notions of the Christian demonology of the Middle Ages."¹⁰⁴⁷

627, the Venerable Bede records the Christian proselytizing of King Edwin of Northumbria (584–633), who was indecisive about Christendom of that time. A counselor, who must have heard the proselytizing, & accepted it, advised him to consider & compare the present life of man on earth with that time of which we have no knowledge. The journey of the soul through the pre-existence, mortal life, & the after life, he then likened unto a sparrow flying from the cold of winter, through the warm halls of the King, to experience a moment of comfort, to then vanish out of sight into the wintry world from which it came. "Even so, man appears on earth for a little while; but of what went before this life or of what follows, we know nothing. Therefore, if this new teaching has brought any more certain knowledge, it seems only right that we should follow it."¹⁰⁴⁸

638, succeeding emperors after Justinian, such as Heraclius, councils, & writers routinely reaffirmed the condemnation of Origen, & his followers Didymus & Evagrius Ponticus, in his statement of faith, The Ecthesis. 680–81, the 6th Ecumenical Council again rejected Origen.¹⁰⁴⁹

The Old English Genesis, consisting of 2 poems in one. The Caedmonian Genesis A [c. 700]; Genesis B, [dated to late 10th cent., from a 9th cent. Old Saxon poem.] Genesis A, speaks of the fall of Satan, etc. In Genesis B, Satan enraged at the prospect of humbling himself before a God whose supremacy he refuses to acknowledge, Satan boasts of his own strength and rouses his followers to rebellion. For which Satan & his host are cast down into the fires of hell. After which Christ laments over the fallen angels.¹⁰⁵⁰

The Old English Genesis consists of two poems in one, both fragments, with lines 1-234 that belong to the Caedmonian Genesis A (c. 700), while lines 235-851 are interpolated into the manuscript from Genesis B. A translation was done in the tenth century, from a ninth-century Old Saxon poem. Genesis A resumes at line 852 and continues to the end. The scribe compiling the manuscript probably wanted to put together a continuous and complete narrative, and for that reason may have inserted Genesis B bodily into the middle of the earlier Genesis A. At any rate, the total Genesis, comprising 2,935 lines, renders pre-existence themes, like the war in heaven, the fall of Satan, the temptation of Adam and Eve, and subsequent Biblical events. The Genesis B poet's Satan emerges with much of the magnificent insolence of Milton's Satan in the initial books of Paradise Lost.

Enraged at the prospect of humbling himself before a God whose supremacy he refuses to acknowledge, Satan boasts of his own strength and rouses his followers to rebellion against God.

"My hands have might To work many wonders. I have strength to rear A goodlier throne, a higher in heaven. Why must I yield or fawn for his favour Or bow in submission? I may be God As well as He. Brave comrades stand by me, Stout-hearted heroes unflinching in strife. (ll. 279-85)"

"After being hurled with the rest of the fallen angels into the fiery abyss of hell, the restless fiend plots the overthrow of man. First trying, and failing, to undermine Adam, he then turns to Eve. Again like Milton's Satan, he tempts her by playing upon her aspirations to divinity, as well as by promising her dominion over her husband. "Eat of this fruit," he bids her..."

"That Milton may have been acquainted with Genesis B is a intriguing possibility; there is at least a chance that he knew Junius, the seventeenth-century scholar who first printed this remarkable Old English poem."

"...The 733-line work known as Christ & Satan is in three parts: a lament of the fallen angels; Christ's Harrowing of Hell, which incorporates other scriptural material..."¹⁰⁵¹

676–749, St. John of Damascus, wrote in reference of a man, (Origen), who once esteemed as the greatest father of the church, but in rejecting Origen's preexistence he wrote, that "the body and the soul were formed at the same time—not one before and the other afterwards, as the ravings of Origen would have it."¹⁰⁵²

A drawing of a 7th century work, from the Cathedral of Cortona, shows a winged-angel standing on the back of a monster-dragon, thrusting an arrow into its mouth. Said to be of St. Michael, in Latin: Sanctus Michael Angelus, in French: Monseigneur Saint Michael, in Italian: San Michele, Sammichele. St. Michael, whose name signifies "like unto God," or Michael the Archangel, is regarded as the first and mightiest of all created spirits, & thus under God's commission, expelled Satan and the rebellious angels from heaven. His office includes that of patron-saint of the Church on earth. As Lord of the souls of the dead, he decides their merits, & presents the good to God, and sends the evil and wicked away to the torments of hell.¹⁰⁵³ In other art works, which will be considered later, the mighty angel Michael, the dragon fighter, is sometimes seen in hell with other angels, along with Christ, as they rescue souls out of hell. In some cases, they put the fallen devil in irons, or thrust weapons into devils attempting to stop the harrowing of hell. Thus, not only were these dragon fighters at war with the rebellious angels in heaven, but in hell also.¹⁰⁵⁴

8TH CENTURY A.D.: "BUILD ME A SHRINE!" commanded the archangel Michael in a dream to Aubert, bishop of Avranches. And so the cleric in A.D. 709, raised a chapel in the saint's honor atop Mount Tombe. Later it was known as Mont-Saint-Michel, & Benedictine monks worked the native granite to create a spectacular Romanesque church and monastery, completed in 1058. The beliefs were passed down how the archangel Michael had decreed the shrine, for he was, after all the captain of the celestial armies, God's great avenger, & golden-angel of fire and death. Men were said to also accomplish miracles in his name for the glory of God. In the early eighth century, Michael is said to have appeared in dreams to Aubert, and bade him build an oratory, & the church and the peak would be dedicated to Saint Michael, as were several other sites in Europe, such as Monte Gargano in southern Italy. Michael, was believed to never have been a human, but was a pure spirit. He is an archangel, and he stands in God's inner circle, for it was he who defeated Satan. An art work of Michael, his sword raised, he stands on the back of the dragon whom he is about to strike.¹⁰⁵⁵

725 A.D., the Iconoclastic movement, also known as image breakers, was launched by decree of the Emperor Leo III, the Isaurian. Thus, iconography or the use of images in the Church, were forbidden. Eastern Churches had all kinds of images of God, the Christ, or saints, in their art works, so there were many images that were broken up during this era.¹⁰⁵⁶ Severe edicts against the use of images in church worship were supported by his friends, but roused the fierce opposition of the bishops and monks. The policies of most of his successors until nearly the ninth century were similar. The theological controversy was not brought to a close till the Council of Nice in 842, that decided against the iconoclasts. But the controversy continued till Basil the Macedonian (867-886), ascended the throne.¹⁰⁵⁷ If a number of art works were discouraged, suppressed or hidden away, & even destroyed because of this movement. Then perhaps there are not as many examples to consider concerning the usual pre-existence themes, as there are in other centuries.

743, Synod of Lepinæ, in the baptismal rite, they added a confession of faith, an abrenunciation of the German deities with all their hosts. Questions were asked about if the candidate for baptism forsook the Devil, and all his guilds, works, & all the evil ones, and his companions. Pre-existence themes, the post-fall from heaven combat themes, are seen in these baptismal rites of later ceremonies.¹⁰⁵⁸

750–950 A.D., in some areas of Christendom, one writer notes that the God of early medieval writing and art is a judge and king. Among other things depicted: Christ is a prince, reigning from the throne of the cross after defeating humankind's captor, and Mary is his queen. The fundamental dramas of religion are cosmic—wars between Christ and the devil, saints or angels and demons. Thus, war in heaven themes of the pre-existence, & the continued battle on earth, between good & evil, prevailed in art & writings.¹⁰⁵⁹

During the 8th and 9th century, pre-existence themes, like the post-fall from heaven activities of the Devil & the fallen-angels-demons, became part of the ritual dramas to counter their demonic activities & continued combat against God. Thus, baptism was regarded as an expulsion of the evil spirits. New converts were, according to Dionysius, told to exhale three times, & according to the Greek euchologion, they spit at the Devil, by spitting on the floor.

9TH CENTURY A.D.: The archangel Michael became the subject of art works for centuries to come. As he had already been depicted, spoken of, & written about, in earlier centuries. A mosaic shows Michael with a weapon in his right hand, with his wings spread out behind him & a halo surrounding his head. Other things are seen here too, but part of this art work is missing in the north side of the apse in Agia Sophia, Istanbul. About 867– to end of the century.¹⁰⁶⁰

Though many aspects of Pre-existence themes were still being retained, preserved & passed down to later Christian generations is art works, etc., there were still those who rejected & condemned Origen's pre-existence, such as 9th century scholar, Photius of Constantinople, who refers to "the nonsense of Origen, on the 'pre-existence of souls.'"¹⁰⁶¹

10TH CENTURY A.D.: 922, from a Beatus, a seven headed dragon combats with angels, while attempting to get a woman and her child. The child is carried into heaven by an angel. The dragon's tail curl around some of the stars, or spirits of heaven and causes them to fall down into hell below.¹⁰⁶²

As dragon lore developed in later Christendom, St. Michael is often represented overcoming a DRAGON, like

St. George, another dragon slayer in Knight lore. Both are distinguished from each other by Michael's wings, whereas St. George is sometimes dressed as a Knight. St. Michael, is sometimes shown as an active combatant rather than as an actual conqueror. In some cases, the dragon is also seen as a Serpent, or reptile with monstrous fearful appearances. St. Michael is the patron saint of Normandy, & dragon lore with St. Michael lore were passed down in the building of churches in his honor, such as Mont St. Michael, & the abbey church begun in 966, St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall. Followed by several others during the Norman influence in England.¹⁰⁶³ Gustav Davidson notes that "the earliest recorded slayer of the Dragon, Michael may be considered the prototype of the redoubtable St. George."¹⁰⁶⁴

In the Trier Apocalypse, of Bamberg, or the Trier cycle, poses the question of what was the early Christian model visible behind the primitive Carolingian drawings. The manuscript was made about 1000, by order of Emperor, Henry II, for the cathedral of the bishopric of Bamberg. One portion shows a Woman with her Child, the Dragon, and the Ark of the Covenant in the heavenly Temple. Thus, later versions of Revelations 12, the dragon's assault on the holy child. Another shows: The Flight of the Woman, while the Dragon spits out the water, which is swallowed up by the earth.¹⁰⁶⁵

10th or 11th centuries: In a transcript of Caedmon's Metrical Paraphrase of Scripture History, an English manuscript, is a series of illuminations depicting the wrath of the Deity at the rebel angels. In the first illustration, the Eternal Father, enthroned, shows surprise at the audacity of any spirit that aspires to be an equality with Himself. In the next miniature, the arch-devil is attempting to seat himself on the celestial throne, with the crown, while his satellites around support the emblems of royalty. In the next section, Lucifer distributes peacock's feathers, symbolic of pride—upon his adherents. Under this scene the jealous God Himself expels the fiend, for with his right hand, He hurls three javelins at the traitorous seraph. Satan, with a countenance of frustrated ambition, is ignominiously falling—throne, canopy, and cushion are flung with him and his subjects, stripped of their robes, they fall into the nethermost regions of Hell, that is represented as a gaping mouth of a fire-breathing monster.¹⁰⁶⁶

Another illumination in this manuscript, stripped of their heavenly robes, the nude figures of the terrorized devils fall from the firmament at the dignified gesture of the Deity. He stands above the stars, holding His Word in the left hand, amidst adoring angels. Again hell is seen as gaping jaws into which the fallen angels crash down into. In hell these angels are demonified, or are changed into dark skinned demons. The devil's hands & feet are bound too.¹⁰⁶⁷

Another 10th century art work, in hell the arch-devil is lying prostrate & is surrounded by an aureole, an enlarged nimbus that surrounds the whole figure. This is said to be symbolic of how he is the most powerful of the fallen-fiends.¹⁰⁶⁸

11TH CENTURY A.D.: The descent of Christ in to Hell, & two great archangels, Michael and Gabriel, trampling upon dragons, plus other events are depicted in an art work, on the West Wall, Torcello.¹⁰⁶⁹

Another shows Lucifer's argument with the Deity. An illumination in Caedmon, lucifer is represented as a seraph, with the 6 wings studded with eyes, arguing with the Eternal Father.¹⁰⁷⁰

In the Hortus Delicarum, a manuscript illuminated for the Convent of St. Odilius, in Alsace, Lucifer is seen before his fall, full of pride & self-consciousness. He is standing vested in a richly embroidered dalmatic and buskins, emblems of royalty. His angelic wings extend, & he is holding an orb & sceptre, symbolic of his high angelic rank. St. Bernard of Clairvaux speculates about the manner in which Lucifer fell when he was checked in his presumption to sit & take over God's throne. Lucifer's wings represent love and intellect, & upon him ignoring the wing of love and reverence to God, in his pride depended solely on the wing of intellect. Disdaining to stand, and forbidden to sit, he would take the only other course and fly. However, he was unable to do this with only one wing, & thus, he ingloriously fell. Unlike mankind, who fell when tempted, Lucifer's fall— with no provocation, but the resulted of his own sin—is eternal.¹⁰⁷¹

Other art works present how lucifer-fell, for when the angels were created this seraph burst forth into a hymn of praise. The Deity commended him for his spontaneous song. However, to think how very good he had been in so doing, greatly elated him, and in this seed of pride that grew, he began to think that he was at least as great as his Creator. Consequently, this seed grew into a rebellion, as factions were formed, angels ranged themselves either in support of, or opposition to God. Some of the angels were called doubters, and eventually found that they were considered as bad as the openly rebellious, whose fate they shared by also falling from heaven.¹⁰⁷²

1007 A.D., a rather different depiction of the woman & the 7-headed dragon mentioned in John's Apocalypse (Rev.12), for the woman has wings, & she seems to be reaching out & looking toward where she is flying off to. Thus, this artist seems to have depicted the moment just before her escape from the dragon. She doesn't have the child in her arms, as in other depictions. Perhaps because the angel of God has already descended down out of heaven & has passed on the child into the hands of the Father. Therefore, the point at which the artist must have decided to depict this event, is that point in time where the woman is in the act of escaping from the dragon— (symbolic of the devil). Around the woman's head are 12 lines with dots that also extend out from her head. These are supposed to represent the crown of 12 stars, even though they don't look like stars.¹⁰⁷³

1020 A.D., The dragon of the false prophet is about to be thrust through with spears. It seems that the symbol for Satan—the dragon, might remind us of similar types of depictions that show fights with demonic-dragons of evil.¹⁰⁷⁴

In another depiction of the woman & the dragon, a winged woman has the symbol of the moon at her feet. On her head is a crown with 12 stars on it. She has her hands lifted up as if in prayer, but also she has just passed on her child into the hands of an angel that extend down from above. The tail of the dragon, as depicted here, has caused some of the stars, (symbolic of some of the spirits, or angels of God), to fall.¹⁰⁷⁵

1047 A.D., double-leaf Beatus, John's apocalyptic vision shows Michael & his angels harassing the Dragon. Another portion symbolically depicts the fall of the angels for below the Dragon's tail stars are falling down, while another portion shows the Child presented to the Un-named One on the Throne.¹⁰⁷⁶

1028–72, a depiction of the War of the Angels, from the Apocalypse of Beatus Saint-Sever (Gascony), depicts the War in Heaven, the Beast & one of its symbolic allies imprisoned in Hell. Plus, the Beast & the Fallen Souls are depicted with great immediacy & are not confined within the dividing bands.¹⁰⁷⁷

The dragon— (devil), seems to be in the act of attacking Mary & the Christ child. But the Christ child is snatched by an angel who is in the act of clasping the wrists of the Christ child. Thus that artist has depicted the scene before Christ's entrance into the heavenly realm. The angel extends down out of the heavenly realm where the heavenly city or perhaps heavenly temple is also depicted. Thus, the angel is depicted in the very act of clasping Christ's wrists before Christ is admitted into the heavenly Temple or city. And thus, the traditional "rites of passage" hand clasps & grips are here by hinted to and depicted.¹⁰⁷⁸

The war in heaven was the Mightiest of Battles, & was continued to be depicted in frescoes, such as on the porch of European churches, appear scenes from the Apocalypse, & the Mother & the Dragon. Another art shows Revelation 12 of how in the skies of the women clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet & upon her head a crown of 12 stars. A great fiery dragon rushes to devour her newborn infant but she gives it to the angel shown at the left. She herself has already received wings to fly to a hiding place.¹⁰⁷⁹

11th century art work of the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, depicts two coal-black demons coming to the rich man to take away his soul at the moment of his death. While, in the case with Lazarus, his passing is with the angels of God. For this work depicts one angel passing on Lazarus's soul into the hands of another angel who clasps Lazarus's hands. Thus, again hinting to rites of passage hand grips. But also, as color symbolism was passed down to later artists, dark colors were associated symbolically with evil. Thus appropriately the artists' choices for the colors of demons, were, amongst other colors, & in some cases, black.¹⁰⁸⁰

Michael the Archangel is depicted on a book-cover which may probably be assigned to the eleventh century. In his right hand he holds the sword that helped him defeat the dragon. His wings are spread out behind him. A halo surrounds his head. Other scenes are depicted on this book cover too.¹⁰⁸¹

11th century English Poem Genesis, a dramatically detailed account of the rebellion & fall of the angels that goes far beyond the biblical story. God created the angels before making the material universe & its inhabitants. He gave these angels free will, expecting them to be his loyal vassals. However, one of the angels, full of pride & envy, boasted that he did not need to serve God. Admiring his own brightness, & the beauty of his own countenance, this angel turned his thoughts from contemplation of God to contemplation of himself. A rebellious vassal, he imagined that he could renounce his rightful lord & set a fief in heaven for himself. "I can become God just like him!" He boasted. In the northwest of heaven this rebellious angel established a rebel stronghold & built a throne for himself, summoning the other angels to rally to his cause. However, God, whose rights as lord had been violated, hurled Lucifer & his followers down to the dark dales. The rebel angels fell for 3 days & nights into the pit, where they lost their angelic dignity & became wretched outlaws.

Satan, had once been the most beautiful of the angels, but now he found himself in hell's stinking shadows. Undaunted, this rebellious fallen angel began to raise a castle in the darkness. There, rising from his accursed throne, he delivered a defiant speech to his retainers, telling them that he had heard that the Lord was unjustly planning to give the empty seats that the rebels had vacated in heaven to a race of mere humans who were made of base earth & soil. Already God had in mind certain seats which Adam & Eve would obtain. Satan is a prisoner of hell, for he exclaimed that if he could just free himself for 1 winter hour, he would attempt to accomplish his desires with the host of hell, by perverting the human race & by turning them against God too.¹⁰⁸²

End of the 11th century: A portion of a two-part work shows the Woman threatened by the Dragon, her Child being carried away. Frescoed vault of the gallery, in the porch of the abbey church of St-Savin-sur-Gartempe, Vienne.¹⁰⁸³

11th century frescoes of John's Apocalyptic drama & visions, in the transept of the abbey church of Castel S. Elia, near Nepi. Showing a Woman in white, receiving the wings, standing on a globe of the sun and moon, dressed like a Byzantine princess. The Dragon is vomiting water, & is still the crested and winged hydra.¹⁰⁸⁴

1033–1109, Anselm of Canterbury, Christian philosopher, suggests that the questions about the origins of the soul were still open for discussions, & that he was thinking about it, & didn't know anyone who will solve it, but hoped he could settle the question before he died.¹⁰⁸⁵

End of the 11th & beginning of the 12th century, the Poetic or Sæmund Edda, collected by an Icelandic name Sæmund, and styled Hinns Fróða, or The Wise. In the fables of the ancient religion of Scandinavia, & probably the whole of Gotho-German race, perhaps pre-existence themes with color symbolism seem to played a part in their fables about demons & good spirits. If such fables were around by the time Christianity was introduced & began to grow in these areas, the pre-existence themes could have been blended. In some cases in later Christendom, when the fallen angels hit the earth, they keep going down into the deep underworld places. In these other fables, some of the celestial spirits that fill the earth, are of a good and elevated nature & are friendly towards people, hence they've been called "White or Light Alfs or Spirits." The Terrestrial ones' abodes are in the air, sea, and earth, while the land ones, or the δαίμονες ἐπιχθόνιοι of the Greeks, of which evil spirits constantly and on all occasions sought to torment or injure mankind. They dwell on the earth in the great thick woods, whence came the name Skovtrolde or Wood Trolls, some also dwell in desert & lonely places, partly in & under the ground, such as cave Trolls. Or they dwell in rocks & hills, called Bjerg Trolde, or Hill Trolls. Depending on their good or ill natures, they are called Dverge, or Dwarfs, and Alve, whence the word Elfefolk, (in Danish). These Dæmons, or Demons, like the underground ones, Svartálfr, or "Black Spirits, were the mischievous types, thus called Trolls.¹⁰⁸⁶ In The Duergar, about myths personification of powers, attributes, & moral or immortal qualities. The Edda describes their origin: Then the gods sat on their seats, and held a council, and called to mind how the Duergar (diminutive or small beings, dwelling in rocks & hills, skilled in metallurgy), had become animated in the clay below in the earth, like maggots in flesh. They had been created, & had taken life in Ymir's flesh, a giant, the personification of Chaos. They were thus like maggots in it, and by the will of the gods they became partakers of human knowledge, and had the likeness of men, but their abode was in the ground, & in stone.¹⁰⁸⁷

12th c., art work dated 11th-13th century, shows, among other things, Michael-the-archangel, standing on the back of the dragon. He thrusts a staff into its jaws.¹⁰⁸⁸

A stone carving that depicts St. Michael in the act of thrusting the point of his weapon into the dragon.¹⁰⁸⁹

An interesting depiction of the war in heaven was preserved in a church wall painting. CIVATE (NEAR COMO), SAN PIETRO, the original Lombardo-Carolingian church. The interior still preserves frescoes of St. Michael's triumph over the devil, in the east end. The pillars, capitals and arches of the eastern apse are decorated with such scenes, with some fragments at San Benedetto in Mals, & is parallel to the earlier stucco sculpture at Cividale del Friuli. The artists' work Civate may have been influenced by eastern versions. Another source says that this art work is of the Victory of the Archangel Michael over the Apocalyptic Dragon. Dated first half of the 12th century Civate, church of San Pietro al Monte.¹⁰⁹⁰

12th century frescoed lunette on the inner west wall of the little mountain church of S. Pietro al Monte, above

Civate, near Lecco, on Lake Como, in Lombard. It follows the popular theme of the Woman threatened by the Dragon, the Child carried away to the Throne. Archangel Michael and his angels fighting the Monster, whose tail sweeps down the stars.¹⁰⁹¹

A couple of angels, one with a shield, & each one armed with swords, fight off a couple of demons who are attempting to shoot arrows at a number of people, sometimes hitting some of them, who are making their way up a symbolical ladder to heaven. The ladder's rungs represent different moral steps towards the crown of glory that is held by the hand of God. Different temptations of the world below, cause some to fall off the ladder, thus they had "fallen" into sin, & lost the reward that awaits those endure to the end. The dragon is depicted at the base of the ladder. We might note here some of the post-war in heaven activities & dualistic battles in the air between the forces of good & evil.¹⁰⁹²

In some of these later Christian art works that depicted Rev. 12, & during the war in heaven drama, rites of passage hand clasps take place between an angel who descends from heaven to rescue the child. The angel in turn passes the child into the hands of the Father, in some cases, only the hands are seen extending to pull the child into heaven, away from the dragon. Thus, her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne, Rev.12:5.¹⁰⁹³

About 1120, or shortly before: An illustrated Apocalypse for the encyclopedia called Liber floridus, compiled by Lambert, canon at St Omer, It was torn out of the original manuscript, which is preserved at Ghent, at least part of it survives in a very early German copy, now kept at the Library of Wolfenbützel. The Ghent codex contains a number of kindred motifs, such as the Heavenly City, etc. The Woman clothed in the maphorion, set against a piece of red lace representing the sun, 12 stars fill her nimbus. Sitting with the swaddled clothed Child on her lap, she recalls the oldest statues of the Majestas Virginis, and also the Trier Woman. The Dragon, the usual Antique hydra, has horns sticking out of a low diadem. There is even the large head of the Earth, Tellus, swallowing the water vomited by the Dragon, just like in the Trier miniature. John contemplating the Woman and the Dragon, whose tail gathers a third of the stars, while the Child carried away to the heavenly Temple.¹⁰⁹⁴

Later Legendized Pre-existence Themes

By the 12th century, the devil became the figure for parody, satire, & even broad humor. In the theater the comic devil was based on the influence that folklore & the folk performances of mimes, jugglers, and maskers had brought to the theaters. The comic demons were depicted on stage as being crude & rude in their actions. In some cases, those who played the part of the demons in Medieval plays would run about the stage leaping, farting, shouting oaths & insults, making obscene gestures, and executing pratfalls.¹⁰⁹⁵

The Devil in Passion plays, in some cases, he played the role of a joker, & plays like these became part of the lore for pre-existence themes, especially that of the post-war in heaven, & post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, the Devil & devils. In other Mediaeval mysteries, God the Father, God the Son, & Satan appear on the stage. Art works of these plays show the legendizing process at work, showing Satan as a horned monstrous winged creature. "He was the intriguer who, after his successful revolution against the Lord, set up an empire of his own in Hell; and without the Devil's intrigues the whole plot of man's fall and Christ's salvation would be impossible."¹⁰⁹⁶

11th — 17th century, another area of studies in post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angel-demons, & the Devil-Satan-Lucifer's activities of their wandering the earth, & down in the underworld, & inhabiting their many haunts, are the blends with different cultures' demonology lore, legends & superstitious customs. Their mischievous, devilish activities, continual temptations, & influences on the human family, as part of pre-existence themes turned to fables. This caused further legendizations in those blends into more retrogression of the earlier Christian doctrines into more fables throughout historic Christendom.¹⁰⁹⁷

1135—1140, on Bronze doors, are a number of scenes, one of which, in the lower right hand portion, is Michael the arch angel combating the devil.¹⁰⁹⁸

During the 1140s the Cathar heretics, whose deep roots were in Gnosticism, entered the West & spread from northern Italy into southern France, Aragon, and Rhineland, and the low countries. The views varied from group to group, some of them believed that the Devil was a principle completely independent of God. Some of them believed that Lucifer was a son of God, a brother of Christ. Others' views were that Lucifer was the son of the abstract evil principle. What ever the origin of the Devil was, this varied, what the Carthars did agree on was that the Devil was the prince of this material world, its maker and its ruler. All agreed that the true God created only spirit.¹⁰⁹⁹

1140, English work shows a horned devil about to claw at the Virgin & her baby. The devil's foul breath spews forth towards them, while an angel of God extends down to rescue the child to the safety of the heavenly realms, by clasping the wrists of the child. Another portion of this art work shows Christ defending the city of God against the devil.¹¹⁰⁰

A similar depiction shows the dragon confronting a woman. Under her right foot is a crescent moon symbol. An angel descends out of the heaven to clasp a hold of the child, as in the other English version, and is about to ascend back into heaven. SAINT SAVIN (Vienne, France), the Church of St. Savin, 11th century is decorated with famous frescoes, which date from the 12th century. The work is located in the porch, with scenes from the Apocalypse.¹¹⁰¹

Mid 12th century textile— St. Michael is depicted as being armed with a shield in the act of thrusting a spear into the jaws of the dragon.¹¹⁰²

Another depiction of Rev. 12: The angels of God fight with the dragon,¹¹⁰³ as the Christ child is passed on from the hands an angel, into the hands of the Father. The angels stab the dragon with spears, which have pierced different parts of the dragon. Extending from the neck of the dragon is a number of heads.¹¹⁰⁴

In some cases, in earlier centuries & in Jewish customs, houses were blessed by putting them under the protection of angels of God, who are to ward off the demons. Even today, in Jewish night prayers, the four guardian angels: Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael, are invoked to guard those who are sleeping. In another case, on the ornaments of doors, one sees below the dragon likewise a lion. A song against demons is derived from Psalm 91:13: "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet." In other cases, on a sarcophagal relief, Christ's feet are on a lion and a dragon, according to Psalms 91:13. The after-effect of early Jewish opinion is to be perceived herein, with this Christian version.¹¹⁰⁵

1150, Peter Lombard, in Sentences, opposing preexistence, felt the need to represent creationism (the view that souls are created fresh & new from the hands of God, & individually for each person who is born), as the official dogma of the church.¹¹⁰⁶

Later, during the middle of the 12th century, some art works reflect the preservation of these customs, which also have fragments of some of the elements to the pre-existence story, the element that concerns the war in heaven. Christ treading on the Beasts under his feet, while St. Michael as a Knight armed with a shield & lance-rod, is trampling on Satan. These English works date to the middle of the 12th century A.D.¹¹⁰⁷

Among other events, the war in heaven is depicted again on tapestry that is said to date back to the mid-12th century A.D. Michael, armed with a spear & shield, battles with the dragon. Traditionally said to have been woven by the abbess Agnes in the convent of Quedlimburg, Halberstadt Cathedral.¹¹⁰⁸

In another work, the Woman clothed with the sun (over-leaf), the moon under her feet. She represents the Church of all ages; the Child, the Messiah, is being carried off to the Throne; the Dragon is killing the saints (on the blade of his sword are the letters O N, probably 'Nero'); the Woman has already received wings. Bottom right: the Dragon vomits water against the woman. The dragon's tail sweeps a third of the stars from the sky, symbolizing the Fall of the angels. A seventeenth-century copy of a miniature in the Hortus deliciarum of Herrad, abbess of Landsberg, second half of the twelfth century; the manuscript was burned during the bombardment of Strasbourg in 1870 A.D.¹¹⁰⁹

By the Mid 12th century, though church councils, early to later, plus, Justinian's (6th century) edicts against preexistence, & the suppression of paganism and the Platonic academy, attempted to suppress the doctrine centuries earlier. Despite all these, fragments of it continued to be passed down to later generations of Christian poets, artists, & Knight Orders that honored St. Michael, (for war in heaven battles with the devil & fallen angels). During this time: "It was in these years more common, however, for preexistence to appear as poetic trope or mystical imagery than as rationally defended theology. One vehicle for this survival is the Cosmographia; or, De Mundi Universitate Libri Dou sive Megacosmos et Microcosmos of Bernard Silvester..." Mid 12th c. Fragments of possible preexistence themes turned into myth were woven into a mythical creation drama, with stabilized material form to be united with the world soul, which emanates from the heavens. The human soul is likened unto being on a journey, & thus learns the sights & travails it will encounter on its journey into and time spent in mortality, as presented by pre-mortal educator, the goddess Urania, that is also to look after the soul's descent to earth is for educational purposes. Plus, to acquaint the soul with its celestial origin. Perhaps the pre-mortal education going on, includes Urania's descriptions of what to expect when going through different travails of life. If so, this has caused some souls to not look forwards toward further education in mortal bodies, because there is the scene in heaven of "countless souls weeping because they soon will have to descend from that splendor into these glooms."¹¹¹⁰

Similar imagery is found in Liber Scivias, by contemporary mystic, Bernard, Hildegard von Bingen, (1098–1179). It presents remarkable illustrations on preexistence and incarnation. Showing souls coming down into the womb from the preexistence. This is represented as a squarish object that hovers in the heavens, as "Supernal Creator," flaming & with many eyes, & from this a repository of globes, representing human souls or spirits. From where the souls are, a funnel channels a spirit or soul down into the womb of a woman below, as depicted as a child in her womb, with the funnel connected to the top of the infant's head. The newly born soul in a body is said to lament about finding itself marooned in a prison or "tabernacle" of corruption, & claims to be of noble heritage. Other globes, or preexisting spirits lament, for in this case, as if Gnostic influences on these preexistence themes influenced this version of preexistence, then the other spirits must not be too happy to also be "imprisoned," in a mortal body too. But a globe (spirit), that has broken away free of its bonds is led away by certain spirits, perhaps in overcoming the devil's wiles through faith in Christ, is then brought back by Him to gain the joys of celestial inheritance.¹¹¹¹ The preexistence theme of the return to glory?

1159, Michael & his angels fight with the demonic forces of the dragon. The angelic forces of heaven are each armed with different weapons, shields, swords, & spears. The demonic forces of darkness, are also armed with different weapons, clubs, bows & arrows, & a spear. Michael thrusts a spear, & the point of his shield, into the jaws of the dragon under his feet.¹¹¹²

Issac of Stella links the parenthood of God with even harsher rejection of earthly family: "For myself I declare that I am a stranger and pilgrim here below....I am not a son of man but a son of God hidden under the appearance and resemblance of man; henceforth I am not the son of my father and mother, nor the brother of my brother, even if they say, affirm and swear falsely that I am theirs.... Indeed we are all orphans; we have no father on earth for our father is in heaven and our mother is a virgin. It is from there that we have our origins."¹¹¹³

Before 1167, the Latin Cathars were supposedly influenced by Byzantine, & they allegedly held to Bogomil or Bulgar doctrine, that claimed that Lucifer, cast out of heaven by God, founded evil. God created man's soul but matter was the invention of Satan, God's older son, who in seducing Eve, lost his creative power. The Bogomils taught that God had two sons, the elder Satanail and the younger Michael. The elder son rebelled against the father and became the evil spirit. After his fall, he created the lower heavens and the Earth and tried in vain to create man. These versions of pre-existence themes were said to be influenced by a Christian neo-Gnostic or dualist sect that was founded in the First Bulgarian Empire, by the priest Bogomil during the reign of Tsar Peter I in the 10th century. Thus, the Latin Cathars, like Niketas, a Cathar Bishop of Constantinople, visiting the Lombard churches, is said to have assembled a council at St Felix de Carman near Toulouse. Ordaining bishops, as he went about, he persuaded the Cathar clergy to adopt his dualism whereby Lucifer was regarded as the creator of the material world and co-eternal with God.¹¹¹⁴

During the 12th century on into the 13th century, a group of later Christians in the city of Albi, France became decreed as heretical for their Gnostic type teachings that were different from the Catholics in the Roman church at that time. They became known as the Albigenses, or Albigensians, named after the city where it was believed the "heresy" centered from, but they were also known as the Cathars. Some of their legendized pre-existence themes reflects Gnostic blends & anti-material concepts, how that procreation merely entrapped more divine sparks in the material world. One of their religious texts, from Bogomils, was The Ascension of Isaiah, a Gnostic work from about the first & second centuries. They also used another text, the Interrogatio Johannis or The Questions of John, also known as The Secret Supper, another Bogomil work. Both works have faded pre-existence themes in talking about descents from different levels of heaven, down into the material world, but with old Gnostic type taints in the stories. The Secret Supper, was brought to Italy in the late 12th century, & the Italian Cathars used it as one of their religious texts. In it are the supposed questions that John is said to have asked Christ during a heavenly Last Supper. Questions about the origins of the world, the cause of evil, Gnostic tainted pre-existence themes about "...the rebellion of Satan, and the process of human salvation. According to this work, Satan created the world; after his rebellion against God the Father, he could find no peace in heaven, so out of pity God gave him seven days to create what he would. What follows is a version of the Genesis creation story with Satan as creator; he commands a fallen angel of the second heaven to enter a body and animate Adam and an angel of the first (lowest) heaven to animate Eve's body. Directed by the devil, the first couple "were affected by a lust for debauchery, together begetting children of the devil and of the serpent, until the consummation of the world." In other words, physical creation is the result of Satan's rebellion."¹¹¹⁵ So these later somewhat legendized pre-existence creation themes go, again tainted with Gnostic versions.

13TH CENTURY A.D.: "In the early thirteenth century Boncompagno of Signa said that the old saw 'there's nothing new under the sun' was true only in a limited sense. God, after all, daily creates new souls, putting them into new bodies, and, working with primordial matter, a common artisan shapes it into new forms at will. Indeed, the Incarnation's renovation of grace proves that man, God's creation, sees things with new eyes, whence the apostle Paul 'ordered him who came first to be silent when something has been revealed to him who comes after'."¹¹¹⁶

1211, pre-existence themes, as by way of post-fall from heaven devilish activities of the demons fallen from heaven to earth, were taking on lore & fable aspects. Gervasius Tilberiensis composed a collection of stupid fables, Otia Imperialia, spook stories of Apuleius, supposed happenings in England & France. Thus, demons were said to influence nightmares, & this was according to St. Augustine. While Cæsarius Heisterbach (died 1245), in Dialogus Miraculorum, thunder-storms, hail-storms, inundations, diseases, unexpected noises, rustling of leaves, howling wind, were attributed to Old Nick, (the Devil). He appears as a bear, monkey, toad, raven, vulture, gentleman, soldier, hunter, peasant, dragon, & negro.¹¹¹⁷ (Which may be why in later centuries, black men were suspected of being the Devil, & even played the part of the Devil, dress in black, like in the movie about blues music lore, of Robert Johnson & Willy Brown going to the cross roads to make a pact with the devil, in Cross Road).¹¹¹⁸ In more lore, a Devil is said to have gone to confession & after hearing a long list of sins done, he also admits that he was "...much older than a thousand years, for he was on the demons who fell with Lucifer." One of the negative traits for the Devil was believed to be self-conceit.¹¹¹⁹

The Catholics responded to dualism in the 4th Lateran Council of A.D. 1215. The Cathars' views were considered a threat to Christendom. The bishops of this council declared that the true & good God had created all things from nothing. The Devil and the other demons were created good in nature but made themselves evil by their own free will.¹¹²⁰

1220, the Dragon vomiting water against the Woman who is already winged and carries the Christ-child, who is crossed-nimbused, away.¹¹²¹

During the 13th century, many of the basic elements to Rev. 12, are depicted in art. Mary stands as if an orant, the traditional prayer gesture, up-lifted hands. At her feet is the moon symbol. The Christ-child is being received by the hands of God extend down out of heaven, & this one shows the point in time which was right before the hand clasping. Mary is the one who is passing on her Son into the hands of God. Other art works show an angel involved the chain of events, in that an angel passes on the Child into the hands of God. In this particular case, however, no angel is seen as mentioned. Below this, the archangel

Michael is seen armed with a weapon and shield. Michael strikes out against the dragon by thrusting the point of his weapon into the dragon's mouth. On the right side of the page, the dragon is again seen with 7 horned-heads. The dragon has stars at its feet, & has curled its tail around some of the stars of heaven.¹¹²²

13th century work of Archangel Michael from the cathedral in Bamberg, has Michael's sword lifted up in his right hand as if he is about to strike, in his left hand he thrusts his spear-cross into the mouth of the dragon under his feet.¹¹²³

In the choir of the Monreale Cathedral, the fall of the angels is depicted. The Fall had also been relegated to the first day when light and the darkness were divided. Perhaps the pre-existence type & theme is in how the angels of darkness were divided away from the angel of light. In the illuminations of a 13th century Bible in Paris, in one picture, God is dividing the light from the darkness, and in the adjoining division, which contains this said type, the angels are falling. Beneath the first are the words: "And God saw that the light was good, and divided the light from the darkness, and called the light Day, and the darkness Night." Beneath the second is written: "The division of the light from the darkness means the division of the good angels from the bad, and signifies the division of the virtues & vices."¹¹²⁴

One reason for mankind's ascension into heaven after death was to fill the vacancies caused by the fall of the angels. This was one of the reasons why the Devil & the demons hate the human family, & seek even harder to successfully tempt us to sin. St. Bonaventura, 13th century, learn that as a further counter-move our Lord was urged on to redeem mankind, who, they declared, only replenished the cave of Tartarus, and not the vacancies in heaven as originally intended. Tartarus, as here mentioned, is synonymous with Hades.¹¹²⁵

11th-12 c., a manual for parish clergy, makes reference to pre-existence theme of fallen angels, how: "Nobody should presume to investigate why God wished to create men who He knew would fall or why He wished to create angels whose fall He certainly foreknew... These works of God & others are beyond human understanding."¹¹²⁶

In a French MS. Bible History of the 13th century, lucifer attempts & dared- with calm self-conceit- to sit on a throne. In another 13th century illustration of the fall of Lucifer in the Breviary of St. Louis, a French or Spanish work, that may have been strongly influenced by Byzantine design. The idea of the demonification of angels during their fall, is also depicted. For Satan and his adherents are falling, gradually getting blacker as they descend, and changing to hideous demons. Hands and feet are turned to paws, nails to claws, noses to beaks, until their former appearance is unrecognizable as they reach the flames spewing from the jaws of Hell.¹¹²⁷ Here we see another example of color symbolism blended with the legendization of pre-existence themes, as the color black was associated with what happens to fallen souls, who sinned during the pre-existence, how that they were changed & darkened, during their fall. Such blends of beliefs & legendized pre-existence doctrines, turning to fables, were later illustrated in art, legends, & dark costumes designs in biblical themes of mystery plays, that dramatized the war in heaven, the fall of Lucifer, & dark clothed monstrous looking actors playing the parts of demons. Such color symbolism, literalized in racial thinking of many during the Middle Ages, would also become some of the influences in how different ones looked upon darker skins of the human-races, in later centuries.¹¹²⁸

1241-50, a work thus composed, told of the counter arguments that the Lombard Cathars presented against Catholic teachings on predestination, & thus a different version of pre-existence themes, how that "...Lucifer and the fallen angels could not have been good before they fell from heaven, because, if they had been, 'from the very beginning, God [had] knowingly created his angels of such imperfection that they were unable to resist evil. Hence God, who is good, holy, just, wise and fair ... is the cause and beginning of evil, an opinion which must be wholly rejected. Hence one must believe that there are two first principles, one good and the other evil, the latter being the cause of angelic imperfection and likewise of all evil."¹¹²⁹ Orthodox Christians & others pointed out that this version deprived humanity of 'free will,' & individual responsibilities for ones choices.

1225–74, St. Thomas Aquinas, "invoked the preexistence rationales of both Origen and Augustine in order to refute them and to declare the truth of creationism."¹¹³⁰ But then, there were other preexistence themes that Thomas inherited from earlier generations of Christendom that he offered opinions on too. Thus, as time aged Christendom, different views about when different pre-existence themes happened, became controversies. Some of these were the position that Satan held before his fall from heaven, plus, when the fall from heaven took place, & what caused Satan to fall. Thomas agreed with others that Satan held one of the highest position above all angels, (Summa, I, 63, 7). Other early Christian fathers differed as to the fall being before the creation of the earth, after the creation, before the creation of Adam & Eve, or after their creation, when God commanded the angels to respect Adam & Eve. Satan, being higher in rank & out of pride, refused to show respect & honor to Adam & Eve, because he thought himself better than they, & thus fell out of pride, while others attribute the fall to other reasons.¹¹³¹ Thomas also presents post-fall from heaven pre-existence themes, as to what happened to Satan, & the demons. By these later centuries, pre-existence themes were becoming lore & fables, for Thomas has the Devil as a large animal, a Behemoth (elephant?), devil, in his commentary on Job chapter 40. Thirteenth century post-fall from heaven themes & theories have the Devil, or Satan going around as the incubi, or the succubi, & descriptions of their indecency is based on the authority of Thomas, who claims that they were having sex & producing vicious & cunning demoniacal influenced children. The succubus–female-devil, has sex with men, while the incubus-male-devil, with women.¹¹³² Reminding us of the movie, Rosemary's Baby, where a Coven that worship Satan, perform satanic rituals, so that Satan can give birth to the son of Satan. Thus, in these later centuries, such things became the pre-existence themes, & post-fall from heaven activities as to what the fallen angels, & Satan, were doing, to continue the war in heaven, (continued after their fall), against God & humanity, on the earth. In later fables, they became the underground, or under-hill people, male & female dwarf types, trolls, fairies, & under-ground folk, or under-hill people, some of them wed, have their own children, & like the dwarfs, mine for precious stones, & gold.¹¹³³

1221–1274, Saint Bonaventura, "described demons as a great swarm of flies; they were said to be so numerous that if a needle were dropped from above, it would surely strike one."¹¹³⁴ Thus, as pre-existence themes continued to become more legendized, the fallen angels were believed to also inhabit the air, as well as all over the different places of the earth, & under the earth.

Early Gothic art in France preserved many basic items of interest for pre-existence themes, for example: On 2 bishops' crosiers, we see what just might be Michael the arch-angel's battle with the dragon. The story has been legendized too, in some cases, for one crosier shows a winged angel with a weapon of some kind, the head & body of the dragon makes part of the curled top portion of the crosier, which curls around the angel. The angel is thrusting the end of his weapon into the body of the dragon that he stands on. The head of the dragon looks back, & seems to be depicted in the last moments of its life, as attempting to bite at the hand of the angel who has defeated it.

The other crosier shows the same sort of thing, except that while the angel is busy fighting with a type of lizard-beast, while resting his foot on it, a symbol of victory. The angel thrusts a weapon into, but curled around the angel is what seems to be another dragon, whose long neck has curled around to where the head of the dragon attacks from behind, & bites at the tip of the angel's wings.¹¹³⁵

1250, a depiction of Rev.12, shows the point in the event where the woman has turned away from the dragon to pass her child into the hands of an angel that extends down out of heaven to clasp the hand of the child. The child reaches towards the angel and they clasp each others' hands. Up in the top right portion of this particular work, we see the feet of the child extending down, & it is as if the artist wanted to depict the point in which the Child was almost into the next realm, but not all the way yet.¹¹³⁶

In the carvings of the south-west doorway, the inner side of the same portal, and the lower parts of the south-west buttress at the cathedral at Reims, it shows different scenes that depicted the apocalypse and dates back to about 1250 A.D. The Woman holding her Child and shrinking back from the Dragon, below is the Lord and the Church, Marriage of the Lamb. Two groups at the top of the arches framing the south-west inner door-way of Reims Cathedral, first part of the thirteenth century, is depicting the war in heaven, with Michael fighting the rebel angels. This seems to have always been a favorite subject that kept alive certain pre-existence themes. Another depiction shows, the Woman threatened by the Dragon; her Child carried away to the Throne by an angel. The bottom portion shows the Woman safely in the wilderness.¹¹³⁷

Mid-13th century, St. Michael the Archangel, among whose feats was the conquest of Lucifer, shown in the middle scene on the left.¹¹³⁸

1270, Abbot Richalmus, wrote about the post-fall from heaven activities of the devil & demons, & adds to the superstitious beliefs of the times. Thus, about every little inconvenience had something to do with these devils & their doings. Devils make him feel qualms, when he eats to much. Make him fall asleep over his breviary, which is a book containing the service for each day, recited by those in orders in the Roman Catholic Church. They make his hand feel chilly, when he exposes it, when he hides his hand under his cloak, they tickle, & bites his hand, like fleas. When working, they try to get them to rebel against doing such tiresome work by talking out loud, & there is no noise but that some devil speaks out of it. Rustling of his sleeve is sound from a devil, which the devil speaks through. Scratching himself, the sound made, is their voice. Lowly people are mostly seduced by anger & sadness, while rich & powerful by arrogance & pride.¹¹⁴⁰ All these types of things were, all in the devils' daily or nightly devilish works, & their post-fall from heaven activities, but of course in superstitious paranoia forms, during these later times, when pre-existence themes were becoming fables, more & more. For, such things became the basis for more retrogressions into further superstitious fables & later devil-lore.¹¹⁴¹

1250–1285, Other works of Rev. 12, the Dragon, or the devil, seeks to destroy Mary, & her baby the Christ child. But this would not happen, for a guardian angel is there to receive the Christ child, who then in turn passes on the child into the hands of the Father. At which point the traditional hand clasping "rites of passage" takes place. For the Christ child is depicted as clasping the hands of the God the Father, just before he enters into that heavenly realm where the Father is.¹¹⁴²

Another shows three angels, one of which is the mighty archangel Michael, are depicted in the act of doing battle with a 7-headed hydra type dragon. Two of the angels are armed with shields, one holds a spear, the other a sword. Michael, in this case, does not have a shield, but rather is armed with a spear which he thrusts into one of the heads of the dragon. This particular head's jaws, has closed down upon the tip of Michael's robe. One of the angels attacks the tail-head, with a spear, while the other angel is about to strike at the other heads with a sword.¹¹⁴³

A different one has the woman passing her child into the hands of an angel who in turn passes on the child into the hands of God. As with other depictions of this kind, rites of passage hand-clasps are seen again, in that the child & the Father clasp hands before the child's entrance into heaven. The dragon is also seen confronting the woman. Its tail curls around a number of stars. More art works show 3 angels fighting with the dragon.¹¹⁴⁴

Another depiction shows an angel in the act of clasping the hands of the child in order to take him into heaven. The dragon is there to confront them, but the child is carried away into heaven, as suggested by another portion that shows the legs of one who is depicted in the act of passing from one realm into the next. Thus, the artist has depicted that point in the event that shows the point where one is in-between the two realms of existences. In that their first half had just entered into the heavenly realm, while their other half has not yet, but is about to.¹¹⁴⁵

Circa 1260, the dragon curls in its tail some of the stars (spirits), of heaven. The dragon also confronts the woman & her child. In this case, the arm of God, rather than just a hand or hands, is receiving the child into the heavenly mansions, or city, perhaps even the heavenly temple. For the arm of God reaches out from the building, near its entrance way, & clasps the wrists of the Christ child.¹¹⁴⁶

1275, at Toulouse, the Inquisitor Hugo de Beniols, had a number of prominent people burned alive: Angèle, Lady of Labarthe, 65 years, accused of having sex with Satan, alleged to then have born a monster with a wolf's head & a serpent's tail, who feasted on babies. Again, more pre-existence themes, that of post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven alleged devilish activities of Satan on earth. But in reality, Satan's work--the Inquisition, being done in the name of God & Christ, by a wicked & corrupt thought policing justice system that mixed in superstitious alleged claims of what Satan was said to be going around doing, during these obviously spiritual-dark nights of the apostasy.¹¹⁴⁷

In early to later Christian rituals of marriage, couples are joined together, in many cases by hand or wrist grips of one sort or another. This has been blended with pre-existence themes, in how that the "body of Christ" are symbolically brought together to make a type of the reunion with the pre-existing Church with Christ's church in the earthly realm. This reunion is a "mystery" or ordinance, in which the ascension into heaven "rites of passage" hand clasps, & the grips in early Christian marriages, seem to symbolically bring the family members of the two realms together for a family reunion. A sort of reunion of the pre-existing saints with those of the faithful saints who would return back to that heavenly home after their pilgrimages on the earth.¹¹⁴⁸

"I do not suppose that ye are ignorant that the living Church is the Body of Christ, for Scripture sayeth: God made man male and female. The male is Christ, and the female is the Church. And the Book and the Apostles plainly state that the Church existeth not now for the first time, but cometh from on high" (2 Clement 14:1-2).¹¹⁴⁹ On earth the Church was where the gospel could also be preached, and as the gospel was preached in the earthly church, so also had the gospel been preached in the pre-existing church. The writer of the Shepherd of Hermas symbolically calls the pre-existing Church "an old woman." "Old", because of how the Church dates back before the world was created. For "she" the Church was created first of all. Different symbolical colors in garments, are part of pre-existence themes, in ritualistic settings too. Hermas presents the color symbolism to suggest the degree of sins, or the degree of righteousness of those who are clothed in different colors of garments, from white on down through the shades to black.¹¹⁵⁰ The ritualistic hand & wrist clasps, & garments of the early Christian mysteries were considered by some to be types of the ascension of the righteous into heaven. In ascensions, their naked souls are often depicted in art as riding up on, or being clothed in white robes, blankets, swaddling cloths of different sizes, when returning to the heavenly realms. The pre-existence themes of returning to God, (who gave the soul), are also part of the family reunion or reuniting themes of couples. Dead couples reunited in the after life realms, are often symbolized by hand & wrist clasps, as seen on thousands of stone grave markers all over historic Christendom's cemeteries. Plus, symbolized by garments in ascensions into heaven, & in weddings ceremonies, all part of the types of the reuniting of the pre-existing heavenly family thus joined with the earthly family.¹¹⁵¹

As time went by, these pre-existence themes & symbols became more & more blurred & almost forgotten, especially as different aspects of the pre-existence became rejected, forgotten, & legendized away in different areas of historic Christendom. The color symbolism of wearing white robes, eventually got passed down in the traditions about Whitesunday, or Whitsuntide. While the wearing of black robes, or black clothing became popular during the late 1970s into the present decades, amongst followers of Heavy Metal Rock music, & followers of Satan, in Satanism, & black magic, with their Black Sabbaths & other occult lore.¹¹⁵²

Christ seems to also hint to symbolical type in a parable about those who were cast out into outer darkness, who were not clothed in a proper wedding garment (Matthew 22:2, 11-13, perhaps the garment was symbolic of righteousness, Rev.19:7-9). In pre-existence themes, illustrated in many art works, the fallen angels are stripped of their heavenly robes, clothing being symbolic of their former righteous ranks as once good angels of God. But in rebelling, having made war against God & the other faithful angels, they fell naked & started changing & then end up with black robes on, in some cases, or retrogress through the symbolical colors to black monstrous looking appearances. In pre-existence themes' ritualistic types, the ascension robes, often white in color, are like the white ritualistic baptismal robes that naked catechumens are clothed in, upon ascending up out of baptismal fonts. Later, such as in the Catholic churches, babies were sprinkled-baptized & given a white bib, as a reminder of the earlier white baptismal robes. The earlier Christian types were in how they'd thus had put off, like old clothing, the old person of sin, having been cleansed to the innocents of a new person in Christ. The naked are clothed upon, as a type of returning to their former bright pre-existence innocents, & having been resurrected to return to glory. For unlike the demons that are clothed in darkness, those thus washed, anointed, & clothed upon, are like those who return back to the heavenly realm from which they came from. Thus, pre-existence themes were still being blended with the ritualistic types & color symbolism even down through the middle ages.¹¹⁵³

Another 13th century depiction of Michael the Archangel shows him trusting a spear into the jaws of the dragon, as he tramples it under his feet. Michael is as if a heavenly angelic Knight, armed with a shield.¹¹⁵⁴

Gertrude of Helfta, late 13th century, his writings are said to contain "...no reference to a cosmic war between good and evil, and little sense of an ontological rift in the universe created by the fall and knit up in some way by the resurrection."¹¹⁵⁵ Did this 13th century writer reject the war in heaven drama?

Mechtild of Magdeburg, circa 1207– 1297, "...She writes that Christ was the Son (i.e., ours) from the beginning but was given to us only in Gabriel's mission; he became one nature with Adam before Adam soiled himself through sin. Therefore, she says, what broke Adam was not of God; God preserved Adam's noble nature; we can still return to God. Lucifer had only one nature; once fallen, he could not return. But God draws us back to him, joins with us; "the divine nature now has bone, flesh, body and soul"; our soul like a humble housewife... sits with Christ in heaven." Mechtild is said to be suggesting here that we have two natures, a sinful and sinless one. That this sinless humanity resided in Mary between Adam's fall and the Incarnation, almost as if Mary were a preexistent humanity of Christ as the Logos is a preexistent divinity. She writes that God made the soul because he did not want to remain alone; the soul commingles in the Trinity, soaring high over all creatures and yet remaining itself. But then, she uses weddings as a type, for God was angry when Adam fell; in order to have something to love he chose the Virgin as a bride when his bride the soul (i.e., Adam) died.¹¹⁵⁶ What fragments of pre-existence themes might be preserved in her writings, & then interpreted in her own ways, could suggest further legendization of the doctrine, by this later century, for by this time a number of rather different views & interpretations have been blended in.

Pietro di Pucci (13th cent. ?), in a mural from Campo Santo in Pisa, there are diagrams showing the faith that in the Cosmic Christ, "the first-born of all creation," (Col.1:16), Christ pre-existed as the creator. It is also interesting to note that among the numerous circles of angels depicted, it includes a circle of praying angels.¹¹⁵⁷

14TH CENTURY A.D.: A needle-art-work, made shortly after 1300, shows, among other things, Michael the Arch-angel, with the dragon under his feet, thrusting a lance into its mouth.¹¹⁵⁸

An art work that might have retained fragments of the ideas of the souls descent from heaven to earth is seen in the creation drama of Filippo Rusuti, 1255–1325, Italian painter. Christ is seen in a circle which has faces around & in it. He stretches forth his hand as if to bless the creation scenes down below. A naked man (Adam?) seems to be on an otherworld pilgrimage from heaven to earth, for he is depicted in a mandorla, () a symbol that Christ is often depicted in as He makes otherworld or other-realm journeys. Thus, it may be that Adam is being depicted here as if descending from his heavenly home to earth after the different animals had already been created.¹¹⁵⁹

Dante Alighieri is said to have been born in Florence in 1265 A.D. & died in Ravenna in 1321 A.D. During the early years of the 14th century A.D., he wrote a legendized account of the different realms of existence, entitled: The Divine Comedy. In this work is a legendized hint to the fallen angels. The Entrance to the City of Dis: the fallen angels. Above the gates I saw more than a 1000 spirits, rained from the Heavens, who angrily exclaimed: "Who is that, who, without death, goes through the kingdom of the dead?" A note explains that above the gates was the .Heavens, at the time that Satan fell from Heaven.¹¹⁶⁰ An early 14th century depiction of Rev.12, shows a 7-headed dragon confronting a woman who is in the act of passing on her child into the hands of an angel which extends down out of heaven to clasp the elbows of the child.¹¹⁶¹ Thus, a different version of this popular theme.

An early 14th century depiction of the war in heaven shows Michael in the midst of his battle with the dragon. Michael is armed with a shield like unto the ones that Knights of that time must have used. Michael is in the act of thrusting a javelin or spear into the dragon's jaws. He also is in the act of trampling the dragon under his feet.¹¹⁶²

Giotto is said to have painted in Florence some frescoes which were finished in 1335 A.D. They were whitewashed in 1714, and later rediscovered and badly repainted in 1852, & then have recently been very carefully cleaned by Luigi Tintori. One of Giotto's works shows the dragon confronting the woman. "In the vision of the Woman, one immediately recognizes the familiar figure of the Virgin as she appears in the scenes of the Childhood of Christ, in the Scrovegni Chapel at Padua. Bare-headed, dressed as a simple housewife, she lies in childbed, and lifts up a hand, in astonishment at the appearance of the snorting Dragon..."¹¹⁶³

14th century in the Norwich Cathedral, art of the war in heaven.¹¹⁶⁴

14th c., THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH. WALL - PAINTING ATTRIBUTED TO ORCAGNA,& in later traditions & art works, at the time of death, a war takes place over the newly departing souls. The demons of hell come to attempt to drag the soul down to hell. While the angelic beings of heaven come to do battle with the demons, in order to snatch the soul away from the demons. Or protect the newly departed spirits as they ascend out of the body at the point of death. Some art works depict, tug of wars over the souls. For an angel clasps the wrists or hands of the soul. While a demon grabs the soul by the legs to pull the soul down. Having broken free from the demons' grasps. The angels of God, then rise up towards the heavenly realms, upon breaking souls free from demons' grasps. Thus, according to these traditional ways of presenting the soul's departure during & when death comes. There is a sort of war in heaven that takes place between the good angels of light & love, & the demonic forces of darkness. Mortals are not aware of the battles that take place in the air over their heads, when death comes.¹¹⁶⁵

In another 14th century depiction, Michael the Archangel thrusts a spear into a demon who attempts to tip the scales during a soul's judgment. Large wings spread out from the back of Michael.¹¹⁶⁶

1340 A.D., Michael and the dragon in combat with each other. Fire comes out of the dragon's mouth while the angel thrusts a spear into its mouth. St. John is off to the lower left side watching this event.¹¹⁶⁷

An interesting return to life story is presented in the art work by Maso de Banco, who depicts the "Miracles of Saint Sylvester (c. 1330/41)." A fresco at the church of Santa Croce, Florence. Pope Sylvester, who reputedly converted the Roman emperor Constantine, is shown at the left muzzling a dragon with poison breath, a companion holds his nose in fear. On the right he revives two of the dragon's victims, who are shown rising from their own prostrate forms, resurrected by his miraculous powers.¹¹⁶⁸

This later art work therefore depicts this story, which perhaps has been legendized somewhat. The confrontation with the dragon takes place in a pit, which seems to be the entrance way between both realms,—the under world, & up above on the earth, the earthly realm of existence. This perhaps might be considered as being another example that shows some of the later Christians' beliefs as to the location of the fallen angels & the dragon, during post war in heaven times. That it was below the earth's ground. Thus, more legendized post war in heaven activities, battles, & confrontations with the forces of darkness continued to take place in the lower realms of existences, in the air, and on the earth, just as it had in heaven. (Job 1:6-12).

1340 painting: Dark colored demons with wings and horns fall to the earth, as angels of God thrust them out of heaven. In the heaven is what looks like a gathering of saints, as if at council in a heavenly church. God or Christ is seated on a throne looking down at this event. Other armed guardian angels stand near the edge of heavenly realm & the point where the other rebel angels were cast out of heaven.¹¹⁶⁹

In a 14th century depiction of the Apocalypse, a winged-woman ascends into heaven with arms stretched up, & hands clasp together in front of her. She escapes the 8-headed hydra type dragon, 7 heads, & a head on the tail. The dragon is distracted, or prevented from going after her because it fights against 5 men who are armed with different types of weapons, such as a cross-bow, a spear, a sword, shields, & ax.¹¹⁷⁰

A 14th century depiction of "Stonehenge" also shows what just might be Michael the arch-angel thrusting a spear into the mouth of a dragon.¹¹⁷¹

1340, the angel Michael thrusting a spear or rod into the mouth of the dragon.¹¹⁷²

1373, another art work on tapestry, Angers (Mainet-et-Loire), Castle, New Gallery: The Ark of the Covenant, an altar with a chalice, appearing in the heavenly Temple is St. John, watching the Woman, and the Child being carried away. The Dragon sweeps down the stars from heaven, as the child reaches up towards an angel who descends to clasp the right elbow of the child.¹¹⁷³

About 1375-1400 A.D., French tapestry: 7-headed dragon confronts a woman whose child is being snatched out of her arms by an angel coming down from heaven. Again, rites of passage grips are still being preserved in part, by this later traditional way of depicting Rev. 12. However, in this case the angel clasps a hold of the child's elbow & what seems to be his arm by the shoulder.¹¹⁷⁴

Mid 1380s, is based on an early 14th century Florentine type, depicting the war in heaven, a winged St. Michael Transfixing the Dragon, thrusts a spear into its jaws. Also armed with a shield, he stands on top of it.¹¹⁷⁵

The war in heaven was becoming a traditional story more and more by this time. And it seems that perhaps certain aspects & elements of the story could have been blended in, if not, then seen as being similar to the story of St. George's battle with the dragon. In a work that date some time between the late 14th century and early 15th century A.D., St. George is depicted as thrusting a spear into a salamander-like-dragon. The hand of God extends down from above, & gives what had become by that time, a common blessing gesture with the pointer & middle fingers extended, while the other fingers are curled in.¹¹⁷⁶

C. 1400, a golden brooch has on it a depiction of the angel Michael & has been attributed to Lubeck. Michael stands on top of the dragon while thrusting it with a weapon.¹¹⁷⁷

A Christian mosaic from Roman Britain was discovered in 1963 at the village of Hinton St. Mary in the northern Dorset. The design is said to have resembled that of the Frampton mosaic. The myth of the Bellerophon attacking the Chimaera is depicted, and perhaps this could be an allegorical representation of a heavenly warrior warring against evil. But also, this could be connected with the popular legend of St. George and the Dragon.¹¹⁷⁸

French stone sculptures of the fourteenth and fifteenth century, show the dragon, & in another case, Michael slaying the dragon. Another depicts Michael slaying the dragon, one is Italian, & another a German art-work.¹¹⁷⁹

By the time the Yorkshire B.M. miniature was composed, the famous cycles of mystery plays were well established. York, since the early fourteenth century, and the Towneley or Wakefield cycle, during the later fourteenth and early fifteenth centuries, dramatize & kept alive some pre-existence themes. The miniature includes classic mystery play scenes - such as, amongst other themes, the fall of Lucifer and the rebel angels at the point of the Archangel Michael's spear. The fallen angels are shown as funny yet frightening devils who gambol their way into Hellmouth. St. Michael's feathered costume stops short at ankles and wrists and the two angels raising souls to bliss appear to be wearing albs.¹¹⁸⁰

Pre-existence Themes Preserved, While Other Versions Further Legendized in Other Areas

15TH CENTURY A.D.: The matins hymn may hint to the pre-existing Christ, who made all things, held the whole world in his hand, even while in his mother's womb.¹¹⁸¹

In the monastery of St. John Lampadistis, Kalopanayiotis, a work dated back to "ca. 1500" shows the pre-existing Virgin Mary and Christ-child in the middle of the burning bush as part of the vision of Moses.¹¹⁸²

In 15th century French manuscripts of Saint Augustine's City of God, which may have influenced Berthold Furtmeyr, the Church is "planted in the heavenly Paradise and mystically pre-existent in Eden."¹¹⁸³

In the church of Manasiya, is a 15th century work of the Knightly armed and dressed Michael, with shield and sword.¹¹⁸⁴

St. MICHAEL Valencian, 15th Century A.D., using color symbolism, shows the dark skinned monstrous looking Lord of Darkness, & his demons, fall into the flames coming out of the jaws of hell. Michael, the archangel, together with his host of angels, battle it out in the air with the forces of darkness.¹¹⁸⁵

1500 c., English work, Michael stands on a dragon while thrusting his weapon into it.¹¹⁸⁶

In the Musée Calvet at Avignon, an unknown painter, from the 15th century, shows "SATAN THROWN OUT OF HEAVEN." Dressed as a Knight, Michael steps on the fallen monster-satan, thrusting a lance into him, and raising a sword up, as if about to strike.¹¹⁸⁷

In the Burgundian Library at Brussels is a Bible that contains a miniature from the 15th century A.D. In this, Lucifer is a crowned seraph, & he is gesticulating in the midst of grieving, astonished, and admiring angels, and holding a scroll inscribed "In coelum ascendum." The crown, symbolizing his high rank, is sometimes seen on the head of the serpent when tempting Eve. But also on his head during his fall from heaven, perhaps to symbolize how he became the Lord, or Prince of Darkness.¹¹⁸⁸

15th century art works often show Michael, the most active adversary of the Devil, seen frequently weighing the souls of the departed in the balance. Being thus judged, they are encountering their deeds done, with the devil often there to accuse them of what he & the demons caused them to do, when the departed souls gave into their temptations during each their own mortal life. An example of this is seen in a fresco in St. Agnes, Rome. In this particular case, Michael also thrusts a spear into the dragon at his feet.¹¹⁸⁹

1410 A.D., a 6-part depiction. "The Creation & Fall of the Angels." Later bible illustrations helped preserve some aspects of pre-existence themes, such as this Historiated Bible of Guiard Des Moulins. The other portions, depict the Godhead as 3 separate men with sad faces. All 3, sadly point to what is going on below in the 5th miniature, where Lucifer is rising from the circle of archangels. The archdemon wears a crown & his overbearing pride is proclaimed on a scroll that he holds in his hand: Ascedam in coelum = I will ascend into Heaven. Some of the angels turn away, terrified. Others who took Lucifer's side & rebelled with him, are thrown down into the jaws of hell, which swallow the rebels. Satan falls with other angels, whose bright colors have vanished in their fall. Their hands & feet have now changed into claws, thus the results of their fall was demonification.¹¹⁹⁰

1409-15 shows Michael fighting the Dragon in the air above Mont-St-Michel, the rock in the sea off the coast of Brittany. Miniature by the Limburg Brothers, in the Tres riches Heures of John, Duke of Berry. The text is in the Introit of the Mass in honor of the faithful Angels. Another one, that seems to be similar to Flemish works, shows the council in heaven. Also, John, on Patmos, contemplating the Vision of the Throne, with the Lamb, the four Beings and the twenty-four Elders. Frontispiece facing the beginning of the Gospel of St. John, in the Tres riches Heures of John, Duke of Berry, by the Limburg Brothers.¹¹⁹¹

15th century art, Michael thrusting a long lance into the mouth of the dragon under his feet.¹¹⁹²

1411-16 A.D., shows the council in heaven, with a number of angels seated near the throne of God. While some of these angels remain in their seats, a number of them have fallen out of their seats, and fall towards the earth. Those fallen angels who hit the earth seem to keep going down into the earth, perhaps hinting to how they had fallen down into the under world, (hell). A number of armed men with weapons stand in a circle to stab at the angels in their fall.¹¹⁹³ As noted earlier, one of the versions and aspects of the pre-existence that was believed in historic Christendom was this: "God created humans in order to make up for his lose of the fallen angels."¹¹⁹⁴ Hence the saved would fill the vacant seats that the fallen angels had left empty by their fall. Thus, the different ranks of the angels would be filled again.

1420 c., in the Little Paradise Garden, from the region of the Middle Rhine, amongst other things depicted in this art work, are a winged St. Michael converses with St. George, whose vanquished a salamander-like dragon that might remind us of Michael's battle with the dragon.¹¹⁹⁵

In some Morality Plays, the allegorical figures of the good and bad angels who appear in medieval plays hover above Marlowe's Faustus and fight for possession of his soul. The Castle of Perseverance, c. 1425, in an English Morality play, Humanum Genus or Mankind, as he first wages a continually fluctuating battle with evil forces, the representative for Mankind is eventually judged, standing before the Lord. As the play begins, Mankind ignores the counsel of his Good Angel and allows the Bad Angel to entice him into the service of the World.¹¹⁹⁶

1427, three angels armed with spears, & one with a shield, cast the dragon out of heaven.¹¹⁹⁷

Early 15th century work shows Michael, with his angelic forces, thrusting out the devil & his angels from heaven. The devil & his followers, all fall into the fire that shoots up from the jaws of hell.¹¹⁹⁸

Another early 15th century work depicts Christ's triumphant over Satan, & his fallen angels. While another shows Michael the archangel about to strike the dragon with a sword.¹¹⁹⁹

1421- 1440, derived from a painting of Jacobello del Fiore for the Ducal Palace in Venice, a copy now in the Accademia in Venice; St. Michael is weighing a soul in the scales and trampling on the devil.¹²⁰⁰

1450-75, manuscript probably made in a Carthusian monastery, in the language is Northern English, produced in such a house as Mount Grace in the North of Yorkshire. Some of the pre-existence themes depicted on a couple of pages show the creation drama to a certain extent. Included in this is the avenging angel at the gate of Eden, driving Adam and Eve from the Earthly Paradise after the Fall. On the off-set on the opposite page, St. Michael driving the fallen angels of Lucifer's rebellion from the gate of the Heavenly Paradise.¹²⁰¹

1430-35-1495, Hans Memline, painted a work of Michael the archangel, with a sword in his right hand, reminding us of his part in the war in heaven.¹²⁰² Hence, Michael the Archangel acts as a leader of the heavenly armies in their battle against the forces of hell (Rev. 12:7).¹²⁰³

Michele Giambono, active 1420-1462 A.D., did another depiction of St. Michael slaying the dragon.¹²⁰⁴

1453, at the start of the Renaissance age, pre-existence themes were still being depicted in art works & writings. Some versions were blended together from classical Greece & Neo-Platonic translations, Gnostic & Hermetic sources being rediscovered & translated. The humanist Marsilio Ficino, translated Hermetic & Platonic texts & saw a "resurgence of the idea of preexistence found in both sources."¹²⁰⁵

Jacques Le Grand, Le Livre des bonnes moeurs. Southern Netherlands, about 1455-1460 A.D, "The Punishment of the Rebellious Angels." In this art work the Divine Judge has His right hand raised up, while His left hand is held down. Some of the angels fall into the pit & hell fire. Satan's arrogant rebellion cost him his rank in the heavens, He & the other angels became devils when they were flung down from heaven.¹²⁰⁶

1461, the monstrous dark skin demons of the air scatter, when a divine hand-extend down out of heaven, with the divine light from heaven. Here, color symbolism is part of this art work, dark colors symbolic of evil.¹²⁰⁷

1470, under the heading "Casus Luciferi" is a description of a depiction that shows the fall of Lucifer and his angels from heaven down into the jaws of hell. "This is the Fall of Lucifer (the Lightbringer), chief of the rebellious angels. The battle in Heaven, with St. Michael leading the loyal forces against the future Devil (Satan) and demons, is alluded to in the Revelation of St. John the Divine, and has captured the imagination of many creative men. In literature its fullest elaboration is found in Milton's Paradise Lost. In art it has inspired innumerable works, including Durer's Apocalypse woodcuts."¹²⁰⁸

1480, a brotherhood devoted to St. Michael located in a Marchigian town had a work done for in the painting style of Lorenzo di Alessandro, with the influence of Carlo Crivelli. Michael stands on top of a dark colored devil. The point of his sword in his right hand is thrust down into the devil. Over Michael's left arm & shoulder is what could be part of Michael's own garment, or perhaps the garment of the devil, which, according to traditions & legends, Michael deprived the devil of his garment of glory while fighting with him in heaven.¹²⁰⁹

1480, bas-relief, for the Abbey of St. Michel en l'Herm, representing St. Michael on horseback, piercing a furious wild boar with his lance by the side of Louis de Rohault, bishop of Maillezaies. Pre-existence themes continued to blend with other dragon slaying lore, such as the legend concerning St. George's fight with the dragon.¹²¹⁰

Another depiction of Saint George and the Dragon was made by one Francia, (c. 1450-1517). During medieval & Renaissance times, the story of St. George slaying the dragon was a very popular subject amongst artists. Early versions of the story indicate that St. George was a Palestinian martyr of Constantine's time, 4th century. However, around the twelfth century the legendization of the stories had transformed him into a knight, the epitome of honor, slaying evil as symbolized by a dragon, and saving the virtuous princess who was about to be sacrificed to it. The blends of other legends of classical myth of Perseus and Andromeda, seems to have also influenced the transformations of the retelling of the legends with addition of all the chivalric attributes and ideals of medieval knighthood.¹²¹¹ During the legendization process, or as earlier doctrines & beliefs retrogressively turn to later fables, often times different elements to other similar stories are blended together. Or things are added, while other things might fade out. The legends concerning the slaying of the dragon have therefore been blended with other similar legends, so it would seem. For in some cases, Michael-Archangel's war in heaven, & post-war in heaven battles with the dragon, will sometimes still retain basic pre-existence theme & hints. While in other cases, such hints are not as clear as in other cases.

During these later centuries, further possible legendizations & fable-making of pre-existence themes are in concepts in Jewish & later Christian mysteries about angels, prophets & in some cases, souls passing through veils to enter into mortal bodies, or to be taught the scared secrets of God.¹²¹² But also, protective garment-veil lore seems to be included because of the pre-existence themes of the post-war, post-fall from heaven activities of the rebellious combative fallen angel-devils' doings on the surface of the earth.¹²¹³ In later lore & superstitions, cloths, curtains, veils & white strings were believed to hold protective powers to keep away demons, or hide a lovely bride behind a curtain, for: "Fear of jealous demons who might carry off a lovely bride led to the custom of disguising her identity—and hiding her face behind a curtain."¹²¹⁴ Could veil-traditions & ritualistic types of realm travelers, & the passing through curtains in the mysteries, been passed down to curtains around expensive beds? Such as those in the middle ages for nobles, the rich, & royalty? In early to later times, beds were the place where realm travel took place. For beds where sometimes where mothers got pregnant for the first time, or again. Where births took place, & where people dying on their "death beds," passed away.¹²¹⁵ Thus, the saying: "Passing on into the hands of the angels," or she or he "passed away." Numerous art-works showing pre-existence themes, as by way of the said post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, showing devils, grasping hold of souls after people die in their own beds. Protective guardian angels, often with protective white robes, blankets, or white cloths, wrap the souls up in them, to protect the souls of those who have lived a good life, while those who don't get the protective garments & their naked souls are dragged down to their "just punishments." But, even for the righteous, the devils seek to try to get at them & thus there's a sort of tug of war between the devils & good angels, over the soul, as soon as the soul leaves the body. A case in point is in The Book of Hours, Paris France, ca. 1485–1490, if there were curtains around the bed, they are drawn back, as a man, on his death bed, has just passed away. His naked soul, perhaps not clothed yet, is in the protective left arm of an angel that is clothed in white. In the angel's right hand is a cross used as a weapon to poke at a devil attempting to get at the soul. The soul is reaching out towards God seen in the window, holding an orb, while blessing the soul as the soul ascends towards him.¹²¹⁶ Beds—with their veils, curtains or canopies; were the places where pre-existing souls, were invited & brought into mortality, as newly weds, or young husbands & wives, would open the curtains to their beds, strip down naked & consummated each their own marriages. Or if they already had children, continue on with the marital activities to invite more souls to join their family, with closed curtains of their own beds. In a 15th-century art-work, a naked baby spirit descending down from the Trinity, going towards a naked couple in bed. One that has the curtains opened, such as this Illumination from Jean Mancel, Vie de Nostre Seigneur Jésus Christ, fifteenth century, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Paris.¹²¹⁷ Thus, with curtains left open, pre-existing spirit babies of the yet unborn, will descend down from heaven to start their mortal experiences by entering into the wombs of their mothers to be. At least, this what could be suggested by some art works that show baby spirits, called homunculus, a Latin word meaning "little man/human,"¹²¹⁸ descending down from heaven to enter the womb of its mother to be, like in the Pacino di Binaguida, Tree of Life c. 1310, Christ, depicted as a naked baby spirit descends towards Mary.¹²¹⁹

In some cases, they descend through a circle of winged baby heads, & enter the womb through the traditional early to later Christian symbol for realm travelers, the mandorla () or almond shaped portal opening that holy realm travelers pass through, as mentioned earlier.¹²²⁰ The aura almond shaped mandorla is often depicted as a bright light, with rays of glory extending out all around the shape, thus to also indicates their glorious entering into what ever realm that the holy ones are entering, be they angels, prophets, the virgin Mary, & in a lot of cases, Christ traveling in & out of different realms of existences. A example of the pre-existing soul of Christ having entered into a baby boy body, with light coming down from the Father seen above in heaven, & shining down on the baby Jesus, lit up by an almost mandorla shaped aura, that's around him, is in this work: Master Francke, Nativity, Englandfahrer Altarpiece, 1424. Kunsthalle, Hamburg. There are also a couple of angels holding a curtain or large canopy, or blanket, as if veiling off the nativity, or perhaps offering veil-curtain lore type protection & privacy.¹²²¹ 1426, Master of Flémalle. Mérode Altarpiece, a portion showing the Annunciation, in this case the pre-existing soul of the naked baby Jesus, is descending down from above, with rays of light behind him. He holds a cross symbol, as he descends towards Mary, his mother to be. The angel of Annunciation is there, foretelling Christ's birth. The window that Christ's spirit went through is circular, but seen at an angle to give it an almost almond shape. Is this intended to represent the mandorla symbol through which Christ's pre-existing soul passed through to descend to earth?¹²²² 1439, in the Portinari Chapel in Milan, the story of the Annunciation was acted out in a mystery play. Those playing the parts of angels are suspended in air, by a mechanical device, & a portion descends, & the whole scene is lit up through an artificial lighting system to give an impressive illuminated display of heavenly glory, & the auras of holy ones, from heaven. A 15 year old boy, playing the part of the angel of the Annunciation, descends from, & steps out of an almond mandorla shaped receptacle, & returns the same way, after foretelling the Immaculate Conception to the one playing the Virgin Mary.¹²²³ Thus, that other pre-existing souls, besides Christ's soul, would also descend through this sort of door way or passage way into other realms, like the mandorla from heaven to earth, is indicated by an Italian Painter, 1255–1325, Filippo Rusuti's Creation. For a naked man, perhaps Adam, descends in the mandorla as if coming from heaven to earth. So it is that glorious mandorla symbols, are often seen as almond shaped auras that are often depicted in realm traveling, in this case probably the soul of Adam descending from the heavenly pre-existence, to earth.¹²²⁴ 1474–76, Hugo Van Der Goes, Nativity, on the Portinari Altarpiece, Uffizi, Florence, shows the naked Christ child lying on the ground with light rays in the shape of the mandorla symbol, as if to suggest that the pre-existing soul of Christ had entered a human male baby, having been born to Mary.¹²²⁵

A winged-angel is depicted in the traditional war with the dragon, thrusting a cross-weapon into its mouth, & resting his left foot on the fallen beast. Attributed to Edward IV (1461-83), called "Angel" of Edward IV.¹²²⁶

1470, Piero della Francesca, depicted the Archangel Michael, who is standing victoriously on a serpent-devil. Clothed in leather, he is armed with a sword which he had just used to cut the head off of the devil-serpent.¹²²⁷

2-4-1488, French work, God is rounded by praying angels, almost making a prayer circle, or perhaps a council in heaven. To our left, St. Michael fights demons by thrusting one through with the cross-lance. Other demons are falling from heaven down into gaps in the earth, as if to suggest that they are falling into the underworld.¹²²⁸

15th century work, Michael fights with the dragon.¹²²⁹ Another work shows Michael with a scale. "Hans Memling from the Triptych of the Judgment. To the right of the Archangel Michael are the damned; to the left are the chosen. An angel and a devil dispute a soul." (Rev. 12:7-9) is cited to suggest that the war in heaven is also depicted in this particular work too.¹²³⁰

1480, Michael-archangel, battles with a devil with dark skin. In this case he fights for the soul of a person who has just died. The devil is attempting to grab onto the soul, but Michael's spear is pointing at the devil as if depicted at the moment right before impact.¹²³¹

1463-1494, Giovanni Pico della Mirandola, a Renaissance philosopher, speaks of Job "who made his covenant with the God of life even before he entered into life."¹²³²

1487- Oct. 16, 1555, Huge Latimer, appointed bishop of Worcester, 1535, & promoted reformed teachings & iconoclasm (movements that caused the destruction of religious icon-art-works, & other images, or monuments for religious or political motives. But also, it's a term used for someone who attacks cherished beliefs or institutions). Pre-existence themes in Jewish apocalyptic works, that were influential in Christian history, were such works as, Fourth Book of Ezra, composed about 100 C.E. Portions of it inspired Latimer, who was later burned at the Stake. The pre-existence themes in Ezra, are like how the world was created for the righteous, where they go to experience the contest which every man who is born on earth shall wage. The Most High God, feels compassion for those who haven't yet come into this world. Death is when the spirit leaves the body to return again to him who gave it.¹²³³

1488, GERMAN, BERNT NOTKE. St. George and the Dragon, Polychrome sculpture, Stockholm Cathedral. More blending of legends about slaying the dragon, preserved some aspects of the pre-mortal war in heaven stories.¹²³⁴

SPANISH. BARTOLOMME BERMEJO, active 1474-1498. Michael-archangel fighting with the dragon, with a sword raised, perhaps at the moment before striking the dragon under his feet.¹²³⁵

1498, ALBRECHT DURER, wood cut, shows Michael & his angels fighting in the air with the monstrous looking demonic forces of the dragon. This same artist also did a work that depicts the war in heaven drama.¹²³⁶

Josse Lieferinxe active in Provence 1493-1505/08: A war in heaven rages behind the crucifixion scenes of calvary. Michael-the-arch-angel armed with a shield and sword, is in the middle of fighting with the devil, & his monstrous looking forces of darkness, thrusting them out of heaven. A numerous host of people seek protection behind the mighty Michael, or perhaps they represents the good angels who are helping Michael in this war in heaven. Near the foot of the cross are what could be some of the bones of Adam, if that is, the artist knew of & carried over this traditional symbol, of Adam's traditional grave being under the foot of the cross.¹²³⁷

16TH CENTURY A.D.: 1508, Italian work, Georges d'Amboise ordered the bas-relief of St. George and the Dragon (Louvre) for his Chapel of Gaillon.¹²³⁸

ITALIAN, RAPHAEL 1483-1510, art work 1502, Michael, with his sword raised, is in the act of "slaying the Dragon" under his feet.¹²³⁹

1508-12, Sistine Chapel in Rome, Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564, his famous painting of the creation of Adam, is one in a series of frescoes on the ceiling, & it seems to contain fragments of pre-existence themes, still preserved during this century. The artist was painting for the Catholics in Rome, & even though earlier Catholics believed & taught many pre-existence themes, they later rejected other aspects, & held the belief that the soul is created at the moment of conception. Despite this, this early 16th century art work is said to be one of the most magnificent artistic renderings of pre-mortal humans, such as the pre-mortal Christ, pre-mortal Eve, & the pre-existing generations of the yet unborn humanity. God reaches out with his right hand to touch the finger of Adam's left hand. In other art works, God clasps the wrist or hand of Adam. However, in this case, God's left arm is around the pre-existing Eve, & if she's to be interpreted as being Eve, her left hand grips the arm, near the wrist of God the Father's left arm.¹²⁴⁰ This offers evidences for the identity of the women in question, as being Eve, who is often depicted in art works clasping, or being clasped by God, or in other cases by pre-existing Christ, during the Creation of Eve & later, during the descent of Christ into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the resurrection, where different hand grips are depicted, some on the wrist areas, some being the same & similar to those seen in the Creations of Eve & Adam art works.¹²⁴¹ Being an artist, having studied art works of others, & been trained in art making methods, Michelangelo must have known of these hand & wrist grasping themes, & types, & could have thus hinted to not only the future Christ, then a pre-existing Christ-child, with God's finger pointing to him. But also, hinted to the future Creation of Eve hand & wrist grasping, & of Adam first then Eve also being resurrected & harrowed from purgatory, etc., by hand & wrist grasping too. What aspects of pre-existence themes, that survived in the thoughts of Renaissance man, is of interest here. "In the Renaissance, not only neglected classics of Greece were rediscovered and enthusiastically promoted. Hermetic, along with Platonic, texts were translated and celebrated by the influential humanist Marsilio Ficino, lending impetus to a resurgence of the idea of preexistence found in both sources."¹²⁴² What pre-existence themes had influenced Michelangelo? Earlier Christian versions, or Greek Platonic pre-existence theme versions? Because Michelangelo affirmed with "uncompromising severity the Platonic theory of the Idea." Influenced by Platonic, or neo-Platonism, & Christian thought, he could have included old pre-existence themes blended with neo-Platonic pre-existence themes, and the reluctance that a pre-mortal spirit might have had about being imprisoned into a physical body.¹²⁴³ Many centuries earlier, Greek-philosopher, Plato told the story of Er, a warrior, who came back to life. This is a pre-Christian ancient Greek Near Death Experience, type of tale. Er saw souls, being prepared to be born into life. When it was their turn to be born, they traveled & camped near a River of Forgetfulness, drank a drink of water that made them forget their pre-mortal life, & after this, they were sent off to different areas to be born.¹²⁴⁴ In Michelangelo's Creation of Adam, God is in the skies, his mantle surrounding him like a cloud, as he moves toward the earth and the inert body of Adam. As if in keeping with the Platonic idea of life, with the body seen as a burden and imprisonment, Adam is awakening to life reluctantly rather than eagerly. With his other arm, God embraces Eve, seen behind God. She looks with fear and awe on this act of creation. "God's fingers point to the coming Christ Child, while behind him are the heads of unborn future generations of human beings."¹²⁴⁵ Roland H. Bainton suggests this of Michelangelo's painting, how that God "shelters with his other arm a woman and a child, who probably represent Eve and the Christ child, the new Adam."¹²⁴⁶ Some have tried to avoid the interpretation that the obvious female person, that God the Father has his left arm around, is "the figure as the pre-mortal Eve, because of the theological problems this raises. Such a reading would flatly contradict Catholic theology, which holds that the soul is created at the moment of conception.... [Despite this] "...this is the most magnificent artistic rendering of the pre-mortal humans (as well as the pre-mortal Christ child) that any era has produced."¹²⁴⁷ Still, art historians have argued over this famous section, as to the identities of those within God the Father's massive cloak. Thus, this section, inspired from Genesis, has been questioned by many art scholars: Does the old man gray bearded God the Father, have his left arm around a red haired Eve, still amongst the yet unborn generations of the heavens, (Gen. 2:4-5, Genesis A & B)? Is she "Divine Wisdom," (Sapientia, Prov.3:19, 4:7-11; 8:12-27)? Is she the Virgin Mary, & the Christ child is near by her, which God the Father's left-hand finger points to, both not yet born, thus representing their anticipated births? Some interpret other figures wrapped up in the enfolding cloak as Lucifer & a devilish companion.¹²⁴⁸ If so, this might suggest other pre-existence themes were intended to be portrayed here. A possible clue, that the young adult female under God's left arm is the pre-existing Mary, & the child by her, the pre-existing Christ-child, is to note the differences in features with the next work eastward, that of the Creation of Eve. For all though both heads have red hair, the one under God's arm is thinner, than the more plump looking Eve in the Creation of Eve section. As further possible evidence of that she could be Mary, she is also similar to size, thin shaped, but muscular, & red haired, similar facial features, to in Michelangelo's "The Holy Family," depicting Mary, the Christ child & Joseph, with others in the back ground. Did Michelangelo want to keep the features of Mary in other art works similar, so she could thus be identified as Mary in other art works?¹²⁴⁹ A later work that is similar to Michelangelo's Creation of Adam, & shows the same type of depiction, was done in 1626. In this case, it is post-creation scenes, of The Rebuke of Adam & Eve, by Domenichino, 1581-1641. God, depicted as a grey bearded old man, has a similar shaped large cloak that surrounds a number of babies that look about age one to two years old, at least five are visible. Are they again representing the generations of yet unborn? Are they pre-existing souls?¹²⁵⁰ God, surrounded by baby cherubims & angels. Are baby cherubims pre-existing souls?

In the Vienna triptych, Akademie der bildenden Künste, the war in heaven, in which Satan and his angels are being thrust out, and fall from heaven, plus the creation drama down below these scenes, shows the pre-existing Christ grasping, with his left hand, the left wrist of Eve.¹²⁵¹ This work is said to have influenced Hieronymus Bosch, A.D. 1450-1516.

1525, as noted, in later Christianity, the story of the rebel angels, their fall, & other pre-existence themes were retained some what in legends, & art works, etc. Michael-archangel with raised-sword, is about to strike at one of the rebel angels.¹²⁵²

6-17-1528, an official manuscript of the city of Ingolstadt, told of a certain "man who called himself Dr. Georg Faust of Heidelberg was told to spend his penny elsewhere, and he pledged himself not to take vengeance on or to make fools of the authorities for this order." Earlier, 8-20, 1507, a learned physicist, Johannes Tritheim, wrote to his colleague Johannes Virdung, a professor of astrology, of Johann or Georg Faust, claiming of him as being a vagabond, a babbler and a rogue who called himself the prince of necromancers.¹²⁵³ The legends, & stories, that grew around Faust's alleged pact with the Devil, are only some in many cases of pre-existence themes. That of what was believed the fallen angels were doing, now that the war in heaven resulted in them being thrust out & fallen. Lore says they fell down to earth in different areas to become, often-times, invisible tempters that try to get the human family to do all kinds of evils. One in many being contracting with the Devil in exchange for glory, power, riches, fame, & other desires mortals might contract to get, in exchange for their soul.¹²⁵⁴ Faust, much later Robert Johnson, Willi Brown, also called "Blind Dog Falton," in the movie, Cross Road, & others are said to have made such contracts, including the comical Elliot, in the movie Bed Dazzled. Robert Johnson was also said to be a wanderer, & he'd sing about hell-hounds on his trail, thus he had to keep moving. Faust lore tells of how Mephistopheles, a demon, one the fallen angels, & an agent of Lucifer, is summoned by Faust, to whom he appears to. Faust contracts with him for his soul in exchange for powers, & other worldly desires, but not without this fallen angel warning him of the consequences of selling his soul. But, Faust, discerned as already corrupt & in danger of being damned, if not already, goes through with it. As the legends grew, & movies, plays & stories were told, many other conflicting versions became popular, but still hinted to post fall activities of the Devil & the demon-fallen angels, how some were made to serve Satan, & others to serve those who had sold their souls to Satan & there after were also soul-collectors, like the hell hounds on the Contracteds' trails.¹²⁵⁵

1539, May 26, pre-existence themes, by way of post-war in heaven, post fall from heaven activities of Satan, & the fallen-angel-demons, were dramatized in different stories. Such as done with poetical skill by Jacob Ruffs, performed at Zürich, Switzerland. Satan sows seeds of sedition in the minds of servants of the vineyard, in the story of Job and the parable of the vineyard. What follows is the master's son is murdered, as are others. As if counterfeiting Christ's guising tactics, when Christ wanders the earth in different guises to test different ones on Christian charity, etc., in Satan's cases, he uses different disguises to do evil & get others to murder different ones. He's guised in the attire of a Bishop, & another guise.¹²⁵⁶

A couple art works of this century show Michael fighting with the dragon. Raffaello Santi, 16th century, a winged Michael, spear up, trampling the fallen angel, Satan.¹²⁵⁷

In the fable, The Wonderful Plough, a farmer saw a bright insect, going backwards, & forwards, on the cross, as if in pain, wanting to get away. Next morning he saw it again, suspicious about it, he thought: "Would this be one of the black enchanter's? Black colors, in traditional stories are often associated with evil spirits, fallen angels, the mischievous underground folk."¹²⁵⁸ This fable's pre-existence themes in legendized form, might be understood in light of later Christian art works that also show fallen angels as insect type creatures.¹²⁵⁹

Pre-existence Themes During the Reformation Era, & Beyond -- Rejections, Preservation & Further Legendizations

During the Reformation & the polemical struggles between the different sects of Christendom. The post war in heaven story was carried over into a depiction of the "Antichrist." Thus, the Antichrist at the top is smitten by Michael and dragged by devils toward hell. At the top of this art work, there is an angel with a sword. This might remind us of the numerous depictions of Michael the arch-angel's war in heaven battles.¹²⁶⁰

Martin Luther, (11-19-1483 born, 2-18-1546, died), Germany, Augustinian Catholic, Doctor of Theology, 1512. Pre-existence themes, post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the Devil & demons, becoming more and more legendized. Luther saw the Devil everywhere, & struggled with him constantly, overcoming him, he thought, by more confidence in God. As he realized the corruption of the Roman Catholic church he was a part of, he began to regard the Pope as the incarnation of Satan, or as the anti-Christ, the Roman church as the kingdom of the Devil, thus post-fall from heaven activities being how the devil & his demons were at work on earth, in the Roman Catholic church. In turn, the Pope & Roman church saw him & other Reformers as anti-Christ. Luther would sing: 'And were this world with devils filled - That threaten to undo us; We will not fear, for God hath willed - His truth to triumph through us....' In German lore during Luther's time, Luther, like others, believed the Devil was realistic & would try his incessant interference while Luther tried to do his work. Then would he tried to rest, Luther expected the devil would disturb him. Heaped in superstitious lore, Luther, not afraid of the devil, still regarded him as powerful, & yet every tile on the roofs of the city Worms was a devil. Satan would try to distract him, grinning at Luther, while he translated the Bible, so according to unreliable Luther lore, Luther is said to have thrown his inkstand at him. In his Tischreden, Luther tells how when he awoke, the fiend started disputing with him, accusing him of being a sinner. Luther admits he is, saying that he wasn't pointing out anything new that he didn't already know. Luther thought the Devil's powers were behind the powers used by Wizards & witches. Luther, influenced & following Augustine's authority, admits the possibilities that the incubi and succubi were both Satan in the shape, & guise of a handsome young man, who would decoy young girls. Superstitiously, he accepted the activities of changelings, or children believed to have been secretly substituted by fairies for the parents' real children. Thus, like others of his time, Luther was caught up in the barbarous superstitions of demonology that lore had created, when the apostasy continued to turn already by his time, legendized-doctrines, even further into superstitious fables.¹²⁶¹

During the Reformation era, the 16th century, & after, pre-existence themes, that of post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, has them doing different devilish works on earth. As the superstitious beliefs grew into further lore in the different areas of Christendom, different ones believing that there are trillions of devils. There's a devil for unchastity, one for blasphemy, there's the dance-devil, the servant's devil, the hunting devil, the drink-devil, the wedlock-devil, the miser's devil, one of tyranny, another for laziness, for gambling, for courtier, for pestilence, & so on.¹²⁶²

During this century, some poems & plays were portraying the fall of the angels, plus the glorious victory of Christ or his representative, Michael, over the evil angels at the beginning of the world. In magnificent battle scenes, the pre-mortal Christ and Michael are the poems' & plays' epic heroes, locked in deadly combat with Satan in a war in heaven. These pre-existence themes were said to have no biblical warrant. (Even though many earlier bible illustrations, & passages, & the Book of Enoch, found in Ethiopian bibles, contains war in heaven themes. Plus, other bibles' illustrations contain many different depictions of the drama too). Despite this, the later versions of the war in heaven medieval dramas were specifically claimed to be rejected by Martin Luther, and John Calvin.¹²⁶³

1554, The fall of the angels by Frans Floris the Elder or Frans Floris de Vriendt (1517 – 1 October 1570), a Brabant painter. A great battle is underway in this work. Angels of God armed with swords, & spears, etc, battle with the rebel forces of the devil. The intensity of the battle is vividly seen in the way that the artist has depicted the war between the good & bad angels.¹²⁶⁴

1545—1563, about the time of the general council of the West, the Council of Trent, certain theologians, such as Catharinus, expressed the idea that God had, from the beginning, made known to the angels his project of hypostatically uniting the Word and human nature, and that Satan had been offended at seeing the privilege of hypostatic union accorded to a member of the human race instead of to the most perfect creature, to himself. Suarez presented the new theory that "the sin of the Devil came from his desire to be taken himself by the Word as a term of the hypostatic union, instead of the human nature of Christ being that term."¹²⁶⁵

1562, Bruegel depicts the Fall of the Rebel Angels, in which the angels of God are hacking at, and thrusting the monsters down into Hell.¹²⁶⁶

Michael's place as one of the Archangels was well established from the earliest times on through the centuries as we have seen. The art works and writings helped preserved some of the things that he would be known by. As each generation of Christendom developed their own particular traditions and symbols with regards to Michael, they preserved visible reminders of his place & role in the continuous battles between the forces of good & evil. Therefore, Michael's sword might remind us of his battle with the devil. The wings on his back, might remind us of his abilities to fight with the demons of the air.¹²⁶⁷

1552 (or 1553–1-13-1599, English poet, Edmund Spenser, in his "Garden of Adonis," (Platonic influenced preexistence themes), presents mortal life as a sort of nursery of souls for preexistent souls to come down into: "Ordnained hath, he clothes with sinfull mire, And sendeth forth to live in mortall state, Till they againe returne backe to the hinder state."¹²⁶⁸

1575–1624, Jacob Böhme, a German mystic, born at Alt-Seidenberg near Görlitz in Silesia. Wrote: The Threefold Life of Man. He presents rather garbled hints to possible pre-existence themes in fragments, that seems tainted or at least reminds us of Gnosticism, & their garbled blend of pre-existence themes. Blending in strange concepts about free will, spheres of angels, of Lucifer, & of this world. Evil is supposed to be the "wrath side of God," & materiality and sensuality are identified with sin, and sin begins not with the actual fall but with lusting, sleep being a symptom of this condition. In this strange blend of philosophical mystic incoherent fragments: "Before his sleep Adam was in the form of an angel, but after his sleep he had flesh and blood, and there was a clod of the ground in his flesh." – Die drey Principien, p. 221. There is said to be a sphere of light that contains the divine spirit and all the angels, (in the art work illustrating this, they look like winged baby heads), & a sphere of darkness, of badness, (depicting dark fire spewing dragon type creatures, legendary creatures of later Christian pre-existence themes), and the two, over-lapping produces a third domain. In this apparently Gnostic-influenced blend: "The original Adam (a kind of Platonic prototype of man) was spiritual: his fall begins with his falling to sleep... the result of carnal desire which changes his nature and leads to the creation of the woman to tempt him."¹²⁶⁹

The Archangel Michael is depicted in a 16th or 17th century art work used in Spanish Colonial Cuzco in the Americas.¹²⁷⁰

1599, Christ, in the New Testament, often spoke of how he came down from heaven, or was sent from heaven, to do his Father's will, and to teach his Father's doctrines.¹²⁷¹ In later centuries, we see fragments of this aspect of the Pre-existence in the art works that depict different ones passing through a mandorla symbol, () that is often seen when saints, angels, souls, and the Gods pass through into other realms of existences. Thus, in an art work 1599, the baby-soul of Christ, bearing the cross, descends from heaven towards his Mother to be, Mary. Up above this scene are angels lifting up, or holding what might be a veil or curtain of some kind. Hence, it may be that this large curtain represents how Christ passed through the veil while descending to earth, from heaven, to be born. However, this part about this curtain is speculation on my part.¹²⁷²

FABLES ABOUT THE POST-WAR IN HEAVEN, POST-FALL FROM HEAVEN, ACTIVITIES OF THE DEVIL & HIS FALLEN ANGELS ON EARTH, AND IN THE UNDERWORLD. LATER SUPERSTITIOUS FABLES & LORE ABOUT WITCHES & DEMONS

The 1500s into the 1600s & later, was a time of further legendizations of different aspects of pre-existence themes. The fallen angels-demons were depicted in art, & described in writings, superstitious tales, & scary stories, as shape-shifted monstrous creatures of all shapes & sizes. As the legendization processes blended with even more crazy superstitious imaginings, an encyclopedia of diverse types of ways to describe & depict the Prince of Darkness, the Evil One, & the diverse races of fallen angels, also developed, but included normal looking animals & people.¹²⁷³ For, according to traditions, just as Christ could guise himself into different looking people of all shapes, sizes & types, to test different ones charity levels, during his world wide treks.¹²⁷⁴ So also could the Devil & his demons, that counterfeited Christ's abilities, could guise themselves too. However, in their cases, they did so to tempt, & work their works of darkness. Thus, the Devil & demons were also believed to be wandering about the world in different guises, and sometimes could appear, according to traditions, as a normal looking person, in order to deceive the public.¹²⁷⁵

Earlier color symbolism, as they related to earlier Christian mysteries, and ritualistic garment color symbolism, became later literalized into actual skin colors, spots, or normal defects on the flesh. Where instead of the earlier symbolism, which still existed in many areas of Christendom, with: White & black, dirty & clean, white symbolic of being cleaned or whitened from sins through Christ's atonement. Where, in contrast, spots, dirt, blood stains, such as on hands, feet, & garments, as had been earlier, were symbolic of souls being stained & blackened with so many accumulated spots of sins, that they had blackened their hearts, dirtied their minds & souls, & spotted with sins their ritualistic animal skin-garments. Symbolic of how the unrepentant had gone from once being white, clean & pure, to being completely black, or filthy with dirt, blood stains from their murders, or other unclean acts of violence, & their acting out devilish traits, vices, lusts, & diverse types of habitual continual sins.¹²⁷⁶ These earlier ritualistic types & symbolism, upon being legendized further, later became more literalized into actual skin colors, actual defects in the physical body. For moles, birth marks, birthing stretch marks, defects that come with getting older, on towards old age. Plus, other normal, or problems that humans naturally have with different defects on their own body's outer flesh, plus those caused by diseases, etc., were eventually superstitiously misinterpreted as being, 'marks of the devil.' Or as "signs" & "evidences" to look for, that the accused persons, mostly women, were involved in witchcraft! Or that the accused were somehow involved in the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the many different types of races of fallen-angel-demons! That they were 'in leagues with that 'black man,' (or the devil)! Who is often depicted with black skin, as a black man, during these centuries. Consequently, accused witches, often females, had their naked bodies search for "marks," or "evidences" that they had the "witch mark," or "devil's mark," on them.¹²⁷⁷

All these aspects of legendized pre-existence themes, got further distorted in superstitious minds, & imaginations that run wild, & unchecked by reality! All of these factors, and more, continued to add to the then, and later suspicions that led to discriminations, that different white-race-immigrants & white-pilgrims from Europe to the American colonies, had about black or red colored animals, & humans, (the Negro & Indian races). Plus, had about white-race people that might have developed a spot, or fleshly defect on their outer skin. Or with different types of animals, on down to the smallest insects, that they suspected, superstitiously, were demonic.¹²⁷⁸

The superstitious clergy must have also preached & told scary stories about the fallen angels that became the devil & demons, that fell into the seas, lakes, woods, caves, and the underworld. There to come out at night, or other times to haunt & infest the meadows, streams, forests, mountains, & deep places of the earth.¹²⁷⁹ Such legendized versions of many pre-existence themes turned into fables & fairy tales, also fueled the superstitious minds of the common folks. Many of which must have come up with their own scary tales to tell. Such as stories about claims of devilish-manifestations, and encounters with the black-devil himself, or with black garbed witches and their black cats, & other dark devilish critters. Scare stories often used to get the kids to be good, so that the boogie-man won't get you! Stories also about witches, or devilish creatures that were out to steal un-Christened children, or newly born infants, that it was alleged would then be used in their dark art rituals & be-witching spells. Or to change their old ugly wicked witch flesh back to the beauty of their youth.¹²⁸⁰

Thus, with every unexplained bump in the night, and dark encounters with their choices of the many different types of insect type small creatures, on up to giants, that the story tellers could select from. Such as in the written, but also oral-encyclopedia of accumulated descriptions of monstrous fallen angel-demons. The artists, & the story tellers could create their own myths, fairy tales, & scary entertainment moral mystery folklore, that could be used for whatever purposes and desired effects that they might devise. Some stories were meant to scare children into obedience to the later Christians' religious dogmas, vows, & sects' teachings of the times. Thus, embellished scare tactic tales, sometimes told by Christian parents, as they created their own scary stories to tell, were sometimes told, according to customs, around the dim flickering candle lit rooms at night, or during festivities' fire-side family gatherings. Where their superstitious minds could imagine all types of Star Trek, Star Wars types of diverse types of devilish-creatures that would play out like movies in their own minds, as descriptions of them, embellished by the story tellers, would create the mental movies before radio, movies, & T.V., & horror flicks would legendize them even further, in much later lore with even more faded pre-existence themes.

During the 17th century American Colonies, & days of the Puritans, & other rival sects, many Ghostly tales, about the post-war from heaven, post-fall from heaven, earthly and underworld activities of the fallen-angels, & demonic creatures, must have been woven around the superstitious world views of the times & place. The dense wooded areas of the frontiers, were probably looked upon as being infested with all kinds of devilish creatures. Which areas the parents didn't want their small children to venture off into. With the children not yet aware of the natural dangers of the world they lived in, the dangers of falling into a pit, or drowning in the streams or rivers, their water sources. Or getting lost in the woods, or eaten by the wild beasts that lived there. The parents, superstitious themselves, must have taken advantage of, or used the scare tactic tales to get their kids to obey, until that least they were old enough to not have to worry about them getting hurt so much. But then, in the parents' own superstitious minds, there was, for them, some real concerns for the devils on the loose that might appear in all shapes, sizes, & guises, to lure them, & their children away to physical & spiritual danger. In their minds, the devil was out there, & so were his demons, & their post-war in heaven, post fall from heaven activities included a variety of all kinds of tempting tactics, & dangerous snares. Thus, the kids might be also warned to not going wandering off, without supervision & Christianized folk-magic protection, & counter-spells, lest they get lost, kidnapped, or eaten by the witches, warlocks, & evil wizards & their armies of demons that were believed to be out there!¹²⁸¹

Others used these stories & superstitions to their own advantages, be they with good or evil intents. Such as Preachers, & other clerics, or officers of the government, or law enforcers of the small settlements, & at communities' councils & festivities. When & where they'd remind the children & adults of their Christian moral duties to obey those in authority. While still others' devilish encounter stories were sometimes used, by some, as an excuse for their falling from grace, in the name of "the black one," the "black-man," or black-imps devils, or "the devil made me do it!" While in other cases, such legendized pre-existence themes, stories and tales about the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the dark ones, were weaponized! Especially during different eras of witch-hunting & witch-trials phases, in Europe & the American Colonies, during the 16th-18th century. If a poor family clan was jealous of a rich family clan, & plotted ways to get their riches, property, or destroy them, they might bring up charges against their rivals, by spreading rumors about them being witches, or of harming their family, their property, & children through the use of the dark arts of black magic. Knowing the superstitious "evidence" to look for, the accusers could manufacture their own evidence, & embellished witness stories & tales to be told during law suite & witch-trials & community hearings. Acting out fits, possessions, & claims of seeing "the black man," (or the Devil himself), talking to the alleged witches, could mean further troubles for their rivals in such superstitious settings. Or accusations of seeing other black-demonic creatures of evil, & black-animals doing the witches' spells & commands. Such testimonials could also be believed & thus get the accused in trouble even more. These accusers in many different cases, could cause the ordering & demands of searching out the property, & even the alleged witches' naked bodies to be searched. If what could be interpreted, or misinterpreted as being satanic witch craft tools for casting spells, or if upon their bodies, what might be misinterpreted as "the devil's mark," or other "evidence," could be found, or manufactured by their rivals, the defendants could be made to suffer different types of punishments, fines, banishment, property confiscations, & even death, for the crimes of witchcraft.¹²⁸²

Consequently, some of the later legendized versions of pre-existence themes turn unto fables, comes from these different witch hunting eras, from the 15th-18th centuries,

& that involves the devil, & his fallen angels' post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities, some of which also involve witches, & or those that practice the dark art, here upon the earth.¹²⁸³

17TH CENTURY A.D.: 1600, another depiction of Christ's baby spirit descending from heaven towards Mary, shows him in a bright mandorla symbol, () for realm traveling. Hence, Christ is coming from another realm of existence, heaven, to be born on earth. Over his shoulder is the cross, while up above this scene are angels holding a curtain.¹²⁸⁴

1606, in a tone work at the Augsburg, Armory, Hans Reichle's version of Michael, has him dressed as a Knight, as he raises up his sword against the fallen lucifer under his feet.¹²⁸⁵

1608, a Wine-cooler, Workshop of Francesco Patanazzi, Urbino depicts on it, Adam and Eve, and among other things, what could be bouts with the dragon.¹²⁸⁶

1612, Jacob Boehme (1575–1624), a shoemaker of Görlitz, pious Lutheran, versed in hermetic lore, Rosicrucian thought, & esoteric writings, said to have from his youth, mystical visions. In 1612, he produced a number of works that got him in trouble with the theocracy thought-policing authorities & ended up in prison. Charged with heresy he was exiled from his birthplace. In 1620, Forty Questions of the Soul, question 10 dealt with: "Whether [the soul] is ex traduce and propagated after a human bodily manner? or every time new created and breathed in from God?" He goes on to give the proper Lutheran response, how that the soul is not every time created & breathed in, but is propagated after a human manner, like unto a branch that grows out of a tree. So also like corn seeds sowed, a spirit and body grow out of it. These metaphorical types used seems to suggest that the spirit & body are created or grow at the same time, no preexistence for the soul. But then in other areas of his writings, preexistence themes of his own types are presented, such as in the question that he invites readers to explore with him further as to: Whence proceeded the Soul Originally at the beginning of the World? He encourages his readers to read his previous works, The Three Principles of the Divine Essence (1612), and The Threefold Life of Man, (1626). In them he presents his doctrine of creation, the soul, and the fall of Lucifer. He notes that man is a similitude of God, an eternal being, without beginning & without end. He hopes his writings will help people know what they are, what they were in the beginning, as glorious eternal beings, (both men & women). Hinting to creation scenes, he tells how they, as glorious beings, should not have known the gate of cruel birth in the eternity, if they had not suffered themselves to lust after it through the infection of the devil, & not partaken of the forbidden fruit. But where he shows more preexistence themes is in his Ungrund, in that freedom, agency, accountability, the origins of the world & the arising of evil, (all preexistence themes), are considered.¹²⁸⁷

After 1626, Michael thrusting down Satan, in chains. Altarpiece by Guido Reni, in S. Maria della Concezione (chiesa dei Cappuccini), first chapel to the right, Rome.¹²⁸⁸

1614–1687, Henry More, who embraced Platonic preexistence, was a poet, also incorporated Platonic and Origenist teachings on preexistence into English thought.¹²⁸⁹

1636–1680, Joseph Glanvill, a student of Henry More, preexistence themes tainted with Platonic blends with later Christianity, as explored by the Cambridge Platonists, his treatise on preexistence, innateness (Latin innatus, from innasci 'be born into' inborn, natural), becomes just another word for preexistent knowledge. "We find our minds fraught with principles logical, moral, metaphysical, which could never owe their original to sense."¹²⁹⁰ What is being suggested here? That the human body's senses do not give us knowledge of things like our soul does, having tapped into some preexistence knowledge or recalling of something already known, but not learned from the 5 senses? 1609–1683, Benjamin Whichcote, British Establishment, Puritan divine, Provost of King's College, Cambridge, leader of Cambridge Platonists, also notes Platonic recollection of preexistence knowledge: "No sooner doth the Truth of God come to our soul's sight, but our soul knows her, as her first and old Acquaintance." Ralph Cudworth (1617–1688), Henry More's contemporary and master of Christ's College, Cambridge: The soul in a person, when suddenly recognizing an old friend amid a sea of unfamiliar faces, is another preexistence theme considered, for it was a recalling of the memory of someone known before mortal life. The different Cambridge Platonists that noted possible recollection of some memories of the preexistence, were not as committed to the concept of recollection, as Henry More (1614–1687), seems to be. How committed were the Cambridge Platonists were in promoting platonic preexistence themes is questionable, & must be explored further on a cases by case basis. However, in the case of Henry More, he seemed amongst the more active ones, as his writings might suggest. In More's "On the Præxistency of the Soul," (1647), is prefaced with: "I do not contend... that this opinion of the Præxistency of the Soul, is true," however, it's "worthy" of discussions & considerations, especially when it has already been judged of old, very sound and orthodox, according to the wisest & most learned of preceding ages. More's proem's first lines, invokes Aristo's son, to assist his muse: "I would sing the præxistency" and "Of human souls and live once o'er again. By recollection and quick memory..." Further on, More hints to deification themes in how a spark or ray of Divinity is clouded [preexistence memory veiled off?] in earthly fog & clad or clothed in clay, (divinity clothed in a body?). There is mention of the soul's fall, falling or descending through various spheres, acquiring the characteristics of fallen mortality along the way. The soul thus having been soiled in the clay, or descended into 'earthly mire,' has to go through a time of cleansing & sanctifying, purification, & re-ascent, or return. Those souls traumatized by death, or attached to earthly things, will haunt the lower sphere as restless phantoms. Said to be one of the longest poetic treatment on preexistence, "On the Præxistency of the Soul," offers a look at the survival of some preexistence themes during that time & place, though they are in somewhat legendized forms, tainted with cultural contamination from Plato's version of preexistence. More also argued against the other alternative theories, traducianism, creationism too.¹²⁹¹

1652, Lady Anne Conway, woman philosopher in the English tradition, read Henry More's "Præxistency of the Soul," (published 1647), & asked different questions about his preexistence themes, creation of Adam themes, souls falling into matter, clothed in "Corporeity." Plus, how souls of beasts & plants came into bodies? How man is restored from what he Fell from, & why the Devils that fell, cannot be restored? For nearly 3 decades, about 1650s to 1680s, More & Conway corresponded with each other over these questions. By about 1659, More further elaborations on the preexistence in, On the Immortality of the Soul, with 2 chapters on the subject. He notes the scriptural, religious, & 'intellectual worthies,' past & present, have noted preexistence themes. However, that it was an opinion so wild & extravagant, that the argument that every Fool is able to use, is sufficient to silence it and dash it out of countenance. But then he seems to feel the need to go on to address objections both common, & unusual, in defense of preexistence. Asking, as earlier

Christians had, & Plato, about: "Why can we not remember our pre-mortality?" How should we explain the approach & entrance of souls into their bodies? More argues against Traducianism & Creationism, by presenting logical, but old & repeated objections to the idea that the soul could originate from its parents, [Traducianism]. Or that a pure soul could immediately be encumbered by a body & inherited condition so disproportionate to its innocence. Because of God's dignity & majesty, he wouldn't make himself to become involvement with others' unlawful & immoral activities, such as their whoredomes, adulteries, & incests, etc., in making illegitimate persons, by God thus making pure & innocent souls, fresh from his creative hands, & their bodies for them to be born into by supplying those foul coitions with new created Souls. [Arguing against Creationism].¹²⁹²

To sum up another preexistence comment by More, he further reasoned & wondered about if souls can enjoy themselves before they come into Terrestrial Bodies, (it being better for them to enjoy them, than not). If so, then they must be before they came into these Bodies, & that they must have lived before the Body.¹²⁹³

1661, letter attributed to Anglican bishop, George Rust, 1628–1670, a student of Henry More, wrote & published anonymously, as: A Letter of Resolution Concerning Origen and the Chief of His Opinions. The treatise dealt with different issues, a third with "that the Souls of men do præxist" and "that through their fault and negligence they appear here [as] inhabitants of the earth cloth'd with terrestrial bodies." The case is made for "the reasonableness of this Opinion" of preexistence.¹²⁹⁴

1662, Joseph Glanvill, (influenced by Henry More's writings), an Anglican clergyman educated at Oxford, took up the cause of preexistence in Lux Orientalis; or, An Enquiry into the Opinion of the Easter Sages Concerning the Præxistence of Souls. It was later repackaged with a follow-up essay, 1682, Two Choice and Useful Treatises. Glanvill prefaced his remarks by claiming "as for the opinion of Preexistence,... it was never determined against by ours, nor any other Church, that I know of; and therefore I conceive is left as a matter of School Speculation, which without danger may be problematically argued on either hand."¹²⁹⁵ Glanvill went from being a student of preexistence to being an ardent proponent, unlike others that hid behind protective language by calling their opinions as hypotheses, fictive dreams, tentative language & hypothetical, rather than doctrinal. Thus, Glanvill's present his work as "a full proof, defence, and explication of Præxistence." He boldly presents his book as being the only one at that time that fully treated the preexistence issues. It went into a 2nd printing & was received by curious searchers & those interested in exploring the philosophy & the on going controversy over preexistence themes & diverse opinions, from earlier Christian centuries. The old arguments over preexistence, creationism, & traducianism were reconsidered. As were the questions about how souls descend from heaven into mortal life: Do they come tainted with preexisting sinnings, or do they descend good? A case in point was like Adam, one of the souls that was a "Seraphic and untainted Spirit." Glanvill argued that Adam was sent on a mission of mercy to provide suitable bodies for the fallen and to be an overseer and "Steward in the affairs of this lower Family." Glanvill also reprises More's arguments about souls enjoying themselves before they came into these bodies. The preexistence was a good place to live, a better & happier state-of- existence, before souls descended into this region of death & misery. Glanvill even explores the eventual decline of preexistence, its demise, how that the doctrine lacks sustaining weight of scripture. (Did he suggest this was the case because it was too deep & mysterious to allow the common and promiscuous auditories, (or for the common folks, an unworthy public, not ready to grasp & be exposed to the full understanding about the preexistence? Or was Glanvill aware how the early Christian mystery topics, included preexistence & creation themes? Or was it just a mysterious doctrine, (or something that is difficult to understand or explain). There is also the question about what aspects of the preexistence might have survived in the scriptures that had been held back for common publications for a long time? Plus, what might have been taken out because of controversies in earlier centuries? Or withheld from common public knowledge because the doctrine was part of the ritualistic mystery, the journey of the soul as presented in ritualistic dramas, called mysteries. This might be why Glanvill had thought the doctrine was not fully expounded upon in the scriptures. As it now is in present day scriptures, there are only passages, here & there, that do hint to certain aspects of it. What also, then was passed down through the copies of scriptures, & ceremonies, down through the centuries by the time of the 17th century? What scriptures did they have? What might have been taken out by that time, such as The Shepherd of Hermas, earlier? (It talks of Christ as being with the Father during the preexistent council in heaven, during the time of the creation). Plus, the Book of Enoch was removed, that had all kinds of references to preexistence themes. Thus, also in early Christianity, it was a doctrine reserved for the tested, & proven worthy initiates into the early Christian mysteries, & not for the unworthy common folk).¹²⁹⁶ Whatever might be the case, Glanvill goes on to note the demise of the doctrine of preexistence as different factors caused its fall from acceptability. How that Aristotelianism displaced Platonism in Greek philosophical influences on later Christian theology during the Middle Ages, & thus preexistence faded out with the more dominating influence.¹²⁹⁷

1662, Henry More's treatise in his Philosophical writings, names different ones, as if in support of preexistence, but some of which are doubtful supporters, thus in "Preface General," supporters are Plato, Origen & "the Church of the Jewes," St. Basil, Gregory of Nazianzus & Augustine, Latin father, Prudentius. While questionable ones: Aristotle, Cicero, Clement, & Arnobius, for various reasons, weren't. Even some of those listed had problems with different aspects of some preexistence themes, like Augustine, who sought Jerome's opinion concerning the controversy over Origenism & the preexistence, as noted earlier. Arnobius had questioned Plato's theory of recollection of preexistence memories, (like Irenaeus had about a drink of forgetting, that Plato mentions. Irenaeus asked if what's in the cup, or type of drink can makes one forget their pre-mortal existence: How can anyone remember the drink?).¹²⁹⁸ Cicero is reported to have believed that 'no origin of souls can be found on earth.' While also, in his assimilation of Platonism & Stoicism, he did echo Plato's arguments from recollection, especially for heavenly music once heard. As Augustin's contemporary, Macrobius quoted him: "every souls in this world is allured by musical sounds... for the souls carries with it into the body a memory of the music which it knew in the sky." Prudentius, a 5th century poet, who gave little to the contribution to More's list of supporters for preexistence, was also mentioned by 19th century writer, Friedrich Bruch, as a proponent, or a person who advocated the theory of preexistence, when in a poem, Prudentius refers to "this serviceable soul that clearly been an exile and wanderer." More goes on to use not only ancient sources, but brings in allegorical reasoning, & uses the doctrine of original sin, Romans 5:14, as support for preexistence. (Earlier we considered Augustine's reasoning for "original sin," to include preexistence sinning, that would even taint infants at birth, in addition to Adam & Eve's "original sin").¹²⁹⁹ More goes on to reason that Adam was given, in his incarnation, or birth into mortality, a fresh start, and was therefore fully culpable for the sin he introduced. Because Christ preexisted, & Adam was a prefigure-of-Christ, Adam must have also preexisted, this is what More got out of Romans 5:14. By 1668, in More's Divine Dialogues, he has a character, Bathynous, presenting preexistence themes. Because of this, the archbishop of Canterbury's licenser refused More an imprimatur, (or an official license issued by the Roman Catholic Church to print an ecclesiastical or religious book). The preexistence was still an issue for many clerics of the time, & so More argued that his preexistence assertions were hypothetical, rather than doctrinal. It was still a time of doctrinal enforcement & thought policing, which may be why More cites Jewish & non-Christian sources in support of the preexistence 'philosophy,' for to show too great an affinity for preexistence could lead to charges of— and even imprisonment for— heresy and Judaizing.¹³⁰⁰

1636–1689, Christian Knorr von Rosenroth, contemporary to Henry More, celebrated Hebrew thought, language & blended later Christian preexistence themes with Jewish versions. Kabbalist Francis Mercury van Helmont, (1614–1699), brought to More a set of queries from Rosenroth, in 1670, & the preexistence was their common shared interest, & after translations of portions of More's Immortality of the Soul, & with More's assistance, von Rosenroth complied & published his Kabbala Denudata, 1677–1684. But as many aspects of the preexistence were still unpopular, & rejected, even before the work was published, von Rosenroth, in particular, was harshly criticized 1675, in a letter by Herman Rose, for embracing the doctrine of preexistence.¹³⁰¹ Anne Conway took these blends of preexistence beliefs and composed a detailed theory on the incarnation of preexistent spirits. One aspect of it covered her belief that down to the small level of the "semen" of the female & the "semen" of the male, is a struggle for birth into mortality, for what ever spirit is the strongest, and has the strongest image or idea in the woman or male, that spirit predominates in the semen and forms a body as similar as possible to its image. Conway presents the belief, that, spirits of all humans, like all creatures, have existed for an infinite time from the beginning. Spirits were pure in their original state before they fell, through their own wrong doing, thus a willful fall.¹³⁰²

1637–1674, Thomas Traherne, English poet, Clergyman, theologian & spiritual writer, honored by Anglicans, not of the Cambridge Platonists, but with them in sentiment. His version of preexistence was brighter than others' versions. No fall into mortality, but a glorious descent into glorious new beginnings. The soul experiences new wonders & a new start as the soul begins to get acquainted with the new world the soul has come down to, being as like a stranger here. The soul experiences the new wonders of being in an infant body, with little limbs, eyes, hands, & a tongue to speak. But before being in mothers' wombs, souls were preparing for birth: "Long time before I in my mother's womb was born, A God preparing did this glorious store, The world, for me adorn." He even seems to hint to souls' divine parental heritage as being sons & daughters of God: "Into this Eden so divine and fair, So wide and bright I come His son and heir. A stranger here." In other sections of his poetry he tells "How like an angel came I down." In other poetry, like "The Preparative," he takes preexistence themes to an interesting perspective, by trying to imagine what it might have been like for a preexistent spirit to awaken in the womb to their new incarnation, the soul "newly clothed with Skin,” and a “naked, simple, pure Intelligence.” Then, later, out of the womb and into the world. Thus, Traherne, like William Wordsworth does later, links faded memories of the preexistence that are more clearer & fresher to infants, than they are later on as they grow & start to forget more & more about the bright & glorious pre-mortal world they descended from. His theology as a parish priest was unorthodox for his time, for not only does he allude to preexistence, but he was sympathetic to some of the Pelagian heresies. He also rejected original sin, which made it possible for his preexistence themes to have souls descend in glory, rather than be tainted by original sin, & thus infants being also tainted at each their own births. He thus believed in the potential of humans to live unspotted by sin. But his version of preexistence was the twinning of preexistence with heretically excessive humanism. (Or a rationalistic system of thought attaching prime importance to human rather than divine or supernatural matters. Or a Renaissance cultural movement which turned away from medieval scholasticism and revived interest in ancient Greek and Roman thought). In other poems, like “Eden,” and “Innocence,” as in others, preexisting souls descend from heaven, not to be tainted by any preexisting sinning, as in others’ versions, but as a glorious descent, with divine ancestors to their credit, being pure, innocent, not stained or spotted with sin, but pure and bright. Like in “My Spirit,” the soul is a spirit infinite, an image of Deity, a pure, substantial light.¹³⁰³

1632–1704, John Locke, English philosopher, a physician, also an influential Enlightenment thinker, & began Calvinistic, but later accepted other religious views too. Near the end of his life, Locke returned nearer to an Arian position in Christological views, thereby accepting Christ’s pre-existence.¹³⁰⁴ While earlier, he also explored the preexistence controversy, but in a way that suggests that what preexistence themes had come down to him by that time, had become so tainted with blends of philosophical opinions about it, that he treats the topic with indifference. Thus, to him, it seems preexistence wasn’t an important doctrine anymore, for by his time, it had become a philosophical theory irrelevant to human concerns. Thus, as a “theory,” preexistent souls, amounts to a theoretically imprecise and doubtful constructs of ancient platonic, to later Christian opinions, to try to resolves a philosophical difficulty to determine human identity.

Locke addresses more directly the Platonic idea of preexistent souls concerning “Identity and Diversity,” wherein he asks about the soul, “immaterial Being,” being conscious of actions of the past, but stripped of all the consciousness of its past existence, (preexistence memory loss in the next state of existence), beyond the power of ever retrieving those memories again. To then have a new beginning a new Account from a new period, (entering mortal life), to then have consciousness that cannot reach beyond this new State of existence. He then suggested: “...All those who hold pre-existence are evidently of this Mind, since they allow the soul to have no remaining consciousness of what it did in that pre-existent State.... [But] personal identity, reaching no further than consciousness reaches, a pre-existent Spirit... must needs make different Persons.”¹³⁰⁵

1646–1716, Gottfried Leibniz, German philosopher, in commenting about Plato’s reminiscence concepts, comes up with another variation on preexistence themes, while calling for the purging of “the error of pre-existence.” Philosophizing on how nothing can be taught us that we haven’t already had in our minds, he goes on to suggest that Plato got it right when he brought up his doctrine of reminiscence, this, contains a great deal of truth, “provided that it is properly understood and purged of the error of pre-existence.” Thus, noting the recalling process of preexistent memories, in Platonic versions, Leibniz sees some truth in the recalling aspects, but not in the pre-existence aspects. Using Meno’s example of recollection, he agrees with Plato’s demonstration with the slave boy’s soul being able to know different things, and needs only to be reminded of them to recognize the truths. But these truths weren’t from preexistent memories, argues Leibniz, who fails to separate Plato’s anamnesis from Platonic preexistence, so that he could use some aspects of Plato’s reminiscence, for his version of reminiscence of truths. As Leibniz tried to work his way around preexistence themes, he struggled to find alternates & substitutes of them & that hinted of the same types of concepts found in Platonic preexistence.¹³⁰⁶

1667, Edward Warren, strongly opposed the rise of preexistence themes & these resurgent Origenists, & wrote a treatise, No Præexistence; or, A Brief Dissertation against the Hypothesis of Humane Souls, Living in a State Antecedaneous to This. He notes how debates over preexistence, going back through the centuries, brought up different questions & issues, with opinions that had done nothing to resolve the issues. He was concerned that preexistence was being used as a solution to resolve different complicated questions. He notes how the opinions offered in the then current discussions, sounded like Platonic rants, like Origen. In his attacks, he used a common vilification tactic of negative descriptions of preexistence themes to make them sound silly. How the Souls of men existed long before in a divine and blessed state. While they still at length cloyed with the joys of Heaven, they longed for corporeal pleasures. They eventually fell, being struck with ‘fatal dizziness’ which made them ‘topple from their primæval glory,’ falling down into this less happy station. Now, here below, in mortality, they ‘wander in search of coarser matter, suited to their polluted beings.’ How preexisting souls eventually ‘were vested with this gross corporeity’ or body.¹³⁰⁷

1674, La Cour Sainte, Jesuit Father, Nicolas Caussin, wrote of, by that time, legendized pre-existence themes, that of post-war in heaven, post-fall of the fallen angels’ & living conditions in hell, to which also those damned would have to endure. These are the legendized settings which are where the activities of the fallen angels, many which crashed down into, according to art works, & writings, for when some of the fallen angels hit the earth, during their fall, they hit so hard that they kept crashing down into the underworld. Hell, thus often depicted as a cavern or pit, under the ground, is where all kinds of what sounds like volcanic activities take place. Thus, Nicolas described these infernal regions, like others have. He mentions how Tertullian said hell was a dark deep pit of stench, into which all the offal, or bowel waist of the whole world flows down into. He wrote how Hugo of St. Vicor had described hell as an abyss without a bottom, with open gates of despair, & where all hope is abandoned, & how it has an eternal pool of fire. Caussin gives the typical gloomy descriptions: glowing coals, flickering flames, the damned are made to “rest” if they ever can, on serpents & vipers, how the nights of hell are hopeless darkness.¹³⁰⁸

The 17th—19th centuries, saw an increased legendization of pre-existence themes, which is hard to put an exact date on. One reason is because of the slow process by which fables blend in with others, to create superstitious world views. In these later centuries, the blends with superstitious beliefs of what the fallen-angel-demons were doing on earth, after the war in heaven, & their post-fall from heaven activities. Plus, the superstitious paranoid views about there being demons almost everywhere, in different animal shapes, insects, water nymphs, dust, under water, in caves, under the ground, as birds in the skies, certain types especially, out and about, tempting & getting people to perform witchcraft. These beliefs caused a lot of harm to societies, as thought policing became more harsh, as covered earlier. To sum that up here, it was believed that the post-fall activities of fallen angels were behind every creak, noise, bumps in the night, & howlings of the wind. The results of the apostasy, by these later times, were causing people to be burned as witches all over Europe & in the New England Colonies of America. All kinds of torturing devices for satanic inspired “heretics,” & devil-worshipping witches were used to get forced confessions. The most horrid evils done in the name of cleansing “Christian” societies of said evils. The doctrine of the pre-existence, by these times, having turned so completely into superstitious fables, that only fragments remained in the far away town throughout later Christendom. While in other cases, art works, illumination manuscripts, & legends still retain a lot of recognizable aspects of the beliefs, as preserved in later Christian church libraries. The monks, who copied the earlier books, did a fairly good job, though there were a lot of mistakes too, in preserving many basic earlier beliefs, while amongst the peasantry, themes were becoming more legendized into faded fables. Such fables included how the fallen angels had fallen down into the watery areas, marshes, rivers, & lakes, & other haunts, such as the wooded areas. Some in the deep forests, mountains, & under ground, under hill areas. Others had fallen into the deep areas of the underworld. The different races of the fallen angels were believed to be the goblins, dwarfs, elves, trolls, nymphs, water spirits. Some of these water spirits, were not only fallen angels, but were said to be the souls of un-born babies, or babies that had died un-baptized. Thus, the spirits of the dead, the spirits of the unborn, or yet to be born, & the fallen angels were sometimes mingled with each other in the unseen world of the spirit world that was all around. There were spirits of the disembodied, who had once lived as mortals on the earth & who haunted their old places were they once lived. These were the ghost-stories of fairy tails & Halloween type lore. The post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen-angel-devils included such superstitious beliefs that demons could be as small as dust & thus gets in through the nose, causing people to sneeze. Hence, the traditional saying of God-bless-you!¹³⁰⁹

1635, some portions of the art work to the title page of Thomas Heywood's book shows the fall of Lucifer, with his angels, into the jaws of hell.¹³¹⁰

1650, French book, Michael, casting Lucifer out of heaven, stands on top of him while thrusting a spear into his stomach.¹³¹¹

About the mid-17th century, onwards, in Celtic countries & the English Puritans, “Imps,” small creatures, were said to be & mean “a small devil, an off-shoot of Satan, but the distinction between GOBLINS OR BOGLES and imps from hell is hard to make, and many of the Celtic countries as well as the English Puritans regarded all FAIRIES as devils.” Thus, “...with the growth of Puritanism the view of the fairies became darker and the fallen angels began to be regarded as downright devils, with no mitigating feature. We find this in 17th century England.”¹³¹²

John Milton, 1608-1674, a Protestant, a revolutionist, a subjectivist (the beliefs in a doctrine that knowledge is merely subjective & that there is no external or objective truth. Subjectivism is the philosophical tenet that our own mental activity is the only unquestionable fact of our experience. What is true & ethical for all, might not be for one's self. What is harmful for all, might not affect one's self in a negative way. That kind of thinking).¹³¹³ Milton, like a number of earlier Christians, rejected the preexistence, while believing or writing about other aspects of preexistence themes, like Tertullian & others did too. Milton rejects preexistence, because he believed that humans' creation in God's image recounted in Genesis 1:26 necessarily entailed the creation at that time and place of what most likens us to God—our souls. The soul was then formed, & thus it precludes us from attributing preexistence before that creation. However, Milton also wasn't opposed to employing the notion of preexistence before creation, when it suited him in his poetic works on combining many preexistence themes, such as the fall of Lucifer & his followers, & their post-fall activities. Milton also, in Comus, a pastoral play, pays tribute to Plato's conception of pre-mortality, with his reference to “the prison'd soul”.¹³¹⁴

1667, in his Paradise Lost, John Milton preserved basic concepts of the story of the fall of Satan and his angels, but of which, by this time was in a legendized form.¹³¹⁵ In Milton's version of legendized pre-existence themes, before the material universe is created by God, he creates the angels through the power of his Son, the Word. The hosts of heaven are then called before his throne to witness the exaltation of his Son. One of the greatest of these angels was Lucifer, his rank is deliberately unclear, but Milton calls him an archangel, in command of seraphim and cherubim. However, he had such high dignity in heaven that after his fall he naturally became kin of hell.

Lucifer-Satan or the Devil's envy & anger was due to the elevation of the Son above himself. His rebellion was before the creation of the material universe, including the human race on earth. The angels were given free will, for God does not rule what choice they make. Satan before his fall was made just and right but could choose to freely fall, which he did because of pride too. The war in heaven is poetically described by Milton, who personified poetically Sin, who is Satan's daughter. Satan's first act as a sinner was to cause some of his fellow angels to rebel. Satan withdrew his followers from the hosts of angels that surrounded the throne of God, & he set up his own seat in the north of heaven. He argued that the angels need not obey God. Sense they can't remember the act of creation, God's claims to have made them, Satan argued, could be a lie. He then suggested that they could be self-begotten, & self-raised beings. The rebellion & war in heaven was traditionally over in one mighty battle. Milton's version took longer, the first battle was a stalemate, but then God sent his Son to help Michael on the third day & the rebels were soon cast down, for where Michael had been totally unsuccessful, the Son triumphed easily. The fall from heaven, through the air, down into the fire, took 9 days. Hell according to Milton, who followed Dante's legendary poetic tradition, was located at the center of the earth. The problem was that the earth had not yet been created, so how could hell have been at the center of the earth. This was a problem in Milton's chronology. The answer to this problem was that although Milton described hell with physical imagery of the interior of the planet, his hell is not really in the earth. But rather it is a symbolic metaphor to depict Satan fall into a state where all life dies, & death lives. It is an abode for those who choose nothingness over reality. Milton seems to have thus presented his own particular version of the fall of the angels which many people might not have agreed with, while others might have considered. Milton goes on, for now that the angels had fallen, God proceeds to create the physical world. In so doing this, God makes up for Satan's depredations, & eventually the human race will make up for the fallen angels. Milton also poetically depicts Satan & his fallen host's demonification process. After their fall they had, in their nature still remain somewhat angelic, but their wills became evil, & their outward appearance gradually changes to match the distortion of their wills. The continuing deterioration of Satan's character is matched by the increasing grotesqueness of his appearance. His warping continues for ever and ever, as with all those who follow him. Satan had thought that he would be able to defeat the Almighty and end up with even greater glory than God. But now Satan's glory had fallen from him & he was caught in a retrogression process that made him even more un-glorified than his former glory had ever been. Satan had also promised his fallen host that they would eventually defeat the Almighty and end up with even greater glory than before their fall.¹³¹⁶

As earlier Christian doctrines eventually became legendized, or as later Christians, turned unto fables, a lot of basic elements to pre-existence themes got confused, chronologies of pre-existence events changed, & other themes were blended into the stories, art works, poems & legends. THE FALL OF THE ANGELS in Milton's Paradise Lost, is a good case in point of the legendization process, though it gives us the most beautiful version of that legendary revolt of the angels which was led by Lucifer. The archangel Michael, as Prince of the Church Militant, and Captain-General of the Angelic Legions, was the one deputed by the Almighty to lead the celestial forces against the rebel hosts. The victorious Michael cast Lucifer headlong out of heaven. The rebel-angels he puts in chains in mid-air, where they could see above them the heaven they had forfeited; and beneath them the earth, from which constantly ascends the souls of the redeemed, going to the presence of God, from which they had shut themselves out. Thus, they were made to suffer the perpetual torments of envy, hatred, and despair till the Day of Judgment. However, in the Legends about WARS FOR THE SOVEREIGNTY OF HEAVEN, are very confusing, different and contradictory.¹³¹⁷

John Milton recounts the events which occurred in heaven, the rebellion of Lucifer, and the dominion which he would assume over the earth, to which he was cast down. He pictures Satan in human form, with a serpent with forked tongue and dripping fangs about his feet.¹³¹⁸

The fate of the fallen rebellious angels is also one of the pre-existence themes that Milton wrote about with legendary elements blended with scriptural aspects. The fiery furnace, the utter darkness, and their far removal from God and the light of heaven. Their fall was so far in contrast of the opposite side that it was like the difference between day & night. For hell, Oh how unlike the place, heaven, from whence they fell! As the legend unfolds, Beelzebub & Satan talked about what happened, how that their fall had not only completely changed the beauty of where they once had been, to horrid conditions in hell, but how that they also had been changed. Clothing imagery helped present the contrast, for they were once clothed in brightness, but now had put on blackness. No longer allowed into the happy realms of light, or no longer clothed with transcendent brightness. In contrast, they were now in the realm of misery, ruin, fallen down into the pit. Poetically Milton presents war in heaven themes of the armed innumerable spirits that raged an eternal war against the others. Thus, post-fall activities, the fallen ones' misery, laments, & desires to try to return, even by force of arms, if possible, are poetically illustrated too in the art works that illustrate Milton's version of legendized pre-existence themes. As if familiar with early Christian beliefs, Milton mentions the fallen angel as also being an apostate angel.¹³¹⁹

1688, John Baptist Medina, Lucifer is depicted after his fall in hell with the souls of the sinners, thus illustrating a part of John Milton's Paradise Lost.¹³²⁰

"That the fall of the angels was before the existence of man would seem to have been largely accepted by early writers is evident by their apology for the creation of man, who, they state, was created to fill the vacancies caused in heaven by the loss of so many of the angelic host. This idea lent itself to the pen of Milton:—"But, lest his heart exalt him in the harm - Already done to have dispeopled Heaven, - My damage fondly deem'd I can repair - That detriment, if such it be, to lose - Self-lost, and in a moment will create - Another world, out of one man a race - Of men innumerable, there to dwell, - Not here, till by degree of merit raised, - They open to themselves at length the way Up hither."¹³²¹

18TH CENTURY A.D.: In the church at Arbanasi, Bulgaria, later 17th early 18th century icon, of St. George, killing the dragon, again reminds us of Michael, the dragon slayer.¹³²²

Early 1700s, a winged St. Michael, holding a cross-staff in his left hand. Another depiction shows a stone figure of St. Michael or an angel of the Apocalypse in the dress of an Inca warrior, from the church of San Lorenzo, Bolivia.¹³²³

1714, an anonymous writer, (Abel Evans?), wrote a poem that reflects influences from Neo-Platonism & early 2nd century Basilides, who espoused the preexistence of souls, & early Christian Gnostic preexistence themes. Such as how preexistent souls, when they were born, are said to be imprisoned in matter, or each their own physical bodies. Entitled: "Pre-Existence: A Poem, in Imitation of Milton," it tells of the scenes in heaven, during the post-war in heaven, & post-fall of the fallen angels down into hell. For amongst the defeated rebellious angels, there were some of them that were repentant enough to be there, for when the victorious hosts returned from winning the war in heaven, after that battle, they found that not all dissenters were eternally damned. The victorious angels found a suppliant throng of repentant rebels, who had effectively pleaded to God for clemency, & decreed pardons, as God softened & decreed their eventual return to the light. However, their return would be granted only after they had gone through a harsh, painful, & horrific penance process that was designed to deter any future rebellion. Thus, as part of their punishment, according to this poetic version of preexistence themes, the repentant rebel angels would have to become humans, descend down to be imprisoned in walls of clay, or each their own physical body. This entombment in flesh and diverse situations in a fallen world, would entail all kinds of sufferings, physical travails, & existential horrors that humans sometimes have to go through in mortal life. They are as fettered spirits (chained or shackled & imprisoned), displaced from heaven. The author of the poem also hints to the loss of memory, or memory-wash of the preexistence, in addition to a decline in fortune for those repentant rebel angels, who have suffer penalization, before returning to the light, or back to heaven. Their memories are washed clean in order to prevent them from longing for their past glories, & to deter agonizing longings for their heavenly home, while as humans. This version of preexistence themes consisted of a blend of different ancient versions to give it the a legendized type of feel to it.¹³²⁴

In New Mexico Spanish folk art, which grew out of and away from the art forms of the Baroque phase of the Renaissance that prevailed in Mexico during this century, the Quill Pen Santero of three angels, Raphael, Michael & Gabriel, shows Michael standing on a large spotted leopard. His sword is raised, as is also the judgment scale. Again hinting to war in heaven & post war angelic participants.¹³²⁵

1-17-1706 [or 1-6-1705?]-4-17-1790, Benjamin Franklin, one of the founding fathers of the United States of America, notes how during his time: "There are objections to the doctrine of pre-existence. But it seems to have been invented with a good intention, to save the honor of the Deity, which was thought to be injured by the supposition of his bringing creatures into the world to be miserable, without any previous misbehavior of theirs to deserve it.”¹³²⁶

About a century after John Milton, (1608–1674), Laurence Dermott, 1756, a would-be historian of Masonry, tells of a project to trace the history of his masonic brotherhood he was involved in, not only back to Adam, in his sylvan Lodge in Paradise, but to try to give an account of the masonic craft back before the creation of the earth. To show that the traces of Masonry go back to its foundations in pre-mortality. But he didn’t follow through with the project, & ended up giving little references to the preexistence of Masonry, promising more, but delivering.¹³²⁷

1763, Abraham Tucker, (1705–1774), an English philosopher, writing under the name, Edward Search, sets out to refute the doctrine of preexistence. While earlier, he asserts that it had, by his day, been so “universally exploded,” that he felt he didn’t need to waste time refuting it. One aspect he grappled with was the age old platonic concept of pre-mortal sins done to present sufferings. He argued that every old woman knows that the soul of the child was created at the very instance when the mother felt herself quick, or felt the baby moving in her womb. He also couldn’t allow the soul to have a memory loss of the preexistence too. (Tertullian & Irenaeus also took issues with the memory loss aspects of preexistence themes too).¹³²⁸

1688–1772, Emanuel Swedenborg, Swedish mystic, who wrote of his claims to visitations to & from the spirit world; he alternately affirmed & rejected human preexistence. In Spiritual Diary (1747–1764), the human family existed before their nativity, as they will exist afterwards, or after death. Then in his last work, 1771, he reversed his position, claiming that the belief of souls entering into bodies, or that preexistence was “the fables of the ancients.”¹³²⁹

1724–1804, Immanuel Kant, influential German thinker, dogmatically taught the preexistence of the soul, but shifted the concept from a sphere before, to a sphere outside, the temporal continuum. Thus, he thought of preexistence as an existence that was outside of time, & not subject to time, an existence which lies outside the realm of experience. So it wasn’t the typical traditional type of preexistence theme, but one that was philosophized even further than others had been, while going down the same paths that Plato & Origen were on. Thus, according to Kant’s version: In this realm, not of this earth or time, human beings made choices that condition the nature they inherit upon birth in this world. (So, in Kant, there seems to be possible fragments of the influence of the preexistence theme of free will, pre-mortal sinning, or good merits, post-pre-existence judgment, & punishments, being sent into diverse conditions on earth according to pre-mortal choices). Fragments of a type of fall predating even Adam makes up the ingredient of Kant’s version of preexistence themes too, although he called the Christians’ version of Adam’s fall the most inept of all the explanations of the spread & propagation of evil. As is sometimes the case with those who reject the biblical accounts of the origins of evil, (an issue answered by preexistence themes, war in heaven, fall of the rebellious angels, etc), the philosophers like Nietzsche, Heidegger, Wittgenstein, & others, often create their own “myth” of the fall.¹³³⁰

A late 18th century, or early 19th century metal work shows Satan, with wings like a bat, being pinned to the ground under the feet of Michael, who is thrusting a lance into Satan’s mouth or throat.¹³³¹

1749–1832, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, Romantic poet, authored of Faust, presents the German folklore, the pre-existence themes of post-fall activities of the demons are part of Faust lore. Thus, in some versions of medieval demon lore, Mephistopheles was second only to Lucifer among the fallen archangels. A German Renaissance folk legend which gained literary prominence with Marlowe and Goethe, Mephistopheles is the devil who is summoned by the aged scholar-magician Faust and heaps all pleasures on him in return for his soul. Goethe’s Faust inspired an incredible number of literary, theatrical and musical adaptations, as well as a host of illustrations, including those by Delacroix. Faust was etched by Rembrandt. Mephistopheles was also drawn in a French occult manuscript, La Magie Noire, Paris, nineteenth century.¹³³² For Goethe, preexistence themes were the life of the past, while deification would become the life of the future. The exalted ancestral realms (Gefilden hoher Ahnen), connote a distant past that anticipates future glory, for there was a shadowy, pre-mortal existence that is behind us, and theosis is the eventual destiny awaiting us subsequent to our return to glory there.¹³³³

William Blake, 1757–1827, an English Romantic, embracing Platonic preexistence, offers a legendized version of different aspects of the pre-existence story, such as the fall of satan & his followers into hell. One of his works show satan & two others falling down out into the fires of hell. He makes reference to a number of Biblical passages. Luke 10:18, 2 Cor.4:4; Psa.82, Rev. 12:10, Job 1:6-7. Blake seems to have suggested that satan fell during the last judgment. And made reference to Rev.12:10.¹³³⁴ 1789, in The Book of Thel, Blake presents a direct treatment of preexistence, where the soul is schooled in a world before mortality. Where the characters in it, Clay, offers Thel the rare option of entering mortality & returning to her pre-mortal home.¹³³⁵ In 1821, Blake depicted The Cycle of the Life of Man, “It seems to represent the cycle of the life of man, spiritual and material, and according to Sir Geoffrey Keynes ‘the two central figures probably represent Albion or Man and his female counterpart Vala, who indicates with her right hand that Man must descend into material existence, and with her left hand that he can ascend again to the regions of the spirit.... the circle of symbolic figures, all representing some part of the mystical process of creation, incarnation, death and spiritual restoration.’”¹³³⁶

Blake goes into post-war in heaven themes too, for Satan is the Accuser of our Brethren & is Cast down which accused them before our God day and night. What happened to the fallen angels after their fall? Blake as well as earlier Christians preserved bits and hints of this story, though in legendized form. The fallen angels remained rebels against God & the heavens, & continued their war against God in the earthly realm, & in the lower regions of the earth, the spirit prison. Which prison, became also their own spirit prison too. The devil & his demons, according to tradition & art works, they became the accuser who would point out any sin, etc., during Last Judgment scenes. Michael the archangel is often depicted as holding the scale which measures the deeds (both good & bad), which were done in earth life. Michael is therefore the protector of souls. Demons are also depicted as dark little monsters attempting to hang on the scale in order to tip it. Thus color symbolism, perhaps becoming literalized, continued during this century. Michael, in some art works thrust the demon through with a weapon, in order to assure a fair judgment. Perhaps satan was an accuser in the council in heaven, saying all kinds of things to get 1/3 of the hosts of spirits to follow him. But also in post-war in heaven times, at the Last Judgment, according to traditions, etc. Satan & his demons are again accusers. Though Blake present in his art work the satan’s fall as having taken place before the throne of God. Thus, to what extent did Blake know about the earlier Christian doctrines & art works of the council in heaven, before the war in heaven & the rebel-angels’ fall? ¹³³⁷

19TH CENTURY A.D.: 1804, Thomas Taylor, (1758–1835), championed Plato’s version of preexistence being rediscovered again. With imagery to wings, through the flight from divinity, the dropping off of those wings, we fell into this mortal abode. Thus, the soul, while an inhabitant of earth, is in a fallen condition, an apostate from Deity, exiled from the orb of light. However, this apostasy from our better nature, is to be healed by a flight from hence. The soul’s wings restored, healed, would help return the soul back to that pre-mortal state which it fell from. Thus, Taylor includes deification themes in with preexistent themes, when the soul recovered her pristine perfection, she governs the world in conjunction with the gods.¹³³⁸

1772–1834, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, British Romanticism, to his son Hartley, gave a pronouncement on preexistence, but publicly distanced himself from the doctrine. In a poetic hints, he presents the idea of a flash of memory of the preexistence, or some unknown past & then goes on how: “We liv’d, ere yet this robe of flesh we wore.” A play titled Remorse, the preexistence themes of mortal life as penance, & mortal life as a fall into mortal bodies, & other poems tainted with Platonic preexistence themes, were part of his personal version of preexistence. Poems called “Melancholy,” “Dejection,” & “Fears in Solitude” but also personal views through personal reflections on the possibilities of souls’ preexistence, were hinted to in also letters to a friend, John Thelwall, & Thomas Poole, how that “men are degraded Intelligences, who had once all existed, at one time & together, in a paradisiacal or heavenly state.”¹³³⁹

1803–06, William Wordsworth, (7 April 1770 – 23 April 1850), a major English Romantic poet, wrote: Ode: Intimations of Immortality, From Recollections of Early Childhood. In it, are pre-existence themes, which as noted by Terry L. Givens, such themes have assumed various forms, at various times: “These themes in any case blur into each other and fail to fully capture the scope and richness of the formal defenses, poetic celebrations, and implicit apologies for preexistence. But they recur often enough to suggest that serious thinkers over a span of more than two millennia have believed that significant intellectual, religious, and emotional ends were well served by the notion of a human soul that arrived in mortality, “trailing clouds of glory,” having originated in a time and place the other side of birth.”¹³⁴⁰ Does William Wordsworth hint to his own childhood recollection of the pre-existence? Or one heard from other parents who heard stories from their children? Or did he hear things from his own children? Whatever might be the case, Wordsworth’s poem does hint to such memory blocks of a pre-existence, in the words: “THERE was a time when meadow, grove, and stream, The earth, and every common sight, To me did seem Apparell’d in celestial light, The glory and the freshness of a dream.... The things which I have seen I now can see no more.” [Stanza I]. (My question is here, was this in reference to how in some cases, the memory of a pre-existence, starts to fade out, as children grow older? Further on in the poem): “...A single Field which I have looked upon, Both of them speak of something that is gone: The Pansy [a plant of the viola family, with flowers in rich colors] at my feet Doth the same tale repeat: Whither is fled the visionary gleam? Where is it now, the glory and the dream? [Stanza IV] Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting: The Soul that rises with us, our life’s Star, Hath had elsewhere its setting, And cometh from afar: Not in entire forgetfulness, And not in utter nakedness, But trailing clouds of glory do we come From God, who is our home: Heaven lies about us in our infancy! Shades of the prison-house begin to close Upon the growing Boy, But He beholds the light, and whence it flows, He sees it in his joy... [Stanza V]. At length the Man perceives it die away, And fade into the light of common day.... The homely Nurse doth all she can To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Man, Forget the glories he hath known, And the imperial palace whence he came. [Stanza VI] ... Thou little Child, yet glorious in the might Of heaven-born freedom on thy being’s height, [Stanza VIII] (Comments: He goes on to seemingly hint to possible memory loss of the pre-existence, from where the soul came from. Memories, or perhaps those shadowy recollections, that were falling from us, or vanishing. Further on he again hints): “...Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea Which brought us hither, Can in a moment travel thither... [Stanza IX]. (Question: Our souls came from heaven, to one day return back home?). Others have also noted the pre-existence themes in this poem includes the memory block too: “The poem relies on the concept of Pre-existence, the idea that the soul existed before the body, to connect children with the ability to witness the divine within nature. As children mature, they become more worldly and lose this divine vision...”¹³⁴¹ In 1863, Charles Kingley, (1819–1875), The Water Babies, cites part of Wordsworth’s poem as containing pre-existence themes.¹³⁴² Plus, Sir Oliver Lodge, 1910, acknowledge Wordsworth, as teaching the pre-existence,¹³⁴³

1792–1822, Percy Bysshe Shelley, was one of the few Romantics to engage in real philosophical reflections on preexistence, which quest was out side the conventional orthodoxies. Plato’s version, still influencing such quests, there is the story related by his friend Thomas Jefferson Hogg that tells of Shelley’s interest in preexistence. He is reported to have asked a woman with a child on Magdalen Bridge: “Will your baby tell us anything about pre-existence, Madam?” He repeated the question, and she responded: “He cannot speak, Sir.” In poetry, Shelley continued hints to preexistence, like in his unfinished “Prince Athanase” (1817), his Byronic hero is tormented by memories of preexistence, “that memories of an ante-mortal life / Made this, where now he dwelt, a penal hell.” In 1821, in Epipsychidion, he repeats the allusion in love lyrics to his beloved Emily, who in those realms beyond & before time, he laments his love should have found its first expression, rather than later in mortality. How that in the preexistence, perhaps signified by the fields of immortality, his spirit should have at first worshiped her spirit, as if divine. Could Shelley being wondering, based on preexistence-themes: Who was she before she was born? Did he seem to be hint to who she was before birth in how that she was ‘a divine presence in a place divine.’? As if his regrets are, that he hadn’t recognized her ‘divine’ pre-mortal self, upon seeing her beauty in her mortal body then. Does he then seems to hint to this in the words, ‘or should have moved beside it on this earth, a shadow of that substance, from its birth.’? Shelley, like Lord Byron (1788–1824), were both dismissed by establishment critics as member of the “Satanic school” of poetry, which is ironic, when we consider the preexistence themes that go with understanding who Satan was, a fallen angel.¹³⁴⁴ Surely, as different ones considered mortals as pre-existent beings, now clothed in each their own body, including themselves, they must have wonder who they were before they were born. But for such doctrines & concepts to even be considered, in poetry, philosophy, & other areas of study, could bring rejection, discriminations, negative labels from those who reject & oppose such beliefs.

1788–1824, Lord Byron, in Cain, Lucifer is asked by Cain’s wife, where he dwells. The demon answers, “heaven and earth— and that / Which is not heaven nor earth, but peopled with / Those who once peopled or shall people both— / These are my realms!” Lucifer also takes Cain on a tour of the cosmos, where he sees, compressed in different spheres, all the layers of human history. Cain asked where they were flying to, & Lucifer answers that they were going to the world of phantoms, which are beings past, and shadows still to come. What preexistence theme might have been included here, are unclear possible fragments of post-fall from heaven activities of Lucifer, but in rather almost legendized formats that follows after the imagination of poetry.¹³⁴⁵

About the 19th century, some of the old theories about the Slavic traditions, includes links to pre-existence themes that they must have incorporated in their traditions. For one theory about the origins of the spirits, that populates the imaginative landscapes of the Slavs, is that they are linked to “a war in Heaven, lending a dark cruelty to these mischievous enigmas.” The Orthodox Church didn’t look to kindly on Slavs, who were pagans, & their superstitious ideas, so they turned to their own spiritual understanding about what fragments of pre-existence themes that they still had: “The tale of the expulsion of Satan and his demonic hordes from Heaven has since become part of Slavic folklore. Driven out by his Lord and Creator as punishment for his outrageous insubordination, Satan hurtled downwards through the heavens, his damned followers falling at his heels.” These rebellious hosts of acolytes that had assisted Satan in his rebel acts, fell upon different fates: The dwarves, or “karliki” fell with him to the underworld, where they labor in those forms. The “leshie” took refuge in the forests, where they bring about all kinds of mischief & misfortune. The “vodyanye,” fell into the lakes, rivers, & became the water-spirits, where they still swim. The “vozdushnye,” stayed in the sky, winging their way upon the gusting air currents, causing tornadoes, & directing the destruction of storms. The “domovye” took up residence as domestic spirits in the homes of humanity. Their version of these aspects of pre-existence themes, turned into legends, still offered explanations for different problems & natural disasters. In that such things were believed to be God’s punishments for disobedience. Thus: “The legend of the fallen angels, therefore, offered a simple way of extending the Christian creed to embrace still-important aspects of Slavic life.”¹³⁴⁶

Also, in addition to the Slavonic traditions about some of the fallen angels being dwarfs: “There was an old Saxon tradition... [besides another, a] quaint legend which affirms the belief that dwarfs were made by the devil.”¹³⁴⁷

1818, a bronze work shows a fallen Satan, with bat wings, under the feet of the victorious Michael who thrusts him through with a lance.¹³⁴⁸

1825, Dr. Ashbel Green (1762–1848), a minister and past president of Princeton University, propounded in Christian Advocate, which he published, an issue of the publication that had a defense of preexistence. To him, the preexistence was the safest & most rational version for explaining the origins for the soul. He thought it the best of all the versions, “to suppose that ALL souls were created at the beginning of the world; that they remain in a quiescent state [or in a state or period of inactivity] till the bodies which they are to inhabit are formed.” To this article & defense, author & minister George Duffield responded in print, in 1832, that of this: “We know not whether to smile or frown.”¹³⁴⁹ Consequently, during this time, though preexistence was being defended by many, it was also rejected by many, a lot who were Christians.

1831, Wilhelm Benecke, (1776–1837), late in life, came to religious studies, at Heidelberg Germany, & believed that preexistence was an important key to unlock the theological difficulties of St Paul’s letter to the Romans, in An Exposition of St. Paul’s Epistle to the Romans.¹³⁵⁰ For some reason, Benecke saw in Romans 5:12-14, how “Pre-existence is taught in express words. I only maintain that the Apostle’s argument leads us quite to assume it.” He goes on to present the old preexistence theme of pre-mortal sinning, “Where, then, could they [all those who’ve live from Adam to Moses] have transgressed a divine law, for they had none given them in their human existence?” The answer to this, Benecke suggests, is that for allowing the possibility that of pre-mortal sinning: “I put it to yourself and every unprejudiced thinker, whether, allowing the premise, any other answer can be given than that which I have drawn from them; namely, in an ante-human existence!” One critics notes that this was what Benecke was suggesting, but claims that it was untenable: “He supposes, with Origen, that every man has sinned by himself, not, however, in this world, but in a state of pre-existence.” The critic then offers his own anti-preexistence interpretation, claiming that the Scripture doesn’t acknowledge any personal preexistence, but that God knows the future as the present. Thus, the critic gives the old, foreknowledge of God, argument. Or the divine foreknowledge, no preexistence of souls.¹³⁵¹

1840, preexistence, still not an acceptable doctrine by many, when defended caused outrage in those who rejected it. Such was reported was the case with the Presbyterian Christian Observer, when reader learned about their own Dr. Ashbel Green (1762–1848), had done an article in the 1825 issue of Christian Advocate, that defended preexistence. The editor of the Observer complained that the belief was a “monstrous hypothesis,” while a reader calls preexistence, the most monstrous speculation, unscriptural, anti-scriptural, and absurd.¹³⁵²

1859, Johann Friedrich Bruch (1792–1874), theologian, noted a virtual renaissance of the idea of preexistence in Germany, & published an entire volume on the history of Teachings on the Preexistence (Die Lehre von der Präexistenz).¹³⁵³ He traces it from Pythagoras to its demise under the 553 AD edict of Justinian, and saw it reemerge during the 18th–19th centuries amongst German philosophers & theologians, naming some of them: Friedrich Schelling, Wilhelm Benecke, Julius Müller, Friedrich Rückert, Johann August Ernesti, and Immanuel Hermann Fichte & Immanuel Kant, (1724–1804), as all responsible for helping to rescue & resurrect the preexistence idea, from fading out, as that it was almost “totally and forever forgotten,” by the close of the 18th century.¹³⁵⁴ Thus, Bruch notes: “It appeared that the theory of a pre-earthly existence of the human soul had been totally and forever forgotten; after all, Catholicism had rejected it and it had been discarded by the Protestants... However, the question emerged again in the modern era, albeit in a different form and the theory found capable apologists among the most eminent philosophers and theologians.”¹³⁵⁵

1803–1895, Edward Beecher, born in America, into a famous reform-minded & theological family, & as a theologian, he wrote an extensive & widely read defense of the preexistence. It was a 400 page manifesto, the boldest and most detailed exposition on the doctrine of preexistence in religious history, The Conflict of Ages, or, The Great Debate on the Moral Relations of God and Man, published 1853, 1854, & 1855, etc.¹³⁵⁶ He asked: “Are we to suppose that in all these past ages there were no intelligent beings in existence? . . . The existence of some of the angels from the beginning of the creation, and the creation of other intelligent spirits from that time onward, in other parts of the Creator’s kingdom,... are in the highest degree reasonable and probable.”¹³⁵⁷

1854, one preexistence theme that still haunted Christendom, is the post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, sometimes also thought of as “lost angels.” According to lore, after their fall down into the deep places of the earth, some into the lakes, rivers, forests, woods, caves & seas, to become legendary creatures. What happened to them, & where are they now? How did they get lost to the knowledge of the human family? They certainly weren't lost to God's all seeing eyes, but what about to the knowledge of those militant angels that fought against them? As doctrine had been rejected to become philosophical concepts, as philosophical ideas became rejected or accepted concepts to debate over. The later versions became more & more legendized too, which may be why Beecher speculated that the human race were "the fragments of a demon army, long ago tried and lost."¹³⁵⁸ Others, upon noting this concept of Beecher, couldn't accept such speculations, which they thought weren't backed up by scriptures, & dismissed the whole scheme: "The very idea of being an old demon, recreated, or rather reconstructed, and brought into this life for a second trial, strikes us as inexpressibly ludicrous, nay, we ought rather to say, intensely horrible."¹³⁵⁹

1855, a Baptist reviewer notes Beecher's arguments to answer the problem of human suffering and God's justice. Then goes on to vilify Beecher's solution, in the Universalist Quarterly and General Review, as so destitute of direct support, and so incredible in itself that it didn't need refuting.¹³⁶⁰ Plus, how that "...people will not believe themselves to be ancient spirits, newly born into this world, from a pre-existent state of which they have no trace of remembering nor of Revelation..."¹³⁶¹ The old issue & question of: Why humans can't remember their pre-existent identity, or life? This, must have been argued over again, during this time too.

As noted earlier, the preexistence had offered answers to different issues, plus, answers to earlier anti-Christian charges that claimed Christ neglected other people in other nations. Early Christians had answered this by having Christ pre-exist, & going to other nations, even before his birth to Mary. As Beecher's book had generated old almost forgotten discussions again, different ones noted that his book had shone a spot light on a fatal defect in Christianity, which Beecher's book was acknowledge could help repair. While others charged he had too many flawed speculations & conclusions that they disavowed themselves from, while his work had some appeal to many.¹³⁶²

1865, or during the American Civil War, Charles Beecher, Edward's brother, noted that the debates over the preexistence were eclipsed in the media of the time, for a while, by the excitement with Civil War coverages. Years later, a manuscript by his brother Charles Beecher, Life of Edward Beecher, that was submitted to the Illinois College Library in 1950, by a descendant. In a letter by John Beecher to President H. Gary Hudson, on that occasion, the manuscript was said to get into "...Edward's "spiritual" (theological) development and his belief in the pre-existence of the soul, an unfortunate excursion into the realms of heresy which apparently wrecked his [Edward Beecher's] career." Because of preexistence, Edward was called obsessed & delusional, in this letter, dated 3-11-1950.¹³⁶³

1870, the controversial waves for & against preexistence raged on after Beecher's publication, so much so, that the combined printed reviews, criticisms, replies, were reported could fill several volumes the size of the book itself. Other reviewers commented how the book had been honored with remarkable degree of attention, in Newspapers, Magazine Articles, Lectures, books, at the pulpits & religious-press. It was called a problem that proposed discussions, others glorified it as opening new theological discussions, with the book leading the way. It opened up debates that would go on for the next hundred years, some suggested. Others would object to the book as having been "A dream," "inconclusive," "no proof," but such jabs at it, were just the typical responses of the times to a topic that would not simply go away.¹³⁶⁴

Despite on going opposition, rejections, & the vilifications of those who promoted preexistence themes, it was one of those beliefs that kept having prominent advocates for it. Another along side Edward Beecher was Julius Müller (1801–1878), an influential theologian at the University of Halle in Prussia. About 1868, his German work Die christliche Lehre von der Sünde, in 2 volumes, (1839), was translated & published in English in 1868, The Christian Doctrine of Sin. He found & argued that the preexistence of the soul was the only foundational theory of sin and accountability that could be logically based. One critic wrote how he, like Beecher, resorted to preexistence as a way to reconciling other dogmas with the acknowledged attributes & character of God.¹³⁶⁵ Julius saw the issues of free-agency, again, a preexistence theme, as part of the issues over accountability, as the sum of all our choices is realized, how that 'each successive moment is conditioned in some degree by that which has preceded it.' We are where we at right now, because of the sum of our free will choices. Julius realized that the answer to the problems of evil, the consequences of free will choices, the good or bad out-comes in the mortal life, must be considered in light of prior life choices. Thus, pre-mortal existence should be inquired into in order to solve the dilemma of free will: "The course of our inquiry compels us TO LOOK BEYOND THE REGION OF THE TEMPORAL IN ORDER TO FIND THE ORIGINAL SOURCE OF OUR FREEDOM.... Human freedom must have its beginning in a sphere beyond the range of time, wherein alone pure and unconditioned self-determination is possible. In this region we must seek that power of original choice."¹³⁶⁶ Julius notes also that "the idea of a self-decision of the will previous to the birth of the soul in this world ... has been adopted by many."¹³⁶⁷

Like in earlier centuries, when preexistence was used in defense of other beliefs, & used to answer early anti-Christian charges of neglect & borrowing. To make these claims, ancient critics had to first ignored or tried to discredit beliefs they knew about, such as Christ's world wide trek themes, (that would make Christ not neglectful of other nations). Plus, Christ's descent into hell themes, (that would make Christ not neglectful of all those in that realm, as in others). Some ancient critics also made fun of the war in heaven-preexistence themes, (showing that they, like Celsus, knew about them). Doing so, in order to claim that Christ neglected other nations, or pre-Christian nations, or that early Christianity was only a copy of heathen nations' versions of "gods" descending to earth, becoming mortal, dying, descending into the underworld, & resurrecting. (If Christ preexisted, went to other nations, had angels & prophets preaching the gospel in pre-Christian times, then Christ could be charge with neglect. But also, there are parallels because the pagans' & Heathens' forefathers had the gospel but apostatized from it & legendized the beliefs, fragments of which would be passed down to later generations & thus noted). Like how the ancient critics ignored, or tried to discredit or not give credit to the answers given, so also do the later critics. Thus, later writers of the 19th century, in seeing the value in the use of preexistence that early Christian apologists used to answer different issues, may have thought that preexistence could be used to answer the different issues of their day that were being brought up again.¹³⁶⁸ One of these was John P. Lundy, Monumental Christianity, (1875 & 1882), in response to critics who charge that Christianity was borrowed from Pagan or Heathen nations. Lundy used preexistence themes & Christ world wide trek themes together to answer the critics: If Christ was before Abraham, as he said he was, (preexisted), then surely he must have manifested himself to other nations besides the Jews, (Christ's world wide trek). That's why there are parallels between Christian beliefs & Heathen nations' beliefs. T. W. Doane, Bible Myths, 1882 & 1910, knew of Lundy's works, cites him, but ignored his answer, & he did with answers given by early Christian writers.¹³⁶⁹ During the 19th century, while many were turning towards Darwinian "scientific" answers to explain the origins of the soul, & the human family, many others were turning back to the earlier answers offered by preexistence themes. While Darwinism & other scientific claims were used to try to discredit religious beliefs, some, like Norman Pearson & William Kingdon Clifford (1845–1879), "found Darwin to be a new resource, rather than an enemy, in the quest to maintain the viability of preexistence in the presence of new scientific paradigms."¹³⁷⁰

Mid to late 19th century, Andréa Pizzani, Italian, championed preexistence, & believed that modern science offered persuasive support for it. Familiar also with the works of Origen, Pizzani in Pre-existence and Future Existence; or, The Soul Created in the Image of God, preexistence themes are considered, as also hints to deification as being what different plurality of existences were leading up to, a glorious future.¹³⁷¹

1882, Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, defended the doctrine of preexistence, how that "our common ideals of justice, love, and beauty, testify to, for they constitute, the preexistent man of Plato, and by reason of them all children are more alike than they are different...." They were in the preexistence with the Father. Peabody also used the concept of Vincenzo Gioberti, Italian philosopher, (1801–1852), "the would has seen God before embodiment." Also, the child's birth, (like in Wordsworth's language), need not have an absolute forgetting of the glories the baby has known, & that imperial palace, whence the baby came from.¹³⁷²

1886, Norman Pearson, in an article, logically explores the eternal nature of the soul. If we are to assume that human existence, if it is "eternal on one end," in that from birth the soul being created at the same time as the creation of the body, that soul will last forever. Then: "Has it existed before such birth, either from eternity, or as an antenatal creation? Assuming its pre-existence, under what conditions has it existed?"¹³⁷³

1809–1892, Alfred Lord Tennyson, during the Victorian era, found the preexistence idea to be both a rational for friendships that seem to transcend mortal life back into a pre-mortal realm. How that there are reminders in meeting someone, or doing things with friends, that suggest 'all this has been before,' recognitions in looking into friends' faces, trying to remember often meetings before, somewhere. In "The Two Voices," he defends the belief in a prior existence by comparing the intervening veil of forgetfulness to that of infancy. Coming into live, forgetting, like the first year that is forgotten: "Much more, if first I floated free, As naked essence, must I be [-] Incompetent of memory.... Of something felt, like something here; Of something done, I know not where; Such as no language may declare." In "The Way of the Soul," his In Memoriam, after the loss of a friend, Tennyson considered & pondered on how the departed will remember those people & experiences left behind. But also, the living who remember, imperfectly, their own prior existence, or the preexistence. The lyrical poetical version hinted to pre- & post- phases of human existence, & a return home, a return to primeval origins.¹³⁷⁴

1894, when a poem was published by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, (1828–1882), Tennyson's contemporary. In poetic preexistence themes, says how: "I have been here before, ... You have been mine before... Some veil did fall, — I knew it all of yore."¹³⁷⁵

As time aged Christendom even more, because many earlier Christians had been encouraged to drop many, if not in some cases, the whole concept of a pre-existence, all together. While others concepts were still retained & continued to be legendized in other aspects of different versions of what went on, during the pre-existence. This left some gaps, in understanding the much bigger picture, that of understanding the whole journey of the soul: From the pre-existence, to the earthly tests in a physical body, & the return to the life after life, or returning back home to God to be judged accordingly, in a life review or weighing of souls' deeds, as to what was done by souls all along the way in the journey thus far. So, without clear understandings of the pre-existence as a chapter in that whole journey, many questions had to then be asked, plus, others about other pre-existence themes still retained in other areas of Christendom. Such as, what was the proper chronological time line of events: When did the war in heaven happen? When did the angels fall from heaven? Where did they go? Where did they fall down into? What were they doing now? What did they look like? Where they invisible? Or did they manifest themselves in the evils that people do, or in the howls of the wind, or bumps & eerie unexplained sounds in the night? Did they take possession of humans from time to time? Or the scary looking demon-possessed animals of the dark forests? (In areas of Christendom where there were dense forests). Did they fall down into the watery abyss of the sea? Or inhabit the rivers, lakes & wooded areas? Did some fall down into the underworld, & now lived underground? Where demons the size of nymphs, winged insects, & the size of dust? These were questions that were being asked, & later legendized versions of pre-existence themes offered some dramatic mythical fabled answers in much later centuries.¹³⁷⁶

1835–1893, Phillips Brooks, Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, from his pulpit of Boston's Trinity Church, hints to an unusual preexistent theme, about picturing in our imagination, "the soul praying for life before it has begun to live." He goes on to make reference to a verse from Alexander Pope's poem, "The Messiah: A Sacred Eclogue," 1712, eventually made into a hymn: "See a long race thy spacious courts adorn, See future sons and daughters yet unborn, In crowding ranks on every side arise [-] Demanding life, impatient for the skies." Brooks goes on further: "The cry of the unborn for life!... The unborn come to the birth and life is given." When God answers that prayer. He goes on with this imagery of the Pope's imaginative picture, of spirits praying for life, and of God giving them life, for "...all this God gave them when He answered the prayer of their unborn spirits."¹³⁷⁷ Pope, as if imitating Virgil, the Aeneid, had similarly envisioned unborn spirits anxiously waiting their moment in history to be born, when they'd burst through the mists of pre-mortality on their way to mortality. Hinting to a Platonic type forgetting of the preexistence, & in the tradition of Basilides, mercifully mentally veiled memory, Pope hints to the preexistence memory block, in his Essay on Man, "Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of Fate, / All but the page prescribed, their present state, / ... Or who could suffer being here below?"¹³⁷⁸ Brooks, perhaps influenced by his reading of Origen, Philo & Plato, filled his sermons with preexistence themes, that also showed up in his poetry in mini-allegories. Such as angelic intelligences descending from God, with whom they had pre-existed, to eventually return to the source whence they came from. Souls being homesick for their heavenly home, is what we've seen in early Christian preexistence themes too, as also the return theme.¹³⁷⁹

1812–1889, Robert Browning, during the late Victorian era, the preexistence motifs kept showing up in the poetic genre. The earth changes, but the soul, & God stands sure. The soul enters into the body, as an eternal spirit, that was, is, and shall be.¹³⁸⁰

1838—1907, Francisco Sellén, Cuban poet, spent time in Germany, translated both German & British Romanticism, and produced a melancholy meditation on preexistence that is in English: “I have lived before. Where? That I cannot tell...” He goes on to tell of his soul into the loftier spheres, where he lived and loved before these earthly years. Life in the mortal body is like being chained & exiled. A heritage of sorrow now, veiled an unknown form which once worn. Not being able to remember how, when or where, he wrote: “I only know that I have lived before.”¹³⁸¹

Pre-existence themes in Lore & Legends about Storks
Pulling the Souls of Unborn Babies Out of Rivers, Lakes & Marshy areas, to be Delivered, as New Born
Babies to their Expecting Parents

Storks are large birds that live in & around marshy areas, by rivers & lakes. According to lore, they often will snatch up the different souls of unborn babies, in those watery areas, & fly through all kinds of rough weather, if needs be, & long distances to deliver the new born babies to their waiting parents. Many fairy tales, & later birth announcements used this lore to illustrate post-cards of the April 2, 1805 – August 4, 1875, during the Victorian era, Danish author, Hans Christian Andersen, wrote such works as The Storks, (1838), & popularized a number of fairy tales, some of which have legendized pre-existence themes in them. Some of the legends are concerning the souls of unborn babies that lore says dwell underwater in rivers & lakes, & marshy areas, like other water spirits in other legends. In The Storks, a mother Stork tells her young Stork, what sometimes happens to bad human who had mistreated Storks. She says: “I have thought upon the best way to be revenged. I know the pond in which all the little children lie, waiting till the storks come to take them to their parents.... Now we will fly to the pond and fetch a little baby for each of the children who did not sing that naughty song to make game of the storks.”¹³⁸² The coloring of Storks also has pre-existence themes too, like, in some cases, the white clothed spirits of unborn babies they pull out of the water of lakes, Storks have white coloring, symbolic of purity. But also black in their wings, because, according to lore Satan colored that part of them. (Again, more pre-existence themes, that of post-fall from heaven devilish activities, turned into fables, & in superstitious devil-lore, as to supposed activities of the Devil’s & demons’ doings on earth). Thus, having also a dark-side to them, Storks can be vengeful to humans that mistreat them or their loved ones. Thus, lore says that they sometimes might seek revenge on mean & bad humans by pulling a dead soul baby out of the marshy areas, rivers or lakes, to then leave them at their intended delivery addresses, as still-born babies. Later birth announcement cards, about 1880–1920, illustrate some of these traditions, showing Storks with the souls of unborn babies, near lakes, rivers & marshy areas. Some of the Storks are pulling the unborn-soul-babies out of lakes, in some cases, they are dressed in white, perhaps a reminder of their innocent purity as babies. Other cards show the baby in baskets, in the beak of the Stork, standing, near a river. Another shows the Stork peaking around the tall grass, looking at the souls of unborn babies, as they sit, or rise out of white flowers from lily pads, on the water. Another, shows the Stork, having looped a white cord around the chest & under the arm-pits of a naked soul of the unborn baby, pulling the baby out of the water. Near by, another baby-soul is floating partly on some yellow-white lily flowers. In one card, a frog on a lily pad has a baby-soul, not yet born, for the Stork tells the frog that the time is not right for delivery, thus to put the unborn baby soul back. Another baby arrival announcement card show the Stork holding a baby up, having pulled it out of a marshy watery area, & the red head white soul-baby, dressed in light blue clothing, is crying, as if in protest. Near by, supporting themselves on lily pads are a couple of souls of unborn babies smiling & looking up at the baby about to be taken & delivered. The caption tells of the Stork arriving with cupid’s donation. Thus, a bit of pre-existence lore from cupid’s arrow themes, an angel baby with a bow and arrow that helps unborn angel babies to be born, by shooting them with love-arrows to get couples to fall in love. In art, cupid is often surrounded by baby-angels, sometimes pointing to the couples. Are these baby-angels also the souls of unborn babies, wishing for couples to fall in love? Selecting their parents to be? Whatever might be the case, in this card, cupid is mentioned & thus pre-existence lore seems blended here, as in other cases, when cultures similar fables blend in later centuries, as different cultures share each others’ lore, legends & faded doctrines turned to fables.¹³⁸³

What often happens with fables, legends, & traditions, are how earlier doctrines, such as pre-existence themes, & baptism for the dead themes, & Christ’s world-wide-treks themes, plus others, once they fall out of favor, once they get rejected, in some cases, (like with the Pre-existence themes), by clerical & civil theocracies’ decrees, militant enforced orders, & they also get suppressed. This creates settings for them to become more legendized faster in myth-making settings. But such enforcement settings don’t rid the nations completely of the different versions of the basic beliefs, & different areas to where the doctrine had been spread to. For many still hold on to them, pass them down to later generations, illustrate them in art works, manuscripts, & in oral stories that start to become legends. In time, however, they got almost so lost & so faded that they are hard to see what fragments might still retain bits of the original doctrines & beliefs. It is often the case that these fragments get deposited, centuries later, in later fable makings & therefore mixed up in the later fable-makings, blended with superstitious beliefs, that only fragmented hints remain of what once were pure doctrines. So it seems to be the case with the blends of water spirit lore. Some water spirits are amongst the races of fallen angels, some are souls of unborn babies, waiting to be born for the first time, while others, are waiting for a second chance at life. Others are the souls of babies who had died unbaptized, & they seek to be baptized, which some traditions say can be done by simple baptismal prayer formulas. Others are the souls of babies whose bodies had been aborted, these souls are guided back home to heaven to wait for another chance at life again, if they want it, because they didn’t get a full opportunity at life yet. So, they wait for the chance to go back down to the same family, or they go to be born through different parents. In other cases, they are those who had drowned by different ways, & turned into water spirits, or water babies to then do penance, (if they’d intentionally jumped in the water & were drowned). Thus, they make an effort to do what they need to do to return again to land life, given another chance at life. Keep in mind these are not official doctrines in anyone’s church, but were moral fables, in some cases, written by different authors & story tellers that brought into their fairy tales, & fable makings, their own world views, prejudices, interpretations of beliefs that taint their fable-makings. These are how, & why fables vary, & fable making varies in the different said themes of the fragmenting of pure doctrines, when passed down to later generations, during times of apostasy. Such is also the case with how different water-spirit themes go, when they sometimes get blended together, as old themes run together with new myth-makings, & new fables & fairy tale stories written.¹³⁸⁴

tale-styles of the Victorian age to illustrate moral lessons, & his own world view themes & prejudices of the times, & was a popular bed time story in England. It tells of a land-boy, Tom, who “fell,” other versions show him purposely jumping, into water (a river). Sinking down deep into the water, he is transformed into a water-baby, (some animations show him as a young boy sized “water-baby”), & he encounters others in his underwater journeys. If he passes different tests of penance, perhaps for having let himself drown, & thus is given another chance at land boy life.¹³⁸⁵ Kingley cites a portion of Ode: Intimations of Immortality, From Recollections of Early Childhood, (1803–06), by William Wordsworth, (7 April 1770 – 23 April 1850), & notes the pre-existence themes, in the poem, about how the soul comes from God, after which he wrote: “There, you can know no more than that. But if I was you, I would believe that.... [For] with some people, [they believe] that your soul has nothing to do with your body, but is only stuck into it like a pin into a pin-cushion, to fall out with the first shake... [However, consider the] doctrine of this wonderful fairy tale; which is, that your soul makes your body, just as a snail makes his shell. For the rest, it is enough for us to be sure that whether or not we lived before, we shall live again; though not, I hope, as poor little heathen Tom did. For he went downward into the water; but we, I hope, shall go upward to a very different place.”¹³⁸⁶ Tom, as a water-baby, was like what must have been thought of, back then, was going on with other water-babies, or water-spirits, & so their world was put into fairy tales, imaginary tales that explored their water-spirit-world. The water, by these later centuries, as earlier, was believed to be a realm where different types of spirits were. It was a spirit-world, & like the spirit world in earlier beliefs, it was made up of different realms, & different types of spirits, on through the ranks & levels of goodness to badness. In lore, some of the races of fallen angels had fallen from heaven, down into many places, including the watery areas of the world, so some of the spirits there in the watery-spirit-world consisted of them too. Which is also the reason that in later centuries, the fallen angels are depicted in many art works as insect like creatures & water-nymphs. For examples: 1221–1274, Saint Bonaventura, “described demons as a great swarm of flies; they were said to be so numerous that if a needle were dropped from above, it would surely strike one.”¹³⁸⁷ Insects type creatures are depicted as falling from the council in heaven, & infesting the air as these fallen angels spread out all over on earth, in Hieronymus Bosch’s art work at the Haywain triptych, AD 1515. Also, the fallen angels battle the good angels, & are depicted as bird type creatures in the air, in Pieter Bruegel the Elder-The Fall of the Rebel Angels - AD 1562. Some demons were said to be as small as dust. Adam Tanner, (1572–1632), when he died, the parishioners refused to grant him a Christian burial, because a “hairy little imp” on a glass plate was found among his things. It was an insect prepared for the microscope. The curate of Unken, however, succeeded in convincing his congregation of the harmless nature of the “imp,” and they at last consented to the interment in their cemetery.¹³⁸⁸ In that little place called Unken, the superstitious beliefs about devil-imps as tiny insect type creatures, was what they must have thought was on the glass. Again, pre-existence themes turned into superstitious fables & beliefs.

Also, it may be that like in baptismal water spirit lore, when earlier Christians thought of going down into the baptismal waters as a ritualistic descent into the watery abyss of the underworld, (after the baptismal-waters were blessed & water-demons expelled). That these baptisms for the dead lore, with later fables of water-spirits seeking salvation & baptism, were parts of this water-spirit-world, where there were also water-babies, the souls of unborn babies, waiting to be born. Again, an underwater spirit world filled with all kinds of different types of spirits at different stages in their journeys through different realms, & life experiences, tests, & rewards or punishments. Thus, when the storks pull the water-babies, or souls of the unborn babies out of the waters of marshes, lakes or rivers, they are pulling them into physical life, so it would seem lore is suggesting.¹³⁸⁹

1881, a black & white antique print, shows two “cherubs - Victorian Decor” said to be “Woodland Fairies,” or part of fairy art & Stork print, wood engraving. The two naked baby fairies, that look to be about under two years old, with wings on their backs, stand on the bank of the marsh, one is leaning forwards with a flute, playing it to a Stork standing almost in the water. Are these woodland fairies also amongst the unborn souls of babies, waiting to be born & delivered by the Storks?¹³⁹⁰

More vintage birth announcement cards, about late 19th c – early 20th, show different versions of the souls of unborn babies, as if before their mortal births, swimming around in marshes, near the banks of rivers, & lakes. (This is like other water spirits of lore, fables & legends, in those cases, the spirits of babies that had died without baptism, & which lore says can be baptized for the dead through simple baptismal prayer formulas. A topic covered further on in this study). In these different cases of depictions of souls of the unborn, there are variable reactions to their encounters with different Storks, some Storks are flying down to snatch them from the water, or them swimming near the banks of the marshes, or rivers, or lakes. Or from the tall grass on the banks of the rivers, lakes or marshy areas. Some of the soul-babies go with the stork with smiles on their faces, reaching up to the Bird, others seem to be crying for whatever reasons, perhaps scared of the bird, or scared of being pulled out of the water by the Storks. Or perhaps they are cold & thus the swaddling-cloth they are wrapped up in. Others have bottles of milk being given to them by the Storks. Some soul-babies, perhaps symbolic of them becoming newly born, when pulled from the waters, are seated on the backs of the Storks, as they stand in the tall grass & weeds of their watery habitats, as if the Storks are about to take flight to make their deliveries. Other soul babies are wrapped up in cloths or blankets, often white in color, reminding us of the naked souls wrapped up in blankets, as those newly departed from earth life souls, at the moment of death, ride up on white blankets with the angels, as the souls are pulled up into paradise, or heaven. Thus, possible white garment-lore is seen in how the new born babies, arriving into physical life, in some cases, are also being clothed upon, like in ritualistic types, for their naked bodies are clothed in white-clothes, white robes, or are pulled up by the Storks in white-blanket, white thread straps, looped around their chests & under their arm pits, when pulled out of the water, or when in flight. While others are wrapped up & tied in white blankets, held together with a knot, held in the beaks of the Storks, some of which are seen on the banks of marshes, lakes or river banks. Others, far up in the air, as the Storks are in routes to deliver the new born babies to their waiting parents. In some cases, the soul-babies are clothed in light blue, perhaps the traditional symbolical color for boys. While pink, like in some cases, for there are depictions of storks holding babies, one wrapped up in blue, the other in pink. Plus, others of the lily flowers are colored, (& which the soul-babies of the unborn, are sometimes depicted resting on, while in the water), were to indicate those who were unborn girl souls. In others, their might be a pink flower, to indicate the baby is a girl. Note here again, the possible garment lore, how the soul enters life naked, (Job.1:21, Eccl.5:15), but is clothed in white. Just like when the soul departing mortal life is depicted naked, to then be clothed in white, in some cases white robes, other cases, white blankets, as they ascend with the angels, who are about to deliver these souls back home to their Heavenly Parents & loved ones waiting to greet them.¹³⁹¹

The protective garment lore of these deliveries in both cases, seems to also be legendized even further in the protective assurances promised by such deliveries, especially of babies coming "from heaven," or as lore puts it, from the heavenly clouds, where in other lore, winged-angels, clothed in white, are believed to dwell, playing harps, "up in heaven."¹³⁹² In the cases with later lore, some put to animations, or cartoons, the heavens or clouds, up in the sky, was believed by many to be where babies come from, or from heaven. In modern animations, this lore is dramatized in a comical way, as babies are being manufactured, magically, by clouds, in Storks, (2016). The storks fly to these clouds, that reveal themselves as ghostly type shapes, charged up with electricity, they then press together some hand fulls of clouds, charge them with electricity, producing, different types of animals, & other types of babies. They are wrapped up in a white blanket & given to the Storks to deliver them to earth below. In other animations, Storks sit on clouds with their baby wrapped up in the white blanket, & after they descend to the address, a poem to read about how the baby safely came "from heaven." Some modern animations, or cartoons, like in Disney's Dumbo, (1941, during World War 2), shows the Storks dropping off babies wrapped up in white blankets, with white parachutes, that open up, & cause the babies to float safely down to their waiting animal parents. Some modern day Delivery Rooms at Hospitals, & also delivery companies who use such promises in their ads about safe deliveries, such aspects of pre-existence lore turned even more legendized, just might have fragments of Stork delivery lore, in delivering the newly born of the once unborn soul-babies from the heavenly clouds, or from lakes, rivers & marshy areas, where water spirits were once believed dwelt. Modern day fragments of this earlier lore, might be found in the delivering of letters, packages, boxes, & other things, safely, on time & undamaged, or at least, as much as possible. In some cases, delivery-companies use Storks as their symbols, & in some cases, Storks are depicted on mail stamps.¹³⁹³

MORE ON LATER PRE-EXISTENCE THEMES IN LATER LORE & FABLES

Late 19th century anti-Christian writer, T. W. Doane, continued on with this age old logic, which Celsus A.D. 170-80, had used earlier against the early Christians. Doane, after pointing out a number of parallels between Christianity & the pagan nations, suggested that: "Our assertion that that which is called Christianity is nothing more than the religion of Paganism, we consider to have been fully verified. We have found among the heathen, centuries before the time of Christ Jesus, the belief in an incarnate God born of a virgin; his previous existence in heaven;..." & other similarities.¹³⁹⁴ The early Christians, as I have already shown, answered this same charge, as found in earlier anti-Christian polemics, by saying that the reason why there are parallels was because the demons had counterfeited these things. The gospel & knowledge of Christ had been taught in the different nations of the earth in pre-Christian times, by prophets, & by the pre-existing Christ as a Spirit. The gospel had also pre-existed in heaven, & thus, was the original message from which the pagans nations had borrowed from, not the other way around as the critics had suggested. As if borrowing the polemics from earlier critics, Doane wrote that the ancient Pagans had many beliefs and ceremonies which are to be found among the Christians. One of these is the story of "The War in Heaven." Doane, presents the Catholic theory of the fall of the angels: "In the beginning, before the creation of heaven and earth, God made the angels, free intelligences, and free wills, out of his love He made them, that they might be eternally happy. And that their happiness might be complete, he gave them the perfection of a created nature, that is, he gave them freedom. But happiness is only attained by the free will agreeing in its freedom to accord with the will of God. Some of the angels by an act of free will obeyed the will of God, and in such obedience found perfect happiness. Other angels, by an act of free will, rebelled against the will of God, and in such disobedience found misery."

"They were driven out of heaven, after having a combat with the obedient angels, and cast into hell." Doane then mentions 2 Pet.2:4; Jude 6. And wrote that according to "the Talmudists, Satan, whose proper name is Sammael, was one of the Seraphim of heaven, with six wings."

"He was not driven out of heaven until after he had led Adam and Eve into sin; then Sammael and his host were precipitated out of the place of bliss, with God's curse to weigh them down. In the struggle between Michael and Sammael, the falling Seraph caught the wings of Michael, and tried to drag him down with him, but God saved him, when Michael derived his name,--the Rescued."¹³⁹⁵

1882, Gustave Dore engraved an art work that depicted a certain point in the story of satan's fall based on the earlier version in Milton's Paradise Lost. "Satan is chained for nine days in hell's burning pool."¹³⁹⁶

Ellen G. White, later part of the 19th century A.D., explains the origins of evil as going back to the time of "satan's rebellion" & war in heaven. Christ the Word, the only begotten of God, was one with the eternal Father,--one in nature, in character, and in purpose,--the only being in all the universe that could enter into all the counsels and purposes of God. By Christ, the Father brought in the creation of all heavenly beings. (Cor. 1:16), and to Christ, equally with the Father, all Heaven gave allegiance. White goes on to point out that the law of love was the very foundation of the government of God, the happiness of all created beings depended upon their perfect agreement with this divine law. God hoped that through the obedience to this law his creatures be freely willing to give service. For God takes no pleasure in a forced allegiance, and to all he grants freedom of will, that they may render him voluntary service. However, there was one that chose to pervert this freedom. Sin originated with him, who, next to Christ, had been most honored of God, and who stood highest in power and glory among the inhabitants of Heaven. Before his fall, Lucifer was first of the covering cherubs, holy and undefiled. (Ezek.28:12-15, 17). He might have remained in favor with God, beloved and honored by all the angelic-host, exercising his noble powers to bless others and to glorify his Maker. But says the prophet, "Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou has corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness." (Ezek.28:6; Isa.14:13-14). Thus, White presents a number of biblical passages to present this later version of pre-existence themes. For, little by little, Lucifer came to indulge a desire for self-exaltation. Instead of seeking to make God supreme in the affections and allegiance of his creatures, Lucifer sought to win their service and homage to himself, coveting the honor which the infinite Father had bestowed upon Christ, for Lucifer, a prince of angels, aspired to power which it was the prerogative of Christ alone to wield. White goes on to point out that all the host of heaven rejoiced to reflect the Creator's glory and to show forth His praise. But when Lucifer-Satan rebelled a note of discord now marred the celestial harmonies. The service and exaltation of self, contrary to the Creator's plan, awakened forebodings of evil in minds to whom God's glory was supreme. The heavenly councils pleaded with Lucifer. The Son of God presents, before him, the greatness, the goodness, and the justice of the Creator, and the sacred, unchanging nature of his law. God himself had established the order of Heaven, and in departing from it, Lucifer would dishonor his Maker, and bring ruin upon himself. Lucifer allowed his jealousy attitude towards Christ to prevail, and he became the more determined to bring about his own will. His pride for in his own glory nourished the desire for supremacy. Lucifer was not thankful for the high honors which God had conferred upon him. Lucifer gloried in his own brightness & exaltation, and sought to be equal with God. Lucifer, before his fall, was beloved and reverence by the heavenly host, & even the good angels delighted to execute his command, and he was clothed with wisdom and glory above them all. White used the old clothing types here, & goes on to note how the Son of God was the acknowledged sovereign of Heaven, one in power and authority with the Father. In all the councils of God, Christ was a participant, while Lucifer was not permitted thus to enter into the divine purposes. "Why," questioned this mighty angel, "should Christ have the supremacy?"

White goes on to tell of Lucifer rebellious activities: "Leaving his place in the immediate presence of God, Lucifer went forth to diffuse the spirit of discontent among the angels. Working with mysterious secrecy, and for a time concealing his real purpose under an appearance of reverence for God, he endeavored to excite dissatisfaction concerning the laws that governed heavenly beings, intimating that they imposed an unnecessary restraint.... [Also] that God had dealt unjustly with him in bestowing supreme honor upon Christ. He claimed that in aspiring to greater power and honor he was not aiming at self-exaltation, but was seeking to secure liberty for all the inhabitants of Heaven, that by this means they might attain to a higher state of existence."

God put up with Lucifer's attitudes for some time. For Lucifer was not immediately degraded from his exalted position when he first indulged the spirit of discontent & began to present his false claims before the loyal angels. For a long time he was allowed to retain his position in Heaven. Many times he was offered pardon, on condition of repentance and submission. However, Lucifer didn't choose to repent. Had been willing to repent he might have saved himself and many angels who later followed his example, by forsaking their positions. Lucifer had not at that point in time, had fully cast off his allegiance of God, even though he had forsaken his position as covering cherub. However, had Lucifer been willing to return to God & acknowledged the Creator's wisdom, and satisfied to fill the place appointed him in God's great plan, Lucifer would have been re-instated in his office. Like the earlier Christians in explaining some of the things that caused Lucifer's fall, White notes that pride forbade him to submit, for he persistently defended his own course, maintained that he had no need of repentance, and fully committed himself, in the great controversy, against his Maker.

"All the powers of his master-mind were now bent to the work of deception, to secure the sympathy of the angels that had been under his command. Even the fact that Christ had warned and counseled him, was perverted to serve his traitorous designs. To those whose loving trust bound them most closely to him, Satan had represented that he was wrongly judged, that his position was not respected, and that his liberty was to be abridged. From misrepresentation of the words of Christ, he passed to prevarication of the words of Christ, he passed to prevarication and direct falsehood, accusing the Son of God of a design to humiliate him before the inhabitants of Heaven. He sought also to make a false issue between himself and the loyal angels. All whom he could not subvert and bring fully to his side, he accused of indifference to the interests of heavenly beings. They very work which he himself was doing, he charged upon those who remained true to God. And to sustain his charge of God's injustice towards him, he resorted to misrepresentation of the words and acts of the Creator. I was his policy to perplex the angels with subtle arguments concerning the purposes of God. Everything that was simple he shrouded in mystery, and by artful perversion cast doubt upon the plainest statements of Jehovah. His high position, in such close connection with the divine administration, gave greater force to his representations, and many were induced to unite with him in rebellion against Heaven's authority."

"God in his wisdom permitted Satan to carry forward his work, until the spirit of disaffection ripened into active revolt. It was necessary for his plans to be fully developed, that their true nature and tendency might be seen by all. Lucifer, as the anointed cherub, had been highly exalted; he was greatly loved by the heavenly beings, and his influence over them was strong. God's government included not only the inhabitants of Heaven, but of all the worlds that he had created; and Satan thought that if he could carry the angels of Heaven with him in rebellion, he could carry also the other worlds." White goes on to write about how Satan, & his followers, eventually rebelled to the point where they needed to be banished from Heaven. White makes reference to the inhabitants of heaven & of other worlds, and notes that the same attitudes that caused the rebellion in Heaven, still inspires rebellion on earth.¹³⁹⁷

Late 19th century, John P. Lundy, wrote in response to the borrowing charges, how that: "Infidelity has been accustomed to say, from the time of Dupuis to the present, that Christianity is only a sort of copy of ancient Paganism: that is has no new ideas, and must therefore be rejected. But where did Paganism get its sublime conceptions of God, its notions of immortality and human destiny? Whence did all ancient nations derive them, hold them, and agree so marvellously about them? This universal faith must have an adequate cause; and Christianity is but the more full, clear, true and glorious exponent of it all.... If Christ was before Abraham, as He claimed to be, then surely He must have manifested Himself to other nations beside the Jews, or other nations, including the Jews, must have derived their religious systems and ideas from some common source."¹³⁹⁸ Note here how Lundy hints to Christ's pre-existence, & says that if Christ had pre-existed & had manifested himself to other nations, Christ then would have been the original source for 'this universal faith.'

20TH CENTURY A.D.: 1900, Dr. Paul Carus, (1852–1919), tells of the legend of Merlin, as told be Bela of the old chronicles. Pre-existence themes, that of Satan's post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities are in how Satan plans to have his own son to try to undo Christ's work of redemption. Having been defeated, he thought be doing this he'd regain his power, & thus Merlin, according to lore, is supposed to be the son of Satan. The post-war in heaven battle continued on earth, as Merlin is considered as one who could be turned towards God, rather than be an agent against him, in doing his father's causes. Merlin was given different gifts from the Devil, that of knowledge of past & present, but God added the knowledge of the future. He performed many marvelous things, was full of wisdom & his prophecies were said to be reliable. Having been baptized as an infant, it was said that, despite his diabolical parentage, he didn't descend into hell at death, but went to heaven. But, in other lore, other supposed sons of Satan, don't join the cause of the Good Lord, as Merlin seemed to have done.

Eggelino, for example, forced his mother to confess the secret that he and his brother Alberico were sons of Satan.¹³⁹⁹

1908, written by the Belgian, Maurice Maeterlinck, a 6 act fairy play, The Blue Bird, in it, there is the Kingdom of the Future, where from which all the children come who are waiting to be born. Throngs of children, dressed in long azure robes, play, talk, sleep, cultivate fruit & flowers, and work at inventions. Each wait for their turn to be called upon to be born, when the fathers and mothers want children. When it's their turns, the great doors open and the little ones go down.¹⁴⁰⁰

1910, November 20, The New York Times, published an article about the beliefs of Sir Oliver Lodge, entitled: Sir Oliver Lodge Teaches the Soul's Pre-existence, subtitle: Famous Physicist Announces His Belief, Gained Through Scientific Research, in Immortality, the Gift of Prophecy, and Christ's Incarnation. The article argues that the preexistence doctrine "has not been hitherto among the recognized tenets of Christianity, although, in some form or another, it is present in most of the great world-religions, and is older than Socrates, who used it as one of the links in his argument for the immortality of the soul." Perhaps in 1910, the beliefs of earlier Christianity's beliefs in a pre-existence, weren't known to the writers at the New York Times. Whatever might have been the case, here's what Sir Oliver Lodge, is reported to have argued: "My message is that there is some great truth in the idea of pre-existence— not an obvious truth, nor one easy to formulate — a truth difficult to express — not to be identified with the guesses of reincarnation and transmigration, which may be fanciful. We may not have been individuals before, but we are chips or fragments of a great mass of mind, of spirit, and of life— drops, as it were, taken out of a germinal reservoir of life, and incubated until incarnate in a material body." Lodge argued "...that the soul will live forever in the future as a consequence of its pre-existence: "John Smith was born a few years ago and will die, but he will not go into nothingness; and though as an individual he began at birth. It is not likely he, and any more than anything else, began from nothing.... At birth we began a separate individual existence, but not from nothing. Children often appear to retain for a time some intuition, some 'shadowy recollection,' as it were, of a former state of being. And even adults, in certain moods, have 'gleams of more than mortal things,' and are perplexed, at times, with a dim reminiscence as of previous experiences." Oliver goes on to reason that what-ever might have happened before earth-life was forgotten, for our individual memory begins at birth. We've forgotten our own individual identities of whom we were, before our birth into mortality. He admits that this belief is not new, that Plato taught in before Christ & that Wordsworth it early last century— about how "...that when we enter into flesh, we leave behind all memory of previous existence— all, except for occasional dim and shadowy recollections which, though they may be stronger in infancy, occasionally surprise the grown man also, from whose mind they usually appear to have faded." Oliver admits to the existence of guardian, witnessing invisible to us, angels. That we sometimes can sense their presences, inspirations given to us from them. How that Christ pre-existed, as a Divine Helper, who also took on flesh & dwelt amongst us, as the Lord from heaven. How that we are all incarnations, all children, sons & daughters of God. How Christ lowered himself to live as a peasant, a teacher, a reformer & martyr, here on earth. "Christ did not spring into existence as the man Jesus of Nazareth. The Christ spirit existed through all eternity. Then it was that he assumed his chosen title, 'Son of Man.' Before that he is called the Companion, the Counsellor, the Word of God, the Word, or the Thought, or the Logos, the Idea.... While incarnate He, too, had, in some real sense, partially forgotten previous existence."

Walt Disney's Fantasia (1940), depicts, with the help of music set to animated cartoons, a legendized version of the Lord of Darkness on a mountain. Spreading forth his large bat like wings, this horned dark skinned fallen being of darkness calls ghost & monstrous looking creatures out of their graves, the underworld, & the pit. The traditional fires of hell flash & light up the night as the lord of darkness watches numerous tiny dancing creatures. Taking delight in these dancing figures he exposes his fangs as he smiles. Suddenly there is a flash of light! The light caught all the creatures of darkness attention. Again, another flash, & another, & another. They covered their eyes from such a blinding series of flashes. As the light increased & the length of the flashes grew longer. The creatures of the night began to crawl, or fly back down to where they had come from. The bright light of the coming dawn was too much for them to stand. Even the lord of darkness could not stand to look upon the light. The night scenes fade into a beautiful scene that shows the sun rise, etc. This modernized personification of a legendary figure has retained only hints & bits of the story of the pre-existence, with regards to the fall of satan, & his retrogressed conditions.

The Lord of Darkness is presented in later legendized ways in the movie Legend. References to "blackness," "black hearts," & "dark embrace," retain the color symbolism of earlier centuries. The Dark Lord calls himself an "exile" who was banished to live in the fallen conditions that he was now in. Later on in the movie, a battle between good & evil take place. Good wins out in the end, & the lord of darkness is blasted out into space by the light of the sun which was reflected off a number of shields down into the realms of darkness. Before the good's sword cuts off the Lord of Darkness from holding on from falling away. The dark Lord boasted that he was "apart of you all" for "what is light without darkness?" he make reference to being "brothers", etc. And with the final blow from the sword, the good causes the Dark Lord to fall away into the stars. He fades out of sight, & then suddenly there is a burst of light, and a number of stars go shooting off & spread out. All these things seem to be legendized symbolical reminders of the earlier stories. The references to "blackness",-- being symbolic of their fallen conditions, & retrogression in evil. Pits-- being symbolic reminders of the underworld, hades, limbo, etc., the prison and realms of satan. The reference to be an "exile"— Satan's exile from heaven, in which he was banished from heaven. The battle between good and evil,— reminding us of the war in heaven, & the continual battle between good and evil, Light and darkness. The reference to "brothers"— reminding us of early to later Christian beliefs, & comments about how that Satan & Christ were spirit-brothers in the heavens. The fall of the dark lord into the stars,— reminding us of Satan's fall.

Another movie, "The 7th Seal", reflects certain aspects of some versions of the pre-existence, making reference to the chamber of souls. According to tradition, there are a certain number of souls are to come to earth life from this chamber before the end of the world.

Included in certain plays, during these later centuries, is the dramatis personae, for the central struggle is between Lucifer and Michael. Michael, white-robed, with wings, also has the traditional "sword to vanquish Lucifer" with.¹⁴⁰²

In Russia, many peasants believed that "a guardian angel brought the newborn child a soul and presided at his birth."¹⁴⁰³

Later Legendized Aspects of Pre-existence

In the Brendan legend, “birds were fallen angels whose trespass was little, and hence they served God in song and sang all the divine hours.”¹⁴⁰⁴ In Romance of the Rose, Wisdom is Christ.¹⁴⁰⁵

In Russian folk belief, some creation legends “specify that not all demons cast from heaven by the Archangel Michael fell to earth: some remained in the atmosphere in the form of fiery, flying serpents.” In some cases, a falling star signaled the approach of such a demon to a village.¹⁴⁰⁶ Earlier, Christ is said to have likened Satan’s fall from heaven like unto a falling star.

In Russian folk beliefs and legends, domovoi, leshie, vodianye, and polevye are “demons that when cast from heaven fell in the forests, waters, and fields.”¹⁴⁰⁷ In other creation legends, Tsar Satanail envied God, while “God was good and he loved Satanail sincerely and with all his heart. . . . Once they started to quarrel between themselves as to which of them was the stronger, who would get the better of whom.” God orders Satanail to attempt to budge him from his throne, and no matter how hard he tried, he couldn’t do it. “You can’t get the better of me,” said God, and he grabbed him and cast him to the damp earth.”¹⁴⁰⁸

In England’s fables, the fallen angels-demons, & the Devil are said, in some places, to be called Puck, as a spirit haunting the woods and fields is still retained. In parts of Worcestershire, they say that they are sometimes called Poake-ledden, that waylaid in the night, or intercept in order to attack, intercept and detain with questions, conversation, by a mischievous sprite or an elf or fairy, that are often winged, or in some cases insect like creatures, as in other fables of Europe. Other names suggest bug like characteristics, such as Bugbear, and Bugleboo, or Bugaboo, which are the by-products of the Devil, demons & fallen angels being turned into winged bug like fairy type creatures during the later legendization process, which faded the original stories about the fallen angels into mythical creatures. Thus, the Puck, or the old word, “Pouke” the original meaning seem to be “devil, demon, or evil spirit.” Which in the Vision of Piers Ploughman, signifies ‘the grand adversary of God and man.’ Other variations of names & old spelling are Pooke in the sense of devil. Descriptions of some of them might remind us of Lord of the Rings depictions of goblins & demons from the deep underworld, the giant winged lion head ancient demon, that Gandolf fights with. While in the case with England’s lore, the Chimæra, that same pooke, has a goatish body, lion’s head and brist, and dragon’s tail. The pouke are thus amongst other evil spirits.¹⁴⁰⁹

In illustrations of Dante Alighieri’s [1265–1321], The Divine Comedy, the section on Dante’s Ice Hell, illustrated by Gustave Doré, shows the deepest hell, with a moody sullen large winged lion shaped Satan that reminds us of the demon of the underworld that Gandolf encounters & fights with. The hand clasping guide, like in Christ’s descent into hell, is also part of Dante’s lore, as the thick fog describe in some areas of the different levels, requires the Descended Witness to have to have his guide lead him through the thick dark fog by taking hold of his hand.¹⁴¹⁰ Hand or wrist clasping guides are a common themes that get illustrated in art works of angelic guides in & throughout different realms.¹⁴¹¹

In Dante’s lore, here are pre-existence themes blended with Northern Europe Teutonic type descent into hell themes, & post-fall from heaven themes, but in legendized forms, when doctrines & beliefs of later centuries got mixed together to form more fables.

In Ireland, their fairies hardly differ from England & Scotland, they are small, rarely exceeding two feet high & live in the interior of the mounds, called Rathes (Ráhs), in English, Moats. In some cases, fairies steal children, & fairy-struck or strike people with different ailments and paralysis, where they can’t move! They shoot their arrows at cattle, but are kind to those they like, even rendering help & essential service in times of need. They can assume any shape, & can be invisible & visible, as they please. “The popular belief in Ireland also, is that the Fairies are a portion of the fallen angels, who, being less guilty than the rest, were not driven to hell, but were suffered to dwell on earth.”¹⁴¹²

“The Spaniards seem to also agree with the people of other countries in regarding the Fairies as being fallen angels.”¹⁴¹³ In different areas of European lore, Scotland, Ireland, England, etc., about the 18th to early 20th centuries, defects of the fairies, a frightful front tooth, web foot, hardly any nostrils, cloven hoof, etc., were characteristics given to “the fairies by people who believed them to be fallen angels, or yet more closely related to the Devil.”¹⁴¹⁴

When many pre-existence theme were rejected in earlier centuries, they set up the legendization of the beliefs in later centuries, & in different areas of Christendom. Other fragments of other lore seem to also blend too, such as Christ’s world wide trek lore, about the wandering Christ-child, looking through the window, having been guided there by lit candles, (an in Irish Christmas custom). Perhaps some aspects of these, could have been morphed with other spookier Irish lore about the Banshee, an Irish death spirit. In the Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe, who lived 1625-76, when she was staying with Lady Honor O’Brien, for 3 nights. About 1:00 AM, she was woke by a voice: “I drew the curtain, and in the casement of the window, I saw, by the light of the moon, a woman leaning into the window, through the casement, in white, with red hair and pale and ghastly complexion: she spoke loud, and in a tone I had never heard, thrice, ‘A horse’; and then, with a sigh more like the wind than breath she vanished, and to me her body looked more like a thick cloud than substance.”¹⁴¹⁵

As pre-existence themes, & their later fables developed, the fallen angels that became demons, & the Devil & his legions of devils, take on all kinds of shapes, sizes & intents. They also ally themselves with the spirits of the dead, who had lived evil mortal lives, & their spirits remained evil, to haunt their places of addictions, vices, & interests, along with the fallen angels. Such blends of different races of spirits thus became the subjects of lore, such as the Bogies, ‘Bugs,’ (some fallen angels are depicted as different types of winged bugs). Thus the saying passed down to our day about not being “buggy,” ‘don’t bud me!’ Or ‘the Bogy man is going to get you!’ “Watch out for the bogy-man!” Thus, the Bogies were a class of mischievous dangerous spirits that delight in the torment of the human family. A nickname for the Devil in Somerset is ‘Bogie.’ Others, called “Bogles,” are evil Goblins, often thought of as fallen angels too, which are banished by an open bible, in some stories. Some stories tell of a black bogy, of course, which color symbolism for fallen angels, we might expect would filter down to later legends, fairy tales that retain some fragments of earlier pre-existence themes, that were also in earlier stages of being legendized. During the mid-17th century, in England & wherever the Puritans spread to, like in the colonies of Eastern America, they thought of all fairies as being devils, (fallen angels). John Milton, 1608-74, Paradise Lost, he knew the Midland fairy tales, with his English upbringing in Oxfordshire, at Forest Hill, & 1632, at Horton in Buckinghamshire. The lore became infused into his poetry, with the traditions about fairies being part of the fallen angels, or at least their gatherings are like unto the gatherings of the fallen angels in Hell. Thus, as in other English speaking & Celtic countries, fairies were believed to be as the dead, or “as fallen angels, or occasionally as astral or elemental spirits.” Also: “The islanders, like all the Irish, believe that the fairies are the fallen angels who were cast down by the Lord God out of heaven for their sinful pride. And some fell into the sea, and some on the dry land, and some fell deep down into hell, and the devil gives to these knowledge and power, and sends them on earth where they work much evil.”¹⁴¹⁶ But the fairies are often said to be gentle folk too, if left alone to their own, & are not bothered in their dance, & making of sweet music.

There is also MELUSINE, the beautiful water-spirit, who becomes a serpent, the moment she touches water. In Norway, there is a tale of Henno Cum Dentibus who married a beautiful girl, but she turned into a dragon when sprinkled with Holy Water. These Melusines then, were thought of as being devils, more than as fairies.¹⁴¹⁷

In other lore, it was thought that the “Sprite,” was a reference to every kind of goblin, elf, fairy, & originally also ghost. Lore says that they were able to disappear, & reappear wherever they so desired. Sprites were once thought of as being some of the angels who had not taken sides when Lucifer, when he challenged the authority of God. Consequently, for them having waited to see who would triumph, their punishment was to be banished from Heaven, & bound to the material plane.¹⁴¹⁸

In Scottish Highlands, the fable, The Fairy’s Inquiry, a clergyman, after visiting a sick member of his congregation, went by a lake on his way home. He was surprised to hear the most melodious strains of music. He sat down to listen, as it seemed to come from over the lake, with a light. Then, there was a man walking on water, attended by a number of little beings, some holding lights, others, musical instruments. Walking up to the minister, he saluted him courteously, & looked to be a little grey-headed old man, dressed in rather unusual garb. The minister had him sit by him & asked who he was. He replied “that he was one of the Daoine Shi. He added that he and they had originally been angels, but having been seduced into revolt by Satan, they had been cast down to earth where they were to dwell till the day of doom.” He wanted to know from the minister what would be their condition after that awful day. The minister then questioned him about articles of faith, but his answer didn’t prove satisfactory, & he could say some of the words in the Lord’s prayer right, so the minister didn’t hold out any hope for him. At that, the fairy gave a cry of despair and flung himself into the loch lake.¹⁴¹⁹

The Irish Pooka, (puca), like the English Pouke, Puck, like it, an evil spirit, often associated with the devil. A boy in the mountains near Killarney told Mr. Croker that the “old people use to say that the Pookas were very numerous in the times long ago. They were wicked-minded, black-looking, bad things, that would come in the form of wild colts, with chains hanging about them. When the blackberries begin to decay, and the seeds to appear, the children are told not to eat them any longer, as the Pooka has dirtied on them.”¹⁴²⁰

About late 19th early 20th centuries, from the Scottish Highlands: “‘The Proud Angel fomented a rebellion among the angels of heaven, where he had been a leading light. He declared that he would go and found a kingdom for himself. When going out at the door of heaven the Proud Angel brought prickly lightning and biting lightning out of the doorstep with his heels. Many angels followed him – so many that at last the Son called out, “Father! Father! the city is being emptied!” whereupon the Father ordered that the gates of heaven and the gates of hell should be closed. This was instantly done. And those who were in were in, and those who were out were out; while the hosts who had left heaven and had not reached hell flew into the holes of the earth, like stormy petrels.”’¹⁴²¹

In a number of English, Scottish, Irish & other European fairy-tales & lore, that retained some fragments of pre-existence-themes. The post-fall from heaven devilish activities of the fallen angels, includes their animal allies, if not them having morphed into those animals too, such as Black dogs. Not only do the spirits of black dogs guard church yards from the Devil, & evil spirits, but the Devil uses his own black dogs, while in other lore, the Devil himself was thought of as one.¹⁴²²

In some of these legends, the war in heaven is after the creation of Adam and Eve, in which Satanail attempted to get into the gates of paradise where Adam and Eve were. After several attempts, he sought to get them to come to him, which they did. When they climbed the fence they found the they were in his power, and were carried away to his kingdom on earth. When the Lord woke up the next morning and found out what Satanail had done, he took his miraculous staff, waved it, and “many millions of heavenly warriors—more than there are stars in the sky—surrounded him. God gave them fiery swords and led them to earth. Satanail saw that things were going badly. He whistled and created more demons than there are grains of sand in the sea. The black force made a great noise and attacked the Lord. For seventy-seven days they battled in the air. The earth groaned; the heavens shook. Finally God defeated Satanail: he fell and vanished into Tatarus with all his demonic force.”¹⁴²³

“God blesses man and sends pure souls onto earth, but the devil defiles these in sinful body and subjugates the heavenly spirit to earthly passions.”¹⁴²⁴ Tambov Province.

In the legends from the Tula Province color symbolism plays a part, white symbolic of good, black symbolic evil. “And once again while the white spirit was sleeping, the evil spirit stole his sword and cut for himself from rock even more spirits than the first time. The evil spirits began to seduce the good spirits, and they went over from the side of the white spirit to the side of the dark one. The white spirit (God) cursed them and called them “devils,” and he called the dark spirit, who had renounced him and begun to make things in defiance of him “Satan.”¹⁴²⁵

The Lord sent the Archangel Michael with a sword to fight against Satan, however, Satan kept his distance and singed his wings with fire. He then flew back to God and told him what had happened, and so God gave him another pair of wings. Satan and his devils, despite this, still drove him away. Again, the Lord gave Michael two more wings and a fiery sword on which he had sworn an oath. Michael eventually wins, for: “The devils began to fall from heaven to earth: some into the water, some into the forest, some in other places.”¹⁴²⁶ Thus, in some areas, the pre-existence themes were preserved more than they were in other areas.

A possible fragment of war in heaven themes is concerning the Luridan, from the Book of Vanagastus, the Norwegian. It’s in his nature to be always at enmity with fire, & that he wages war with the fiery spirits of Hecla. In this contest they do often anticipate and destroy one-another, by crushing & killing, when they meet in mighty and violent troops in the air upon the sea. During these battles, many of the fiery spirits are destroyed when the enemy hath brought them off the mountains to fight upon the water.¹⁴²⁷

A possible fragment of pre-existence lore from Iceland is from the learned Finnus Johannæus, contained in the Ecclesiastical History of Iceland, about Icelandic Elves or Dwarfs. These very ancients, the semigods, or genii, called Alfa and Alfa-folk, according to authors that vary in their accounts on their origin, some have told how “...they have been created by God immediately and without the intervention of parents, like some kinds of spirits: others maintain that they are sprung from Adam, but before the creation of Eve.... [This was a theory of the monks] lastly, some refer them to another race of men, or to the stock of præ-Adamites. Some bestow on them not merely a mortal body, but an immortal soul: others assign them merely mortal breath (spiritum) instead of a soul...”¹⁴²⁸

In numerous art works, the fallen angels crash down into the earth, & keep going down into the fiery underworld.¹⁴²⁹ Thus, possible fragments of later Christian legends & fables about the pre-existence, the post-war in heaven activities of the fallen angels. Plus, post-fall down into the underground themes, are hinted to in fables about Drawfs, who are the underground folk. Also retaining color symbolism of the fallen angels as dark skinned creatures, some brown, gray, other black.¹⁴³⁰ Thus, in the Baltic, to the Isle of Rügen, the inhabitants believe in three kinds of Dwarfs, or underground people, the White, Brown & Black. The Black Spirits, the Dark Alfs, seek to torment & injure the human family, & are very often mischievous. These Black Dwarfs like to wear black jackets and caps, and are ugly, with weeping eyes. In contrast, White Dwarfs are the most delicate & beautiful, and are of an innocent & gentle disposition. In Lusatia (Lausatz) if not in the rest of Germany, the same idea of the Dwarfs being fallen angels, prevails as in other countries.¹⁴³¹

PART 5: LEGENDIZATION OF CHRIST'S DESCENT INTO HELL & BAPTISMS AS THE RITUALISTIC TYPES OF DESCENT

The Early Christian Doctrine of Salvation for the Dead

The descent into hell is also part of pre-existence themes, in that they are the post-war in heaven, & post-fall from heaven activities of many of the fallen angel-devils that fell down into the underworld. In lore, their activities vary as the doctrines of what happens to those who also fall into the hands of the fallen angels, takes on all kinds of fabled aspects. The demons in the underworld are the tormentors, stabbing at those made to pay for their unrepentant sins. They are the wardens, hell's gate keepers, the shades hidden deep in the darkness. They come in all shapes & sizes, & sometimes venture forth, often at night, to haunt & do all kinds of devilish deeds. Others track down those whose time is up in mortal life, to thus be collected, dragged down to hell. A Slavonian folk song sins of hell as having devils, some that transform into dogs, wild animals, snakes & dragons. They howl and bellow, & bawl to cause terror in those that encounter them.¹⁴³²

In primitive to later Christian histories, the spirit prison was an after life realm which was also called the spirit prison house, hell, limbo, hades, purgatory, the pit, the underworld, the lower regions, one of the realms of the dead, the grave, sheol, and gehenna, etc. The act of Christ's descent into hell to preach the gospel to the captive spirits was also referred to as the harrowing of hell, the descent, the liberation of the captives souls, the resurrection, the anastasis, the rescue, & one of the passions.

The descent was predicted & mentioned by many of the Old and New Testament writers, the earliest to later Christians, & it is found in many religious documents, poems, songs, legends, & traditions. It was depicted in numerous art works, on monuments, stone carvings,¹⁴³³ book designs, illumination manuscripts, and glass windows. It was also dramatized in numerous mystery plays, and rituals throughout history.

Psalms 138: "If I take my wings early in the morning, and dwell in the uttermost part of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me." Also: Psalm 139:7-8: "Whither shall I flee thy face? If I ascend into heaven, thou art there; if I descend into hell, thou art there". The right to right-hand clasping guides, & in descent into hell art works is the most common way to depict Christ's descent into hell.

Christ's descent made it possible for the dead to be able to live again, and be set free from the bonds of death. For if they didn't have the chance during their mortal life to hear and obey the gospel, they would be given that opportunity in the after life realms. If, however, they did have the chance but were once disobedient and thus went to the spirit prison and upon hearing it again, and repenting, and living according to God in the spirit, they would eventually be released, resurrected, and guided over into paradise, having been redeemed from their sins.

Geoffrey R. King tells us how Christ "went into the world of the dead, conquered the warden and master of that place, wrenched from his grasp the keys of death and of Hades, so that ever since Good Friday night Christ has held the keys. He says so in Revelation i., you remember: "I am He that liveth; I became dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore; and I have the keys of death and of Hades." Satan had them before: I have them now. Then when Jesus ascended He took these released captives under Satan's government with Him up into Heaven. That is why I have called this study "The Divine Missionary to Hades",¹⁴³⁴

In some cases, the story about Jonah in the belly of a great fish, this was a type of Christ's descent into hell to rescue the captive spirits there, and bring them over into paradise. Hence, art works show these types, for example, an early 3rd—4th century work shows how that "the paradise to which the soul of Jonah is transported is depicted in a tomb at Cagliari in Sardinia",¹⁴³⁵

The descent was one of the passions, and it was depicted in many of the 12 passions of Christ. The different writings and art works of the descent could include some or many different elements and symbolical types, and there were numerous versions in each of the following. For writers & artists had to decide which moments in the whole drama they wanted to depict, or write about. Some writers mentioned how those who had preached Christ's coming into mortality, while they were in mortality, had gone on to continue to preach his coming to the spirit prisoners too, after they had died. Some artists showed Christ kicking the doors of hades, etc.,

Christ kicks at the doors of hades to break them down, an angel (Michael) with a weapon, is ready to do battle with the underworld demons,¹⁴³⁶ while others showed the moment when the doors began to fall, others after they had fallen, others when Christ stood on the doors & the underworld demonic-monsters. Others at the moment when the captive spirits came forth to greet Christ, others when Adam reaches forth his hand to clasp Christ's hand. Others show different types of hand¹⁴³⁷ and wrist grasps. Others decided to depict the moment when Christ began to turn, others of him turned¹⁴³⁸ to act as a guide,¹⁴³⁹ at the moment when they began to ascend up towards paradise, while others showed Christ presenting the liberated to his Mother. And others of him bringing them to God the Father, or when Christ and the liberated had entered through the doors into paradise.

In other cases, different aspects of Christ's world wide trek are seen in art works and sources that also show Christ's descent into and out of hell, & the tomb. For it is after Christ's ascension out of hell that his post-resurrection victory march around the world takes place. Hence, some artists show these events in sections and series.¹⁴⁴⁰

In ritual types, they often include many different doctrinal themes at once, such as in baptism: Descent, resurrection, Christ's world treks.

AN ANCIENT SETTING FOR BAPTISMS FOR THE DEAD

For many early to later Christians, baptism was a type of Christ's descent into the spirit prison, for after having been anointed, they became an anointed one, or in a symbolical way, a "Christ". After which they descended down into the baptismal waters as a type of how Christ had descended into the spirit prison, thus, in some cases, they were baptized as if they were in the spirit prison.

To understand how this was so, let us consider first the doctrine of Christ's descent. Peter wrote that there was an answer that the earliest Christians could give to the charges raised by early anti-Christians who had spoken evil against them. Some of the early critics charged that Christianity was new and therefore could not have been able to have saved any body in pre-Christian times. The answers to this charge and others was that Christ had descended into the spirit prison to preached the gospel there (1 Peter 3:15-22, 4:5-6; Eph. 4:7-10, Isa. 42:6-7).

The early anti-Christian Porphyry, 2nd half of the 3rd cent. A.D., asked: If Christ is the way the truth and the life, and no ones come to the Father but through Him, (John 14:6), what happened to the innumerable souls before the time of Christ, why did he hide himself for so many ages? Julian the Apostate asked why God had sent prophets to the Jews only, but no prophets & oil of anointing to other nations? Did God neglect us? The answer to these polemical questions, as given by some of the early Christian Fathers was that the gospel had been preached throughout the world and in the realms of the dead for prophets, angels and Christ had gone forth everywhere to spread the word.¹⁴⁴¹

In The Recognitions Of Clement, [1ST-4TH Centuries A.D.?] Clement was concerned about what happened to those who lived in the times before Christ's birth, how could they be saved? Peter answered Clement by telling him that Christ had pre-existed, for He was from the beginning, for Christ had been secretly present with the pious throughout all their generations; especially with those who had waited for Christ. For it was to them that Christ frequently appeared. However, the time was not yet that there should be a resurrection of their bodies after their bodies had been dissolved. Therefore when they passed on into the next life, plus those who pleased His will, they were translated to Paradise so that they should be kept for the kingdom. While all those who hadn't been able completely to fulfil the rule of righteousness, but still had some remnants of evil in their flesh, their bodies were also eventually dissolved too, while their spirits were kept in good and blessed abodes, so that at when they are resurrected, or when they shall recover their own bodies, purified even by the dissolution, they too may eventually obtain an eternal inheritance according to their good deeds. While those who were blessed enough to attain to the kingdom of Christ shall have not only escaped the pains of hell, but they shall have also remain incorruptible, and shall have become the first to see God the Father, and shall have obtained the rank of honour among the first in the presence of God.¹⁴⁴²

Greek version of The Report of Pilate the Procurator, sent to the August Caesar in Rome, the descent is mentioned. A number of saints were said to have risen from the dead. "And as lightnings come suddenly in winter, so majestic men appeared in glorious robes, an innumerable multitude, whose voice was heard as that of a very great thunder, crying out: Jesus that was crucified is risen: come up out of Hades, ye that have been enslaved in the underground regions of Hades." ¹⁴⁴³

1ST CENTURY A.D: Can you imagine what the apostles must have asked Christ, during those 40 days after His resurrection? (Acts. 1:3). For the apostles, this was the opportunity of a life time, for they had the chance to talk with Christ about what it was like to die. So we might imagine what might have been some of their questions. What happened when your spirit left your body, Lord? Were did your spirit go? What was it like on the other side? What did you see, & do? They must have had many questions. And, according to the scriptures, plus the different so-called "40 day sayings." Christ answered those questions, by giving them the mysteries of the Kingdom which included the work of salvation for the dead.¹⁴⁴⁴

John wrote that Christ said that the "dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear him shall live" (John 5:25-29). This prediction, as well as other Old Testament predictions were fulfilled, as recorded by Peter & Paul, & others who passed down the story of Christ's descent into the spirit world to preach the gospel to the dead, to free the captive spirits held there.¹⁴⁴⁵

30-107, Ignatius, an apostolic fathers, a fellow disciple with Polycarp under St. John, also passed on the story of Christ descent into the spirit prison. Ignatius' words, as well as the words of scripture, & other early Christian writers, may have become the inspiration for some of the early Christian art works. According to the short version of Ignatius epistle to the Magnesians, "the prophets themselves in the Spirit did wait for Him [Christ,] their Teacher? And therefore He whom they rightly waited for, being come, raised them from the dead." ¹⁴⁴⁶

In another letter of Ignatius, the long version said to be written to the Trallians, Ignatius quotes from Matt.27:52, which is in reference to the saints who had arisen with the Lord, when Christ had ascended up out of the grave.¹⁴⁴⁷ Some early Christian fathers & in some art works of the descent, militant angels, or the apostles, are with Christ during his descent into hell, hades, limbo, to help preach the gospel there, or to combat the devil & his fallen angels, etc.¹⁴⁴⁸ While in at least this section of Ignatius, Christ, "...descended, indeed, into Hades alone, but He arose accompanied by a multitude; and rent asunder that means of separation which had existed from the beginning of the world, and cast down its partition-wall." ¹⁴⁴⁹

Epistle of Barnabas, Christ redeems the spirit prisoners out of darkness, (citing Isa.42:6-7): "I, the Lord Thy God, have called Thee in righteousness, and will hold Thy hand, and will strengthen Thee; and I have given Thee for a covenant to the people, for a light to the nations, to open the eyes of the blind, & to bring forth from fetters them that are bound, and those that sit in darkness out of the prison-house." Ye perceive, then, whence we have been redeemed. And again, the prophet says, "Behold, I have appointed Thee as a light to the nations, that Thou mightest be for salvation even to the ends of the earth, saith the Lord God that redeemeth thee." (Isa. xlix.6). "And again, the prophet saith, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because He hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the humble: He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to proclaim deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind; to announce the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of recompense; to comfort all that mourn." ¹⁴⁵⁰

The Odes of Solomon, about 100, argued that Christ's incarnation or birth into the flesh, and the descent defeated the forces of evil.¹⁴⁵¹ Jeffrey Burton Russell gives the date for the Odes of Solomon, a Jewish-Christian document, to be a 2nd or 3rd century work. He then wrote that they gave two reasons for Christ's descent into hell. One, death naturally brought him into the underworld. Two, his descent "broke the power of Death so that the baptized might henceforth obtain eternal life." And: "The Odes took Saint Paul's idea that Christ defeated the powers of evil by his death and synthesized it with Saint John's idea that he defeated them by breaking down the barriers of hell and letting in his life." ¹⁴⁵²

Odes 42: "Sheol [hell] saw me [Jesus] and was shattered.... And I made a congregation of living among his dead; and I spoke with them by living lips.... And those who had died ran toward me; and they cried out and said, 'Son of God, have pity on us. And deal with us according to your kindness, and bring us out from the chains of darkness. And open for us the door by which we may go forth to you.... May we be saved with you, because you are our Savior,' Then I heard their voice, and placed their faith in my heart. And I placed my name upon their head, because they are free and they are mine."¹⁴⁵³

2ND CENTURY A.D., about 100-105, the Apocryphon of John presents that descent in a different way than other versions for it mentions how the perfect providence descended into the darkness, to the prison, and the foundations of chaos were shook, the descent into the underworld was part of the saving plan. The descent may have been interpreted by some groups as being a descent into this world.¹⁴⁵⁴

Justin Martyr, 110-165, responds to some of the early anti-Christian Jews. He accused some of them having removed from some of the copies of the sayings of Jeremiah a prophecy that predicted Christ's descent. "The Lord God remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation." Lundy gives another translation of this prediction as it was recorded by Irenaeus: "'And the Lord remembered His dead saints (Israel) who slept in the land of sepulture; and He went down to preach His salvation to them, and to rescue and save them.'" ¹⁴⁵⁵

A Coptic manuscript of the 2nd century, mentioned Christ's descent.¹⁴⁵⁶

Irenaeus, 120-202, was the Bishop of Lyons, a disciple of Polycarp, who was St. John's pupil. Irenaeus also mentions the prediction but quotes it a number of times, as being from both Isaiah and Jeremiah.¹⁴⁵⁷

Irenaeus objected to Marcion's interpretation of the descent story. According to Marcion, "...Cain, and those like him, and the Sodomites, and the Egyptians, and others like them, and in fine all the nations who walked in all sorts of abomination, were saved by the Lord, on His descending into Hades, & on their running unto Him, and that they welcomed Him into their kingdom...." Whereas, "...Abel, & Enoch, and Noah, and those who were pleasing to God, did not partake in salvation... [for they] did not run to Jesus, or believe His announcement; and for this reason he [Marcion], declared that their souls remained in Hades."¹⁴⁵⁸ Irenaeus had a different interpretation. Christ had "...descended to those things which are of the earth beneath, seeking the sheep which had perished..."¹⁴⁵⁹ But in his descent Christ had brought "the ancient fathers" unto Himself through "regeneration" (baptism).¹⁴⁶⁰

Russell notes that "Marcion the Gnostic said that Christ descended to save all who believed in the true, hidden God as opposed to the evil demiurge who created the world."¹⁴⁶¹ Alfred Firmin Loisy observed that Marcion had his own account of Christ's descent into Hell.¹⁴⁶²

Although Irenaeus believed in the descent of Christ into the realm of the spirit prison, he rejected many of the interpretations of the doctrine that came from different "apostate Christian" sects of his time, whom he felt were teaching "heresies." Hence, Marcion was listed as one of the "heretics" in Irenaeus' works. Irenaeus seems to disagree with Marcion's interpretation as to who was saved when Christ descended into Hades. Irenaeus accused Marcion of distorting & mutilating the Gospels. During this century many different views were expounded upon concerning what Christ did when he went down into the spirit prison. Who got saved? Who rushed towards Christ to greet the glorious deliverer? Who did not? These questions, plus many others, were polemically considered by different Christian writers.¹⁴⁶³

Irenaeus: "And this is why the Lord went down under the earth (Ephesians 4:9) to proclaim to them His coming, the remission of sins for those who believe in Him,... those who set their hope in Him (1:12),... and He remitted their sins like ours."¹⁴⁶⁴

In 1882, Lundy cites Irenaeus, as he had responded to heretics, for he wrote that: "...for three days He [Christ] dwelt in the place where the dead were, as the prophets says concerning Him:" He goes on to cite the missing prediction mentioned earlier, and then says: "And the Lord Himself says, 'As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be in the heart of the earth.' Then also the Apostle says, 'But when He ascended what is it but He first descended into the lower parts of the earth?' [see Eph. 4:7-10] This, too, David says, 'And Thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell.' If, then, the Lord observed the law of the dead that he might become the First-Begotten from the dead, and tarried until the third day in the lower parts of the earth; then after-wards rising in the flesh, so that He even shewed the print of the nails to His disciples, He thus ascended to the Father;-- if all these things occurred, I say, how must these men not be put to confusion, who allege that the 'lower parts' refer to this world of ours, but that their inner man, leaving the body here, ascends into the super-celestial place? For as the Lord went away into the midst of the shadows of death, where the souls of the dead were, yet afterwards arose in the body, and after the resurrection was taken up into Heaven, it is manifest that the souls of His disciples also, upon whose account the Lord underwent these things, shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection awaiting that event; then receiving their bodies and rising in them, just as the Lord arose, they shall come thus into the presence of God."¹⁴⁶⁵

Irenaeus wrote that the Lord Jesus Christ, upon being the "first-begotten of the dead" (Rev. 1:5), Christ received into His bosom the ancient fathers who had died long ago. He regenerated them into the life of God. Irenaeus hints to the idea that the ancient fathers who had died before Christ's birth were embraced by Christ, upon Christ's descent into hades, after Christ's own death. They were Christ's other sheep too, just as those who had been scattered amongst the nations were. Justin Martyr & Irenaeus had claimed that the prophets of old had predicted that "The Lord God remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation." Irenaeus said that the Lord should save that very man Adam who had been created after His image and likeness. In the art works throughout the centuries, Adam is one of the very first ones to be raised out of the underworld.¹⁴⁶⁶

Irenaeus, in different parts of his writings, to summarize, basically reaffirmed how: The Lord descended into the regions beneath the earth, preaching His advent there also, and declaring the remission of sins received by those who believe in Him. For 3 days He dwelt in the place where the dead were. Irenaeus cites a different reading of the prediction about Christ's descent: 'And the Lord remembered His dead Saints who slept formerly in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them, to rescue and save them.' Further on, this remembering, this show of not being neglectful, seems to have been inspired by early anti-Christian charges going around that the Christian God neglected other people before the time of Christ that had died. For Irenaeus again tells how the Lord remembered His own dead ones who slept in the dust, for he went down to them to raise them up, to save them. How that the gospel was not just for those who believed at the time of Tiberius Caesar during Christ's life time, nor was it for them that now lived, but it was for all people. All, who from the beginning & according to their capacity, in their generation, have both loved & feared God. (ANF, 1:494, 499, 510, 560).

Walter Lowrie explains that the Good Shepherd was a favorite symbol in the catacombs and on sarcophagi. It was an appropriate symbol in sepulchral art because it was symbolic of the shepherd of the 23rd Psalm who leads his sheep "through the valley of the shadow of death". In some cases, Peter is the one to carry the lost sheep back to the Church, while Christ the Good Shepherd is the one to carry the sheep up to paradise.¹⁴⁶⁷

About 150, some date the use of the Apostles' Creed, by the early Christian church, & is even cited by many Roman Catholic, & Protestant churches today. Thus, a portion reads how Christ descended to Hell; the 3rd day He rose from the dead. Some Protestant churches, (Episcopalians) have inserted the word Hades, for Hell, in their prayer book.¹⁴⁶⁸

The Pastor of Hermas, 160, became a source for Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, who suggested, (like some art works of militant angels), that the apostles, also, after death, also became missionaries to the spirits in prison in the under world.¹⁴⁶⁹ "These Apostles and teachers, who preached the name of the Son of God having fallen asleep in the power and faith of the Son of God, preached also to those who had fallen asleep before them, and themselves gave to them the seal of the preaching."¹⁴⁷⁰

By the 2nd century A.D., one of the most widespread and popular explanations concerning what Christ was doing between his crucifixion on Friday afternoon & his resurrection on Sunday morning, was the belief that he had spent that time descending into the spirit world, there to face death who was sometimes personified, and whose abode was thought to be in the underworld. The devil was often associated with death, and as chief enemy of humanity, they fought together against Christ, but lost.

The Gnostics, with their hatred of created, material world, argued that the descent was identical to the descent from heaven made to this world through Christ's birth. Mortal life in a body of flesh, was for the Gnostics, the descent into hell.

For many other Christians, the descent into hell was seen as a theology that embraced both justice and mercy, for since the birth of Christ had come long after the "original sin" of Adam, and millions of human beings had already lived and died on the earth by that time. These souls might have been deprived of an opportunity to receive salvation, but since Christ did descend, they too would be given an opportunity. Thus, if the act of salvation included Christ's descent, and if Christ had also preached the gospel there to those who had died before his birth, then the effects of redemption could be felt by all.¹⁴⁷¹

About A.D. 170, the descent of Christ into hades, and the hand clasp was mentioned towards the end of a sermon ascribed to Melito, [A.D. 160-170-177], bishop of Sardis. He said that Christ arose from the dead and cries to us saying: "Who is he who contends against me (Isaiah 50:8)? Let him stand before me. I freed the condemned, I made the dead live again, I raise him who was buried. Who is he who raises his voice against me (cf. Isaiah 22:2)? I...am he who destroyed death and triumphed over the enemy and trod upon Hades and bound the strong one and brought men safely home to the heights of heaven... Therefore come hither, all ye families of men who are defiled with sins, and receive remission of sins. For I am your remission... I lead you up to the heights of heaven, I will show you the Father who is from the ages, I will raise you up by my right hand."¹⁴⁷²

One of The Twelve Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs is entitled: The Testament of Benjamin, composed about A.D. 192, or earlier. Benjamin says that the Lamb of God (Christ) shall be put to death on a tree for ungodly men in the blood of the covenant, for the salvation of the Gentiles and of Israel, and shall destroy Beliar, (the devil), and them that serve him. Those who follow the Lamb's (or Christ's) compassion in a good mind may wear crowns of glory. Further on he says that the Messiah shall arise from the grave. Other translations say that the Messiah shall ascend from Hades. And even though he will be lowly upon the earth, he shall be glorious in heaven.¹⁴⁷³

THE DESCENT INTO HELL CONTROVERSY: During the 2nd half of the 2nd century on into the 3rd, many Christians were concerned with the questions as to whom Christ favored with his preaching in hell, and who was released. Whom did the preaching, & to whom? Did Christ go by himself, or not at all? Or did he go, followed by his apostles later. Did John the Baptist, precede Christ? Did other saints descend, as angels did, to help with the battle there, the preaching, & the liberating? Some early Christians answered these types of questions differently. Some, by saying that Christ preached to the people of the Covenant, such as the Old Testament Patriarchs and all the devout Hebrews. Others were of the opinion that Christ preached to all the dead, the sinners included. Ignatius, Irenaeus, [2nd cent.], and later Hippolytus [3rd cent], were of the opinion that Christ preached only to the righteous Hebrews. Some scholars suggest that Tertullian in some parts of his writings, suggested that Christ gospel was preach only to the patriarchs & prophets of past ages. Some argued with the heretics' versions, like Irenaeus against Marcion, & about who rushed up to Christ, when he descended, & who didn't. Also, who didn't have to descend into the lower regions, but were righteous enough to go right to paradise. Clement of Alexandria speculates if the gospel was preached in Hades, to all, or just the Hebrews only, or to the Gentiles, to the Heathens, or to whomever, & wherever they were too. But Clement reasons & asks how that they could hardly think that the righteous & sinners were in the same condemnation, charging Providence with injustice? He also points out that the apostles followed after Christ's descent, & did their part in preaching the gospel in Hades too.¹⁴⁷⁴

Who was it that did the preaching in the spirit world, in the afterlife realms? Who battled the demons there that resisted the forced entering, preaching, liberating, & left a broken down doors, or gates of hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, or underworld? Was this an on going liberation process, as prayers, liturgical rites & masses for the dead were being done, different on going times, down through the centuries? Art works, writings & legends, seems to suggest that the controversy over what happened during the descent, didn't ever get resolved. For was it just Christ that descended, or did descents also include John the Baptist & other prophets before Christ? Or were their separate descents after Christ's descent? Such as Christ's apostles, teachers & the best of the disciples, also sent to preach the gospel, as suggested by Hermas, & Clement of Alexandria? (The Apostolic Fathers, 232, Hermas Sim. 9:16, ANF, 2:490-2).¹⁴⁷⁵ Or were there also angels with Christ, such as Michael & Gabriel, who put the fallen devil in irons? Or was it the Santa Maria, the Virgin Mary who also descends to rescue souls out of purgatory? Whom are these other "saints" depicted in the fires of hell, preaching? These types of questions have to be asked, when we consider more of the writings, art works & later legends. Gnostic versions of the afterlife, of souls immediately going to heaven or hell, also caused more controversy amongst those who varied in their dogmatic opinions about what happens to the righteous or the wicked souls in the afterlife realms.¹⁴⁷⁶

3RD CENTURY A.D.: "As legend began to depart from theology, Hell and Death were personified. In the early third century "The Teachings of Silvanus" described a full, elaborate story: Christ descends to the underworld but finds his way barred, for Hell knows that his visit will doom its power. Christ smashes the iron bars and bronze bolts of hell's gate. When he enters, Hell tries to catch and bind him, but he bursts the chains. Finding Hell and Death arrayed with the Devil against him, he humbles them all and "breaks Hell's bow" to show that its power is forever vanquished.¹⁴⁷⁷

Different versions of the story about the descent still retain some theological basis to them, but were becoming more and more legendized, for as legends eventually began to departed from theology, Hell and Death eventually became personified beings who would often attempt to stop Christ's descent. In the early part of this century, "The Teachings of Silvanus" tell how Christ descended into the underworld to find his way barred by hell who was afraid that Christ's visit would doom its power. Christ smashes through the iron bars and bronze bolts of hell's gate, and as he enters, hell attempts to catch and bind him. Christ bursts the chains and finds that hell, death, and the devil all want to defeat him in a underworld battle. Christ humbles them all and breaks Hell's bow, showing that its power was then to be vanquished forever. The Teachings of Silvanus also links this active destruction of Satan by Christ with opinion of some Christians that Christ was offered as a ransom for the souls held hostage in Hell.¹⁴⁷⁸

Clement of Alexandria, wrote: "Wherefore the Lord preached the Gospel to those in Hades, as well as to all in earth, in order that all might believe and be saved, wherever they were. If, then, the Lord descended to Hades for no other end but to preach the Gospel, as He did descend, it was either to preach the Gospel to all, or to the Hebrews only. If accordingly to all, then all who believe shall be saved, although they may be of the Gentiles, on making their profession there; since God's punishments are saving and disciplinary, leading to conversion, and choosing rather the repentance than the death of a sinner; and especially since souls, although darkened by passions, when released from their bodies are able to perceive more clearly, when no longer obstructed by the paltry flesh. And because the Gospel further says, that many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection, and went into the Holy City and appeared unto many, it is manifest that they were translated to a better state, or higher post; wherefore there then took place a universal movement and translation through our Saviour's dispensation." Clement suggests that everyone would get a fair chance to be saved, no one would be forced to follow, for while in hades Christ gave the prisoners a chance to come forth, if it was according to their will, for he said: "Come forth, ye that will, from your bonds!"¹⁴⁷⁹

Tertullian, 145-220, noted that some Christians believed that Christ's descent had freed the saints from the obligation of sojourning to hades when they died, for they would immediately enter into paradise. However, He was of the opinion that only martyrs would bypass hades, while both the righteous and unrighteous souls would both have to descend into hades to await the resurrection. The living could make intercession and relief for their righteous departed souls, and there were some souls who needed to pass through penitential cleansing before receiving their final reward. These types of views would show up in later centuries in the basic doctrines behind purgatory. Christ didn't ascend on high, without first descending into the lower parts of the earth, that Christ might make the patriarchs & prophets, partakers of himself. Thus also Tertullian also presented the vivid image of Christ breaking the bolts and smashing the down the doors of hell. Numerous artists throughout the centuries depicted this very thing in their works on the descent.¹⁴⁸⁰

Origen, 185-230-254, wrote that John the Baptist had died before Christ, "so that he might descend to the lower regions and announce [preach] his coming. For everywhere the witness and forerunner of Jesus is John, being born before and dying shortly before the Son of

God, so that not only to those of his generation but likewise to those who lived before Christ should liberation from the death be preached, and that he might everywhere prepare a people trained to receive the Lord."¹⁴⁸¹ Hippolytus, 170-236, also wrote that John the Baptist had died first that he might prepare those in hades for the gospel, by preaching there. It was a common opinion among the Greeks, perhaps the Greek speaking early to later Christians, in the Eastern part of the Roman Empire, that the Baptist was Christ's forerunner also among the dead, (ANF, 5:213, n. 7). Some icons show this opinion was pasted down to later centuries, but confused it too, as to what John the Baptist, & other prophets were doing in Hades. Were they there preaching? In their graves, waiting for the resurrection, & to be taken over into paradise?¹⁴⁸² Earlier, a number of church Fathers, told how John the Baptist, once martyred, became the forerunner there, also, "...announcing even as he did on this earth, that the Savior was about to come to ransom the spirits of the saints from the hand of death." Later, a medieval Easter drama, the "Harrowing of Hell," John descends first, then is there to greet Christ when Christ descended. Many art works depict this sort of thing. The Old Testament Saints, the prophets, are there to greet the glorious King upon his descent. Clement of Rome [30-100 A.D.], hints to this when he wrote: "Thou shalt raise me up, and I shall confess unto Thee;" (Psa.28:7), and again I laid me down, and slept; I awaked, because Thou art with me;" (Compare Psa.3:6), and again, Job says, "Thou shalt raise up this flesh of mine, which has suffered all these things." (Job. 19:25-6).¹⁴⁸³

In Origen's Against Celsus, Origen mentions a prophecy in Isaiah which was concerning how Christ would set the captive spirits free from the spirit prison, & preach the gospel to them, & bring them out of darkness into the light. Celsus charged that the Christians had "invented" the doctrine.

Celsus accused the early Christians of believing that they alone would be saved while the rest of the human family would be roasted in the fire. However, this was not a very fair statement for Celsus to have made. For he knew that many of the early Christians believed that the gospel had been extended to the many souls in the realms of the spirits. For he mocked them for this belief by saying: "Certainly, you Christians will not say that Christ, when He found that He could not induce the inhabitants on the surface of the earth to believe in His doctrines, descended to the infernal regions, in order that He might persuade those that dwell there." Celsus also goes on to accuse the early Christian of "inventing absurd apologies by which you are ridiculously deceived". Celsus may have also noted that the pagan nations had correlative stories, and so he may have charged that the Christians' version was borrowed. Origen wrote in response to Celsus that like it or not, Christ did descend to preach unto the spirits in hades.¹⁴⁸⁴

In another translation of Celsus: "Perhaps you Christians will say that having failed to convince men on earth of his divinity, he descended into hell to convince them there. In all of these beliefs you have been deceived; yet you persist doggedly to seek justification for the absurdities you have made doctrines."¹⁴⁸⁵

T. W. Doane, a late 19th century A.D., anti-Christian writer, notes that the "Ancient Christian works of art represent his [Christ's] descent into hell."¹⁴⁸⁶ "The apocryphal gospels teach the doctrine of Christ Jesus' descent into hell, the object of which was to preach to those in bondage there, and to liberate the saints who had died before his advent on earth. . . . The saints were then liberated from their prison, and all those who believe in the efficacy of his name, shall escape hereafter the tortures of hell. This is the doctrine to be found in the apocryphal gospels, and was taught by the Fathers of the Church."¹⁴⁸⁷

Doane also mentions other sources and notes the parallels in other nations, and then, like the early anti-Christian Celsus, he suggested that the Christians' versions were borrowed from the heathen: "The reason why Christ has been made to descend into Hell, is because it is a part of the universal mythos, even the three days' duration. The Saviours of mankind had all done so, he must therefore do likewise." Doane goes on to say that Crishna, the Hindoo Saviour, Zoroaster of the Persians, Osiris of the Egyptians, Horus the virgin born Saviour, Bacchus, Hercules, Mercury, the Word and Messenger of God, Baldur, the Scandinavian god, Quetzalcoatl, Mexican crucified Saviour, etc., all descended into hell.¹⁴⁸⁸

Lundy notes another similar type for He wrote: "As Orpheus went with his lyre into Hades, so Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison. His Gospel has sounded everywhere throughout the whole wide universe; and it shall yet accomplish its blessed work of restoration, of bringing all things together in Christ, both in heaven and earth, and things under the earth."¹⁴⁸⁹ It may be, that as more and more Christian converts came from pagan backgrounds, they brought into the Churches different blends of the many different elements, aspects and parallels concerning descents and ascensions.¹⁴⁹⁰

Origen responded to Celsus: "Whether he like it or not, we assert that not only while Jesus was in the body did He win over not a few persons only, but so great a number that a conspiracy was formed against Him on account of the multitude of His followers: but also, that when He became a soul, without the covering of the body, He dwelt among the disembodied spirits, converting such of them to Himself as were willing, or those whom He saw for reasons known to Himself, to be fitted for salvation." (ANF, 4:448).¹⁴⁹¹

Following Christ's example, the early to later Christians used the story of the fish that swallowed Jonah, as a type of Christ's descent. (Compare Jonah 1:17 & Matt. 12:39-40). In some cases, the Christian symbol for Christ was the fish symbol, and the early Christians were considered symbolically as fish. There may have been a type of baptism for the dead in such typologies too.¹⁴⁹²

Hippolytus, A.D. 170-236, Bishop of Portus, near Rome, A.D. 220-30, saw the act of Christ's descent as being an integral part of salvation during which Christ redeemed the righteous Hebrews who had perished before Christ's advent. He also wrote that the Father had made Christ the ordained Lord & Judge of things in heaven, on earth, and "under the earth." Thus hinting to how Christ had extended his dominion into the lower regions by defeating death. He also saw a type of Adam in what Christ did. Christ had become man in the midst of men "to re-create Adam through Himself; and of things under the earth, because He was also reckoned among the dead, preaching the Gospel to the souls of the saints, (and) by death overcoming death."¹⁴⁹³ John P. Lundy suggested that the early Treatise of Hippolytus on the subject of Hades, "is further evidence as to the Descent into Hell being an integral part of the early Christian faith."¹⁴⁹⁴

In Hippolytus, Fragments From Commentaries: The "wardens of Hades trembled when they saw Him; [Christ] and the gates of brass and the bolts of iron were broken. For lo, the Only-begotten entered, a soul among souls, God the Word with a (human) soul. For his body lay in the tomb, not emptied of divinity; but as, while in Hades, He was in essential being with His Father, so was He also in the body and in Hades. For the Son is not contained in space, just as the Father; and He comprehends all things in Himself. But of His own will he dwelt in a body animated by a soul, in order that with His soul He might enter Hades, and not with His pure divinity."¹⁴⁹⁵

Hippolytus also wrote that when John the Baptist died he became a witness for Christ in Hades so that the those in Hades would be prepared when Christ descended to preach the gospel to them. Thus, as in life, John was a forerunner, so also in death was he a forerunner for Christ in Hades.¹⁴⁹⁶

3rd century Gospel of Nicodemus, gives a detailed account of Christ's descent into Hell.¹⁴⁹⁷ Another 3rd c., The Acts of Xanthippe and Polyxena, an apocryphal book, Christ extends the gospel to not only those on earth, but also to searching out the sinners in Hades: "Christ, the provider of the world, the searcher out of sinners and the lost,... has not only called to mind those upon earth, but also by his own presence has redeemed those in Hades." Reminding us of Clement of Alexandria's speculations & affirmations, about whom did the preaching, & to who ever the gospel was being preached to. If just to certain ones, or if even to all, wherever they were, including those in Hades, (ANF, 2:290-2, 10:207).

4TH CENTURY A.D.: Eusebius: "Christ descended into Hades to free the souls long detained there, who for ages had been expecting His coming; and again,... He was crucified, and descended into Hades, and burst the bars which had never yet been broken, and rose again; and He also raised with Himself the dead that had slept for ages. And how He descended alone, but ascended with a great multitude to His Father."¹⁴⁹⁸

Athanasius, 296-373, wrote his Four Discourses Against the Arians, between the years A.D. 356 and 360. In his 3rd Discourse, he mentions Christ's descent after his death upon the cross. For "the keepers of hell's gates shuddered and set open hell, and the graves did gape, and many bodies of the saints arose and appeared to their own people." Further on he mentions how David predicted in his Psalm: "'Thou shalt not leave My soul in Hades, neither shalt Thou suffer Thy Holy One to see corruption.'" (Ps. 16:10).¹⁴⁹⁹

By the time of Constantine, (reigned 307-337), with Christianity being made a legal religion, & the state religion, almost everyone in the Empire called themselves by the Christian name, but only out of it seemed to become the fashionable thing to do, though many hardly even knew that much about what the different sects of Christians believed at the time, & what they didn't. They also didn't change their pagan ways, or practices too, living immoral lives, & ignoring Christian ethics, if they were even taught them. The church, also being changed from within, as well as from pressures from without, figured that a vast number of these "Christians" by name only, weren't heaven bound. But the church didn't want to tell them that they were headed for doom in hell. So to compromise, as it had with changing its Godhead formulas to try to please every faction. The church invented a new doctrine, the doctrine of purgatory! It basically said that souls who didn't go immediately to heaven, after death, went instead to an interim location called purgatory. A place of cleansing, & purging out of sins, even a place where they'd have a "second chance," in some ways. There they'd suffer for their earthly sins for as long as it took to pay for their sins, to then be set free & heaven bound. If they or their relatives were fortunate enough to be wealthy, the time spent in purgatory might be reduced by generous contributions to the church. This eventually grew into big business, & sources of big revenues to fill the treasuries of both the churches, & those of Christian kings & Queens, in later centuries. For, eventually, the State wanted their cut from the sales of indulgences, as did many others.¹⁵⁰⁰

Mid-fourth century: In the Christian prayer book of Bishop Serapion of Thmuis, a prayer said over a corpse, and in which the descent & ascension in and out of Hades is mentioned too. "Deus, . . . qui deducis ad portas inferorum et reducis. . ." Translation: "God, . . . you who lead down to the gate of Hades and lead back up. . ." ¹⁵⁰¹

About 359-60, some of the published creeds mention the descent. For the 8th confession, or 3rd Sirmian, says that after Christ was crucified, and died, he "descended into the parts beneath the earth, and regulated the things there, Whom the gate-keepers of hell saw (Job 38:17, LXX.) and shuddered; and He rose from the dead the third day..." In another, The 10th Confession at Nike and Constantinople, says that after Christ was crucified, he died and was buried, and "descended to the parts below the earth; at whom hades itself shuddered: who also rose from the dead on the third day..." ¹⁵⁰²

Athanasius mentions the descent in a letter written to Epictetus, bishop of Corinth. Christ's body was laid in the grave, "when the Word had left it, yet was not parted from it, yet was not parted from it, to preach, as Peter says, also to the spirits in prison. [1 Pet. 3:19] And this above all shews the foolishness of those who say that the Word was changed into bones and flesh. For if this had been so, there wree no need of a tomb. For the Body would have gone by itself to preach to the spirits in Hades. But as it was, He Himself went to preach, while the Body Joseph wrapped in a linen cloth, and laid it away at Golgotha." (Mark 15:46). ¹⁵⁰³

By this century, legends and myths had Christ in a dramatic dialogue with the personified forces of darkness, as Christ descended to vanquish them in a dramatic underworld war. Numerous art works also depicted this battle which took place during the descent. ¹⁵⁰⁴

Cyril of Jerusalem, A.D. 315-386, also wrote that Christ had descended into the realms of the dead, or hades. "...He who was crucified on Golgotha here, has ascended into heaven from the Mount of Olives on the East. For after having gone down hence into Hades, and come up again to us, He ascended again from us into Heaven,..." ¹⁵⁰⁵

"...Death was struck with dismay on beholding a new visitant descend into Hades, not bound by chains of that place. Wherefore, O porters of Hades, were ye scared at the sight of Him? [Christ]. What was the unwonted fear that possessed you? Death fled, & his flight betrayed his cowardice. The holy prophets ran unto Him, [Christ], and Moses the Lawgiver, and Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob; David also, and Samuel, and Esaias, and John the Baptist, who bore witness when he asked, Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?"

"...All the Just were ransomed, whom death had swallowed; for it behoved the King whom they had proclaimed, to become the redeemer of His noble heralds. Then each of the Just said, O death, where is thy victory? O grave, where is thy sting?" (1 Cor.15:55). For the Conqueror hath redeemed us. Of this our Saviour the Prophet Jonas formed the type, when he prayed out of the belly of the whale, and said, I cried in my affliction, and so on, out of the belly of hell, (Jonah 2:2), and yet he says that he is in Hades; for he was a type of Christ, who was to descend into Hades.... I am a type of Him, who is to be laid in the Sepulchre... And though he was in the sea, Jonas says, I went down to the earth since he was a type of Christ, who went down into the heart of the earth." ¹⁵⁰⁶

Gregory of Nyssa, 330-386, had also likened the baptismal rite to the grave. "The old man is buried in water, the new man is born again, and grows in grace." (De Poenitentia). He also wrote that in baptism there were three immersions, & he compared these as being a type of Christ's descent into the grave, or the underworld. "Now our God and Saviour, in fulfilling the Dispensation for our sakes, went beneath the... earth, that He might raise up life from thence. And we in receiving Baptism, in imitation of our Lord & Teacher and Guide". Gregory also spoke of how Christ had opened the prison, and did release the condemned so that they would be able to enter into paradise. ¹⁵⁰⁷

St. Ambrose, 340-397, wrote about the descent, by saying that even though Christ had "died as man, yet was He free in hell itself." He then goes on to cite from Ps. LXXXVII. [lxxxvii] 4, 5, as saying that Christ would be free among the dead. "Wilt thou know how free? "I am become as a man that hath no help, free among the dead." And well is He called free, Who had power to raise Himself, according to that which is written: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." [John 2:19] And well is He called free, Who had descended to rescue others." ¹⁵⁰⁸

Chrysostom, 354-407, suggested that in baptism they had fulfilled the pledges of their covenant with God. It was also likened unto death and burial, resurrection and life which took place in a symbolical type of that which was to come. In being immersed under the water the old man is buried as in a tomb below & then raised up a new man. For a Christ was buried in the earth, & brought forth out of the earth, so also in baptism, being thus buried in water & coming up out of the water, they were likened unto Christ's resurrection, which would also happen in their case. Chrysostom had the words of Paul to help him with this similitude. "We were planted together in His death but in the likeness of His death." Concerning the descent, Chrysostom asks: "Who but an infidel would deny that Christ was in hell?" ¹⁵⁰⁹

John P. Lundy notes that the doctrine of the descent into hell was being taught from the earliest times in Christian history and was represented in on their monuments, and eventually incorporated in a creed about A.D. 390. ¹⁵¹⁰

St. Augustine of Hippo, 354-430, and most later Christians writers, according to Russell, "denied that 1 Peter [3] referred to the descent and hesitated as to whether the descent released all or only some of the dead." ¹⁵¹¹ Yet, Augustine also exclaims: "Quis ergo nisi infidelis negaverit fuisse apud inferos Christum— " Who but an infidel would deny that Christ went to the lower regions!" ¹⁵¹²

5TH c., Leo the Great (d. 461 A.D.), wrote that the 3 immersions were an "...imitation of the 3 days burial: and the rising again out of the water is like the rising from the grave." ¹⁵¹³

At the end of the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve, which was written by a Christian probably in the 5th or 6th century A.D., it says that Christ went down into hell, and saved Adam and Eve, and all their righteous seed or descendants, as he had promised. ¹⁵¹⁴

6TH CENTURY A.D.: As later versions of Christianity spread north into Northern Europe, the traditions & similar versions of beliefs blended & got legendized in those blends. The evil traits of the Teutonic versions of devils & demons, transferred to Satan & his hosts, with frequent references to the Devil in Teutonic legends & fairy tales. "Hell" is a Teutonic word that originally signified a hollow space or a cave underground. Thus, we note here that many depictions of the harrowing of hell, often is of Christ descending down into a cave, open-pit under the earth, or hollow space. From there, Christ grasps the wrist or hand of those lifted up to new life in the resurrection. ¹⁵¹⁵ In Norseland versions of resurrections, there are hand clasping covenants too, for in the rite of blood friendship, their hands are pierced to cause "...the blood of the two covenanting persons to inter-flow from their pierced hands, while they lay together underneath a lifted sod. The idea involved seems to have been, the burial of the two individuals, in their separate personal lives, and the intermingling of those lives—by the intermingling of their blood— while in their temporary grave; in order to their rising again a common life." (Rom. 6:4-6, Col. 2:12). ¹⁵¹⁶

In The Gospel of Nicodemus, Satan or Beelzebub, the "heir of darkness," informs Hell that Christ is on his way to defeat him. Hell bars all his doors, but this does not stop Christ from entering and lighting up hell's dark realm with glorious light and power. Christ says to the doors to crumble and let light flood in, and at his word they do fall down. Christ grapples Satan down and orders the angels of light to bind him, and then turn him over to hell to be held there until the second coming. Christ also shows Adam the sign of the cross and a hand grip by which he may enter into paradise when he and the others ascend up to the angel who guards the door leading to paradise.¹⁵¹⁷

The descent was depicted on a copperplate in which Christ reaches down to pull up Adam. Behind Christ is the penitent thief, etc.¹⁵¹⁸

During the second quarter of the 6th century, Christian rivals fought with each other over different details and interpretations of beliefs, doctrines, and many of them rejected, in some cases, some aspects of earlier Christian beliefs. Such as those which had been presented in the writings of Origen. Furthermore, with imperial pressures and the power of the state to back them up, anti-Origenists pressured many of their rivals in to going along with edicts that they had the Emperor Justinian and others publish and circulate. One of which was the Fifteen Anathematisms against Origen. In number nine of these fifteen, we read of certain aspects of this later version of Christ's descent into hades which was rejected by anti-Origenists. It says:

"If anyone maintains that it was not the Word of God made flesh by assumption of a flesh animated by the ψυχὴ λογικὴ and νοερά who went down into Hades and again returned into heaven, but says that this was done by the so-called (by them) Νοῦς, of whom they impiously assert that HE is Christ in the proper sense, and has become so through knowledge of the Unit,— let him be anathema."¹⁵¹⁹ Now from this, we might note that they weren't rejecting the whole idea of Christ's descent into hades, but rather, their rivals' version of it.

570, "Apostles' Creed" contains reference to the descent of Christ into hell. The Aquileian, and some Eastern versions of the Apostles' Creed contain the phrase which was further defended by Augustine and in the late 6th century by Venatius Fortunatus.¹⁵²⁰

Gregory the Great (ca. 540-604), agreed with the Alexandrians that the harrowing of Hades by Christ had removed the need for the righteous to go there.¹⁵²¹

7TH CENTURY A.D.: A worked showing the descent, dates back to the 7th to 8th centuries A.D., and it shows Christ clasping the right-wrist of a man.¹⁵²² Another depiction of "The Descent into Hell" dates back to 7th or 8th centuries.¹⁵²³

"...Christ was believed immediately after his death on the cross to have battled with and to have conquered the prince of hell. Although the oldest manuscripts of the so-called Apostle's Creed do not contain the passage "descended into hell," which is an addition of the seventh century, there can be no doubt that the idea actually prevailed as early as the 2nd century."¹⁵²⁴

8TH CENTURY A.D.: The Iconoclast period, among the frescoes of the Greek pope John VII (705-7), & in Sta Maria Antiqua, Rome, a depiction of the descent shows Christ striding forward over the body of Satan and stretching out a hand to ADAM AND EVE.¹⁵²⁵

When considering the numerous art works on Christ's descent, we must remember that the artists had to decide on what point in the event that they were going to depict. Thus, some depicted Christ before the doors or gates of hell, hades, limbo, etc. Others of Him, as He is kicking down the doors of hades, limbo, etc. Others show the doors crashing down on the devil, or some other demon of hell. Others, as Christ steps over the doors, or gates of hell, limbo, hades, etc., while Adam, & those who follow after him, come forth to greet their King. Some art works show Christ and Adam then reaching with their hands towards each other, depicting the moment just before the hand clasp. Then the hand clasp, (which are different types of hand clasp & grips, as depicted by the different artists). Christ then begins to turn. Other art works show the point in which He has turned. He then starts to lead the captives out of the spirit prison. They begin to ascend towards paradise (some art works show Adam & Eve, & the others naked). The soul often rides up on a garment. And then is clothed in a garment. In some cases the garment seems to act as a protective covering against the demons who are depicted as attempting to reclaim, or stop the person in their ascension into paradise.¹⁵²⁶

With his right hand, Christ grasps a person's left wrist.¹⁵²⁷ The Akhmim Fragment says that those who were sent to guard Christ's tomb, saw two bright person supporting another, as they came out of the tomb, they then heard a voice from heaven asking: "Have you preached to those who sleep?" The response was "Yes".¹⁵²⁸

9TH CENTURY A.D.: In a version of the harrowing of Hell, St. John the Baptist, and king David and Solomon also appears to greet Christ. Satan is trampled under the feet of Christ, & crushed under the gates of hell.¹⁵²⁹

10TH CENTURY A.D.: A 975 A.D. depiction of the descent, shows a person, (Eve) with up-lifted hands (in prayer?) as she watches the naked Adam as he is being raised up out of the pit by Christ who is grasping his left wrist with his right hand.¹⁵³⁰

Another depiction of Christ's descent, is the Pala d'Oro, retable in St Mark's Basilica, it was created in Constantinople in 976 and was brought to Venice in 1105. The hand clasp is also depicted in this one too. Another depiction of Christ's descent is seen with other art works. Christ goes down to a cave like caven and clasps the hand of Adam while a number of souls wait in the background to greet their deliverer.¹⁵³¹

The 10th century Fulda Sacramentary shows the crucified Christ, the Tree of the Cross piercing the serpent and "thereby overcoming sin and death and providing the means of eternal life for Adam and Eve and their heirs, who, it can now be seen, are already rising from their graves."¹⁵³²

The Harrowing of Hell was more rarely depicted in the West, usually only under Greek influence.¹⁵³³

Another source, 980 A.D., is a portion of an ivory bucket which has a depiction of the descent of Christ at the point where a person, perhaps Adam, is being raised up out of limbo. Off to the right of Christ & Adam is an angel which has taken a hold of a demon's arms to bind him.¹⁵³⁴

A work dated some time between A.D. 981 & 987, shows a later moment during the descent of Christ into limbo. Thus, it seems that the artist wanted to suggest upward movement, for it shows Christ in the mandorla, the symbol often seen behind a person or persons making other realm pilgrimages. Christ has also turned and is striding up-ward as he pulls Adam up out of the flames of hell by grasping, with his right hand, the left wrist of Adam. Eve stands naked engulfed in flames with up-lifted hands while looking towards Christ. They were being rescued by Christ who would guide them up towards paradise.¹⁵³⁵

Another work showing the 12 Feasts of the Church, dates back to the 10th-11th centuries A.D., it includes the descent, or the Anastasis (resurrection) as one of the feasts. Christ clasps with his right hand, the right hand of a person. During the same time, another depicts right hands being used to make the hand grip.¹⁵³⁶

10th— 11th century, on an Altar cross, c. 1024/39; in the centre a Fatimid crystal, tenth century. We see, in the lower portion of the cross, angels descending toward a soul with up lifted hands. One of the angels is reaching out towards those hands, hence it is the moment before the clasp.¹⁵³⁷

11TH CENTURY A.D.: A mosaic dated about 1020 shows Christ coming up out of hell with David & Solomon off to the left, while Adam and Eve are on the right. Christ has turned while grasping, with his left hand, the right wrist of Adam. Under Christ's feet are the broken down doors of hell.¹⁵³⁸

11th century, a mosaic in Daphni shows the harrowing of hell. St. JOHN THE BAPTIST and kings DAVID and Solomon also appear among those rescued. The gates of Hell as well as Satan are trampled under the feet of Christ.¹⁵³⁹ Another source says that this Byzantine work is a 11th century mosaic of the Torcello Cathedral depicting, among other things, the descent of Christ who has "just passed through death and seems to have increased in stature on emerging from the tomb; he seizes Adam by the hand and leads him, along with Eve, towards the light. He wrenches the symbolic pair from eternal darkness, as on that day he released all of humanity from the law of death. Satan and the Gates of Hell,... are beneath his feet."¹⁵⁴⁰

Peter Damiani, A.D. 1006 or 1007, died at Faenza on Feb. 22, 1072, in a speech entitled: The Glory of the Cross of Christ, he said that: "...It was by the Cross that the King of Glory delivered us from the fetters of the cruel tyrant, and penetrated by His might into the dungeons of hell. He absolved all His elect from the chains of their ancient condemnation; whom also He raised with Himself by the glory of His resurrection. What shall I say of the fame of that Cross, which, as its own first-fruits, caused the thief to enter into heaven, and by him opened the gates of Paradise, that henceforth all the elect might pass through them? That angel who had received the sword which excluded from Paradise beheld the key which was to open it in the Cross, and no longer opposed himself to the entrance.... "I," said the Lord, "if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." He goes on to say how that the thief on the cross who had acknowledged Christ had entered into paradise too. He used a tree as a type of Christ and the cross and said that the noble tree's "fruit was the prey of hell; now thou bearest the cedars of Paradise".¹⁵⁴¹

With his right-hand Christ holds the cross as a victory sign and walks all over the devil under his feet, while clasping, with his left hand, the right wrist of Adam.¹⁵⁴³

Another mosaic shows Christ thrusting the cross down on a devil whose hands and feet have been bound. Christ's left foot stands on one of the doors of hell, while his right foot is on the fallen devil beneath his feet. While others stand making gestures and acting as if witnesses; Christ, with his own left hand, grasps the right wrist of a man, (traditionally identified as Adam).¹⁵⁴⁴

Christ is standing on broken down, and crossed doors of hades, he has turned, & with his right hand, Christ has pulled a clothed man up by grasping the man's right wrist. Others, such as kings, and perhaps a number of saints and prophets are near by, they watch the ascension out of hades. Below, a number of people in graves, stand with up-lifted hands in praise and prayer.¹⁵⁴⁵

11th century, Byzantine work, a Lectionary of the Gospels, in Greek, shows, in the left portion, Christ stepping on a fallen demon, if not the devil, as he grips, with his right hand, the right wrist of Adam, to lift him up out of his grave. The doors of hades are underneath the fallen devil too. In the right portion of this page, we see the hand of God extending down.¹⁵⁴⁶

In the middle of the 11th century A.D., another mosaic of Christ's descent into limbo shows Christ holding the cross in his left hand, while clasping the wrist of a person with his right.¹⁵⁴⁷

A work dated between the 11th and 12th century A.D., shows the anastasis, or the descent into limbo, in which Christ has already broken down the door of limbo and is standing on them as he grasps Adam's left wrist with his right hand.¹⁵⁴⁸

A depiction of the harrowing of hell said to date back to the late 11th century through the early 12th century, shows bolts, fragments of iron, and the doors hell flying through the air, while Christ tramples under his feet the devil. Through the fire comes the first in many to be rescued, for Christ's left hand grasps the right wrist of the person. The other souls behind the first also reach out their hands, as if waiting to be grasped by Christ.¹⁵⁴⁹

Byzantine work, 11th—12th centuries, shows no hand grasping, instead Christ, standing on the gates of Hell, is spreading out his hands toward Adam and Eve rising from their tombs. Up above this scene is the crucifixion.¹⁵⁵⁰

THE ON GOING BATTLES WITH THE DEVIL: The battle over souls was on going, from the pre-existence war in heaven, to the post-fall from heaven activities of the devil's & his fallen angels' post-fall activities on earth to tempt the human family. On going in the post-crucifixion battle between Christ & his angels that descended into the infernal regions to free the captive spirits held captive there. On going in the post-resurrection victory march of Christ, during his militant world wide trek to combat the devil, & his fallen angels, (that lore said had fallen into different areas of the world, down into the lakes, rivers, wooded areas, into whatever areas that the human family inhabited).¹⁵⁵¹ Wherever the human family had spread to, so also had the fallen angels in order to tempt, lure, seduce & win souls over to their dark ways. This was the on going battle, & there seemed to be no end to it, as far as the human family could determine. In the thinking of many in the Middle Ages, the devil & his fallen angels, in their combat against God and his good angels, they were under certain rules of engagement that the devil & his fallen angels always attempted to cheat at, to disobey, for after all, they were the rebellious angels. God, on the other hand, was fair & could counter by tipping back the scales of justice according to his omnipotence powers to over rule any attempts to cheat the human family out of a fair & just Judgment. In the art works of Last Judgement scenes, we often see examples of how devils try to cheat, as one of them is sometimes depicted hanging on the scale to try to tip it in their favor. The human family could only be acquired by the devil & his fallen angels by every individual's sum of their own choices, all added up in the scale, which came out during their "encounter with deeds," during the time of them being judged fairly by Christ. In depictions of Last Judgment scenes where the soul is naked, this was symbolic of their deeds being exposed. Moreover, if thus exposed as being unrepentant sinners, wicked & having chosen devilish ways, those souls were ones acquired by the devil & his demons as being subjected to them, & thus without the protective garment, their naked souls would become subjected to the tortures & penance process. This was allowed to happen by God, who, (according to thinking of the Middle Ages), allowed the Devil & the demons to act as executioners, or penal torturers fulfilling the punishment required to carry out the sentences given after what was believed were just judgments.¹⁵⁵² But, like in the case with the times of the Inquisition & their torture chambers, there seemed to be no, or little place for tender compassion towards those being tortured by all kinds of dark demons with pitch forks, spikes, hot irons, red-hot pincers, boiling tubes, & other things the Medieval mind & late Christian artist could depict in art. In the thinking of many of the Middle Ages, the justification for such horrors, were put on the blame of all those who had chosen to disobey the church, and thus in turn, disobey God. In their ways of thinking, the horrors that had come upon them were because they had chosen them! They had consented to be subjected to them, because these souls had consented, had chosen to not repent, not to change their evil ways. They had not listened to the clerical warnings, or heeded the warnings from the saints calling out to them on the good right-hand side, that had warned them to depart from the left hand-path, & the darkness it went down to. Thus, in the thinking of many in the Middle Ages, & later, many of the human-family had to be purged, even if by force in this life, for if not, then their souls would be purified by being tortured, as a form of forced penance, in the next life, by passing through the refining fires of purgatory, or limbo, or hades & hell.¹⁵⁵³ Though there were conflicting beliefs about how much time spent in purgatory was needed to purge out sins, & clean souls there. Plus, though conflicting dogmas varied & developed over time, that explored if souls that had gone there, had to spend eternity there, or one day could be rescued out, (such as in later centuries after the Reformation, on down to the present time). Still, the battle over souls, (in conflicting dogmatic interpretations), transferred to graphic art works concerning conditions in the infernal regions, showed glimmers of hope, in many cases, for the human family. That hope, at least in the thinking of many of the Middle Ages, & later, was seen in the sale of indulgences, in the merits of the saints' good deeds, bought & used to cover one's own sins, or dead family members' sins. Or the merits thus earned or acquired by going on Crusades, or pilgrimages.¹⁵⁵⁴ But also in the hope offered through Christ's descent, or angelic descents, or descents of prophets, saints, the Virgin Mary, & others' efforts as Souls-Rescuers, going down or reaching down into the fires of purgatory, etc., to lift souls up out, by different types of hand & wrist grasping.¹⁵⁵⁵ But this is in contrast to other views, (by many, during the Middle Ages, on down to modern times), that claim that the different souls of the human family, once they go down to hell, that's it, they're stuck there to be burned & tortured, forever, for their sins! Such lack of mercy assigned to God, was abused & used to get people to follow, out of fear, many much later centuries' preachers' particular versions of Christianity, as they interpreted, or rather misinterpreted, (as their rivals would claim), divine justice.¹⁵⁵⁶ While, during the Middle Ages, another view was how the human family seemed to be assigned a very static role & is helpless, they were just spectators, in a cosmic struggle, which out come, or their chances of salvation were determined by the war strategies of the opponents fighting the on going battles. Moreover, because God was the greater & master-strategist, in the ultimate end, God will win! Even though at times, like in the case when the devil was allow to help cause the brutal suffering & death of Christ, the devil thought he'd won. However, this "victory" celebration is short lived, for as it turned out, even Christ's sufferings & death were a strategic moves by heaven to have the devil surrender his power & hellish domain over to the victorious Christ,¹⁵⁵⁷ during his descent into hell, purgatory, limbo, hades, the Anastasis, & then during his post-resurrection victory march throughout the world.

In the thinking of the Middle Ages: "It was this which God brought about by a great act of strategy: God became Man, and the Devil failed to realise it. He failed to see the Divinity beneath the human form. He claimed Him as his own and subjected Him to death. But in doing this he committed the great act of lawlessness— that extension of his authority over one who had made no diffidatio, no surrender of Himself to the Devil— and lost him his empire. Henceforth, the Devil could be smitten hip and thigh, and God could save whom He would."¹⁵⁵⁸ As we've seen, art works of Christ's descent show the Devil being wounded, as Christ thrusts his lance-cross banner into the fallen Devil, often-times also depicted under the crashed, broken down doors or gates of hell, limbo, purgatory, hades. But also the Devil, in some sources of legends, polemics, & the following poem, is not aware at the time, of the consequences of taking part in putting Christ to death. How that Christ would thereby gain victory over him!

Anselm, Prior of Bec (1063–78), in his, Cur Deus Homo, polemically wrote in response to anti-Christian writers of his time, amongst the Jewish faith, about their polemical rehashed old questioning & opposition to Christ, the Son of God, becoming a Man like other men, to be subjected to a body that thirsted, got hungry, weary, suffered beatings & could be crucified with robbers. This didn't seem to be the type of thing "a God" would allow to happen to Himself, if God had become a man, so the polemics went. Thus, Anselm answers these issues these & other words: "As for that which we are accustomed to say— that by killing Him [Christ] who was God and in whom no cause of death was to be found, [Christ was innocent] the Devil justly lost the power which he had obtained over sinners; and that otherwise it would have been an unjust violence for God to make Man free, since Man [Mankind, the human family in general] had voluntarily and not through violence given himself over to the Devil: as for all this, I say, I cannot see what force it has."¹⁵⁵⁹

Great Golden Legend, Medieval Poetry:¹⁵⁶⁰

One day, in Satan's realm-- the dark domain,
Where souls of dead in chains of death remain.
The Prince of darkness, boastful, spake aloud to his abject, imprisoned, awestruck crowd:
'Hearken, ye spirits. Lo, I bring you this day
Another victim bound beneath my sway:
Jesus, the Nazarene, the Master Fraud
Who proudly claimed Himself the Son of God!
I laid the snare, which the Impostor caught,
And to the tree of shame the Boaster brought;
and now, between thieves He helpless hangs,
In Death's dissolving and resistless pangs.
You shall behold Him pass through Hades' door,
To walk among the living -- nevermore!
My power shall hush the Archpretender's breath.'
Then Hell itself in fear began to quake,
And, in alarm, thus to the Devil spake,
'Jesus! Dost thou not fear that mighty Name?
And is this Jesus--Nazarene-- the same who once cried, "Lazarus! Come forth!" & swift the bands of death were loosed, his fetters rift, and through thy gates impassable he broke, -- so soon as that almighty word was spoke?
Let but that Jesus once invade these halls,
And in that hour thy boasted empire falls!
What if the victim thou dost proudly claim
Shall as the Victor bring thy pride to shame?'
While Hell thus spake, a voice like thunder rolls, throughout the realms of Death's imprisoned souls:
'Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates!

The King of Glory at your entrance waits.'
 Then Hell inquires, 'Who is this glorious King?'
 And with the answer all its chambers ring:
 'The Lord of Hosts, strong to subdue all foes,
 Mighty in battle, none can Him oppose.'
 Then, in the realm of Death's unbroken shade
 Appeared the Conqueror in light arrayed.
 It was as tho' in crimson & in gold
 The splendor of a thousand suns had rolled
 Their mingled glory in one matchless beam,
 And lit up Death Shade with the lustrous gleam.
 Ineffable that glory; as it shone
 Like to the radiance of the Great White Throne,
 Precipitate, demons of darkness fled,
 And lost souls, to the confines of the dead.
 Whilst through the open gates and broken bars,
 Toward realms of light more fadeless than the stars,
 The Prince of Life a host of captives led
 From out of the night and bondage of the dead.

Isaiah's words of the Light shining in darkness in the valley of the shadow of death, along with David's words from Psalm 24:3-10, seem to be reflected in this Golden Legend. But also the reference to combat with his foe (Isa.9:2-6).¹⁵⁶¹

12TH CENTURY A.D., a mosaic shows the broken down doors of purgatory, with Christ standing on the devil who has been bound in irons. Christ grasps, with his right hand, the right wrist of a person to raise him out of his tomb. A number of people stand near by with up-lifted hands.¹⁵⁶²

The harrowing of hell was "shown on a carved stone slab of the 12th c. in Bristol Cathedral, and is one of the scenes on an altar frontal of the 12th c. at Klosterneuburg, Austria." Another work shows: "The Harrowing of Hell. Christ trampling on Satan and the gates of Hell, rescuing Adam and Eve. St. John stands on His left, kings David and Solomon on His right. Detail from mosaic on the west wall of Torcello Cathedral (12th c.) In this art work Christ left hand raises Adam up by clasping Adam's left wrist."¹⁵⁶³

The Miniatures of the Life of Christ, France, c. 1200, shows the harrowing of hell in which Christ lances a monstrous Satan while drawing the just out of the mouth of hell with a left hand clasp on both hands of a naked soul. Some of the others have their hands raise up together as if in prayer and praise of Christ.¹⁵⁶⁴

12th century art-work, the descent into limbo, Christ is about to turn while holding on to the left wrist of a person, with his own right hand. A number of writings, which we have considered already, suggest that Christ had guided Adam and the others up into paradise. The artist depicts that moment when Christ was about to turn towards paradise.¹⁵⁶⁵

Matthew 12:29 may have been seen as a type of Christ's descent, for Christ binds Satan, or the strong man's hands and feet, and enters into his prison house in order to spoil his house. A 12th century Winchester Bible illustration of the letter B shows Christ casting out devils in the top portion of the B, while in the lower half, the descent is depicted in which Christ, with his right hand, grasps the right wrist of the naked Adam, other naked souls with up-lifted hands, begins to ascend up out of the jaws of hell. The devil's feet and hands are bound too.¹⁵⁶⁶

As late as the 12th century the anonymous writer of a Symboli Apostolici Explanatio (Explanation of the Apostolic Creed), includes the comment that Christ "descended to the lower regions that he might liberate the saints who were there by the first penalties (dedita) of death."¹⁵⁶⁷

The Harrowing of hell was depicted in another Mosaic dated some time between 1130-1187.¹⁵⁶⁸

Another 12th century depiction of the descent into limbo is from the Monastery of Saint Catherine, Siani.¹⁵⁶⁹ Some of the different passion plays of the 12th century on into later centuries, dramatized Christ's descent into hell.¹⁵⁷⁰

A 12th century window in the cathedral of Le Mans shows the descent which is said to be based on other works at Venice and Torcello. Christ turns toward the left to seize Adam's hand and draw him along, while Satan is beneath Christ's feet. Souls are springing toward Christ out of the fire as devils try to hold them back.¹⁵⁷¹ A 14th century work shows about the same moment during the descent, for Christ has turned and is in the act of guiding a person by grasping, with his right hand, the person's right hand.¹⁵⁷²

While standing on the doors of limbo, Christ, with his right hand, grasps the right wrist of a person being raised up during the harrowing. Another 12 century work on a book cover shows the descent in which Adam is being raised up out of the grave by his left hand by Christ who has grasped his wrist with his right hand.¹⁵⁷³

Another 12th century depiction of the Anastasis shows the doors of hell under the feet of Christ who has turned while grasping, with his left hand, the right wrist of a person being raised up out of the grave.¹⁵⁷⁴

Another work shows the two angels Gabriel, Michael, and St. John the Baptist pointing to the figure of Christ, who is seen trampling down the doors of Hell and the devil as he leads a soul out of Limbo.¹⁵⁷⁵

A 12th century fresco at Chaldon church, Surrey, depicts "the deliverance of Adam and Eve at the harrowing of Hell". A ladder extends from the bowels of hell up to heaven, on which many naked soul ascend. The Tree/Ladder provided the means by which Christ descended to deliver Adam and Eve from the grave, and it still continues to offer the means of heavenly ascensions and eternal life to the human who will but climb its rungs.¹⁵⁷⁶

The descent in part of a panel from the 12th century that depicts the 12 feasts of the Church, Toledo. While standing on the fallen crossed doors, Christ has turned, and, with his right hand he grasps the left-hand wrist of a person being raised up during a later moment in the descent and ascension up out of the underworld.¹⁵⁷⁷

Anastasis, descent & resurrection, in a 12th century Gospel book. Christ stands on crossed and broken down doors of hell, and has turned as if in the act of ascending up-ward. His left hand holds a cross, while his right hand grasps the left wrist of a clothed person. A woman, two kings, and another person were included being resurrected.¹⁵⁷⁸

1150, an English manuscript shows the naked souls of John the Baptist and the Hebrew patriarchs being harrowed from the jaws of hell by Christ. With his right hand, Christ holds the cross which has also become a weapon to defeat the devil who lies bound with the cross thrust into his mouth like a lance. Christ's left hand grasps the right wrist of a person. While at the same time that person extends behind him his left hand and grasps the right wrist of a woman.¹⁵⁷⁹

1150, in the Alton Towers triptych, enamel work, Christ delivering Adam and Eve from the gates of Hell. Christ has turned, right hand holds the cross, while his left has grasped the right hand of Adam, the first in many to be raised from hell.¹⁵⁸⁰

1150—1160, on an altar frontal from Ølst, Christ sits in Majesty, below, to the right, is another scene of Christ's descent into hell. The grasp is made with left hands, in this case.¹⁵⁸¹

1154-9, an interpolation in the De imagine mundi of Honorius of Autun. This one has preserved the legend concerning the place of Adam's grave which is said to be under the cross.¹⁵⁸²

A work from the 3rd quarter of the 12th century A.D., shows Christ, with his right hand, clasping the right hand wrist of a person (Adam?). A second naked soul follows behind the first to be rescued.¹⁵⁸³

Christina the Astonishing [1150 - 1224] an orphan born at Brusthem, "she is said to have returned from the dead to try to liberate some of the souls she had seen in Purgatory."¹⁵⁸⁴

Christian artists, during this century, continued to depict different types of hand grips in works on the descent.¹⁵⁸⁵ Neophytus caused that art works depicting the Crucifixion and the Anastasis to be painted in the niche over his tomb, thus the "Enkleistra" was painted in 1183 A.D. The Anastasis shows Eve behind Adam. With his right hand, Christ grasps a hold of Adam's left wrist to raise him. Christ has also turned and is standing on the gates of Hell while moving to the right.¹⁵⁸⁶

Late 12th century depiction of Christ on the cross, shows, among other events, the descent in which Christ bends forward while grasping, with his right hand, the hands of a person being raised out of a grave. The cross is said to have originally hung over an altar.¹⁵⁸⁷

The Descent into Limbo is a scene conceived in the East, and also a theme that was adopted and soon transformed by Western artists, as a late twelfth-century French miniature shows. Christ carries a long-staffed cross with which he pierces Satan with under his feet. Through a monster's mouth emerge the saints of the Old law. Christ, with his left hand, grasps "Adams's hand--an Adam who seems to be clothed in new innocence: redeemed by the blood of Christ, he becomes again what he was before the fall."¹⁵⁸⁸ Garment types, that of being clothed in new innocence, is thus mentioned here.

Late 12 century work shows a number of smaller scenes with the crucifixion, on the lower right is the descent, with the hand grasp being done with left hand to right.¹⁵⁸⁹

1196, Eve stands behind Adam, while Christ stands on the crossed gates of hell and is about to move upward to the right. He grasps hold with his right hand, the right wrist of Adam, in order to raise him. David, Solomon, and John the Baptist stands in their graves with others in the back ground behind them. John unrolls a scroll which says: "Behold Him of Whom I told you", suggesting that after John had been martyred, he still was a forerunner for Christ, for he went to the souls of the dead to predict Christ's descent and the resurrection.¹⁵⁹⁰

13TH CENTURY A.D.: Mosaic of the harrowing of hell at St. Mark's Venice.¹⁵⁹¹

1213, a number of naked souls exiting out of the jaws of hell. Some of them make gestures with up-lifted hands, perhaps in prayer or praise, or to extend their hands as if they too will eventually be grasped by Christ too, just as Adam was then being grasped.¹⁵⁹²

A number of works show similar versions of the descent into Hades. One dates back to A.D. 1220. They show the crossed doors of Hades under the feet of Christ as he grasps with the hand of Adam to raise him up out of hades. Others, such as John the Baptist, David, & Soloman, stand near by watching this event. A number of others stand as witnesses to this event.¹⁵⁹³

1222, shows a later moment in the descent for Christ is turning away as if about to guide Adam and the others over into paradise. As Christ is raising Adam from "the abyss", he holds on to Adam's right wrist with his right hand, while in his left, he holds the cross. The doors of hell lay broken beneath Christ. Others stand near by witnessing the descent and making gestures with their hands.¹⁵⁹⁴

Scenes around a cross date back to 1230 A.D., below the crucifixion of Christ, a small depiction of the descent shows Christ raising souls by their hands.¹⁵⁹⁵

French work, Christ's left hand clasps the right wrist of a man who is being set free from the spirit prison house. Other naked persons follow in the back ground. Christ's right hand holds a cross-staff which is placed on the gates of Purgatory, while he tramples under feet, a demon.¹⁵⁹⁶

13th century icon, in the Church of St. Clement, Macedonia, shows the harrowing of hell, in which Christ in glory, grasps with his right hand, the left wrist of a person.¹⁵⁹⁷

In some manuscripts, all who have sinned since their Baptism are yet saved from Hell-mouth because they had passed through a certain sacrament, and had become repentant & penitent. Hence, these souls are taken upwards in napkins by their attendant angels in exactly the same manner as traditional Last Judgment iconography familiar in sculptured tympana over the west doors of churches which show angels taking the blessed souls to rest in Abraham's bosom. An example of this is at Bourges & Rheims, 13th century.¹⁵⁹⁸

1240—1250, is the date for another composition of Christ's descent into limbo.¹⁵⁹⁹

Another work dated between 1250-1285 shows Christ grasping, with his left hand, the left wrist of a person being raised up out of the hell. In this version of the descent, the doors of hell have fallen, and the jaws of hell have opened as souls with up-lifted hands clasped together in prayer, also seem to wait to be raised up by Christ's hand. Though the devil has been bound, other demons attempt to stop the descent with their weapons.¹⁶⁰¹

Christ has turned, as his left hand grasps the left hand wrist of a person who has his right hand raised in an oath or vow position. The jaws of hell have flames coming up out of them, as other naked souls ascend up out of hell's mouth.¹⁶⁰²

A panel from the Monastery of Vatopedi, Mount Athos, assigned to the 13th—14th centuries, shows the 12 feasts which includes the descent, in which Christ, already turned away, is in the act of grasping, with his right hand, the right hand wrist of a person being raised up.¹⁶⁰³

1308—11, in Siena Cathedral, Duccio di Buoninsegna, there are different scenes from the passion of Christ, some of which showed the harrowing of hell in which the doors have collapsed on the devil. As Christ steps over the devil to grasp, with his right hand, the first person, (Adam?), to ascend up out of the mouth of a cave, a host of other souls are waiting to follow behind them.¹⁶⁰⁵

An early 14th century Russian icon shows different events in the life of Christ, one of which is the descent into Hell. The hand shake, in this case, is with the right hand. Christ stands in a mandorla symbol too, through which John the Baptist, David, Solomon, and the prophets seem to have passed through during their ascension up to the entrance way to paradise. There, they are greeted by a person who is reaching out a hand as if about to clasp their hands. Other art works show hand clasps taking place in the door way to paradise, and so it may be that this work shows the moments before the hand clasping takes place.¹⁶⁰⁶

In other versions of the harrowing of hell, St. John the Baptist, David and Solomon were set free from hell. The gates of Hell, and Satan are trampled under the feet of Christ.¹⁶⁰⁷

1310—20, fresco showing the Anastasis, Kariye Camii (Church of the Saviour in Chora), Istanbul. Christ in mandorla glory, over the broken down doors of hades, is grasping, with each of his hands, the wrists those on each side of him. Amongst others, on the right, that of an old man, (Adam?). Grasping right hand to left-wrist, & then a woman's right-wrist with his left hand. Both are clothed in this case.¹⁶⁰⁸

1320—30, Christ bends forward to grasp the hand of the first soul in many souls to be rescued from hell.¹⁶⁰⁹

1320—30, image of Hell in the Holkham Bible Picture Book, depicts a couple versions of Christ harrowing hell. Hell is depicted as a combination of blast furnace & jaws of a large beast, with souls burning inside. Another section, out of broken down doors, souls exit out of a building, as Christ's left hand, reaches to almost clasp the hand of a naked soul being liberated. Another lower section on this page shows Christ lifting up a couple of men, with his left hand to one of their right wrists, which is reaching out to Christ's chest area, reminding us of similar ones of St. Thomas feeling Christ's side wound, during Christ's post-resurrection world wide treks.¹⁶¹⁰

1330, a Spanish work shows the jaws of hell have opened, as Christ grasps the hand of the first person to come forth, followed by others.¹⁶¹¹

Christ's right hand clasps the right hand wrist of a man who may represent Adam. The mouth of the cave might remind us of the jaws of hell which have opened during the descent of Christ. Christ stands on the doors of hell which have fallen on the keeper of the underworld who holds a key in his hand.¹⁶¹²

In another 14th century depiction of the descent, bright circles of light extends out from Christ's resurrected body as he grasps, with his left hand, the left wrist of Adam. Another work dating back to this century shows the descent.¹⁶¹³

Another icon from 14th century shows the descent into limbo in which Christ strides forward over the crossed doors of limbo and grips, with his right hand, the right wrist of Adam to raise him up out of the grave. Light shines from Christ, and the symbolical shape around Christ, the mandorla, suggests that he is in the act of passing from one realm into another. The mandorla and different kinds of hand grips are often seen in depictions that show other realm pilgrimages, such as the descent down in and ascension up out of hell, and the ascension up into heaven.¹⁶¹⁴

Standing on the broken down and crossed doors of hades, Christ bends forward to raise up a person up out of the grave by clasping, with his right hand, the left wrist of the clothed person (Adam?). Others are there too.¹⁶¹⁵

During the 1st half of the 14th century, a number of artworks in Christian churches show among other subjects, Christ's descent with the traditional hand clasp, followed by another portion which shows Christ's exit out of the tomb. In another, the jaws of hell open wide as the redeemed are rescued by a hand clasp from Christ. Another shows flames coming out of the jaws of hell as Christ clasps the hand of the first one to be rescued.¹⁶¹⁶

William Langland [c. 1332-c. 1400], in a poem, he mentions the Harrowing of Hell in which Christ is surrounded by glory and light as he commands the infernal creatures to unbar the gates of hell.¹⁶¹⁷

A 14th century(?) Steatite plaque, Byzantine, has carved on it, "the Descent into Limbo. Christ in a mandorla and holding a cross staff, tramples on the gates of Hell and extends his hand to a group including Adam and Eve. . . ." The clasp is done with Christ's right hand grasping the right of the person being lifted up out of his grave.¹⁶¹⁸

The Master of Westphalia 14th Century depiction of Christ in Purgatory shows the middle of Christ's right hand with a nail wound mark with little drops of blood coming out. That same hand also holds the banner which is also a weapon against the demons who take the traditional role of attempting to stop the descent. The doors of purgatory lay broken at their feet as a number of naked souls appear to greet Christ. Christ's left-hand thumb rests on the knuckle of Adam's left-hand middle finger. Both of Adam's hands are raised and clasped together in the traditional prayer gesture with the fingers pointing up, and so, Christ is actually clasping both of Adam's hands. The right hand in not visible to our view, but judging by the position of Christ's hand, it may be that some of Christ's fingers rest on the middle of Adam's right hand as if Christ was showing Adam the area in he was wounded by the nail.¹⁶¹⁹

Another 14th century work on the descent is a late Byzantine fresco in the apse of the parecclesion of Kariyeh Djami, Constantinople. Christ stands on the broken down doors of limbo, while clasping a male person's left-hand-wrist, with his right hand, while clasping the right wrist of a female, who is behind him, with his left hand. Other persons stand witnessing this event.¹⁶²⁰

An altarpiece from the 3rd quarter of the 14th century includes, among other scenes, the harrowing of hell in which Christ, with his right hand, clasps the right hand of the first person to come forth from a cave.¹⁶²¹

Another late 14th c., work, shows the crossed doors of hell under the feet of Christ who, with his right hand, grips the left wrist of Adam. Other kings and saints stand near by.¹⁶²²

An interesting version of Christ in Limbo, shows limbo personified to a certain extent, with a large bald head, eyes, a round nose, and a wide long mouth stretched open beyond normal size, and in the shape of a cave which throat descends down into the earth. A number of souls begin to ascend up & out of the mouth limbo to be greeted by Christ who grasps them with his hand. Adam and Eve stands naked behind Christ, as though they had already been raised up. Christ slightly bends forward and grasps, with his left hand, the left wrist of a naked soul who is being raised up. In his right hand, Christ holds the cross-banner. Late 14th -- early 15th centuries A.D.¹⁶²³

15TH CENTURY A.D.: Many depictions of the descent still showed the hand clasping rite-of-passage, as Adam clasped the hand of Christ.¹⁶²⁴

The cave out of which the spirit prisoners are rescued from is in the shape of jaws which seem to have been based on earlier depictions of the jaws of hell. A large croud of souls wait to be grasped by the hand as Christ begins with the first person (Adam?). This descent depiction, (14th-15th cent. A.D.?), was part of the "Passion Scenes. Florence, Santa Maria Novella, Spanish Chapel, north wall." Earlier Christians had often used the writings of Sybil. A later depiction of her shows her holding a scroll which has written on it "Morte morietur, tribus diebus somno subcepto et tunc ab inferis regressus ad lucem veniet primus". Translated: "He will die by death, [so that] on the third day he will be the first to come from the dominion of sleep and into the light from the lower depths". Another depiction of the descent shows Christ standing inside the door way and on top of the doors of limbo which have fallen on the devil. From out of the dark cave towards the light come a number of souls to greet Christ. The first is an elderly man (Adam?) who reaches out with both hands to clasp Christ's right hand. Christ is surrounded by the mandorla, and in his left hand he hold a banner with the cross symbol on it.¹⁶²⁵

Adam is raised up by the right hand of Christ, who clasps his left wrist. A number of kings, and other saints of the Old Testament time come forth to benefit from the descent of Christ into limbo, and the anastasis or resurrection.¹⁶²⁶

15th century, "Christ releasing the Redeemed from the Jaws of Hell." With his right hand, Christ grasps the left hand of the first person to be rescued, while Christ's feet trample on the fallen devil.¹⁶²⁷

With his left hand, Christ grasps the right hand of a person as naked souls exit out of the jaws of hell. "The message of redemption has always been central to the church's teaching. Until modern times this has been taken completely literally: without Christ's vicarious suffering on behalf of mankind, everybody would spend eternity in hell. The image of the Harrowing of Hell was therefore both a literal truth and an allegory. According to tradition, as embodied in the Apostles' Creed, between Christ's burial and resurrection he descended into hell and released all the virtuous who had lived up to that time. In this spirited rendering in alabaster made in Nottingham in the 15th century, he is shown taking Adam by the hand and leading him out of hell's jaws. Eve follows, then John the Baptist and then all the patriarchs and prophets who foretold Christ's coming. Allegorically, it is a picture of every soul's rescue, since original sin--let alone the sins that we actually commit--..." "Why would God do such a thing? It was because of his love and passion for the human family."¹⁶²⁸

Adam and Eve are said to represent the human family, thus Adam is raised by his left wrist as Christ grasps it with his right.¹⁶²⁹

1425-30 A.D., with his right hand, Christ holds a banner with the cross symbol. The banner is seen in numerous other art works on the descent, and is sometimes used as a weapon against the underworld demonic forces who attempt to stop Christ from descending and freeing the captive souls. In this work, Christ's left-hand thumb rests on the knuckle of the middle finger of Adam's left hand. The other souls with Adam hold out their hands together as if they too will be raised out of the jaws of hell by the helping hand of Christ.¹⁶³⁰

One dated 1430 shows Christ about to put his left hand into the right hand of Adam, as the jaws of hell open wide to allow the prisoners to go free.¹⁶³¹

Flemish work, 1430-1460 A.D., shows scenes from the harrowing of hell. The jaws of hell open wide as the naked souls are rescued out of it. The hand clasp is seen in this work too.¹⁶³²

The Venetian painters, Bellini and sons knew about the descent. The father, Jacopo Bellini [A.D. 1395-1471] had studied with Gentile de Fabriano. Jacopo had great success as a pageant painter and one of his works shows the descent of Christ into limbo where Adam, on his knees, grasps and kisses the right hand of Christ. The doors of limbo have crashed down on a demon, other demons run away. A person holds a cross, while in Christ's left hand is a banner with the cross symbol on it. Other souls are about to come forth out of the cave too. They kneel down before the great King of Kings who has come to rescue them out of limbo.¹⁶³³

Towards the end of the 15th century A.D., the descent of Christ into Hell and the entry of Old Testament persons and Patriarchs into paradise were depicted by Bermejo. The hand clasp, is in the form of a clasp that includes the kissing of the hand. Royal and religious leaders were often greeted in this way, as seen in other depictions of the traditional rites of passage hand clasps before Christian kings' thrones. Christ and others stand on the doors of hell, as in other depictions, and many of the souls coming out of hell are naked, except some have a thin cloth that covers their lower parts. Upon entering in through the doors of paradise, many of them were still naked, and so it may be that they had not yet been clothed in robes and garments yet. Three of the angels in paradise hold a scroll that has written on it the 1st & 2nd verses of the Te Deum, a subsequent verse of the canticle says: "When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death, thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."¹⁶³⁴

14th-16th c., Mystery drama plays, and miracle plays were based on a number of themes, some of which were about the Harrowing of Hell.¹⁶³⁵

As the earlier writings and stories about the descent were translated and passed down to later Christians during later centuries, eventually different lore and legends were developed concerning the descent and the harrowing of hell. Some of the mystery plays during the Middle Ages, and the Vision of Piers Plowman were said to have been based on later folk lore about the descent and the resurrection of the saints. The harrowing of hell is understood in Medieval English to mean Christ's descent into Hades and his victory over Satan, the powers of death and evil. A number of English mystery-play cycles are said to be based on the harrowing.¹⁶³⁶

Durer's wood-engravings of the PASSION shows Christ meeting with Adam and Eve before the gates of Hell.¹⁶³⁷

1497, The descent and resurrection were common themes that often went together, and so they were often depicted together too. A number of Valencian works show what traditions say happened after the ascension up out of limbo or hades, for Christ presents the redeemed of the old dispensation, both men and women, to His mother. A depiction of this corresponds closely to the Vita Christi of the Valencian nun, named Isabel de Villena, published in 1497.¹⁶³⁸

With his left hand, while his right hold a banner, Christ clasps the right hand of a naked soul, perhaps Adam, as he is about to ascend up out of the jaws of hell, with others following him.¹⁶³⁹

In another work, a 15th century artist decided to depict the moment just before the hand clasp, thus, Christ is about to take a hold of Adam's hands with his left hand. The jaws of hell open wide to allow the souls to come forth to greet Christ.¹⁶⁴⁰

Another shows naked souls as they are set free from the spirit prison house, some lift their hands in praise, others wait to greet Christ their deliverer. An old man, representing Adam, clasps Christ's right hand with both of his hands.¹⁶⁴¹

End of the 15th century, an icon depicting the descent, shows Christ, with his right hand, lifting Adam out of limbo by grasping his right hand. Another late 15th century icon shows the harrowing of hell.¹⁶⁴²

16TH CENTURY A.D.: In a work showing the harrowing of hell, Christ stands on the doors of hell and helps Adam up by clasping his hand. Adam and the others are naked, and so the artist picked that moment in the event, for they will eventually be clothed in garments and robes upon their ascension into paradise.¹⁶⁴³

Another 16th c., work, might remind us of the legendary place for Adam's grave under the cross, for the descent is depicted in a portion below a cross. Again, a hand clasp is depicted too.¹⁶⁴⁴

1512, a later moment in the descent, for near the broken down doors of hell stand Adam and Eve who have already been lifted up by the hand of Christ. With his right hand, Christ clasps the left wrist of a man as he begins to lift him up. Christ's face shines with glory, and in his left hand he holds a banner. A stone version shows this very same event sequence.¹⁶⁴⁵

Another one shows the traditional rites of passage-hand & wrist grasps again, and the souls exit out of hell naked to be clothed in garments during their ascension. At least this is what numerous other art works show, when we consider the whole drama. Monstrous demons of hell, attempt to combat the harrowing, however, in this work, Christ is armed with the cross-spear.¹⁶⁴⁶

The flames that shoot forth from the prison castle don't seem to harm the liberated souls who have been freed. Standing on the door, with his right-hand Christ clasps the right-hand of Adam.¹⁶⁴⁷

Adam and Eve come forth and kneel in pray, and praise to their deliverer who has brought them out of captivity. They are followed by others who follow not too far behind them. In this particular case, the hand clasp was not depicted, but rather, Christ makes a gesture of blessing.¹⁶⁴⁸

1520, published at Burgos, is enacted in a very similar way as the account of Villena, based on traditions about Christ's descent. How Christ and the redeemed patriarchs had first appeared to Christ's mother Mary, after their ascension up out of limbo or hades. Other sources and art works seem to suggest that it was during this visit to Mary, as in other post-resurrection appearances to others, that Christ explained the symbolical meanings and types behind the mysteries or ordinances by expounding on the prophecies. Many early to later Christians understood these mysteries to include prayer & other sacramental gestures, baptism, anointings, garments, robes, coronations, & rites of passage hand grips, etc., all of which were types of that which was to come when it was their time to die and ascend into heaven to be glorified & deified.¹⁶⁴⁹

1529, Christ standing on a monstrous underworld dragon, while in the mouth of a cave.¹⁶⁵⁰

1531—38, Christ reaches down low to grasp the hand of a person being set free from hell. Others may have already been rescued, for they stand watching in the back ground.¹⁶⁵¹

1552, Reformation era, a statement of belief was presented by the Church of England, which mentioned how Christ's spirit went and preached the gospel to spirits in prison. However, in the 1562 version, the reference to the preaching and the verses about it were removed. In the statement of the explication of the articles of belief, produced in the 4th year of the reign of Edward the Confessor in 1552. Christ's body lay in the grave until the Resurrection, while his spirit was with the spirits who were detained in hell, and preached to them. This belief is then put into verse: 'And so he died in the flesh, But quickened in the spirit; His body then was buried, As is our use and right. His spirit did after this descent into the lower parts, of them that long in darkness were the true light of their hearts.'¹⁶⁵²

John Calvin, (1509—64), Reformer, rejected purgatory & all merit of good works. He accepted infant baptism & considered Roman baptism valid. While many others believed that infants that died without baptism would go to a state of limbo, in Calvin's belief systems, babies amongst the elect who die without baptism were sure of salvation.¹⁶⁵³

1572—73, shows Christ standing on the broken down doors of hell. Christ grasps, with his right hand, the right-hand wrist of a man, (Adam?). A number of people, plus angels act as witnesses to the descent. And even take part in it.¹⁶⁵⁵

16th century, another icon shows the descent of Christ into limbo.¹⁶⁵⁶

1700, Russia, Christ reaches down to clasp the hand of a person ascending out of the jaws and doors of the underworld.¹⁶⁵⁷

17TH CENTURY A.D.: 1600, funerary tapestry, from the three Hierarchs, Jassy: The descent was also depicted on a silver binding of the Gospel Books, in the Cathedral of St. George, the new. Christ is clasping the hand of a person. Another work shows a hand clasp involved in the descent. While another depicts Christ clasping the hand of an old man. The mouth of the cave is jagged as if to remind us of the other art works that depict the jaws of hell. Christ in Limbo, by Sassetta, in the Fogg Museum, Cambridge.¹⁶⁵⁸

A work dated some time between the 16th – 17th centuries shows the harrowing of Hell in which Christ stands on the doors of hell and grasps, with his left hand, the left-hand wrist of Adam to raise him up. David, Solomon, and other patriarchs watch as this happens.¹⁶⁵⁹

18TH CENTURY A.D.: 1763, descent, Christ clasping, with his right hand, the right hand of Adam. A number of others come forth to meet Christ too.¹⁶⁶⁰

1772, a beautiful depiction of Christ's descent into Hell is on the cover of an altar Gospel book. Christ's glory surrounds his face as He and Adam clasp each others' right hands. A throng of souls, come forth from the mouth of the cave of hell. Christ holds a banner in his left hand and stands on one of the doors of hell which have fallen. The Father, with up-lifted arms, and the symbolical triangle about his face, watches this event from heaven, he may also be waiting to greet these newly liberated captives, when they ascend heaven wards.¹⁶⁶¹

After the American Revolution of 1776, a group of religionists sent applications to be given Episcopal consecration, however, the Bishop of England refused to give it to them because in their "Proposed Book" of Common Prayer which was first prepared, one of the things they had omitted was the clause in the Apostle's Creed of Christ's descent into hell.¹⁶⁶²

October 1786, convention held in Wilmington, Delaware, it was resolved that the clause, "He descended into hell," should be retained in the Apostles' Creed. Plus, that the Nicene Creed should be inserted in the Book of Common Prayer. Bishop White distinctly affirms that "the omission of the article of Christ's descent into hell, in the Apostles' Creed, was the thing principally faulted; nor was it inserted and restored without warm debate in Connecticut, or carried except by a division in the votes of the clergy and laity by dioceses; the numerical majority of votes was against it. Had the issue been different, there could have been no proceeding to England for consecration at this time."¹⁶⁶³

19TH CENTURY A.D.: 1868—70, a depiction of the descent of Christ into limbo shows him reaching down towards the souls held there.¹⁶⁶⁴

In a work published towards the later end of the 19th century, some of the earlier views and interpretations about the descent of Christ were considered and given a personal interpretation as to what it meant by Professor Christopher E. Luthardt, D.D., Ph. D., University of Leipzig, Germany.¹⁶⁶⁵

20TH CENTURY A.D.: There is a tradition that seems to have reference to, and has possible fragments of the earlier Christian doctrines of Christ's descent into the spirit prison, and his pilgrimage into other nations. It is how in the blessing of the Fire, in the Greek Orthodox Church of the Holy Sepulcher, and while in the total darkness, a flame springs up in the very place where the dead body of Jesus is said to have been placed. From that flaming torch which was raised by the Patriarch, thousands of candles are lit, plus lamps & tapers. Thus, the vast crowd that gathered there is transformed immediately into a sea of light, perhaps as a reminder of that hour when those who lay "in the shades of death" saw the redeeming light of Christ as he descended unto them. Some years ago, another custom was to "carry the torch lit at the Holy Sepulcher, stage by stage, on horseback to Athens, Constantinople, Kiev and Moscow."¹⁶⁶⁶

As part of the celebrations for the Resurrection, at night, after all the lights in the church are put out to symbolize the darkness of the world, and at the stroke of midnight. A religious leader and Father steps from the Royal Doors of the sanctuary with a lighted candle, chanting "Come forth and receive light from the unwaning light and glorify Christ, who is risen from the dead." From this candle a number of candles are lit and carried home.¹⁶⁶⁷

1962, an Easter Hymn by Charles Wesley was published, a portion says: "Christ hath burst the gates of Hell! Death in vain forbids His rise; Christ hath opened Paradise!"¹⁶⁶⁸

In the traditions, folk lore and legends of Russia, such as in the Tver' & Saratov Provinces, legends tell how the "Lord came to hell and led Adam and all his race out." In another tradition, Mary has a prophetic dream about how that her son, Christ, would be crucified. Christ tells her that her dream is true, and then adds: "And I shall lead the righteous out of hell with me, and I shall raise them to the heavens, and you, Most Holy Mother, I shall glorify with my testament, and we shall ascend to heaven together."¹⁶⁶⁹ From the Iaroslavl' Province, legends say how that after Christ was crucified he "descended into hell and led everybody out of there with one exception of Solomon the Wise." Solomon was told to use his own wisdom to figure out a way out of hell.¹⁶⁷⁰

PART 6: OLD BAPTISMAL FONTS & TYPES OF THE DESCENT ANCIENT TO LATER SETTINGS FOR BAPTISMS, & BAPTISMS FOR THE DEAD

Different types of baptismal fonts that came into existence, how deep they were for immersions, how deep they weren't for pouring, dipping the head only, or for sprinkling modes of baptism, depending where & when. Many of these fonts still retained the symbolical imagery, types, art works & connections to the crucifixion, Christ's descent into hell, the battle with the demonic forces in the underworld, & symbolical dying & resurrection themes. This is why many different types of baptismal fonts of different shapes, sizes, depths, & the different amounts of sides to them, sometimes included images on them, art works, & symbols that intentionally reminded those taking part in the baptismal mysteries that they were on a journey through the after life realms. They were symbolically dying, descending into hell, or going down into the underworld, just as the prophet Jonah, Christ, his apostles, different saints, different angels, John-the-Baptist & even St. Mary had all descended. Thus, in addition to the art works & symbolism that conveyed these many descents into hell type themes, the locations of the different fonts were also important in the understanding of the figurative types intended to be conveyed in the mysteries of baptism. Plus, later fragments of baptism for the dead themes & the ancient settings for them, including the later corruptions of baptism, & baptism for the dead, that got corrupted into baptism of the dead. Then eventually, prayers for the dead, masses, & liturgical rites for the dead, & penances for the living & for the dead, then eventually the sale of indulgences, for the living & the dead. But, understand the differences that arose in the early centuries: Baptism for the dead was by proxy, where a living early Christian was baptized for their dead relatives, friends & others who had died without baptism, but those baptisms could have been done by different modes, immersions, pouring & sprinkling, (where there was not enough water for immersions, & the fonts were not deep enough for total immersions). However, another version of salvation for the dead, that got condemned during two church councils, was baptism of dead corpses, or baptism of the dead.¹⁶⁷¹ Thus, during Hippo, 393, & the 3rd council of Carthage, 397, this later corruption of baptism for the dead, that got turned into baptism of the dead, was condemned, while baptism for the dead wasn't condemned. It had to have been known by these council members, & if so, then it wasn't prohibited, just the said corrupt versions, canon series 2, number 4: "The eucharist shall not be given to dead bodies, nor baptism conferred upon them."¹⁶⁷²

A study of the locations of the hundreds of different baptismal fonts, baptisteries, their shapes, their sizes, depths, the different symbols on them, the art works on them, & their different architectural settings. All this helps in understanding the different left over fragments of later different versions of baptism, that also contain fragmented reminders of earlier baptism for the dead themes. Some fonts were a representation of the grave, the pit, limbo, hades, etc. To add to this symbolical effect in the minds of those who practiced these rituals, some of the early to later Christians built their fonts in the lower parts of their churches, as types of being in the underworld, the crypt, the grave, or in hell, hades, limbo or purgatory. Some cases in point: At Castiglione the baptistery is placed in the crypt beneath the apse, while the baptistery at Djemila is related to baptisteries and funeral monuments, in that the circular tomb of the Lollii is not far away.¹⁶⁷³ From New Testament times onward through the centuries, baptism was understood in terms of death & burial. Christ hinted to, & seen his crucifixion as a baptism (Luke 12:50), which also may be why some baptismal fonts were in the shape of the cross, & had cross symbols on them, or around them. Romans 6:4, likened baptism to being buried with Christ into death. Thus, these types were illustrated in art works & baptismal settings, such as how a font, and also the room that contained it, was regarded as a tomb. The resemblance between baptisteries and tombs was not fortuitous, or by chance, it was deliberate. A baptismal tomb, that also featured pagan funerary monuments, was located at the mausoleum, (or a building housing a tomb or tombs), near Porta San Giovanni at Rome.¹⁶⁷⁴

Some of the shapes that influenced designs of baptisteries & fonts were the cubic mausoleum, which were numerous, & fitting for the symbolical types that ritualized death, burial & resurrection (baptism), represented. They were wide spread in the East & North Africa, in Syria at Ataman, Dana, Djuwaniyeh, Hass, Il Barah, Kafr Mares, Dafr Mares, Khirbit Faris, Rbe'ah, Serdjilla, Suweda, Taltita. All of which were almost identical with the baptisteries at Babiska, Bakirha, Bamukha, Bashmishli, Bettir, Brad, B'uda, Dar Kita, Dashmishli, Dauwar, Dehes, Fideh, Kasr Iblisu, Khirbit il-Khatib, Ksedjbeh, Rbe'ah and Taklé. The square tomb was another shape found all over, in about 30 or more different areas of ancient Christendom in the Mediterranean area, & was adopted by the early Christians for baptisteries and martyria. These cubic funerary monuments were often surmounted by a dome, which were intended to create the feelings of souls resting in the idyllic hereafter life realm of peace. Thus, the ancient settings for baptism & baptism for the dead, & or baptism of the dead, depending on what areas, when & where, & what sect practiced the different types & modes, were done in these types of baptismal tombs. Different amounts of sides to baptismal fonts, represented different funerary reminders, such as octagonal, but 8 sided ones could represent the day of resurrection, while hexagon, or 6 sides, could represent Friday, the day of crucifixion & the burial of Christ. Other symbolical meanings were how that those being baptized were symbolically dying as to their former ways of sin, & being made alive again in Christ like traits.¹⁶⁷⁵

Other crucifixion suffering & dying symbolism included baptismal sacramental reminders, where sacramental chalice-shaped fonts became part of the sacrament of baptism. These, with artistic reminders about Christ's blood-water, that flows out his pierced side, were so many reminders that Christ did have a body. These reminders must have been built up in response to the Christological controversial issues about the corporeality of Christ, during the 4th-6th centuries, when a lot of these baptisteries were being built. Thus, as in art works, as Christ's blood flows down from the cross, it was for the initiates to wash their characters clean in, or to be sacramentally drank, or to cleanse souls in the underworld with, thus baptism for the dead themes preserved to a certain extent here. Plus, Christ's blood from the cross was to also fill the chalice shape baptismal fonts. In other cases, to flow down on another symbol of death, the scull-&-bones symbols, or to flow down into the underworld, to baptize the dead under the cross. This is why some art works show drops of blood on scull & bones symbols, or people washing their robes in Christ's blood to whiten or purify them, (Rev. 1:5, 7:14). All this seemingly bloody gore—though not real blood, were only thought of symbolically to be, were reminders of the suffering, death & resurrection of Christ. Types which the early Christians lectured about as being symbolically & a ritualistic type that they went through, without having to suffer as Christ did. Although later Christian penances did start to try to accomplish that sort of suffering. However, in some cases, the suffering had been already experienced by their dead Christian martyrs too, thus, the blood of martyrdom was also included in some baptismal settings too. The whole baptismal settings of these types were for the sanctification, perfecting, & cleansing of their souls, & the souls of those down in the underworld of death. With so many artistic reminders, & building settings to see & experience, as they were going through their mysteries, they'd been lectured on, by their bishops & clergy.¹⁶⁷⁶ Such as, about how they were going through types of the preparations they'd made for symbolical dying, having become worthy because they'd stripped away of sins, like old ragged clothing. Dying unto the old ways of their former blackened selves. To then go through the anointing, washing & purification of their characters. Symbolically dying as to their former negative traits to be clothed in purity, the white baptismal robes. To then be raised, by hand & wrist grasping, as types of the resurrection. Thus, being born again as to rising towards deification, rising to put on Christ like characteristics of purity, kindness, self discipline, long suffering, charity, & other good traits of moral Christian perfection.¹⁶⁷⁷

To further explore ancient settings for baptism for the dead themes, some of the fonts were likened unto sarcophaguses, or stone coffins, & thus, some fonts were in the form of coffins. St. Ambrose refers to this, how 'the font, whose appearance is somewhat like that of a tomb in shape'. And, 'the font, is as it were, a burial.' And, 'when thou dippest, thou takest on the likeness of death and burial; thou receivest the sacrament of the Cross'. (De Sacramen., 3, 1, 1; 2, 6, 18; 2, 7, 23). It's interesting to note that though the different shapes, sizes, locations, & depths of the different fonts varied from place to place & during early to later centuries, to accommodate the different modes of baptism that developed & were acceptable to the different sects. Still, in many cases, though not all, the basic understandings of baptism being likened unto Christ's dead, descent into hell, & the resurrection, were retained, thus also retaining, to a certain extent, baptism for the dead, at least in fragmented themes, symbols, art works & baptismal tomb or grave settings, for their later ritualistic works for the living & dead.¹⁶⁷⁸

The ritualistic journey of the soul through the different realms of existences took place in different levels and rooms of some of the Churches. Some fonts had steps on both sides, to remind the unclothed or completely naked male & female catechumens, the initiates, that they were on a ritualistic journey. Stripped of all their clothing, just as Christ was naked, to shame him before all who saw him suffering on the cross, though he was innocent, as a naked new born child. Curtains hung around the fonts, or divided the men & women, so the men & women couldn't see each others' nakedness before they were clothed in white baptismal robes further on in the mystery of baptism.¹⁶⁷⁹ (As to the beliefs that a new born is innocent, keep in mind that these types were before the 4th & 5th century & Augustine's (354-430), original sin dogma, sin inherited from Adam, that allegedly made new born babies tainted with "inherited" original sin. It took some time before this dogmas was later enforced).¹⁶⁸⁰ The descent down the step or steps, were like a descent into the realms of the dead. Depending on the locations of the fonts throughout Christendom, some fonts had one step down, others 2, or 3, or even 4 steps, to "...emphasize the fact of descent, which was further stressed by triple immersions or affusion. So Cyril of Jerusalem, or his successor, John, says: 'you descended three times into the water, and ascended again; here also covertly pointing by a figure to the three days' burial of Christ. For as our Saviour passed three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, so you also in your first ascent out of the water represented the first day of Christ in the earth, and by your descent the night.'" (Cateh., Mystag., ii, 4).¹⁶⁸¹ When they descended down into the font, this was thought of as a type of how Christ had descended down into hades, limbo, the grave, etc. When they ascended up the steps on the other side, it was a type of Christ's ascension up out of hades, etc.¹⁶⁸² In some areas, the catechumens enter the octagonal building, symbolic of the hope of resurrection. When they go into a hexagonal, or six sided font, this was as types of dying with Christ. Exiting this, into the 8-sided room, was a type of their walk in newness of life. Baptism also being a type of being born again back to the innocent of purity with the washing away of sins to that of rebirth. (John 3:3-5). The Western Fathers looked upon the font as the womb of Mother Church, the Oriental Fathers, as a mother itself, a type of womb. So there were many different types given by different early Christians, besides those mentioned. Other combinations of numbers in other areas, a 6-sided building was a type of baptismal death, an octagonal font, rising again. Narsai, 'in the grave of the water the priest buries the whole man; and he resuscitates him by the power of life that is hidden in his words.'¹⁶⁸³ The cruciform font, once more, signified the idea of death. Chrysostom likened baptism as a cross, 'What the Cross was to Christ and what His burial was, that baptism was to us.' (In Ep. ad Rom., 10.4 (P.G., 60, 480).

Paul saw baptism as a double assimilation, the first being a type of Christ death, the second of his resurrection and victory over death. In the "earliest form of Christianity there is a connection between baptism and Christ's descent into hell immediately after his death.... In the liturgical and doctrinal texts of the patristic era, numerous indices can be found of this conjunction of baptism with the descensus ad inferos..." Paul and Peter are said to have seen in baptism a type of Christ's descent into the spirit prison.¹⁶⁸⁴

In the Latin west, the baptismal creed of the Italian see of Aquileia (Rufinus, Symb. 18;28) made reference to the descent. Richard Temple suggested that "the Harrowing of Hell, is the psychological prison into which... [humanity] is expelled from Paradise. Or we may say it is the dark place in ourselves where God has not yet entered.... In order to understand man as he actually is, we need to study the icon of the Harrowing of Hell, the Easter icon. Here man, represented by Adam and Eve, is in that psychologically low place signified as a tomb."¹⁶⁸⁵

During the 4th century A.D., S. Cyril of Jerusalem said that the three immersions in the baptismal waters were a type of Christ's burial, for they "descended three times into the water, and ascended again; here also covertly pointing by a figure at the three-days burial of Christ."¹⁶⁸⁶

John P. Lundy wrote that Ciampini explains an ancient mosaic on the right of the altar, in the chapel of St. Pudentiana, in Rome, as representing nude trine immersion and Confirmation together. "The legend is significant enough. 'Here in the living font the dead are born again.' Alcuin, who, in the eighth century, saw this mode of Baptism, says this of it: 'Baptism is performed in the name of the most Holy Trinity by trine immersion (submersione), and rightly so, because man, being made in the image of the Holy Trinity, is restored to the same image, and because he fell into death by a three-fold gradation of sin, he thrice rises from the font to life through grace.'"¹⁶⁸⁷

With different early Christian sects splintering off from each other, baptismal modes that changed, differed & weren't by total immersions, but by other modes, such as sprinkling, pouring or dipping, thus influenced the types of baptisteries & fonts constructed, during the 4th–7th centuries, & later. Thus, as those who inherited different dogmas & influences of the apostasy, spread out into different areas of the Roman Empire & beyond its borders, so also did these different modes of baptism, which is perhaps one reason why in Greece, there doesn't seem to be baptisteries, with fonts, deep enough to allow submersions of the candidates. Other fonts are above floor level, others are below. Fonts discovered show the diversity in baptismal modes, & types, for the different shapes, sizes, designs, & art works reflected different biblical themes, & interpretations of baptismal symbolism. Where water was plentiful for immersions, didn't guarantee that total immersions were done in those areas too, for as different non-immersions became popular, so also were the use of different amounts of water required to perform whatever mode the different sects dogmatically accepted was their particular mode to perform.¹⁶⁸⁸

In some cases, during the early Christian baptismal mystery the catechumens would receive a new name, take a baptismal vow or oath, strip their old garments to receive new ones, and would be guided by the hand. They must have also received a number of hand grips similar to the ones depicted in the art works that show Christ's descent into the underworld, etc., plus his ascension into heaven, etc. They also received the imposition of hands—(laying on of hands on their heads), and would pass through a veil or curtain that was hung across the font. This was all part of their ritualistic journey through the different realms on towards the higher realms.¹⁶⁸⁹

Both the art works and early Christian writings, show that the way people are "drawn" in unto Christ, is by hand and wrist grasps, for Christ reaches out with his hands and grasps hold of their hands or wrists and pulls them to him. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 298 to 373, and other early Church Father,¹⁶⁹⁰ must have had these types of hand and wrist grasp in mind, as noted in the word of Athanasius, in his De Incarnatione Verbi Dei (Incarnation of the Word), when he wrote: "Whence it was fitting for the Lord to bear this also and to spread out His hands, that with the one He might draw the ancient people, and with the other those from the Gentiles, and unite both in Himself. For this is what He Himself has said, signifying by what manner of death He was to ransom all: 'I, when

I am lifted up," He saith, "shall draw all men unto Me." And once more, if the devil, the enemy of our race, having fallen from heaven, wanders about our lower atmosphere, and there bearing rule over his fellow-spirits,... [and] tries to hinder them [the redeemed] that are going up [towards heaven] (and about this the Apostle says: "According to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience"); while the Lord came to cast down the devil, and clear the air and prepare the way for us up into heaven, as said the Apostle: "Through the veil, that is to say, His flesh"—and this must needs be by death... [on the cross]."¹⁶⁹¹

During part of the ritualistic journey through the afterlife realms, before going down into the font, which again was a type of Christ's descent into hell, they were anointed which symbolically made them "Christs". Hence, in connection with the rites of baptism and anointing, Cyril said: "Being therefore made partakers of Christ, ye are properly called Christs, and of you God said, Touch not My Christs, or anointed (Heb. 3:14; Ps. 105:15). Now ye were made Christs, by receiving the emblem of the Holy Ghost; and all things were in a figure wrought in you, because ye are figures of Christ." He goes on to say that the anointing was made on the forehead, ears, nostrils, and breast. "Then on your breast; that having put on the breastplate of righteousness, ye may stand against the wiles of the devil. For as Christ after His baptism, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, went forth and vanquished the adversary, so likewise, having, after Holy Baptism and the Mystical Chrism, put on the whole armour of the Holy Ghost, do ye stand against the power of the enemy, and vanquish it, saying, I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4:13)."¹⁶⁹²

Perhaps some Christians during these later centuries may have also thought of last rites as a sort of protection against the devil and his demons, just as in the earlier rites of anointing before baptism, they were anointed before descending down into the font, or waters of baptism, as if, in a symbolical and ritualistic way, they were about to die and descend into hades, limbo, etc., just as Christ did to do battle with the devil and his demons.

Russell points out that baptism were considered, in some branches of Christendom, to be a type of the descent of Christ into the under world, & that the anointing was a seal against the further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. For in some cases, the "priest blew into the candidate's face to express contempt for the demons and drive them away. The priest also touched the catechumen's ears with spittle in imitation of Jesus' healing. He marked the sign of the cross on the candidate's brow to keep demons away. During the Easter vigil, the catechumen would face the west, the region of darkness and death, and make a formal threefold renunciation of Satan. Then he turned toward the east, the direction of light and resurrection, and formally transferred his allegiance to Christ. He was anointed with holy oil as a seal against further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. In the central act of baptism, the descent into water symbolized descent into the underworld of death, and emergence from the water symbolized rebirth and resurrection. Baptism, the culmination of the individual's freedom from Satan, had powers to cure illness of body and mind as well as corruption of soul."¹⁶⁹³

Battles with the Demonic Monsters of the Watery Abyss & Underworld in Baptismal & Baptism for the Dead Themes: Also, in Paul's writings, he points out that baptism was the ritualistic type that signified a person's passage from earth life to death, burial and the resurrection where their bodies would be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious resurrected body. (1 Corinthians 15; Rom. 6:3-13; Phil. 2:10; 3:10-11, 19-21; Col. 2:12; 2 Cor. 3:18; Isa. 14:9-19). Russell notes that in early Christian thought, during Christ's descent, Christ "went to seek out his enemies Death and the Devil in the underworld where they dwelt."¹⁶⁹⁴

So also the early Christians must have thought of themselves as being a type of Christ, and as anointed "Christs", they were about to go down into the spirit prison to fight against the forces of darkness, and to preach the gospel. Thus, Paul, to further point out the inconsistency of those at Corinth, asks them: "And why stand we in jeopardy every hour?" (1 Cor. 15:30). Why would they put themselves in jeopardy by ritualistically doing battle with the demons & beasts in the underworld, if they didn't believe in the bodily resurrection? Paul then seems to hint to the fact that he was often baptized for the dead, having ritualistically died, for he said "I die daily", and said that he had fought with beasts at Ephesus. Thus, he may have been suggesting further types for the descent drama, & also the ritualistic types in baptism and baptism for the dead. (1 Cor. 15:23-45).

4th c., Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, mentions the dangers of being challenged by demons during the ascension, but also says that Christ cleared the air of the demonic forces, and gained victory and triumph over death, for death was destroyed.¹⁶⁹⁵ Incarnation of the Word, 25, the cross and how Christ's hands were spread out on the cross, this was a type of how Christ spread his hands out to draw in the ancient people and those from the Gentiles: "Whence it was fitting for the Lord to bear this also and to spread out His hands, that with the one He might draw the ancient people, and with the other those from the Gentiles, and unite both in Himself. For this is what He Himself has said, signifying by what manner of death He was to ransom all: "I, when I am lifted up," He saith, "shall draw all men unto Me." And once more, if the devil, the enemy of our race, having fallen from heaven, wanders about our lower atmosphere, and there bearing rule over his fellow-spirits,... [and] tries to hinder them [the redeemed] that are going up [towards heaven] (and about this the Apostle says: "According to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience"); while the Lord came to cast down the devil, and clear the air and prepare the way for us up into heaven, as said the Apostle: "Through the veil, that is to say, His flesh"---and this must needs be by death... [on the cross]."¹⁶⁹⁶

On an ancient font is a sculpture of a number of scenes, one of which shows, in the lower section, "monsters symbolic of the forces of Evil crushed by the grace of baptism." The "monsters" look like lions.¹⁶⁹⁷ Under the West Drayton, Middlesex, font, the power of evil toads & lions are crushed by the weight of the font above them. At Wattenscheid (Westphalia), the lions under the font are symbolic of the devil, as being balked of their prey, (1 Pet. 5:8). The same battle with evil & the victory theme is possible with the monsters at the base of the font at Castle Frome. In another case, harts, or adult male deers, such as in the mosaic in the baptistery at Henchir Messouda, wrestle with the snakes, gripping them in their mouths & one is attempting to crush the snake. Thus, the idea is conveyed to the catechumens about them also fighting the forces of evil, of the rejuvenation to being made anew, & the exorcism of them leading to their victory in the font and rebirth. Being victorious over the serpent, the Hart drink from the four streams, symbolic of Paradise, thus the catechumen is to liken themselves as being victorious, having fought the good fight & rewarded with crowns of glory & eternal life.¹⁶⁹⁸

During early mediaeval times, in iconography, one of the most dominant themes of baptism was not death so much, as it was the struggle against, and the defeat of the devil and his minions. On a great number of fonts, the devil was depicted & represented under various animal forms. This we might expect, when we note how by mediaeval times, & later, art works of the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven & other later legendized pre-existence themes show Satan & the fallen angel-demons as having morphed from bright angels into variable types of creatures, often dark colors, symbolic of their fallen conditions. Thus, like the strange variety monsters, & Star-wars, Stargate, Star Trek types of animals & creatures, as if collected from the many modern science fiction movies to end up on earth to haunt the forests, streams, lakes & deep places of the earth they'd fallen down into.¹⁶⁹⁹

Inscriptions on the Norman font at St. Mary, Stafford, presents the concept that baptism gives protection against evil spirits: DISCRETUS NON ES SI NON FUGIS ECCE LEONES, ('You are a fool if you do not flee. Look out for the lions.').¹⁷⁰⁰

At Chaddesley Corbett (Worcs.), Satan was typified as a dragon, which tries to drag a man down to the fires of hell. On the other side, Agnus Dei tramples the dragon down into the same flames. In one at Kirkby (Lancs.), Christ bruises the head of a dragon with His staff. Other baptismal, descent into hell type battle themes as put to art works show: Battles with snakes, monsters, dragons, two-headed hydras, toads, lions, & multitudes of grotesque animals. They were believed to representing the demonic forces of hell that are defeated in baptism. Thus connecting pre-existence themes, that of post-war in heaven, post-fallen angels' demonic-activities, & the ritualistic battles with the post-crucifixion, descent of Christ into hell themes. There are other themes that are presented, because baptism connected up a lot of different types, such as Adam & Eve's rescue & resurrection, the arrest, binding, placing in irons by angels of a personified hades, or the devil, down in the pit. Or the trampling under foot of the broken down doors or gates of hades, with the devil crushed underneath, as the resurrected souls come forth, rescued by Christ, who grasps Adam's hand, or wrist, the first to be liberated, resurrected & deified, with others right behind him in line, such as in iconography of the Anastasis.¹⁷⁰¹ So along with these baptismal themes are other battle themes, victory symbols, & battles with different types of creatures, or them being crushed, trampled, stabbed & their heads stomped on, mainly symbolic of baptism being a victory over these evil forces of darkness, (Eph. 4:7-10, 6:10-19, 1 Pet. 3:11-22, 4:6, 1 Cor. 15:23-32, Heb. 1:13, 2:8, 14, Exo. 15:6, Isa. 14:19).¹⁷⁰² Some of these types of baptismal battle themes are on these fonts at Bridekirk, Freudenstadt, Vinge (Gotland), Munkbrarup (Denmark), St. Symphonian, Tintagel, East Haddon (Northants), West Drayton, Middlesex, Wattenscheid (Westphalia). Along with consecrations of the font, such as the Gelasian Sacramentary: 'At thy command let every unclean spirit depart far hence, let all the wickedness of the wiles of the devil stand far off, let him not fly about to lay his snares, let him not creep secretly in, let him not corrupt with his infection.' Others, like the Bobbio, Stowe, & Missale Gothicum, like verbal missiles, contain petitions from delivery from 'every phantasm' & 'all ye shades & demons.'¹⁷⁰³

In the Catholic hymns for Great Saturday, the day post-crucifixion, prior resurrection, when Christ's spirit was in the underworld, part of the 9th Ode of the Canon, was sung, "...the gatekeepers of hell tremble as they see me, [Christ] clothed in the bloodstained garment of vengeance: for on the Cross as God have I struck down mine enemies ... for hell, the enemy, has been despoiled...."¹⁷⁰⁴

With baptism being looked upon as a type of passing through the fires of hell, like Christ's descent into the infernal regions, other symbols reminded those being baptized, or taking part in the ritual, or that saw the art works on the fonts, that they were to overcome the fiery darts of the devils, the wiles of evil, & resists the fire of temptations, like salamanders were believed could. During the Middle Ages, & later, these creatures were believed to have mythical qualities, & magical powers about them to be able to withstand the intense heat of fires. Thus, with hell believed to be a place of actual fire & brim stone, were souls were purged & purified of their sins, like a refiner's fire, (Malachi 3:2–6).¹⁷⁰⁵ The candidates for baptism were sometimes depicted as salamanders, believed to exist in fire and so typify the Christian who is baptized by the Holy Spirit and with fire, (Luke 3:16). Consequently, salamanders appears on fonts, among other creatures, to symbolize these types. Some examples are at Youldgreave (Derby), & Salehurst (Sussex). Fire resistant, God's people were supposed to be able to also pass through the furnace of afflictions too. During the 1700s, chase women, who retained their virginity, where called beautiful salamanders. Plus, "Woman who (ostensibly) lives chastely in the midst of temptations." Also, "a soldier who exposes himself to fire in battle." During the 1800s, "salamander safes" were advertized as protecting the things inside, even from fires.¹⁷⁰⁶ In 1841, the baptistry of Winchester Cathedral in England has the figure of a salamander, alluding to the words in Luke 3:16. (G. A. Poole, Churches: Their Struct. Arrang. & Decor. 9.2). Perhaps in baptismal garment lore, could there have been salamander garments?¹⁷⁰⁷ Like in other garment lore, like the salamander cloth, of The Dwarf's Feast, which if kept together with a sword & golden ring, inserted into a red-lion, this combination would keep them safe, but if separated it would be a token that there was evil coming on the county.¹⁷⁰⁸ Would these types of salamander garments & cloths, also offer protection from the fires, in such cases, if any, from the fires of hell? Especially when as the clothed candidate descends into the fires of hell to rescue naked souls who don't have the protective salamander garments on?¹⁷⁰⁹ In other lore, "all fire, like the Torah; and if flames cannot hurt one who is anointed with salamander blood, still less can they injure the scribes." (Jewish Encycl. (1905) 10:646, citing the Talmud Hagiga 27a). In Austrian lore, there is one related to the salamander, & to the atoning suffering of Christ. The Zohar (ii. 211b) mentions protective garments of salamander skin.

England, J. R. Tolkien, a Catholic, influenced by Catholic Christian symbolism, & the lore about dragons, dwarfs, trolls, elves & battles between the forces of darkness against the forces of light. Could he have also been influenced by, & wove into his stories, similar protective garment lore, like the protective salamander garment lore, the salamander cloth stories? Such as those found in stories about Dwarfs, & the symbolism & types from the different salamanders on baptismal fonts in English Christian churches? In his Lord of the Rings saga, a protective white under garment, the Mithril shirt, protects Frodo Baggins from a large cave-troll's sharp weapon jabbed into his chest.¹⁷¹⁰ In lore, evil cave trolls, are part of the different races of fallen angels.¹⁷¹¹ In the fable, Thorstan and the Dwarf, Thorstan, a Dwarf rewards someone with a protective shirt.¹⁷¹² To what extent Tolkien drew from his Catholic background, his friendship with C. S. Lewis, & the symbolism in the Catholic mass, baptism, looking at baptismal fonts, art works, languages, similar types in different mythologies, is of interest. "J.R.R. Tolkien's fundamental and daily walk of faith in Jesus Christ was discovered first from his beloved Father Morgan and participation in the worship of the Catholic Mass, with its focus on the death of Christ and his victory over death, sin, and the power of evil on our behalf."¹⁷¹³

More on salamander fonts: Another example is how some Norman era fonts, starting about the 11th century, such as the one from Great Kimble, Buckinghamshire, is standing up in the shape of a chalice, with salamanders among the organic-shaped carvings that decorate it. A number of old fonts bear images of salamanders and dragons, one that presents the on going battle with evil, pre-existence themes, is from Thorpe Arnold in Leicestershire which depicts St. Michael dueling with a dragon.¹⁷¹⁴

E. Baldwin Smith notes how that in many Christian baptisteries' art works, there were numerous imageries & symbolical architectural designs that related to death, martyrdom, the descent into hell or the anastasis (the resurrection), plus, the ascension into paradise. This "artistic symbolism was given deeper content by the Church Fathers who had established a mystic equation which made baptism a reexperience of the death and resurrection of Christ."¹⁷¹⁵

1000–1250, Romanesque period, "the spiritual life of the Christian was seen as a struggle with the monstrous powers of evil. It was necessary for the soul to be armed by baptism; to enlist the power of Christ and his warrior Saint Michael in the unending struggle with the Devil."¹⁷¹⁶

13th century, Prudentius's Psychomachia, the virtues and vices were represented warring with each other, as if like warriors. This goes along with the idea of how the purification theme in baptism has the candidates going through stages of getting rid of, taking off, like old clothing, their enslavement to different negative vices, the inner battle to become more Christ like. Thus, these themes started showing up in the imagery on baptismal fonts, such as the font at Eardisley, where virtue impales vice with a spear or lance. Thus, it became a popular theme to show virtues conquering vices, as symbolized by their victories over the defeated vices, by virtues standing over their fallen foes. At Southrop, each virtue is represented as a armed Knight, trampling on a vice. At Stanton Fitzwarren (Wilts), 10 arcaded compartments show different victory symbolism, a serpent stabbed, trampling, sword, different positive traits standing on negative ones. Some fonts also sat on the back of 12 oxen in a circle, (1 Kings 7:25), has angels holding garments in the Baptism of Christ scene, such as the large baptismal font at St. Bartholomew, Liège, made by Rainer of Huy, 1107–18.¹⁷¹⁷ The 12 oxen were said to represent the 12 apostles, in other cases they were the 12 tribes of Israel. Adam & Eve creation scenes, on the Tournai font at East Meon (Hants). More descent into the watery abyss & resurrection themes, such as depictions of Jonah, on the font at Feldstedt (Denmark).¹⁷¹⁸ The earlier mention of lances are like unto the art works related to baptismal battle themes of Christ stabbing the fallen devil with a cross-banner-lance, thus symbolizing his victory over death, the devil & demonic dark forces of hell, during the harrowing of hell dramas.¹⁷¹⁹

Paul and some of the early Christians must have saw types of baptism in the scriptural references about the tank of water, or the "brassen sea" in which the Israelites did ritualistic ceremonial washings.¹⁷²⁰ Since some of the art-works were about Christ's descent into limbo, hades & the grave, it was appropriate to find many near, or on baptismal fonts, its ritualistic type. And since, in many of the art works and writings, the devil and his demons were being thrust through with different types of weapon-crosses, and crushed under the doors of hades, limbo, or hell, etc., as Christ and hosts of the freed resurrected come forth out of the spirit prison. And since some fonts show beasts being crushed by the baptismal font too. And since the descent down into the font was seen as a type of Christ's descent. It may be that the proxy, or those being baptized for the dead, may have thought of themselves as having defeated the devil in an under world battle to free their dead relatives or other spirits from hades, limbo, etc., during baptism or other rites performed for the dead.¹⁷²¹

Christ, the angels, etc., during the descent were sometimes depicted as being armed with weapons (sometimes the cross was used as a weapon), when doing battle with the devil and his demons. Squires who longed to be dubbed knights may have thought about these things, or they may have been reminded of them when they passed through different kinds of rites to knighthood. The rites to knighthood included different things, depending on the time, and place. These rites might include, among other things, prayers with up-lifted hands, oaths, ceremonial baths, being clothed in new garments, receiving a shield, sword and banner, & the cross was one of their symbols too.¹⁷²² Thus, as "Christs" they descended down into the font, just as Christ had descended into the lower regions. And, as anointed "Christs," they could also defeat the demons of the underworld, just as Christ had, during his descent.¹⁷²³

John P. Lundy notes that ancient works presented Christ as having become incarnate, suffered and died, and "He had gone down to Hades seemingly defeated and undone; but now He comes forth in the resurrection as a Conqueror over sin and death, and must needs be crowned as all other conquerors are." Lundy goes on to cite Ps. 8:5 and Heb. 2:9. And then notes how Samson was thought of as a type of Christ in how that he carried off the gates of Gaza. Hence, this was likened to Christ "bursting open and carrying away the gates of Hades, and conquering His and our enemies by His death and resurrection."¹⁷²⁴

As the saints of old come forth out of the spirit prison during Christ's harrowing of hell. Numerous hosts tramples under their feet the devil & the demonic prison-house wardens. Satan is often depicted in art works as having been thrust through with a spear, or the cross-spear. Or trodden under foot. Or in other cases, Christ has made the enemy of the human race, (satan), his foot stool. In that we see Christ as the victor, resting his foot on the fallen satan, who also, in some cases, has been bound hand & foot in irons, or chains, etc. The early to later Christian writers, & artist had plenty of scriptural types to help them in their stories, art works, legends, mystery plays, illuminated manuscripts, icons, & symbols, etc. Isaiah 14:12-20 may have been seen by the early to later Christians as not only a type of satan's fall from heaven. But also of his defeat in the under world. For in numerous art works satan has often been depicted as a warden who refused to open the house of his prisoners. (Isaiah 14:17). He is often depicted as having been cast out of the grave & thrust through with a sword. And is often depicted as a carcass trodden down under the feet of Christ and the hosts of resurrected saints who come forth out of hell. (Isa. 14:19). The spirit prisoners are gathered together in the pit, & are shut up in the prison, and after many days they are visited by the King of glory. (Isa. 24:21-23). Those who are bound in hades shall be loosed, the bonds of death shall be broken. Satan, having been bound in irons, or tied hand-&-foot, were types of the strong man that Christ's mentioned in scriptures. Thus, having been bound, Christ robs Satan's prisons house & the captives are set free. Having said to the prisoners to 'go forth, to them that are in darkness Shew yourselves.' The captives having hastened that they may be loosed from the pit.¹⁷²⁵

Upon being baptized they became proxies for those of their friends or kindred who needed the seal of baptism in order to escape out of the spirit prison. And like Christ, they too would also bring out spirits who had been held in captivity.

As the proxy ascended up out of the font, in some cases the proxy may have been raised with different types of ritualistic rites of passage hand grips. This was a similitude and type of how God the Father raised Christ in the resurrection, and ascension into heaven with different types of hand grasps. And in turn, how Christ, or his angels lift up the dead from the underworld, limbo, hades, the pit, from the fall, or the grave during the resurrection and ascension into paradise or heaven.¹⁷²⁶

The hand clasp to raise the newly baptized out of the baptismal waters is seen in a 3rd century crypt, again, perhaps connecting the resurrection out of the underworld, or the grave, with its ritualistic counterpart, baptism, if not even baptism for the dead. Hence, in a wall painting fragment in Rome, in the crypt of Lucina, the baptismal scene shows a person grasping, with the right hand, the right hand of the person being raised up out of the water.¹⁷²⁷

There is an interesting depiction of baptism that reminds us of some of the symbolic hand clasps which are often depicted in works depicting Christ's descent, for just as Christ raised up the soul up out of the grave, hades, & limbo, etc., in a similar manner, a person is being raised out of a baptismal bowl, as if also coming up out of the grave. The font was symbolic of the underworld, the grave, etc., in many cases in early to later Christianity, & thus the artist may have wanted to present a type of Christ's descent, & the hand clasp that is depicted there also. For Christ clasps, with his left hand, the right wrist of the person in the baptismal bowl, while His right hand has been placed on the head of the person. The depiction above this one show the ascension into heaven.¹⁷²⁸

In a gothic manuscript, a possible baptismal scene, or type of one, shows a naked soul in a barrel, with both hands raised up towards the hand of God extending down from above. Hence, it may be the moment before the clasp.¹⁷²⁹

In the act of Christ reaching down towards Adam's hand to clasp it, in order to raise him from the grave, the pit, hades, limbo, etc., (as that realm has been called in early to later Christendom.) And as Adam reaches up towards Christ's hand. (Again we see the hand clasping "rites of passage" or ritualistic symbols in such hand clasps, see: Isa. 42:6-7; Eph.4:7-10; 1 Pet. 3:15-22, 4:5-6. Adam's "reentry to paradise has already begun & his deification (along with the deification of mankind) is already under way in this miracle of re-creation, as the Anastasis came to be known."¹⁷³⁰

John of Damascus mentions the descent of the proxy as a type of Christ's descent into hades: "The soul when it was deified descended into Hades, in order that, just as the Sun of Righteousness rose for those upon the earth, so likewise He might bring light to those who sit under the earth in darkness and shadow of death: in order that just as He brought the message of peace to those upon the earth, and of release to the prisoners,... so He [too] might become the same to those in Hades: That every knee should bow to Him, of things in heaven, and things in earth and things under the earth. [citing Phil 2:10]. And thus after He had freed those who had been bound for ages, straightway He rose again from the dead, shewing us the way of resurrection."¹⁷³¹

In many cases the hand clasp or helping hand is seen in how Christ takes a hold of their hand. Perhaps as in also in the symbolical "rite of passage hand clasps" mentioned & seen so many times in the early to later Christian art works & writings concerning the descent & ascension of Christ, in & out of the under-world, hades, limbo, the pit, grave, etc. In thus taking a hold of their hand, they are raised from their fallen state or conditions. And supported, so as to never fall away again. Christ had thus sealed them His, with this hand clasp.

Later Christian art works show, tug-of-wars, between angels of God & demons. The demons attempt to cause the "fall" of those who are on their way towards the heavenly realms, & moral perfection. Angels clasp a hold of the ascending souls,' arms, hands, or wrists, in order to pull them up towards the heavens. While demons attempt to hold them back, or pull them down, thus helping in their fall.

Earlier, Clement of Alexandria seems to suggest that the garment is a symbol of Christ. "And I will be" He [Christ] says, "their Shepherd," and will be near them, as the garment to their skin. He wishes to save my flesh by enveloping it in the robe of immortality, and He hath anointed my body."¹⁷³²

Clement then seems to hint to the symbolical journey of the soul on its way towards immortality. In the mysteries, upon coming out of the font & being clothed in a garment, it was a type of the newly resurrected soul's journey or passage towards the realms of the divine in immortality. For he also wrote: "They shall call Me," [Perhaps making reference to those in the spirit prison who call unto the Lord for help.]¹⁷³³ "He" [Christ] "says, "and I will say, Here am I." Thou didst hear sooner than I expect, Master. "And if they pass over, they shall not slip," saith the Lord. For we who are passing over to immortality shall not fall into corruption, for He shall sustain us. For so He has said, & so He has willed...."¹⁷³⁴ Clement goes on to hint to the symbols & types in the mysteries. The garment & anointing is a type of that deification to come. The anointed are deified, their bodies are clothed in a body which shines forth with immortality & that same type of divine light as Christ's glorious body does. The garment of light being a type of this.

In coming up out of the font, again, the font was a type of the spirit prison, grave, limbo, hades, & the pit, thus the Lord reaches down to clasp their hand. Clement seems to hint to this, when he wrote concerning the descent of Christ into hades. "...the Lord exhorts, and to those who have already made the attempt he stretches forth His hand, & draws them up."¹⁷³⁵ The hand clasps during the ascension were types of the ritualistic hand clasping rites of passage in the mysteries and sacraments. Thus, as proxies¹⁷³⁶ in earth life, as they were passing through these rites of passage, on the other side, those to whom the work was being done for were also passing through the heavenly coronation ceremonies, and rites of passage with the angels as they literally ascended out of the spirit prison towards paradise. At least, this is what numerous art works, & writings seem to suggest.¹⁷³⁷

Clement of Alex.: "Boast not of the clothing of your garment, & be not elated on account of any glory, as it is unlawful." [Speaking of those, whom clothed themselves after the luxurious garments of this earthly world. For God has in mind a better and more luxurious garments to cloth them in.] For "those that wait at the court of heaven around the King of all, are sanctified in the immortal vesture of the Spirit, that is, the flesh, and so put on incorruptibility."¹⁷³⁸

Clement also wrote that the priestly robes of the Jews in the Old Testament times, in their laws & ordinances, these were a prophetic type of Christ's ministry in the flesh. The point here being, that one of the symbolical meanings behind robes & garments were that it was a symbol & similitude of the body, the flesh. And in some cases the deified glorified resurrected body. The Christian was also to take upon them, the same type of glorified body as Christ's-resurrected-body. Thus, the garments & robes of the mysteries were a type of this. Clement of Alex., wrote: "Truly, then are we the children of God, who have put aside the old man, & stripped off the garment of wickedness, & put on the immortality of Christ; that we may become a new, holy people by regeneration, & may keep the man undefiled."¹⁷³⁹

Clement of Alex., also wrote that in "our regeneration, we attained that perfection after which we aspired". And in having followed Christ's example in "being baptized, we are illuminated; illuminated, we become sons, being made sons, we are made perfect; being made perfect, we are made immortal. "I," says He, "have said that ye are gods, & all sons of the Highest." [Citing from Psa. 82:6.] "This work is variously called grace, & illumination, & perfection, & washing: washing, by which we cleanse our sins; grace, by which the penalties accruing to transgressions are remitted; & illumination, by which that holy light of salvation is beheld, that is by which we see God clearly."¹⁷⁴⁰

In coming up out of the font, (again, the font was a type of the spirit prison, grave, limbo, hades, the pit., etc.,) the Lord would reach down to clasp their hand. Clement seems to hint to this, when he wrote concerning the descent of Christ into hades. "...For some the Lord exhorts, & to those who have already made the attempt he stretches forth His hand, & draws them up..."¹⁷⁴¹ This is what we see many times in the art works of the harrowing of hell, the descent, etc.,¹⁷⁴² and so it seem reasonable & logical to suppose that the early to later Christians saw in their art works of the descent and resurrection of Christ, a type of that which happened in their mysteries and sacraments.

Upon ascending up stairs into higher parts of the church, this must have been considered as a type of Christ's ascension up out of the grave, the spirit world, the pit, limbo, hades, etc., as Christ & the newly resurrected saints ascended into paradise. Thus, the proxy, upon having followed Christ's example, had brought souls out of the spirit prison house over into paradise.

In some cases, a 2nd anointing would take place, & garments would be put upon them after they had ascended out of the font. The anointing, the putting on of garments, and the ascension may have been a type of how the angels in the other realms had taken the spirits by the hand to guide them over into paradise.

Clement of Alexandria, with the help of symbolical types, he wrote that the three days that Christ was in the grave, having risen on the 3rd day. These things were a type of the 3 immersions, or "The three days may be the mystery of the seal," [n. "Baptism. [Into the Triad.]" "in which God is really believed." Clement then seems to hint to how Abraham had been in the realms of the dead & had been initiated by the angel. He hints to the type of baptism being as a type of the realm of the dead, for Abraham was "in the realms of generation," or baptism.¹⁷⁴³ The Jews "once taught that when Michael and Gabriel lead all the sinners up out of the lower world, "they will wash and anoint them of their wounds of hell, and clothed them with beautiful pure garments & bring them into the presence of God."¹⁷⁴⁴

In the Testament of Abraham the chief-captain and archangel Michael is "God's commander-in-chief," and he is "one whose intervention is so powerful with God that at his word souls can be rescued even from Hell itself." Abraham pleaded with Michael that he would call upon the Lord to have mercy on the souls of the sinners "who the earth swallowed up" reminding us here of the many different depictions of the descent of Christ that show hell, limbo, hades, or the lower regions of the earth, as a pit, or cave which open before Christ like jaws. Also the jaws of hell were often depicted as having swallowed up sinners. But to return to the story of Abraham-- they call upon the angel for help, and in turn the angel calls upon the Lord to have mercy on these souls in hell. The Lord answered by saying: "I forgive thee thy sin, [Abraham,] and those whom thou thinkest that I destroyed I have called up and brought them into life by my exceeding kindness,..." Another example of where Michael conducts the souls out of hell into the holy light of paradise is seen in a chant in "Masses for the dead", here they ask the Lord to "deliver the souls of all the faithful departed from the pains of Hell and from the deep pit". The chant continues to plead that the dead would be delivered from the lion and jaws of hell that they would not be swallowed up. It asked that "the standard-bearer Michael [may] conduct them into the holy light, which thou didst promise of old to Abraham and his seed." The mass included prayers and sacrifices for and in behave of the dead in the hopes that they would be allowed to pass from hell over into paradise with Michael as their guide.¹⁷⁴⁵

On some stone works, a number of angel "hold the hands of the little persons whom they cover with their mantels. These are symbols of the souls tenderly borne to paradise."¹⁷⁴⁶

Roger Adam wrote that Basil, 329-379 A.D., had likened baptism unto the grave. "How can we be placed in a condition of likeness to His [Christ's] death? By being 'buried with Him in baptism.' How are we to go down with Him into the grave? By imitating the 'burial' of Christ in baptism; for the bodies of the baptized are in a sense buried in water." (De Baptismo). Notice here that Basil seems to hint of the descent into the grave or realms of the dead, in that he asked: "How are we to go down with Him" [Christ] "into the grave?"¹⁷⁴⁷

Theodulf (760-821 A.D.), wrote that "We die to sin when we renounce the devil & all his works; we are buried with Christ when we descend into the font of washing, as into a sepulchre, & are immersed 3 times in the name of the Holy Trinity; we rise with Christ when, purified of all our sins, we come out of the font as from a tomb." (De Ordine Baptismi). Ambrose is also reported to have mentioned 3 immersions, after which they then had climbed up out of the font.¹⁷⁴⁸

The Decline & Later Rejection & Destruction of Ancient Settings for Later Legendized Versions of Baptisms, & Baptisms for the Dead: During the Middle Ages, & later, the continued close association of baptism with death and burial is sometimes indicated by the use of octagonal fonts within the incomplete octagonal baptistery with ambulatory, or an aisle or cloister in a church or monastery, such as Aix in the Carolingian period. The Baptistery at Corté in Corsica a trefoil, or architectural tracery in the form of three rounded lobes like a clover leaf, baptistery, is a reproduction of architectural forms of martyrrium, in memory of dead martyrs, with a circular font, built about 910, close to the sanctuary of St. John's. Other martyrrium, such as the 11th century one of St. Stephen, was transformed into a baptistery at Valence. Other old fonts dating back to earlier centuries were restored, rebuilt & the later forms of baptism of infants were performed in them, 11th--17th century, when later clergy saw their ruined conditions. Though the earlier modes of different types of baptism were still being performed, & baptism for the dead had been replaced by prayers, masses, & liturgical rites for the dead, & the later sale of indulgences for the living & dead. These later restorations & fixings of old fonts continued to be associated with death, martyrdom, crucifixion, such as the cross-vaulting. The 9th century baptistery of St. John, was converted into a crypt, thus associated with the connection of baptism being part of the ritualistic reminders of death & burial, for a crypt is an underground room or vault beneath a church, used as a chapel or burial place. But also fonts in ruin conditions were also demolished & new ones were erected too. Thus, the types & symbolical reminders survived to a certain extent, how that: "Baptism is still regarded as primarily a death and resurrection (the octagon) with Christ, an entrance into the heavenly life (the dome), or a rebirth (the circle) into the family of the Church."¹⁷⁴⁹

By these later centuries, baptism for the dead had faded out, as did mainly adult baptisms, thus also the need for larger fonts to baptize by immersions. Moreover, other aspects of the earlier Christian mysteries were fading out, that involved special rooms for nude adults being ritualistically purified, bathed, disrobed, anointed, & clothed in white robes. Many of these aspects & the need for constructions to accommodate adults, had changed & was no longer needed with infant baptisms, especially as baptism of adults became rarer. The baptismal fonts became smaller, & the need for massive amounts of water for immersions also became lesser, plus the large amounts of clothing needed to invest the nude Baptized in was fading out too. As Christendom got older, the white robes were, in many cases, reduced to symbolical white cloth bib types of garments, given to the infants. Such later clothing items were reminders of the earlier Christian white baptismal robes, thus these later white colored cloth bibs, became more popular in much later centuries, closer to the modern era.¹⁷⁵⁰ Thus, "...the growth of infant baptism precluded the need for privacy for nude adult candidates, and the same factor rendered a sunken font unnecessary... with no disrobing, a changing-room was redundant."¹⁷⁵¹

It may be that as the modes of baptism changed & varied from sect to sect, so also did the actual mysteries get reduced down to accommodate "inconveniences" in some areas where water wasn't easily accessible. Or the funding to build, repair, or reconstruct separate baptisteries wasn't readily available. Perhaps in some areas, there wasn't enough interests, or incentives to do so. While in areas, the theocracies made it law to be baptized, or have the peasantry under them have their children baptized & forced tithing, in some areas, & baptismal fees in others, paid to the clergy, made it possible for them to build whatever elaborate churches & buildings they wanted to perform the later versions decreed in later Church councils. Also, as doctrinal changes were made, so also were the rituals required for salvation for the living & the dead, changed to fit the different modes of baptism. Thus, as modes by immersions of adults began to become more rare, so also did baptismal fonts that didn't have to be deep enough to perform the older rituals. In some areas of later Christendom, though, there were concerns about availabilities of proper types of fonts, & concerns & issues that needed to be settled about appropriate & traditional seasons for baptism, often popularized to be around Easter, or Whitsunday, or Pentecost, & Epiphany. During these later centuries, in some areas of Christendom there were even restrictions of baptism to be done only on certain specified days in the year, despite opposition to such restrictions. In 789 the Council of Calcuith (Canon 2), it reaffirmed the two traditional days, Easter & Pentecost. During the 13th century, the Papal Legate, Otho, tried to correct the lax in this canon by the English Church, & the 16th century Council of Trent required adults to be baptized at those seasons only. This restraint also restrains the multiplication of fonts.¹⁷⁵²

Another factor of font reduction, was how some Reformers rejected the ancient settings for baptism, as it had been passed down from the Roman Catholic church. The architectural settings of Baptism, & the required locations, forms, sizes, & shape of baptisteries, as was passed down from the Catholics. Their ritualistic types, how that they had evolved to include other aspects that were considered corruptions of the Papacy. Thus, Calvinistic thinking, & other Protestants, not necessarily of the Reformation persuasion, regarded the fonts as an article of papist superstition. Which in later centuries did include a blend of a legendization of the earlier Christian mysteries, Greek & Roman philosophy, paganism & the religious folklore of the areas that Catholic Christendom spread to.¹⁷⁵³ During the Reformation era & later, the later Catholic types of font locations were changed by different sects, like the Calvinists, & eventually in many Reformed churches, these types of fonts suffered extinction & total disappearance. Baptism it was believed, didn't require being done in fonts, but could be done in tubs, lakes, a ditch, rivers, channels, or wherever there was water, for such things were believed would be good enough, & immersions weren't required or important in Calvin's thinking, as also, in many Reformation splinter groups. Eventually Calvin settled for the affusion mode of baptism, which is a method of baptism where water is poured on the head of the person being baptized. The word "affusion" comes from the Latin affusio, meaning "to pour on".¹⁷⁵⁴ Thus, deep fonts where immersions could take place became obsolete in the churches that settle for these non total body immersions.

1560s the battle over baptismal modes, when, where, & by which sect baptism of infants was valid, be the baptism took place in a ditch, basins, in dishes; or fonts, continued between Puritans & Catholics, some the Puritan clergy in county of Essex, rejecting the use of any fonts at all.¹⁷⁵⁵

Whitgift, who became Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1583, argued against Puritan leader, Thomas Cartwright's claims that the font was not mentioned in the scriptures & that it had papist association. He reasoned that you might as well find faults with pulpit & church too, beside the font, that during the apostles time, regular churches were built yet, so they used rivers. He reasoned that there is no just cause for the font to be removed.¹⁷⁵⁶

1603, the Puritans published the Millenary Petition, claiming 1000 Puritan ministers, had signed it. It was argued before the court, 1604, at Hampton Court Conference, & presented to King James 1 of England. It argued that fonts were not needed, so in response, Canons of 1604, no. 81, ordered that there shall be a font of stone in every church and chapel where baptism is to be ministered, the same to be set in the ancient usual places.¹⁷⁵⁷

17th century, early decades, in England & other places, the controversies continued over locations of fonts, the use or non use of fonts, & complaints to authorities against those who seemed to be supporting the use of the old ones, still in existence, were voiced, & written about as being connected to the "corrupt" & "superstitious" papacy.¹⁷⁵⁸ Changes continued to be made in breaking away from the ancient settings of what was once a ritualistic architectural setting for faded versions of baptism & baptism for the dead, as different Reformers' sects, Anglicans & Puritans continued to increase the divide from the Roman Catholics, & sometimes within their own polemics amongst themselves over what parts of the old rituals to throw out, & what parts to keep. With the Commonwealth created, by Oliver Cromwell, (25 April 1599 – 3 September 1658),¹⁷⁵⁹ & the triumphant of Puritans' & Calvinists' influences increasing to militant powers & law making authority, the changes in architectural settings of baptism in England became all pervasive in the enforcing of those changes to the later baptismal settings. In 1644, the Directory for Public Worship, ordered baptism to be administered to where the Congregation could see & hear. No longer was it to be hidden behind curtains, as in earlier centuries, when naked adults were baptized by immersions, or other modes that were accepted in other areas. By these later times, naked infants were being baptized, & rarely adults were. The congregation was to be welcomed to witness the baptisms & they were to be done not in the places were Fonts in the time of the Popery were unfitly and superstitiously placed. It was decreed that it was only lawful for baptism by pouring or sprinkling of water on the face of the children. With this came the destruction, desecration & removal of existing fonts. William Dowling & his fellow commissioners, traveling through Suffolk & Cambridgeshire, were destroying whatever popery they could find, including many fonts. From 1644–1653, fonts were vandalized by orders of thought policing committees,¹⁷⁶⁰ like during the days of Iconoclasts, when iconography suffered the willful destruction of religious Christian art works of the Eastern Church, in the Byzantine Churches, during the 8th and 9th century.¹⁷⁶¹ Strood, Kent, the font was removed and paving covered where it once stood. St. Edmund, Sarum, the orders of the committee presented to "ye Vestry" a room in or attached to a church, used as an office and for changing into ceremonial-vestments. The taking down of the fonts in all Parish Churches in the city and close of Sarum. Mr. Nicholas Beach was order to take down "ye Font". But some of the damage was said to be reverse during the Restoration of 1660, when King Charles II, the first Monarch ruled after the English Restoration & the strict Puritan laws were eased.¹⁷⁶²

1661–62, after the Great Rebellion, or The Wars of the Three Kingdoms, sometimes also known as the British Civil War, an intertwined series of conflicts that took place in England, Ireland & Scotland between 1639–51.¹⁷⁶³ New fonts were required to replace those that had been destroyed, & so the octagonal font, after the older pattern, was made at Painwick (Glos.), has the date 1661, and a different one at Astbury (Cheshire), 1662.¹⁷⁶⁴

As late as the 20th century, in some areas, the concept that baptism was likened unto the descent into the grave, still was remembered. A spatial, or space setting for the font was created by sinking it below ground-level, so that a descent is made, and having rails around it, as in the narthex at Mulhouse, Alsace. This followed the direction of St. Charles Borromeo, who pointed out the importance of the descent so that the baptism 'should bear some resemblance to a sepulchre.'¹⁷⁶⁵

Baptism, & Baptism for the Dead as Earliest Ritualistic Witnesses for a Physical Resurrection: Perhaps some early to later Christians may have saw types for the descent and baptism for the dead in the writings of Paul & other New Testament writers, which they later put to art works about the descent in connection with baptism, and baptism for the dead. Paul defended the bodily resurrection during a time in early Christian history when the doctrine was coming under attack. Even some of the new converts may have been bringing into the Church many Hellenistic Greek ideas which conflicted with the early Church's doctrines. It may be that the anti-body doctrines of the Greeks may have Hellenized some of the Christians at Corinth, and this may be why Paul responded with a strong defense of a literal resurrection. Paul lists a number of those who had witnessed that Christ had literally been raised up from the dead into a glorious body. In 1 Corinthians chapter 15 he said that Christ was buried and rose again the third day according to the scriptures (1 Cor. 15:4). He goes on to list some of the witnesses who had seen Christ's resurrected body, such as Cephas, the 12, and 500 hundred brethren at once, then James, then all the apostles, and then he lists himself as being a witness too (verses 5-8). Now if all these had become witnesses to the fact that Christ had a resurrected body and had risen from the dead, why was there some among the Christians at Corinth who had said that this was no so? (verse 12). He then goes on to point out that if there was no resurrection their faith would be in vain (verses 13-17). He then proceed to testify that Christ had risen from the dead for he was the first to be risen, then others were too (verses 18-23). Paul then mentions what early to later Christians (who read Paul and others), may have seen as being references to the war in the underworld, the defeat of death and the devil. The art works and writings of early to later Christendom are filled with the details of satan's defeat in the underworld. For as Paul said, Christ put all enemies under his feet, the last enemy that was destroyed was death (verses 24-28). In the art works, it was a common thing to see Christ resting his foot on a defeated and fallen Satan, or monstrous figure representing a personified death. Paul also went on to point out the inconsistency of those Christians at Corinth who were performing the ritualistic type of a bodily resurrection, while at the same time saying that there was no resurrection. For baptism was the ritualistic type that signified a person's passage from earth life to death, burial and the resurrection where their bodies would be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious resurrected body (verse 29; Rom. 6:3-9; Phil. 2:10; 3:10-11, 19-21; Col. 2:12; 2 Cor. 3:18).

In baptism they were symbolically facing the jeopardy, the coming battle with the demonic forces in the underworld, the beasts there in. Thus, Paul, to further point out their inconsistency, he asks them why they would stand in jeopardy of this every hour? Why would they make themselves ready to do battle in the underworld, if they didn't believe in a bodily resurrection? What was the point? Paul then seems to hint to the fact that he may have also been baptized for the dead, for he too had also ritually died in being baptized, for he said "I die daily". He had said that he had fought with beasts at Ephesus, this may have been suggesting a further type in the descent drama & it's ritualistic type (baptism and baptism for the dead). During the descent demons and monstrous beasts from hell were defeated, (artists, legends, and mystery plays would later depict these battles, and with dramatized battles too). And as Paul had suggested earlier, the defeat of death and the devil would be included (1 Cor. 15:23-31).

In excavations at Corinth, a few reliefs included "a hideous "angel," from some Christian grave, perhaps; terra-cotta lion-head spouts," from which perhaps water would flow or drain from.¹⁷⁶⁶ Furthermore, in excavations of ancient Corinth, a room was discovered that contained seven steps down to the floor, and "two bronze lion-head spouts in place on the back wall of the chamber and beneath them holes in the pavement where water-jars might be set. That this was probably a fountain was further indicated by the fact that this back wall was built under a crust of conglomerate like that in Peirene, where the soft yellow stone, almost clay, beneath was dug out to make water channels. Very likely an investigation would show that behind this wall are similar channels and a reservoir, of course long since dry. The waste water may have been carried off by a drain, of which it is possible that two sections have been found, one just west of the west pier of the Propylaea, the other running outside the north apse of Peirene."¹⁷⁶⁷

Perhaps such symbols in early Christian graves, and in excavations in Corinth may have been looked upon by the early Christians in Corinth as containing types of Christ's descent to defeat the devil. Hence, its ritualistic type, baptism, and baptism for the dead, may have been done in similar symbolical settings. At least, the former pagans, who were converted to Christianity, may have secretly attempted to use whatever access to water they could get at, in order to perform their rites. And in so doing this, the symbols and types of their pagan counterparts could have been used and thought of as being types of Christ, rather than of the pagan gods' symbols and types. Consequently, these types of symbolical reliefs, in which the "hideous angel" perhaps symbolic of the devil, or other beasts, such as the lion-head water spouts, were seen, like Paul seems to suggest to the Corinthians, as being types of how Christ defeats the devil during his descent into hell. Which descent had ritualistic types, that of baptism, and baptisms for the dead.¹⁷⁶⁸

Furthermore, early to later Christian artists and writers may have seen in Paul's writings, many things which they illustrated in art, concerning the descent and baptism. In the baptismal rites of the 3rd and fourth centuries, the devil is named as "the ancient destroyer."¹⁷⁶⁹ Hence, in the art works, and in its ritualistic types, baptism & baptism for the dead, the "ancient destroyer" is himself destroyed when Christ, and his ritualistic types, those being baptized as if they were Christ, descend into the baptismal waters, (the type of hell), to free the captive spirits held there.¹⁷⁷⁰

Many different types of fonts were used in the different scattered branches of early to later Christianity, so they should also be considered within the historical settings, times, & places, & the dogmas that were going on during the times & places that they are found in.¹⁷⁷¹ Some fonts have been found in different parts of the Churches throughout the history of Christianity. Some in the lower parts of the Churches, others near the entrance ways, others in separate buildings, etc., etc. Some fonts have persons carved on them, with hands raised up, perhaps as if they were in a prayer circle. While other fonts show persons reaching out their arms towards each others as if they were about to clasp hands. Other works show a person being helped out of the baptismal water with a helping hand-clasp, which may have been amongst the many different types of ritualistic hand-grips found in numerous depictions about the descent.¹⁷⁷²

In Roger Adam's thesis, Baptism for the Dead, we read that "there is a very close connection between baptisteries and sepulchral monuments. Baptismal fonts are found in the catacombs, tombs have been discovered in the baptistery proper & baptisteries have been located in cemeteries."¹⁷⁷³ Some baptisteries, like the one at Doura-Europas, contained the baptismal font at the west in the form of a sarcophagus set into a depression in the floor. Thus, some art historians argued, that it may indeed be a martyrion rather than a baptistery. Some of the art works & symbolism in that setting seemed to suggest that the font was in likeness to the grave, and in fact was in the form of a sarcophagus. Mr. Adam presents another example, the Baptisteries in Catacombs, Cimiterium Ostrianum on the Via Nomentana, near the church of St. Agnese, discovered in 1876. Another font, in the area of the catacomb & the Baptistery of St. Ponianus had a small stream of water that flowed through the cemetery, and at a certain place the channel had been deepened so as to form a pool. Steps descended down to the font, & the water depth depended on the height of the Tiber. At the cemetery of Priscilla, discovered in 1901 by Marucchi. At the bottom of a certain staircase of S. Silvester, near the chapel of Acilii Glabriones, writings on an arch read as follows: "qui sitit veniat ad me et bibat," suggests that in this area, within a catacomb, the chamber was used for baptizing. Professor Marucchi suggested that baptisms by immersion were performed there. While others had suggested other modes of baptism. Another baptistery at Oxyrhynchos, & which was said to be a half subterranean structure, 3rd-5th centuries, is said to have been a possible baptistery. Another under ground-baptistery dated 3rd-4th century, was discovered at Gabia La Grande. Another discovered at Castiglione, Tunisia, is a font in form of a crypt. In Greece, a half subterranean church called Christos in Milos (Kepos). To mention a few underground fonts with funerary symbolisms, types & settings, & art works. These were part of the ancient settings for early Christians' own versions of baptisms for the dead.¹⁷⁷⁴

St. Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, near Rome, A.D. 220-30, says that Hades "is a place in the created system, chaotic, a locality beneath the earth, without light. This locality has been destined to be as it were a guard-house for souls, at which the angels are stationed as warders, distributing to each one's deeds the temporary awards according to different characters. And in this locality there is a certain place set apart by itself, a lake of unquenchable fire, into which we suppose no one has ever yet been cast; for it is prepared against the day appointed by God, in which one sentence of righteous judgment shall be applied to all. And the unrighteous, and those who believed not God, shall be sentenced to this endless punishment. But the righteous shall obtain the incorruptible and unfading kingdom, who indeed are at present detained in Hades, but not in the same place with the unrighteous."¹⁷⁷⁵

In the early Christian church at Dura, one of the depictions on their walls of their sacred rooms depicted different religious themes. In the one used for baptism "the sacrament of baptism assimilated this room to the tomb of the 'old Adam,' reborn by the rite of baptism to eternal life. With the early third century Dura baptistery, & its art works, is a stone-built font shaped like a sarcophagus. Adam and Eve are represented, in a curiously narrow Garden of Paradise. The panel over the baptismal font tells of the old Adam who sinned and the new Adam, Christ, who redeems the victims of original sin.¹⁷⁷⁶ These fonts were types of the grave, and included many art works on the descent and resurrection, & thus connected the ritualistic types, the symbolic value of baptismal rites, as signifying the death and resurrection of the Christian, prefigured by Christ's death, descent & resurrection."¹⁷⁷⁷

Further evidences for the relationships of tombs with baptisteries are seen in the way that early Christian tombs have been found in many baptisteries, as in the baptistery of the Arians at Ravenna. Furthermore, the use of the martyrrium as a baptistery is established at Nisibis; in Africa; and by the baptism of Severus of Antioch in the martyrrium of S. Leontius. Plus, by Prudentius; and in the baptistery at Jerusalem, which was connected with the Anastasis, which as we have already noted, is the descent into the underworld, and resurrection. In addition to all this, a baptistery was also added onto the cruciform martyrrium of S. Babylas at Antioch-Kaoussie, early in the fifth century. 578, by the Council of Auxerre, the practice of placing graves in baptisteries, or perhaps baptisteries in tombs, was prohibited. Hence, it may be that this practice, during earlier centuries, was popular, and had, in fact, spread to many areas of Christendom to the point where it was later prohibited by the sixth century Christian leaders of the Auxerre Council.¹⁷⁷⁸ Hence, it seems that such a council marks the time frame when the apostasy continued to help cause the symbolical types of baptism for the dead to continue to fade out in some areas of later Christendom.¹⁷⁷⁹

Domes and Baptism for the Dead: In historic Christianity, the dome was of great symbolical interest to the Christians. It was a shape which had an antique sepulchral association with memorials to the dead, with martyrrium because of its traditional mortuary symbolism.¹⁷⁸⁰ "With the growth of the ritual of the dead and the architectural elaboration of the simple provisions for the mensa martyrrium into a commemorative monuments and church, the symbolism of the primitive shelter and house of the dead was extended to the whole church: the dome gradually became the manifest symbol of the martyrrium. In Syria this association of the dome with the martyrrium and its transformation from a symbolic shape into a monumental form of architecture was first brought about by wood carpentry, which made it possible to construct in the architecture itself a sepulchral ciborium, a royal baldachin, a divine form and celestial symbol over an altar, throne, tomb, pulpit and baptismal font."¹⁷⁸¹

Inasmuch as many other baptismal fonts were in the shape of chalices, with a dome-shaped lid, could it be that the dome shaped lid represented the paradise, or celestial regions to which souls would ascend to, after they were raised up out of the lower regions? The later dome over the Anastasis suggests that the upper area of the Church, was symbolic of the heavenly realms to which the freed souls from hell were being lifted up by their wrists, or hands too.¹⁷⁸²

The dome was carried over from the tomb to the baptistery, so that during the fourth century in Italy, the early Christians began to construct their baptisteries like domical mausolea and martyria.¹⁷⁸³ Many fourth & fifth centuries dome-shaped architectures were symbolically connected with death & martyrdom in the symbolism of their baptisteries and baptismal rites. Thus many early Christian burial places were also baptisteries, and their baptisteries as martyria, they transformed the imagery of the tomb, or martyrrium, as a heavenly tegurium to the font house, which they then visualized as a symbolic, cosmic shelter in a sylvan paradise where animals drank at the Fountain of Life.¹⁷⁸⁴

EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIANS PRACTICED BAPTISMS & PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD

Baptism for the dead is mentioned in the New Testament, but it was not expounded upon. However, it was mentioned while Paul was defending the doctrine of the resurrection. Baptism for the dead was also part of the ritualistic symbolism for the resurrection in early Christianity, and so it seems that Paul was making reference to a practice that he knew supported the doctrine of the resurrection, while pointing out the inconsistency of those who rejected the bodily resurrection, while they practiced a ritualistic type of the resurrection through baptism for the dead.

Nicodemus was the disciple of Christ as referred to in John 3:1; 7:50; 19:39. In Nicodemus 21:1-5, two sons of the high priest of Simeon were among those resurrected from the dead at the time of the resurrection of Christ (Matt. 27:52). They were also baptized in the river of Jordan. The angel Michael appointed them to go and preach the resurrection, but first, they were to go and be baptized at the river Jordan. Thus, they went and were baptized with the other dead who had arisen.¹⁷⁸⁵ In some art works, especially in the Eastern church's iconography of the baptism & Christ. Christ's descent into hades, or the descent into the watery abyss, are connected with Christ's baptism in the river Jordan. In that Christ, in the river, stands on the cross doors of hell, or in some cases "the Satan stone." In some cases, the doors are smashing the watery creatures of the abyss, representing the defeat of the underworld monster, the devil.¹⁷⁸⁶

Some versions about the descent say that it begun at midnight in the nether world. A bright light shown forth in the darkness like unto the light from the sun. Abraham, (other version have) Adam commenting about bright light. Isaiah and John the Baptist repeat prophecies they made about it. John warns the idolaters to take their last chance to repent by worshiping Christ. Death and Satan talk with each other about how Jesus had taken Lazarus away, and Death feared that all of the dead would be soon taken out of hell. Thunder is heard with the command to lift up the gates so that the King of glory can come in. Satan and his demons attempt to bar the gates, asking who is this King of Glory? Isaiah and David, and the other prophets mock the devil and his demons. Angels answer back from the other side of the gates that it is the Lord might in battle. The gates of brass break and the bars of iron break and in through the doors comes the King of glory. Light floods all the dark places of death, and the bound are set free. Death and his host protest and ask who this King is that has so much power over the living and the dead? Christ seizes satan and tells the angels to gag his mouth, bind him hand and foot and then have Death hold him until the second coming. While Death scorns satan, Christ lifts up Adam and takes him over into paradise along with the other patriarchs, prophets, martyrs and forefathers. He blesses them all by making the sign of the cross. Enoch and Elijah meet them at the gate, they are joined by the penitent thief who gives them Christ's promise to him, as a password. "In some sense the risen dead are certainly thought to be on earth, for some of them were baptized in the Jordan and kept the passover of the resurrection in Jerusalem."¹⁷⁸⁷

An early Christian work that was even among the earlier canonical books of the New Testament for some time, but was later taken out, was the second century apocalypse known as the Shepherd of Hermas.¹⁷⁸⁸ In the Ninth Similitude of Hermas: "...And I said, 'Why then, Sir, did these forty stones also ascend with them out of the deep, having already received that seal.' He answered, 'Because these apostles and teachers who preached the name of the Son of God, dying after they had received his faith and power, preached to them who were dead before; and they gave this seal to them. They went down, therefore, into the water with them, and again come up. But these went down whilst they were alive, and came up alive; whereas those, who were before dead, went down dead, but came up alive. Through these therefore, they received life, and know the Son of God; for which cause they came up with them, and were fit to come into the building of the tower; and were not cut, but put in entire; because they died in righteousness and in great purity only this seal was wanting to them. Thus you have the explication of these things'".¹⁷⁸⁹

"Hermas regards baptism as so necessary in order to enter into the kingdom of God, that it was necessary, he says, that the Apostles and the doctors, the preachers of the Gospel, should descend into hell to instruct and baptize [?] the just who were already dead."¹⁷⁹⁰

The Epistle of the Apostles, also tells of baptism for the dead: "And on that account I [Jesus] have descended and have spoken with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, to your fathers the prophets, and have brought to them the news that they may come from the rest which is below into heaven, and have given to them the right hand of baptism and life and forgiveness and pardon for all wickedness."¹⁷⁹¹

¹⁷⁹¹ Is the reference to "the right hand of baptism," to be likened unto the right hand clasps in resurrection, or the Anastasis, descent into hell, hades, limbo, & purgatory?¹⁷⁹²

"The idea that hearing the gospel and baptism is necessary for salvation of the righteous dead of pre-Christian times is common."¹⁷⁹³ About 150-200, Valentinian Theodotus associates the baptism for the dead in the New Testament with the heavenly model of angels baptism: "'Those who are baptized for the dead' are the angels who are baptized for us (who being mortal are as dead), in order that we too, possessing the (baptismal) name, may not be held back (at the ascent) and be prevented by the 'border post' (horos) from entering into the Pleroma."¹⁷⁹⁴ "In the sphere of doctrine a natural consequence of the stress laid on the necessity of baptism was inquiry into the ultimate fate of the righteous unbaptized dead. Hermas settled this inquiry by ascribing to the apostles the function of baptizing in Hades."¹⁷⁹⁵ J. Rendel Harris wrote, "In the earliest times, the Baptism of Christ was the occasion of His triumph over Hades."¹⁷⁹⁶ Add to that the iconography connecting John the Baptist, baptizing Christ in the river Jordan, while Christ stands on the doors of hades. It sums up to having the preservation of other aspects of baptism for the dead ritual-lore that are seen in ancient references too, & art works showing John the Baptist, prior to Christ in hades, preaching to the spirits of the dead. Like the prophets before him, he predicts to the disembodied spirits, how Christ would descend to rescue, resurrect & even baptize them too. Thus, it was believed that not only would Christ & his apostles descend, but also angels, saints, & before them, John the Baptist, for he continued his mission as a prophet and baptizer even after being martyred.¹⁷⁹⁷

Clement of Alexandria, who lived about 150 A.D., likewise discussed baptisms for the dead, and interprets the vision of Hermas as applicable to the Gentiles and the Jews: "And the Shepherd, speaking plainly of those who had fallen asleep, recognizes certain righteous among Gentiles and Jews, not only before the appearance of Christ, but before the law, in virtue of acceptance before God- as Abel, as Noah, as any other righteous man. He says accordingly, 'that the apostles and teachers, who preached the name of the Son of God, and had fallen asleep, in power and by faith preached to these that had fallen asleep before.' Then he subjoins 'And they have them the seal of preaching. They descended, therefore, with them into the water, and again ascended. But these descended alive, and again ascended alive. But those, who had fallen asleep before, descended alive, and know the name of the son of God. Wherefore, they also ascended with them, and fitted into the structure of the tower, and un hewn were built up together; they fell asleep in righteousness and in great purity, and wanted only this seal.' 'For when the gentiles, which have not the law do by nature the thing of the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves.' according to the apostle."¹⁷⁹⁸

Ariel L. Crowley cautioned that the so-called Epistle of Kallikrates, a fragment of a second century Greek uncial manuscript, consisting of 34 pages, is, in fact "a work of fiction, conceived in the fertile imagination of Dr. Witherow". Therefore, it is not to be considered as an ancient source with regards to baptism for the dead.¹⁷⁹⁹

About 200, The Gospel of Bartholomew, in Coptic, presents the drama of Christ's descent into hell. It also tells of how Siophanes, son of the apostle Thomas, had died. Before his soul was taken to heaven by Michael, he washed him three times in the Acherusian lake.¹⁸⁰⁰

145-220, Quintus Septimius Florens Tertullianus, or Tertullian, creator of early Christian Latin Literature & his dissertation on the resurrection of the flesh, he considers 1 Cor. 15:29, wherein Paul makes reference to baptism for the dead, (De Res. Ch. 28: "If therefore, we are to rise again after the example of Christ, who rose in the flesh, we shall certainly not rise according to that example unless we shall ourselves rise again the flesh. ...For if 'as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive' their vivification in Christ must be in the flesh, since it is in the flesh that arises their death in Adam. 'But every man in his own order' because of course it will be also every man in his own body. For the order will be arranged severally, on account of the individual merits. Now as the merits must be ascribed to the body, it must needs follow that the order also should be arranged in respect of the bodies, that it may be in relation to their merits. But inasmuch as 'some are also baptized for the dead' we will see whether there be a good reason for this. Now it is certain that they adopted this practice with such a presumption as made them suppose that the vicarious baptism in question would be beneficial to the flesh of another anticipating of the resurrection; for unless it were bodily resurrection there would be no pledge secured by this process of a corporeal baptism, "Why are they then baptized for the dead" he asked, "unless the bodies rise again which are thus baptized?"¹⁸⁰¹

"The doctrine of baptism for the dead was mystifying to the early Christian leaders, at least by the time of Tertullian (140-230)."¹⁸⁰²

When Tertullian became a Montanist later on in his life, he must have known that they practiced baptism for the dead, and he may have even took part in them too. He seems to hint to this while writing as a Montanist against the Church of Rome. "Whence, too, it was that there flowed out of the wound in the Lord's side water and blood, the materials of either baptism." With this in mind, we note that numerous art-works, writings, and legends in later centuries would depict Adam's grave under the cross. The blood and water from Christ's wounds was believed to be a sort of baptism, thus, the bones of Adam were washed and baptized. These later legends may have been based on earlier types and symbols for baptism for the dead, which eventually became corrupted and legendized in later centuries.¹⁸⁰³ Tertullian may have accepted an earlier version of this tradition as a type of baptism for the dead, perhaps when he joined the Montanists, who practiced their own version of the rite.¹⁸⁰⁴

With baptism sometimes including washing & anointing, & types of Christ's descent into the grave, or descent into the spirit prison, to preach the gospel there too. We have this by Irenaeus, 120-202: "Now in the last days, when the fullness of the time of liberty had arrived, the Word Himself did by Himself " wash away the filth of the daughters of Zion," when He washed the disciples' feet with His own hands." For this is the end of the human race inheriting God; that as in the beginning, by means of our first [parents], we were all brought into bondage, by being made subject to death; so at last, by means of the New Man, all who from the beginning [were His] disciples, having been cleansed and washed from things pertaining to death, should come to the life of God. For He who washed the feet of the disciples sanctified the entire body, and rendered it clean. For this reason, too. He administered food to them in a recumbent [or growing close to the ground, or lying down] posture, indicating that those who were lying in the earth were they to whom He came to impart life. As Jeremiah declares, "The holy Lord remembered His dead Israel, who slept in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them to make known to them His own salvation, that they might be saved." [The sleeping disciples were awoke from their sleep] "...He also descended into the lower parts of the earth," to behold with His eyes the state of those who were resting from their labours, in reference to whom He did also declare to the disciples : "Many prophets and righteous men have desired to see and hear what ye do see and hear."¹⁸⁰⁵

Irenaeus, bishop at Lyon at the end of the second century after Christ, wrote of different version of baptisms for the dead, by what was done to the body after death, (I, 14:2) (Hastings): "The seven varieties are as follows:...(g) Finally, there were those who in other respects seem to have agreed with those mentioned above as the fifth party (those who use oil and water in the ordinance of baptism instead of merely water) but deferred baptism until after death. Epiphanius perhaps thought that this must mean 'in articulo mortis' (Epiph. 36:2) but the text of the Latin Irenaeus is clear: 'Alli sunt qui mortuos rediment ad finem defunctionis, mittentes exorum capitibus oleum et aquam' alludes to the same practice (HE L:11). The object of this was to safeguard the soul of the dead person in its journey through the realm of the spirit world. This view may be paralleled with the Pistis Sophia, and seems to have Egyptian affinities."¹⁸⁰⁶

At the end of the 2nd century A.D., St. Cyprian of Antioch says in a prayer for the dead: "Father, deliver his soul as thou has delivered Jonah from the sea monster, the young Hebrews from the furnace, Daniel from the lion's den, Susanna from the hands of the elders..."¹⁸⁰⁷

(Early to Mid-Second century?), Ezrik: This man, early Christian Armenian, wrote an attack upon the doctrines of Marcion. Marcion, disciple of Paul, caused the ordinance of baptisms for the dead to be observed in all the widespread Marcionite churches. Marcion was a wealthy shipowner on the Euxine, he held to the teachings of Paul, and founded a system of early Christian thought and practice based on the teachings of Paul. He was affiliated with the church at Rome, and left that church in 144 A.D.

The doctrine of baptisms for the dead played important parts in his version of early-Christianity, though he was condemned as a heretic by other early Christian fathers.¹⁸⁰⁸ Dr. Hugu Nibley notes that the Marcionites could not accept many of the other early Christians' beliefs that the Hebrew prophets and Patriarchs had received the preaching and the seal of baptism, for they believed that it was the prophets' and patriarchs' enemies that had, and thus, according to Marcionite beliefs, they were the only ones to be liberated by Christ when he descended.¹⁸⁰⁹

Despite the fact that Marcion was assailed most bitterly by Tertullian on other matters, on the matter of baptism for the dead, Tertullian leaves him unscathed, and on the contrary recognized the doctrine as accurately Pauline (Res. 48; Adv. Mar. 5:10). "One also finds mentioned in the scriptures a baptism for the dead, (I Cor. 15:29) which was employed in several heretical sects, notably by the Marc[i]onites."¹⁸¹⁰

While the writer of the "Five Books in Reply to Marcion" scourged Marcion on everything except baptism for the dead, the writer praised the Shepherd of Hermas, who also wrote about baptism for the dead. And so the writer, who ever they may have been, may have agreed on the practice. In the case with Tertullian, he too wrote many things against Marcion, and yet he still may have felt that baptism for the dead was not too much of an issue to make a big fuss over, for he later forsook the Church at Rome to become a Montanist, which sect accepted the doctrine of baptism for the dead, like the Marcionites did.

"The Marcionites, a heretical sect founded about 144 in Rome, is known to have practiced the doctrine of baptism for the dead. They existed not only in Rome and Italy but in Egypt, Palestine, Arabia, Syria, and as far away as Persia and survived for some 300 years in the West and several centuries longer in the East."¹⁸¹¹

"History records that, later, among the disciples of Cerinthus, and of Marcion... on more than occasion, they had died without having received the sacrament of regeneration, in the hope that they would assure in this manner the entrance of the dead into heaven."¹⁸¹²

Montanus was said to be a Christian prophet about 156 A.D., in the reign of Zntoninus Pius, at Ardabau in Nysia, near the Phrygian border. Philastrius, Bishop of Brascia, writing in 350 A.D. (WE Haeres c. 2) makes note that: "The practice of baptism for the dead prevailed most among the Phrygian followers of Montanus."¹⁸¹³

John P. Lundy's Monumental Christianity, tells of what he called a "curious custom" that prevailed in the primitive Church, that of "H baptizing the dead through some living person taking the responsibility. St. Paul alludes to it, in his great argument on the resurrection, (I Cor. 15:29), but neither condemns nor approves the practice. A century and a half later the Marcionites also denied the resurrection of the body, as they of St. Paul's day did: and Tertullian in twice speaking of it, says: "No matter what the practice was, the Februrarian lustrations will perhaps answer him (Marcion) quite as well, by praying for the dead. Do not then suppose that the Apostle here indicates some new author and advocate of this custom is only aim in alluding to it was that he might all the more firmly insist upon the resurrection of the body, in proportion as they who were vainly baptized for the dead resorted to the practice from their belief of a resurrection. We have the Apostle in another passage defining but 'one Baptism.' To be 'baptized for the dead.' therefore, means, in fact, to be baptized for the body; for it is the body which becomes dead. What, then, shall they do who are baptized for the body, if the body rise not again?" (Marcion, lib.v.c.10).

Lundy give us another quote from Tertullian: "But inasmuch as 'some are also baptized for the dead,' we will see whether there be good reason for this. Now it is certain that they adopted this practice with such a presumption as made them suppose that such vicarious baptism would be beneficial to the flesh of another, in anticipation of the resurrection; for unless it were a bodily one there would be no pledge secured by this process of a corporeal baptism." "Why are they then baptized for the dead," he asks, "unless the bodies rise again which are thus baptized? For it is not the soul which is sanctified by the baptismal bath; its sanctification comes from the answer of a good conscience." (De Res. Car., c.48). Lundy then wrote that from these two passages from Tertullian, "the practice of baptizing for the dead was wholly in the belief of a bodily resurrection, as a substitute for the Pagan lustrations and prayers for the happiness and welfare of the dead, whom surviving friends never hoped to see again in a resurrection body. This Pagan custom was observed on the 15th of February. But the practice of baptizing for the dead was discontinued by the council of Carthage, at the end of the 4th century."¹⁸¹⁴

Dr. Nibley observed through historical writings, that Tertullian may have agreed with the practice at first, but later began to have doubts: "I don't believe that the Apostle was giving his approval to the practice, but rather signifying that those who practiced it thereby indicated their belief in a physical resurrection, being foolishly (vane) baptized for the dead.... For elsewhere he speaks of only one baptism. Therefore to baptize "for the dead" means to baptize for bodies; for the body, as we have demonstrated, is really dead."¹⁸¹⁵

Mani [born about 216 A.D.], became the founder of a Christian sect known as the Mandeans. About 250-300 A.D., a number of Mandaean writings were composed, and which made references to hymns for the mass for the dead, plus other rituals which included hand clasps as part of the ritualistic journey of the soul. Three immersion baptisms, laying on of hands, crowning with a myrtle, anointing, a sacramental meal, plus the "hand-clasp with the right hand which priest and neophyte exchange at the ceremony" followed by prayers, etc., all these were part of the Mandaean rites of passage. The mass for the dead was called the masiqta, and it was celebrated at the death of a believer and served to help the ascension of the soul into the realm of light. Elaborate ceremonies for the dead were developed by the Mandeans. "Meals in memory of the dead, like baptismal ceremonies, belong almost to every Mandaean feast and thus reveal an essential side of the Mandaean world of faith."¹⁸¹⁶

Chrysostom, patriarch of Constantinople, he lived about 347-407 A.D., and was a native of Antioch. He wrote of how the Marcionites practiced the rite, for: "After a catechumen was dead they had a living man under the bed of the deceased; then coming to the dead man they asked him whether he would receive baptism, and he making no answer, the other answered for him, and said he would be baptized in his stead; and so they baptized the living for the dead." He also wrote: "For to be baptized and submerged and then to come back and emerge once more is a symbol or sign of the descent to the lower regions and the ascent from there."¹⁸¹⁷

St. Ambrose [A.D. 340-397], wrote of baptism for the dead: "Fearing that a dead person who had never been baptized would be resurrected badly (male) or not at all, a living person would be baptized in the name of the dead one. Hence he (Paul) adds: 'Else why are they baptized for them?' According to this, he does not approve of what is done but shows the firm faith in the resurrection (that it implies)."¹⁸¹⁸ Early to later church Fathers, like Ignatius, Ambrose and later Augustine, are said to have attested to the former practice of baptism for the dead, even though they no longer approved of it.¹⁸¹⁹

Cerinthus was an early Christian, who some considered as heretical, for his doctrine were a curious blend of Judaism, Christianity and Gnosticism. Among his disciples the doctrine of baptism for the dead also prevailed. Epiphanius notes this, (Haeres 28), and so also does Irenaeus (3:2; Acv. Haer. I, 26:1). Epiphanius was a Jew, born in Palestine, and was bishop at Constantia in 367 A.D. He is the staunch denouncer of heresies who assailed John of Jerusalem so violently from his own pulpit that John was forced to beg him to desist. In his work against heresies he says (23:7): "In this country, I mean Asia, and even in Galatia, their (the Marcionite) school flourished eminently; and a traditional tact concerning them has reached us, that when any of them had died without baptism, they used to baptize others in their name, lest in the resurrection they should suffer punishment as unbaptized."¹⁸²⁰

During the late 4th century, Epiphanius related that the custom of baptism for the dead prevailed among the Cerinthians, which he said prevailed from the fear that in the resurrection those who should suffer punishment would be those who had been unbaptized. Also, the dead were remembered by performing ritual prayers, by carrying out certain ordinances, and by making special arrangements (oikonomias). He had heard reports from Asia and Gaul of a certain practice, that when a person died without baptism, another was baptized in their place, and in their name. In so doing this, they would not have to pay the penalty of having failed to receive baptism. They had based this tradition on Paul's writings (1 Cor. 15:29).¹⁸²¹

J. K. Howard and John Short argued that despite the doubts that some members of the church had about baptism for the dead, there were others who were firm in the practice because of their belief in the resurrection. Thus, "they submitted to this rite of vicarious baptism on behalf of certain of their brethren, probably catachumens, who had passed away before they had been baptized and received into full membership of the Church."¹⁸²²

Ariel L. Crowley, in his "BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD" suggests a number of ancient places in which the doctrine and practice of baptism for the dead may have been taught and practiced: Ephesus, Constantinople, Armenia, Rome, Carthage, Corinth, Philippi, Caesarea, Alexandria, various churches in Greece, the general area of the province of Asia, Galatia, Constantia, Ardubau, Phrygia, Africa in general, Brascia, and Armenia.

Nicolaus was one of the seven deacons appointed in the apostolic church, as recorded in Acts 6:3. Tertullian (Adv. Haer. C. 1), suggested that Nicolaus became a heretic. Nicolaus became the founder of a sect known as the Nicolaitans. Irenaeus says that Nicolaus was the actual founder and promulgator of the doctrines of Coriathus, some of these doctrines also included baptism for the dead. Nicolaus, in Acts 6:5, was a proselyte at Antioch. He may have learned of baptism for the dead from the elders, but later strayed away into paths which caused others to consider him to be a heretic.¹⁸²³

Philastrius was Bishop of Brascia, about 350 A.D., and died about A.D. 397, he wrote De Haeres, in c. 2, he mentions the practice of baptism for the dead which prevailed among the Phrygian followers of Montanus. He said "they baptized their dead and openly solemnized such mysteries (secret rites)."¹⁸²⁴

Theodoret was born about 366 A.D., in Antioch, and was bishop at Cyrrhus, in the district between Antioch in Syria and the Euphrates River. He wrote five volumes of history in addition to his dogmatic works. As a historian, He noted how that the practice of baptism for the dead had prevailed in the ancient church. (Theodoret's church history (HE 1:11)).¹⁸²⁵

Marcus, whose followers are familiar with church history under the name "Marcosians" was a Velantinian of South Gaul, who lived about 150 A.D. His influence and following extended round the Mediterranean Sea into Asia minor. "Baptism for the dead seems to have been practiced in such cases by the Marcosians, and there are a few traces of parallel custom of vicarious baptism." ¹⁸²⁶

As different versions of baptism for the dead became known, & as different versions developed, & were questioned by later Christians, a number of explanations and theories about the reasons why they were performed, also developed. One was to explain the rite as the actual baptism of dead bodies. Another was that before the righteous could enter Paradise, Christ must first lead them through a fiery river to receive baptism. Origen says that no one could be baptized in this river unless they had first been baptized with water and the Holy Ghost on earth. ¹⁸²⁷ Eventually, the practice of baptism for the dead must have been distorted into that of baptism of the dead. If this distorted version was being practiced by some early Christian sects during the time Celsus wrote his "On the True Doctrine" about 170-80 A.D., he may have noted it, for he had argued & charged that the early Christians of letting all sorts of criminal types into their mysteries, such as "a robber of the dead." He also may have noted that there were some early Christian sects who practiced baptism for the dead too. ¹⁸²⁸

As to the conferring of baptism on dead corpses, as practiced later by some heretical sects. If it had been known by early anti-Christians, this could have been one of the reasons why critics made the early Christians' doctrine & beliefs about the bodily resurrection (which baptism was a ritualistic type of, as was baptism for the dead), to sound like rotten & wormy corpses rising from the dead. The early critics liked to lump all early Christian sects into a generalization in order to vilify them all, as they also used negative sensational rephrasings of early Christians' beliefs to demonize them. ¹⁸²⁹

Further retrogression away from the original practice of baptism for the dead, may have resulted in how some of the later Christians, towards the end of the 4th century A.D., had retrogressed to the point where they offered food for the dead. Pagan customs were also being Christianized by this time too, for some early Christians regularly attended pagan commemorative celebrations. Paxton tells us that: "The Syriac Apostolic Constitutions (ca. 380), for example, warned Christians not to overindulge at such events, but did not proscribe them. Under such circumstances, it is no wonder that Christians continued to celebrate with food and drink, song and dance, during commemorations for Christian dead, especially for martyrs and saints. In the West, Augustine tried to alter such behavior. His strategy was to raise the issue whether the dead could really be aided by the living and to redirect the outlay of food and drink away from the grave site toward the living poor. In his tract on care of the dead, he argued that the acts of the living are more for their own benefit than for the good of the dead, and in a letter to Bishop Aurelius of Carthage he suggested that "if anyone for the sake of religion should wish to offer something of money, let it be paid out directly to the poor." ¹⁸³⁰

A number of years after the The Syriac Apostolic Constitutions (ca. 380), was written, a number of early Christians gathered in Councils to deal with what may have been further distortions, practices & retrogressed versions of baptism for the dead, which by that time, may have eventually been changed into baptisms of the dead, etc. Thus, at the Council at Hippo, a church synod convened at Hippo in Africa in 393 A.D., in number 4 in the second series it reads that: "The eucharist shall not be given to dead bodies, nor baptism conferred upon them." In the same meeting, in the thirty-second canon of the second series it says that: "Sick persons, no longer able to speak, but whose relations testify that they had desired baptism shall be baptized." ¹⁸³¹

397, during the Third Council of Carthage, in North Africa, about four years after the council at Hippo. In its sixth canon, it readapted the fourth canon of the second series adopted at Hippo, an indication that during the interim the practice of baptism for the dead, so far as it related to baptism of dead bodies, had not been fully stamped out. During the Fourth Council of Carthage, in the year 398 A.D., in the seventy-ninth canon, the provision was made for the zealous penitents who had die accidentally at sea, or on a journey in which no one was able to come to their assistance. The early Christians could then offer prayers in their behalf. ¹⁸³² Some art works even showed, among other themes, prayers for the dead. ¹⁸³³

In Africa, where this council was held, the Coptic Christians were known to have practiced baptisms for the dead. The Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran and the Copts of Egypt, not bound by the councils' canon, continued to practice their own versions of baptism for the dead, down through the centuries to the present day. Consequently, family members who die unbaptized, such the modern Coptic story of the girl who had died, was baptized after her death. This certainly reminds us of the rejection of the council of Hippo, earlier, that tried to discontinue baptism of the dead. In the Coptic faith, during baptismal ceremonies for the living, a prayer is offered for the dead. ¹⁸³⁴ This was certainly becoming the replacement ceremony, that of prayers for the dead, as baptism for the dead faded out of different sects, as time aged Christendom.

The Epistle of the Apostles, known from a complete Ethiopic version, a fragmentary fifth century Latin manuscript (now in Vienna), and a fourth or fifth century mutilated Coptic manuscript in Cairo, has Jesus visiting his apostles after his resurrection & saying: "For to that end went I down unto the place of Lazarus, and preached unto the righteous and the prophets, that they might come out of the rest which is below and come up into that which is above; and I poured out upon them with my right hand the water [baptism, Ethiopic text] of life and forgiveness and salvation from all evil, as I have done unto you and unto them that believe on me." ¹⁸³⁵

5th cent., The Acta Pilati, has a later appendage about the Descent into Hell, which tells how, when Christ descended into hell, he removed therefrom the spirits of the righteous and of the repentant, the latter of which were then baptized in the Jordan River. ¹⁸³⁶

St. Augustine seems to have been interpreted by some writers as having rejected how some had interpreted 1 Cor. 15:29 as suggesting that baptism for the dead could be traced back to the apostolic times. For that passage, he says, was the source of their error, "by which some think there had been in Gospel times a custom of pouring the waters of Baptism over the bodies of the dead." ¹⁸³⁷

Consequently, by Augustine's time, he notes how there still were "a few who believe that that custom [a later retrogressed version of baptism for the dead] was part of the gospel according to which the work of substitutes for the dead was effective, and the members of the dead were laved with the waters of baptism..." ¹⁸³⁸

By Augustine's day: "That this doctrine in its full understanding was not practiced long after the first generation of Apostolic Fathers is evident from the many writings that have been discovered; yet baptism for the dead, without a complete understanding of its purposes, was performed and commented on as late as Augustine early in the fifth century." ¹⁸³⁹

Sacraments for the dead was continued down through the decades, while baptism for the dead, continued to fade out of the church. During the 16th Council of Carthage, held in 418 A.D., (No.3): "If any man says that in the kingdom of heaven or else where there is a certain middle place where children who die unbaptized live in bliss, whereas without baptism they cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven, that is, into eternal life, let him be anathema."

By 442 A.D., a synod convened at Viason, adopted as its second canon the chance for those who were, or had gone through penance, but had unexpectedly died to be accepted, and their memory and funeral was to be celebrated with ecclesiastical love. They were not to be excluded from the saving sacrifice & mysteries, even though they had been earlier because of sin before their penance. A fortiori, these just men who have died without baptism, by no fault of their own, is it not "wrong" if they shall "be excluded from the saving sacrifice?"

In the second synod at Arles, about 443 A.D., the precise date being now uncertain, it adopted as its twelfth canon a provision that says that if anyone should die during their time of penance, their oblations were to be accepted.¹⁸⁴⁰

It seems that even though some councils had attempted to smother out what may have been some of the distorted versions of baptism for the dead, despite this, as one historian notes: "In all parts of the church, and for some centuries we find traces of the prevalence of the practice of administering baptism to the corpse."¹⁸⁴¹

Other distorted fragmented reminders of baptism for the dead may have eventually retrogressed to become such practices as that of the placing of the Eucharist within the lips of a dead person. This was rejected in the 3rd Council of Carthage (397 A.D. c 6), in the Council of Trullo at Constantinople (A.D. 692 C 83), in that of Auxerre (A.D. 578, c. 12) and in the canons of Boniface, bishop of Mainz (c.20). Also, Gregory of Nazianzum (O. 40) warned against it too.

Cyprian (Epist. 66, p. 114 ed. Bened.) ordered that no prayers should be said, nor sacrifices offered for Geminus Victor who was dead. The reason being that Victor had appointed a priest named Geminus Faustinus as guardian to his children to act after his death. Such appointments had been forbidden by a council in Africa under Agrippinus.

It may be that prayers for the dead, & to the dead, eventually began to be more popular and accepted in the minds of later Christians. Perhaps in some way, and in the minds of later Christians, prayers for the dead may have begun to serve the same results as that which baptism for the dead had earlier. "Apparently, this divine practice of baptism for the dead was substituted with prayers and candles to assist endangered souls in limbo to escape the fires of purgatory, and eventually lost altogether during the long night of apostate darkness."¹⁸⁴²

When St. Ephraem was near death, he told his disciples to make a remembrance of him 30 days after he died. He said that the dead are helped by the offerings made by the living. He made reference to 1 Cor. 15:29 as scriptural proof text to show this was so. He mentioned other cases, such as that of the men of Matthatias, (2 Mach. 12:43-46), and then said: "how much more will the priests of the Son of God, by their holy offerings and prayers of their tongues, be able to wipe out the debts of the dead!"¹⁸⁴³

"In the early Christian community the living faithful prayed to God for their dead; now the dead saint is asked to pray for the living: a whole new liturgy comes into being."¹⁸⁴⁴

John P. Lundy notes that in the earliest Liturgies of the early Church, this prayer was constantly repeated: "Remember, O Lord, the God of spirits and of all flesh, those whom we have remembered, and those also whom we have not remembered, our fathers and brethren, who have died in the faith of Christ hitherto; and our ancestors from righteous Abel even unto this day. Do Thou give them rest in the region of light and of the living in the bosoms of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whence grief and sorrow and sighing are banished away, and where the light of Thy countenance shines continually. And vouchsafe to bring them to Thy Heavenly kingdom."¹⁸⁴⁵

Prayers for the dead, or art works showing the dead praying, some still show them with up lifted hands. For example in early Christian sarcophagi art, Old Testament themes are shown with other types and themes, such as God delivering his faithful servants, (such as Daniel in the lions' den), with up lifted hands in prayer. The three Children in the fiery furnace, again often are shown with up lifted hands. "On the whole, these scenes are visual counterparts of prayers said in the Office of the Dead, in the form it is known to have had since the Middle Ages, and also of the invocations in other Christian prayers. The same practice had obtained in the earlier Jewish and Gnostic liturgies." In Jewish and Christian images, such as Noah saved from the flood and Daniel in the lion's den, "both with their arms raised in prayer, were familiar themes in the Jewish iconography of Antiquity."¹⁸⁴⁶

Epiphanius, born about A.D. 520: "From Asia and Galateo has reached us the account (tradition) of a certain practice, namely, that when any die without baptism among them, they baptize others in their name, so that, rising in the resurrection, they will not have to pay the penalty of having failed to receive baptism, but rather will become subject to the authority of the Creator of the World. For this reason this tradition, which has reached us, is said to be the very thing to which the Apostle himself refers when he says, 'If the dead rise not at all, what shall they do who are baptized for the dead?'"¹⁸⁴⁷

Epiphanius said that other interpret Paul as saying that those who were at the point of death, if they were catechumens, (or candidates for baptism), they were to be considered as being worthy, even though they had died before they were baptized. They also point out that he who died shall also rise again, and thus they will stand in need of that forgiveness of sins which comes through baptism.¹⁸⁴⁸

An 8th century Anglo-Saxon monk and scholar Bede wrote of the vision of Drythelm a pious Northumbrian family man who died, but revived the next day and told what it was like on the other side. A man with a shining countenance and bright apparel escorted the man to a hellish valley of flames, etc., where mis-shaped souls were being tormented. His guide told him that this was a place of temporary torment for deadened penitents "who can be released from their punishments by masses, prayers, alms, and fasts performed by the living on their behalf." The story came to Bede through a monk, & both Bede and the monk may have slanted the story to go along with traditional views of the afterlife during their time. Bede relates this story in his Ecclesiastical History of the English People. "Whatever role Drythelm may have played in the development of the narrative, Bede's account of the vision can be read as a manifesto for Benedictine monasticism, ascetic discipline, and intercessory masses for the dead. The vision also reflects the eschatology of the Anglo-Saxon church of Bede's time; by intimating a purgatorial state distinct from hell, it departs from earlier Celtic Christian traditions and conforms to the orthodoxy of Rome."¹⁸⁴⁹

During the 9th-13th centuries, stories & otherworld visions of these kinds were used by different preachers & monks in helping them express their views concerning penance, intercession, religious vows, and rites for the dead by which "the living purged their faults, prepared for death, and petitioned for the welfare of their departed kin."¹⁸⁵⁰

During the 9th century A.D., Bishop Almon of Halberstadt, upon speaking of the primitive church, he says: "If their loved ones (friend or relative: propinquus) happened to depart this life without the grace of baptism, some living person would be baptized in his name: and they believed that the baptism of the living would profit the dead." However, even though the bishop had accepted the fact that earlier Christians had practiced baptism for the dead, he denied that Paul had approved of the practice.¹⁸⁵¹

11th century, Theophylactus tells of how Marcionites were upbraided for baptism for the dead, and he insists that they were wrong. He then proceeded to give his own interpretation on 1 Cor. 15:29: "what shall they do who were baptized expecting their own dead bodies to rise again."¹⁸⁵²

Peter the Venerable in the 12th century A.D., seemed to be willing to accept the fact that baptism for the dead were practiced. However, he attempted to find in the words of Paul a condemnation of the practice too.¹⁸⁵³

St. Bruno said that the early saints would baptize themselves in the place of a dead parent who had never heard the Gospel, in so doing this they believed that they had secured their salvation in the resurrection.¹⁸⁵⁴

1265–1321, Dante Alighieri, his The Divine Comedy, the character, Virgil, in the Inferno, section, in escorting Dante through hell, sadly comments on a group of good people, including himself, who had lived before Christ & never had been baptized. With baptism for the dead as an earlier answer to this dilemma, by this time the practice had faded out of the church into legendized hints. Thus, Virgil laments: "I wish to tell you that they have not sinned. Though they are worthy, this does not suffice, Because they never have received the joy of holy baptism, essence to your faith. But those who lived before the time of Christ, could never worthily adore their God: And I myself am of this company... For this defect [lack of baptism], and for no other wrong, our souls are lost: for this we must endure a hopeless life of unfulfilled desire." (The Inferno, canto 4, lines 33–42, 7).

ADAM'S GRAVE & THE BLOOD FROM THE CROSS AS A RETROGRESSED FORM OF BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

In later centuries, hints to what could be fragments of the doctrine and practice of baptism for the dead, may have been retained to a certain extent in the later traditional grave site for Adam, believed to be under the cross. Plus Adam's ascension up out of that grave, that often include different types of hand & wrist graspings, as in iconography of the Anastasis in the Eastern churches, & in thousands of art works in the West.¹⁸⁵⁵

Passages like in Zechariah, could have been inspiration for these later depictions of the blood of Christ's atonement, flowing down to baptize Adam's remains, often depicted as a skull & bones under Christ being crucified on the cross. "By the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." (Zechariah 9:11). As legends go, the details often conflict with other legends' details, or even other scriptures, as to what the hellish realms are like. For in many cases, hell is likened unto a watery abyss, the dangerous deep, while in other cases, a dry fiery lake of fire & brimstone, with no water to put out the fires there, or relieve the suffering souls held captive there. Some suggest it's so burning hot, & because there is no water there, that in order to get some kind of relief, water has to be brought down unto the souls, poured down on them from above, or sprinkled down upon souls being purged of their sins there. Like in the case with the story about the poor beggar man in paradise with Abraham. The rich man, having neglected the beggar, looks across the gulf that divides paradise & hell, & sees the beggar, who also died, but was now seen in the comforts of paradise, called Abraham's bosom. He cries out for relief, by asking if Lazarus the beggar, can dip his finger in water to cool his tongue, the rich man being tormented by the flames where he was, (Luke 16:20–31). Thus, these types of passages might have suggested that it was possible for them to get relief, & for water to be sent, & for the souls there to believe. However, it was more unlikely, that they wouldn't believe the preaching there, if they didn't heed the warnings of the prophets while they were alive in mortality. That seems to be the point of the passage in Luke. When viewed in light of other passages, art works & early Christian writings, monuments, & baptismal types & ancient settings for baptism for the dead, it doesn't suggest that the great gulf can't be crossed over. Or that there can't be any preaching or escape from the infernal regions, it only suggests that it's just as difficult to get disobedient souls there to repent, and believe in the preaching, and become obedient to the gospel there, if they rejected it when they were mortals & heard the prophets, or the preaching in mortal life. Thus, the art works that show, the preaching going on in the flames, & of some being rescued, but not all willing to believe, repent & be obedient. Not all are reaching up to be lifted out, by their angelic hand clasping guides, that will take them over into paradise. Plus, the art works of what was believed was happening during the masses for the dead, such as those showing the angels pouring down the sacramental blood from chalices or cups, upon souls in the flames, (a legendized version of baptism for the dead, but instead of by immersion(s), in these later cases, by the mode of sprinkling or pouring).¹⁸⁵⁶

About 5th c., or earlier & later, in Ethiopian & Arabic manuscripts entitled: Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan. God the Father sends to Adam & Eve, His Word, His firstborn. The Word, (or pre-existing Christ), tells them how he's going to come down from heaven to become flesh. A sort of legendized baptism for the dead theme is mentioned in how that when Christ's blood would be upon Adam's head in the grave, (like in art works of Adam under the cross, or his bones seen under the cross, having Christ's blood drip down on Adam's mortal remains, skull & bones).¹⁸⁵⁷ Then this blood of Christ would be the Water of Life to Adam & all his seed, or descendants that shall believe in Christ.¹⁸⁵⁸

"By about 1000 A.D. legends related that the blood and water that flowed from Christ's wounds came into Adam's mouth, simultaneously baptizing him and giving him the sacrament of the Eucharist."¹⁸⁵⁹

1063, on an altar cross of King Fernando and Queen Sancha, in the lower section, is a person(?), perhaps Adam, with up raised hands, as if praying to be delivered from the grave.¹⁸⁶⁰

11th century ivory panel mounted on the cover of a Gospel Book, a man ascends out of a box or grave that is located under the wounded feet of Christ on the cross. Hence, it could be that the man represents Adam, who is baptized in the blood of Christ, as resurrecting out of his grave.¹⁸⁶¹

Franciscan iconography included types and similitudes between the Tree of Life and the wood of the Cross. St. Francis is said to have received nail mark wounds in his hands and feet, (a number of art works depict this too). In later Franciscan art works, etc., we see a number of symbolic types and similitudes between Adam, the rivers of Paradise, etc., & the sacraments with the blood flowing down from the wounds of Christ on the cross. Another type was based on the river of life, (in some cases earlier baptismal fonts were fed by "living waters" from a flowing stream or river). In iconography the waters of life flowed near the Tree of life in Paradise, and the waters seem to have been considered in some cases in later Christianity as a type of baptism, while in other cases, not to be mistaken for baptism, but rather as types and reminders of certain sacramental rites of passage. Some of which were performed for and in behalf of the dead.

Mid twelfth century, under the crucifixion scene, from a Sacramentary, is a man, perhaps Adam, with up lifted hands, perhaps in the traditional prayer gesture. He is also in a box or tomb, the blood from Christ's wounds is dripping down on the man. Hence, perhaps this is derived from the traditions about Adam's grave, and how the blood of Christ, in this case, sprinkled baptized him, as he prays to be rescued out of his grave.¹⁸⁶²

12–15th century German work, a series of art works show different events of Genesis, except that the drama doesn't start with the creation, but rather shows the pre-existing Christ before his birth to Mary, watching as Satan and his followers fall from heaven to earth below. Another shows the pre-existing Christ reaching, with his left hand, towards the right hand of Adam who is being created out of the dust of the earth. This seems to suggest a type like unto how Adam would later be raised out of the earth again, during Christ's descent. Hence, some of the hand grips in creation dramas, were types of those seen in descent and baptismal dramas.¹⁸⁶³

1190, on an altar cross, in the lower portion, Adam is seen with up-lifted hands, rising out of his grave under the crucifixion scene.¹⁸⁶⁴

Early 13th century, a mosaic of Christ on the cross is known as the Tree of Life, it is in the apse of the Augustinian church of San Clemente in Rome. Christ is depicted on the cross under which numerous vines grow out and encircle a number of religious persons, etc. Four streams of the Water of Life flow out from the bottom of the tree from which deer (symbolic of Christian souls), drink from. Perhaps the watering of deer (Christian souls) was considered as sacramental type to the watering of souls in purgatory, limbo or hades. Early 14th century work, scenes of the creation of Adam and Eve were depicted below Christ on the cross. One scene shows Eve half way out of Adam's side as God raises her by clasping her hand. Around the main scene of Christ on the cross are numerous of scenes, some of which are on the different passions which include the descent with a hand clasp too. This depiction is near the blood which flows from the wound in Christ's side. The symbolical types behind all this may hint to a possible faded retrogressed fragment of a baptism for the dead, or at least, they may hints to the later sacramental rites which were being performed for the dead during these later centuries. Other art works which we will consider, show the blood from Christ's wounds flowing down into a baptismal bowl in which different ones were baptized in. However, in this work there may have also been a type between how God had pulled Eve, (with a hand grip), out of the side of the 1st Adam, and how the 2nd Adam (Christ) had pulled Adam (with a hand grasp) out of limbo or hades (near the wound in Christ's side), and guided Adam and the others up into paradise again. It is also interesting to note that the blood from Christ's wounds also flows down towards what could be Adam's grave and his bones under the cross. Plus, the creation scenes also shows Adam and Eve and their expulsion from Paradise, next to "the font from which flow the four rivers". Thus, further possible sacramental types seem to be hinted too here. For they must pass through the living waters upon their return to paradise after Christ had raised them up from their fall into the pit, hades, limbo, &, or purgatory. Roots as a type for the souls in purgatory, and their watering seems to be further hinted to by one writer who wrote of the Tree of life "whose root shall be watered by the font of a perpetual spring, which, moreover, shall grow out into a lively and great river, to wit, of four heads, to water the paradise of the whole Church."¹⁸⁶⁵

Further Legendizations of Baptism & Baptisms & Other Rites for the Dead: The Dangerous Deep (The Watery Abyss)

One of the types for baptism, and baptism for the dead, were how that the baptismal waters were symbolically, if not later, literally looked upon as the dangerous deep abyss, where demonic forces held their captives. Hence, there may have been more symbolical types to baptism, beside being ritualistic cleansing of sins. Baptism, we are told, in the classical Greek, can mean to "immerse." This is a sense given to it by Hippocrates, Plato and especially later writers. Also, it can mean "to suffer shipwreck, drown, perish." Or, in a figurative sense, "to bring the city to the border of destruction." Another possible meaning is, "to be overwhelmed by faults, desires, sicknesses, magical arts." The sense of "to bathe" or "to wash" is only occasionally found in Hellenism. The idea of going under or perishing is nearer the general usage.¹⁸⁶⁶ This makes sense when we consider how this type was used by Christ, Peter and Paul, when they likened baptism unto death, and the descent into the spirit prison. Plus, how that Christ used Jonah as a type for his death and descent into the watery dangerous abyss too, (1 Peter 3:15-22, 4:5-6; Ephesians 4:7-10; Colossians 2:12; Romans 6:3-9; Philippians 3:10-21; Matthew 12:39-40). Immersion and submersion, though they can have several meanings, one of them was how that in this metaphorical sense, they illustrate Christ's speaking of his passion as a baptism, (Mark 10:38). What are often included in art works showing Christ's passions, are Christ's descent into hell, hades, or limbo, the resurrection or Anastasis.¹⁸⁶⁷ The metaphorical idea is related to its basic meaning in the sense of "flooded" or "overwhelmed with calamities,"¹⁸⁶⁸

1 Corinthians 15, before the reference to baptism for the dead, (verse 29), Paul, in building up his defense of the resurrection, by making reference to its ritualistic type, baptism for the dead, first mentions the dangers of the abyss, but how that Christ overcame all his enemies there! This is a theme so often repeated in historic early to later Christian art works of the descent.¹⁸⁶⁹ For Christ, as Paul said, met the challenges to his descent by putting down all that challenged him (1 Cor. 15:24). The forces of darkness, or all his enemies were put under his feet, symbolic of how he gained the victory over them, in the battle that took place in the watery abyss, or underworld. Another common theme in the art works too. For he destroyed death, which is often personified in the art works and later legends, as being thrust through and trodden down (Isa. 14:12—19, note verse 19, and 1 Cor. 15:26). Hence, upon meeting the dangers, he put all things under his feet, or under him (verses 27-28). Then Paul, in verses 29—32, Paul gives the ritualistic types for the descent into the dangerous watery abyss, the resurrection out of the abyss, the jeopardy, the figurative dying daily, and the battle with beasts at Ephesus. A theme which shows up later in baptismal types where we see beast being crushed under the baptismal font, including lions. Just like in the art works where Christ crushes the dragon under his feet in the waters of Jordan. Roger J. Adam suggests, based on his research, that this epistle "was probably written during his [Paul's] stay at Ephesus, the saints in that city may equally have been participating in the practice [of baptism for the dead]."¹⁸⁷⁰

Peter also connects up the dangers of the descent into hell, with baptism too when he wrote how that how Christ's descent into the spirit prison was: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us" (1 Peter 3:15—17, note the dangers they'd already faced & were to face, that of evil doers speaking ill of them. Plus, he admonishes them to be willing to suffer for well doing rather than for evil doing). Then note the hint Christ victory in the abyss, how that after his descent into hell, he ascended into heaven to be on the right hand of God, with "angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him." (1 Peter 3:15—22; 4:4—8; Eph. 4:7—10). They were admonished to "arm yourself" to be willing and ready to suffer and fight for the cause of Christ too, as Christ suffered (1 Peter 4:1, 4—6). For as Paul told the Ephesians they were to be armed to do battle and wrestle with the demonic forces (Ephesians 6:10—20).

Paul saw baptism as a double assimilation, the first being a type of Christ death, the second of his resurrection and victory over death. Peter and Paul wrote of baptism as being a ritualistic type of Christ's descent into the spirit prison. In the earliest form of Christianity there is a connection between baptism and Christ's descent into hell immediately after his death. In the liturgical and doctrinal texts of the patristic era, numerous indices can be found of this conjunction of baptism with the descensus ad inferos. Later art works and writings reflect these symbolical types together. For example, one work shows the serpent (symbolic of satan), being crushed under the crossed doors of limbo, just as it is often depicted in numerous art works, which we already have considered, of Christ's descent into the prison house, limbo, hades, hell, & purgatory. However, in this case, Christ is also in the middle of a river being baptized by John the Baptist, on the other riverbank, angels hold garments in their arms.¹⁸⁷¹

During the 4th century A.D., S. Cyril of Jerusalem said that the three immersions in the baptismal waters were a type of Christ's burial, for they "descended three times into the water, and ascended again; here also covertly pointing by a figure at the three-days burial of Christ."¹⁸⁷²

There was a time in early Christian history when the doctrine of a literal resurrection was not too popular with many at Corinth, & other areas where the Church had new converts who brought in some of the Hellenistic ideas of the Greeks. Thus, as the anti-body doctrines of the Greeks began to Hellenize different areas where the church had taken root, different ones like Paul wrote to combat these ideas by giving strong defenses of a literal bodily resurrection. This was why Paul had reminded the converts at Corinth of baptism for the dead because it was a Church ordinance that had strong ritualistic types and symbolism in support of a literal resurrection. Paul had also attempted to get them to see how inconsistent it was of them to reject the literal bodily resurrection, while they practiced a ritualistic type of the resurrection through baptism for the dead.¹⁸⁷³

In 1 Corinthians chapter 15, Paul said that Christ was buried and rose again the third day according to the scriptures (1 Cor. 15:4). He goes on to list some of the witnesses who had seen Christ's resurrected body, such as Cephas, the 12, and 500 hundred brethren at once, then James, then all the apostles, and then he lists himself as being a witness too (verses 5-8). Now if all these had become witnesses to the fact that Christ had a resurrected body and had risen from the dead, why was there some among the Christians at Corinth who had said that this was not so? (verse 12). He then goes on to point out that if there was no resurrection their faith would be in vain (verses 13-17). He then proceed to testify that Christ had risen from the dead for he was the first to rise, but was not the only one for others were raised up too (verses 18-23). Paul then mentions what early to later Christians (who read Paul and others), may have seen as being references to the war in the underworld, the defeat of death and the devil. The art works and writings of early to later Christendom are filled with the details of satan's defeat in the underworld. For as Paul said, Christ put all enemies under his feet, the last enemy that was destroyed was death (verses 24-28).

In many of the art works we have considered, Christ rests his foot on a defeated and fallen satan, or monstrous figure representing a personified death, or hades, etc.¹⁸⁷⁴ Christ, the angels, etc., during the descent were sometimes depicted as being armed with weapons, sometimes the cross was used as a weapon when doing battle with the devil and his demons. Squires who longed to be dubbed knights may have thought about these things, or they may have been reminded of them when they passed through different kinds of rites to knighthood. The rites to knighthood included different things, depending on the time, and place. These rites might include, among other things, prayers with up-lifted hands, oaths, ceremonial baths, being clothed in new garments, receiving a shield, sword and banner, & the cross was one of their symbols too. They were thus, a Christian warrior vowed to do battle against the dark forces of evil.¹⁸⁷⁵

Earlier, in militant ritualistic types of & in the war in heaven & post war that continued on in mortal earth life, the battle themes continued in the types, symbols, art works, writings & rituals of baptism & baptism for the dead. For they were anointed as "Christs," & thus descended down into the font, just as Christ had descended into the lower regions, and anointed "Christs", they could also defeat the demons of the underworld, as Christ had during his descent. Some ancient art works presented Christ as having become incarnate, suffered and died, and "He had gone down to Hades seemingly defeated and undone; but now He comes forth in the resurrection as a Conqueror over sin and death, and must needs be crowned as all other conquerors are." Lundy notes how that Samson was a type of Christ in how he carried off the gates of Gaza, this was like how Christ "bursting open and carrying away the gates of Hades, and conquering His and our enemies by His death and resurrection."¹⁸⁷⁶

As the saints of old come forth out of the spirit prison during Christ's harrowing of hell. Numerous hosts tramples under their feet the devil & the demonic prison-house wardens. Satan is often depicted in art works as having been thrust through with a spear, or the cross-spear. Or trodden under foot. Or in other cases, Christ has made the enemy of the human race, (satan), his foot stool. In that we see Christ as the victor, resting his foot on the fallen satan, who also, in some cases, has been bound hand & foot in irons, or chains, etc. The early to later Christian writers, & artist had plenty of scriptural types to help them in their stories, art works, legends, mystery plays, illuminated manuscripts, icons, & symbols, etc. Isaiah 14:12-20 may have been seen by the early to later Christians as not only a type of satan's fall from heaven. But also of his defeat in the under world. For in numerous art works satan has often been depicted as a warden who refused to open the house of his prisoners. (Isaiah 14:17). He is often depicted as having been cast out of the grave & thrust through with a sword. And is often depicted as a carcass trodden down under the feet of Christ and the hosts of resurrected saints who come forth out of hell. (Isa. 14:19). The spirit prisoners are gathered together in the pit, & are shut up in the prison, and after many days they are visited by the King of glory. (Isa. 24:21-23). Those who are bound in hades shall be loosed, the bonds of death shall be broken. Satan, having been bound in irons or tied hand & foot is a type of the strong man that Christ's mentioned in scriptures. Thus, having been bound, Christ robs satan's prisons house & the captives are set free. Having said to the prisoners to go forth; to them that are in darkness Shew yourselves. The captives having hastened that they may be loosed from the pit.¹⁸⁷⁷ Satan attempts to gain victory over Christ during a war in the under world, however, Christ is the one who wins the battle and gains a victory over death, hell & the devil. "Jesus rose from the dead... and by his resurrection death had been overcome and the access to paradise lost through Adam's sin regained."¹⁸⁷⁸

The ritualistic descent into the dangerous watery abyss of baptism, included art works & types to remind the catechumens that their battle with the evil forces was not only in life, but in the waters of baptism, for as Christ's battled with the demonic forces to free souls out of the watery abyss, so like wise were they going to be ritually combating evil. But not without being first armed with protective blessings, symbolical arming, which they should have first done in being spiritually prepared to face the devil, & his demons, through arming themselves, with the positive Christ like traits of love, kindness, charity, on their way towards Christian moral perfection, etc. As they also should have first stripped themselves, even unto nakedness, like taking off the old person of sins, thus the disrobing ceremonies, a type of stripping off all the negative traits & ways of sin, (Eph. 4:7-25, 5:26-27, 6:10-19). In later centuries, because the baptismal waters were thought of as a type of dangerous deep, & watery-abyss filled with demonic water spirits, the arming & preparation for baptism included blessing the water. Blessing the baptismal fonts, exorcism the demons out, & in some cases, as in the Milanese rite, renunciation of Satan & spitting in his face, a practice later found in the Greek & Armenian rites.¹⁸⁷⁹

200, baptism was accompanied by designation with the cross, the use of salt, the renouncing of Satan, the exorcizing of the evil one, the confession of faith, & the taking an oath.¹⁸⁸⁰

7th or 8th century, the Easter baptismal ceremonies of baptism at the baptistry of the Lateran Church at Rome, built deep enough for immersions, has amongst their ceremonies, the blessing of the baptismal waters. During a long prayer, 8th century, it is interrupted twice as the sign of the cross was made on the water & then once more to blow on the water, with the bishop saying: "Descendat in hanc plenitudinem fontis virtus Spiritus tui" or "May the power of thy Spirit descend into this fullness of the font."¹⁸⁸¹ Lit candles, in some cases, represent Christ, the light of the World, which during Easter resurrection ceremonies, has other candles being lit from that light, representing the light spreading out after Christ's harrowing of hell, after his resurrection, & during his post-resurrection-world-wide-trek.¹⁸⁸² Thus, in this 8th century ceremony, when the two dignitaries, who carried the candles, plunged them into the blessed water of the font. Could this represent Christ's descent into the watery abyss, or his descent into hell? Moreover, because the candidates were sometimes anointed as types of "Christs," could it represent their descent or plunge into the dangerous deep, thus the blessing of the water in preparation for baptisms by immersions? Also, in their being completely disrobed, was there a possible double meaning? The taking off the old person of sin, but also being likened unto those in the watery abyss, hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, often depicted in art as naked, to then be clothed in white ascension robes, when they ascend out? Just like those who are immersed are post-baptism anointed with oil & are clothed in white?¹⁸⁸³

JONAH, A TYPE OF CHRIST'S DESCENT & BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

One of the earliest types for Christ's descent, and perhaps even baptism, and baptism for the dead was the story of Jonah in the belly of a great fish under the water. Christ himself had used the story as a type while predicting his descent, "for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:39-41).

Jonah was cast out of a boat into the sea, and was swallowed by a great fish. While in it's belly he prayed, and the Lord heard him, for he said: "...Thou didst hear my cry from the womb of Hades; Thou didst hearken to my prayer; Thou hast cast me into the depths of the heart of the sea: When streams encompassed me--all Thy billows and Thy waves passed over me. Then I said, I am cast out from Thy sight; nevertheless I will continue to look towards Thy holy temple. The water was poured round me to my soul; and the lowest abyss encompassed me; my head hath gone down into the clefts of the mountains; I have gone down to a land, the bars of which are everlastingly fixed; let my soul now, corrupted as it is, ascend, O Lord, my God. When my soul was fainting I remembered the Lord; let my prayer now come to Thee into Thy holy temple..... I will pay Thee what I have vowed to the Lord for my deliverance."¹⁸⁸⁴

Jonah, a popular type and symbol of death and resurrection, was often depicted in the Catacombs. In these subterranean chapels where many Christians came to worship, there was also the danger of becoming martyrs through the violence of their enemies. And upon seeing the symbolical types of Jonah, they may have been reminded of the hope of a future life in heaven, for as Jonah had been preserved in depths of the waters of hades, so also would Christ preserve "the souls of the righteous after death in Hades until the general resurrection, when they shall be brought forth to the perfect life and bliss of Heaven."¹⁸⁸⁵

As Jonah had sought for protection while under the waters of hades, and had prayed for deliverance. So also in baptism of the living and baptism for the dead, many early to later Christians may have considered the baptismal waters as a type of the river or sea of death through which they had to pass through. Hence, Christ's descent into the waters of Jordan, according to Jewish Christian texts, was regarded as a type of descent into the waters of death where the dragon lives.¹⁸⁸⁶

Lundy notes how "...Jonah went down into the lowest parts of the earth and sea, called the womb of Hades: Christ descended into Hell, but no fish swallowed Him; Jonah prayed to God in Hades; and Christ preached to the spirits in prison; Jonah was brought out of corruption; Christ saw no corruption; and Jonah went to Nineveh for its salvation, even as Christ ascended up on high to make the city of God a New Jerusalem for His redeemed people."¹⁸⁸⁷

In a 2nd or 3rd century A.D. fresco, Jonah was also depicted with Noah as he stands in the cross-like attitude of prayer, signifying by what means Christ was to affect the world's regeneration. Noah also stands half in and out of a square box that is "floating on the flood of baptismal waters". In some of the early Christian sermons, "Christians were also spoken of as fish because they lived in the waters of baptism."¹⁸⁸⁸

Cyril of Jerusalem, in his Cat. Lecture III:11 says that Christ broke the head of the dragon, for he went down to bind the strong one in the waters. "The theme of the dragon in the waters of death, and Christ's baptism as a descent into the dragon's domain was to endure in tradition."¹⁸⁸⁹ Thus, in baptismal settings, it was symbolic of Christ's descent, and his victory over Satan.¹⁸⁹⁰ The baptismal waters thus a type of underworld water-abyss, the realm & spirit prison of the demonic hosts & under-water spirit prison of the wicked, the blessing of the waters against the forces of darkness persisted in Greek prayers over baptismal water to consecrate the water.¹⁸⁹¹

Later art works continued to reflect this symbolical type, one dated 1049 or 1065, shows Christ crushing a beast under his feet while being baptized in the river Jordan. Off to the side, an angel holds what could be the traditional baptismal garment or robe, or at least the garments that Christ had on before he descended into the river.¹⁸⁹² One of the types the art works would remind the early to later Christians of, was how that the taking off of their old clothing, this was a type of taking off the old person of sin. Then, after baptism, the type also of washing away of sin, they then would be clothed in new clothing, often white, a type of putting on the new born innocent purified newly resurrected new life in Christ. Thus, also cleansed by the grace of the blessed waters of baptism. Thought to be, in many cases, a type of, or literal cleansing refiners' fire, that burns out all the impurities of their former life of sin. Thus, in many ancient baptismal settings, those baptized were thought to be passing through the refiners' fires of hell, limbo, hades, or purgatory. They'd passed through long enough to have all their sin-impurities burned out, as the metal working Smiths would do with metals in fire & water in making armor, swords, & other things to do battle. Which in these baptismal settings, battles with the demonic forces, (Ephesians 4:22-25, 5:3-5, 26-27, 6:10-19). The souls would then be rescued, lifted out of, often by angels, saints, or even Christ, whom all lift-out souls from the fires of the infernal regions, by different types of hand & wrist grips, to then act as guides in bringing the newly cleansed & purified-whitened souls being raised to new life, out of the refiners' fires of the baptismal waters, the be clothed in white, the symbol of purity, as their baptismal robes, often white, symbolized (Rev. 19:8; Eph. 5:26-27, Rom. 13:12-14, 1 Cor. 15:53-57).¹⁸⁹³

As time went by, and as Christianity converted pagans to the different Churches, the old pagan themes were Christianized, and blended in with similar themes in early Christian traditions, symbols and lore. Hence, the "story of Jonah, unlike the other paradigms of deliverance taken from the Bible, was often represented in two or three successive episodes. The popularity of this subject may be due to its analogies with the theme of the journey oversea to the Hereafter and also with the adventure of the beautiful young shepherd Endymion (assimilated to Jonah) on whom Zeus bestowed eternal life in an unbroken slumber."¹⁸⁹⁴

Baptism, thus as a type of Christ's descent, his descent into the waters purified it from the presence of demonic beings.¹⁸⁹⁵ Thus, those anointed as "Christs" in the baptismal rites, were types of Christs, also armed & blessed to rescue souls out of the fires of hell, as Christ did. Like Christ, the newly baptized, or those being baptized for the dead, become guides to help protect those being baptized for. Or as in later centuries, in being prayed for, or having masses & liturgical rites done for the dead, the later indulgence-rites for the dead, thus done, these were part of the ritualistic rescues & journey of the rescued souls through different lower realms to the higher ones. Thus, as earlier, baptism for the dead, was the ritualistically descent into the deep abyss, the rescue, and ascension towards Paradise.¹⁸⁹⁶

In many cases, the different types of hand & wrist grasps in early to later Christian art works, and mysteries, not only serve as symbolical rites of passage grips, but were symbolic of God extending his love and arm of mercy towards those who pray for protection with up-lifted hands. The pilgrimage through life and death is filled with pit-falls and dangers, and the soul always needs to be protected against the forces of darkness which are always looking for opportunities to drag the soul down. Upon taking a hold of Christ's, (or God's, or God's angelic guides') hand(s), the saint will not slip or fall because they have made it, Christ has sealed-them-his, with those hand & wrist grips. They are no longer in danger of being pulled down by the hand & wrist-grasping of the demonic forces attempting to drag the soul down to their dark realms.¹⁸⁹⁷

Earlier, Clement of Alexandria, wrote: "They shall call Me," [Perhaps making reference to those in the spirit prison who call unto the Lord for help. (Psa.20:6, 28:2, 68:18, 88:1-14; Isa.41:13, 42:6-7, 43:2, 51:14, & Eph.4:7-10). "He [Christ] says, "and I will say, Here am I." Thou didst hear sooner than I expect, Master. "And if they pass over, they shall not slip," saith the Lord. For we who are passing over to immortality shall not fall into corruption, for He shall sustain us. For so He has said, & so He has willed...." (The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 2: p. 231). Clement goes on to hint to the symbols & types in the mysteries.

In time, the dangerous sea, and its dangerous sea creatures that lived deep down in the abyss, this imagery became a popular type for baptism, and for the resurrection, and perhaps even baptism for the dead. For example, a third marble sculpture, from the Greek East, shows Jonah being spewed froth from the jaws of a sea creature. The head of the creature is like the head of a dog, perhaps, earlier versions of the hounds of hell. However, the body, is like unto large fish.¹⁸⁹⁸ We have already noted how numerous art-works on the descent into hell, show souls being raised out of gapping jaws, hence, this symbol of the resurrection seems to be a type of the ascension out of hell, a type Christ used in reference to his ascension out of the belly of the earth.¹⁸⁹⁹

PETER, A TYPE OF CHRIST'S DESCENT & BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

In later centuries, part of a medieval baptismal-rite seems to have preserved a fragment of the hand clasps in the mysteries, some of which were symbolic of God's saving power and grace. For the priest commands any unclean spirits to depart. "Accursed and damned spirit, hear the command of God Himself, he who walked upon the sea and extended his right hand to Peter as he was sinking."¹⁹⁰⁰

One theme in art which may have been seen as a type of Christ's the hand and wrist grasps in the harrowing of hell dramas, and art works, is how Christ grasps the hand of Peter to lift him up out of the water in order to help him walk on water. In the case with the 3rd or 4th century version of this type, in the Dura-Europos, baptistery, the clasp is done with the thumb resting in the middle of the palm area, like unto some of the grips seen in Christ's descent into hell, or Adam clasping Christ's hand, in art works of the descent. The fact that this work is in a baptistery suggests that this was seen as a type of baptism, a ritualistic type for the descent into the abyss.¹⁹⁰¹

A number of art works show Christ standing on top of the waves of the sea, while raising Peter up by grasping his hand, thus, Christ saves him from drowning by being swallowed up by the waves of the sea. Other works show Christ on the bank of the sea pulling Peter up out of the sea by grasping his hand. These types of art works must have reminded the early to later Christians of the different types of hand clasps which were done in their mysteries. And in fact, evidence seems to suggest that they saw types of Christ's descent into hell, baptism, & even possibly baptisms for the dead in such works. For the raging sea may have been considered as a type of the symbolical dangerous waters of the abyss. Christ on top of the water, or on the shore, was a type of how Christ rescued souls out of hell by resurrecting them.

Ephrem Syrus (Ephraim Syrus), of the Syrian Church, born at Nisibis in Mesopotamia, about 306-378 (died): In The Pearl, Or, Seven Rhythms On The Faith, is presented a number of types for baptism, the mysteries, & possibly of the descent of Christ. The sea was a type of baptism and tomb which divers came up from. Divers were also a type of those who went through the mysteries, for they put on Christ, were anointed with oil, took off garments to be clothed in raiments of glory and light, and were crowned. "The naked men in a type saw thy rising again by the seashore; and by the side of the lake the Apostles, truly naked, saw the rising again of the Son of thy Creator.... The diver arose from the sea and put on his garments; and from the lake also Simon Peter came swimming, and put on his garments; each was clad, as with clothes, with love for both of you."¹⁹⁰²

On the panel altar of Saint Peter, church of Santa Maria in Tarrasa, near Barcelona, Spain. The art work was by Luis Borassa, early 15th century A.D. Peter is half way in & out of the water as Christ clasps, with his left hand, the right hand of Peter to raise him up. Another, Monreale, Duomo, St. Peter is saved from drowning, for Christ stands on top of the waves as he pulls him up by grasping, with his right hand, the right wrist of Peter. This is very similar to wrist grasps in numerous depictions of Christ's descent into hell. Another: Peter, in turn, is also one who was given power from Christ to raise souls too. For in a number of art works, Peter was given keys to loose or to bind, or lock hell's gate. He descends into hell with his key and reaches down to those in hell, (just like Christ did), and raises them by the hand, and guides them over into paradise. In some cases, he stands before the door to paradise and greets with hand grasps as they ascend to paradise.¹⁹⁰³

WATER, RIVERS, LAKES AND SEAS AS TYPES FOR BAPTISMS FOR THE DEAD

Water, rivers, and seas in ancient times, as we have already noted, were seen as symbolical types of the dangerous deep, the depths of the abyss, the grave. This may be why Peter mentions the flood story of Noah in connection with Christ's descent into hell to preach the gospel to the dead, and how that baptism was the "like figure" or type of that descent (1 Peter 3:15-22; 4:5-6).

Furthermore, it may also be why Paul, a little later, in writing to the saints at Corinth, used the Old Testament time story of the Moses and the Israelites crossing of the Red Sea as a type of baptism too (1 Cor.10:1-3).

It is also the imagery that the book of Revelation presents too. For the dragon, symbolic of the fallen angel, the devil, spews forth from its mouth a flood of water intended to cause a woman harm, or to "cause her to be carried away of the flood." (Revelation 12:15). The woman, who gave birth to a child (Mary and Jesus), was thus in danger of being drowned in the waters of hell. However, the flood is swallowed up by the earth, perhaps symbolic of the watery abyss, the dangerous underworld. Hence, these waters of hell were located in the jaws of hell, having been swallowed up (Isaiah 5:13-14; Revelation 12:1-2, 7-17, note especially verses 15-16). All these elements of the descent, baptism, and baptism for the dead were preserved in part in the images, types, and symbols found throughout early to later Christian art works, legends, mystery plays, sacraments, liturgical dramas and mysteries.

In later centuries, the otherworld pilgrimage of the Treatise on the Purgatory of St. Patrick, relates the vision of the Knight Owen, composed near the end of the 12th century by an English Cistercian monk, H. of Sawtry. Owen comes to a river of fire and sulphur and the way across is by passing over a bridge, if he falls off, he will land in the clutches of demons and will be dragged down to hell. The bridge is slippery, narrow, and steep. However, upon crossing it, these difficulties decrease because he had already been cleansed earlier in his journey. The narrative helped to remind the Christians of its time of the challenges in the afterlife, and helped to promote private acts of penance, spiritual reform, & liturgical rites for the living and dead.¹⁹⁰⁴

In historic Christendom, many believed this happened to righteous, for during the first moments of their deaths, a veil is lifted to reveal the face of God. "The crucial moment in one's life is the moment of death since the conditions of one's soul at that instant will determine whether one will in fact be admitted to bliss. For those who have been baptized and have devoted themselves to good works and to holiness of mind and body, crossing the river of death will mean that the veil will be lifted so that one might see God "face to face" instead of in a murky reflection. Such souls will be taken up into heaven to be with the angels and other saints."¹⁹⁰⁵

Lundy tells us of a later Christian work for in John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, "a river must be crossed before the Christian can reach the heavenly city; and every congregation of Protestant Christians sings the hymn beginning with: "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," &c."¹⁹⁰⁶ Another art work shows a pregnant woman standing near water out of which comes a 7-headed dragon. Rev.12:13-17, is a possible hint to an element which shows up in many descent dramas and it's ritualistic type in baptism, and that's how it says that "the earth opened her mouth and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth."¹⁹⁰⁷

"The symbolic design of a ship traversing the sea was used in early Christian funeral sculptures, and also in pagan Rome, to denote the course of life. For the Christians the tempest-tossed vessel of life found its port and resting place in death. This idea is rudely figured in a design on a sepulchral stone, in memory of a certain Firmia Victoria, from one of the early Christian cemeteries of Rome. On it appears a ship riding the waves, and in the background a four-storied tower from which rises a flame, the lighthouse marking."¹⁹⁰⁸

Another later Christian story, is of a monk who had died, and while crossing a river, wicked demonic spirit began to seize him. At that moment the Virgin appeared and rescued the monk's soul from danger, and brought him back to his body to live again. An art work depicting this, is found in the Winchester Cathedral. The monk stands in a river as the Virgin grasps, with her left hand, the right wrist of the monk. This might remind us of the same sorts of hand grasps seen in descent & baptismal scenes, and perhaps these later stories & art works have preserved, to a certain extent, the earlier ritualistic concept of the symbolical jeopardy which the early Christians faced when they descending into the baptismal waters while on their ritualistic journey through the underworld. (1 Cor. 15:23-45).¹⁹⁰⁹

In later fables, when baptism for the dead was legendized ever further, Water Spirits are often mischievous spirits, in some cases, desperate for salvation. In other cases, they are associated & are part of the different mythical races that make up the fallen angels that have fallen down into & haunt the forests, streams, rivers, lakes & underground areas. An example in many, is in the fables of Scotland, the Brownie. A personage of small stature, wrinkled-visage, covered with short curly brown hair, wearing a brown mantle & hood. They sometimes live in an old hallowed of a tree, ruined castle, or the abode of man. About the time of the Reformation, 16th century, a Brownie once lived with Maxwell, Laird of Dalswinton, & one dark December stormy night, the Brownie dashed through the waves of the foaming Nith, he was making the harsh journey to get the cannie wife to help with the child birth of the daughter of Laird. Riding a horse, he & the cannie wife, on their way back, to her terror & dismay, they plunged again in the torrent, or strong and fast-moving stream. Later on, a zealous minister advised Laird to have the Brownie baptized, he agreed, & the priest hid in the barn, waiting for the Brownie to finish his night's work. The priest then flung holy water in his face, repeating at the same time the form of baptism. Terrified, the Brownie gave a yell of dismay and vanished forever. Scotland also has its water-spirit, Kelpie, & every lake has one, or water-horse. Shepherds sometimes see them dashing along the surface of the deep. "Often did this malignant genius of the waters allure women and children to his subaqueous haunts, there to be immediately devoured. Often did he also swell the torrent or lake beyond its usual limits, to overwhelm the hapless traveller in flood."¹⁹¹⁰

In Scottish Highlands, the fable, The Fairy's Inquiry, a clergyman sees a little grey-headed old man, dressed in rather unusual garb, walking on the surface of Loch-lake, with a group of little beings holding lights & playing musical instruments. He was one of the Daoine Shi, and the others with him were also former good angels, but were seduced to revolt with other now fallen angels, by Satan. The minister, unable to give this fallen angel any hope of improving his fallen condition, the fairy, crying in despair, plunged into the water of the Loch.¹⁹¹¹

In Spain's fables, The Daughter of Peter Cabinam, in the bishopric of Gerunda (Gerona), province of Catalonia, is a mountain called by the natives Convagum. On its summit is a "lake of dark water, so deep that it cannot be fathomed. The abode of the Demons is in this lake...." If anyone should throw a stone in it, an awful tempest will arise. Not far from this mountain is also a village called Junchera, where lived a man Peter de Cabinam, who was annoyed with his crying little girl. In his anger he wished that the Demons might get her. The child instantly vanished, snatched away by invisible hands. However, about seven years later, Peter learned of a man who had been held captive in the mountain. He learned that his daughter was also being held there, but that the Demons had got tired of her, & would restore her to her family, if Peter came to claim her. Going to the edge of the lake, Peter besought the Demons to give him back his child & she suddenly appeared, but was taller, older, dirty, eyes rolling, & speech inarticulate. Seeking the help of the Bishop of Gerunda, he warned them not to wish their kids to be taken away by Demons. The people also learned that under the water in the lake at the bottom, was a large palace with a large gate, that only the Demons and those they brought with them, could enter.¹⁹¹²

Another story is of how Moses was also delivered, for when Satan found Moses flat on his back in the darkness, he came and introduced himself as if he were the Only Begotten, Moses mockingly challenged him after which Satan's true nature comes forth as he attacks Moses with such ferocity that Moses is overwhelmed and cast down. Moses then comes to know "the bitterness of hell... crying from the depths with his last ounce of strength, he is delivered. Satan is cast out and Moses is again in the presence of God, who formally declares him the victor over many waters... and appoints him the divine king..."¹⁹¹³

Perhaps some Christians during later centuries may have also thought of this last rite as a sort of protection against the devil and his demons, just as in the earlier rituals of anointing before baptism, they were anointed before descending down into the font, or waters of baptism, as if, in a symbolical and ritualistic way, they were about to die and descend into hades, limbo, etc. Thus, as Christ had to do battle with the devil and his demons. In some art works angels come to the rescue souls out of the grasps of fiendish demons during souls' ascensions after death. Russell shows an engraving from a 19th century catechism showing priests performing last rites during both the death of a sinner and that of a just man. The sinner's guardian angel departs sorrowful, while demons begin to pull the sinner down. The just man's guardian angel open up to him a death bed vision of the Father and Son to whom he is about to ascend to.¹⁹¹⁴

Enoch and Elijah ascended bodily into heaven to receive God's commission and descended bodily into hell to win respite for souls in torment. Paul "observes the departure of three souls from their bodies and witnesses their journeys after death: the soul of a just man exits his body in the company of shining angels who defend him against the hostile powers of the air and escort him to the heavenly court to be vindicated and welcomed by God;" The journey of the wicked man's soul was brutal and harsh. Russell points out that baptism were considered, in some branches of Christendom, to be a type of the descent of Christ into the under world, & that the anointing was a seal against the further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. For in some cases, the "priest blew into the candidate's face to express contempt for the demons and drive them away. The priest also touched the catechumen's ears with spittle in imitation of Jesus' healing. He marked the sign of the cross on the candidate's brow to keep demons away. During the Easter vigil, the catechumen would face the west, the region of darkness and death, and make a formal threefold renunciation of Satan. Then he turned toward the east, the direction of light and resurrection, and formally transferred his allegiance to Christ. He was anointed with holy oil as a seal against further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. In the central act of baptism, the descent into water symbolized descent into the underworld of death, and emergence from the water symbolized rebirth and resurrection. Baptism, the culmination of the individual's freedom from Satan, had powers to cure illness of body and mind as well as corruption of soul."¹⁹¹⁵

During part of a medieval baptismal rite, the priest would exorcise any unclean spirit that might be there and commanded them in the name of God to depart.¹⁹¹⁶

During the Romanesque period, "the spiritual life of the Christian was seen as a struggle with the monstrous powers of evil. It was necessary for the soul to be armed by baptism; to enlist the power of Christ and his warrior Saint Michael in the unending struggle with the Devil."¹⁹¹⁷

Grabar shows that some icons of Noah, etc., in the Paleo-Christian catacombs and sarcophagi were types of baptism, etc., which represented examples of divine intervention for the salvation or preservation of certain believers. When they are depicted next to the body of the dead, they have the same meaning as the prayer of the burial office called the commendatio animae. Thus, they "enumerate the precedents for divine intervention for one of the faithful, and express the desire that God may exercise the same benignity toward the person who is now dead; God, save him, as you saved Daniel, Noah, etc."¹⁹¹⁸ Baptism for the living and for dead may have also been performed in these types of settings too, for many of these examples are found in the catacombs, and sarcophagi, and were types in connection with baptism, etc., and funerary prayers for the faithful dead which asked God to preserve the faithful dead through His divine intervention. Grabar notes that many of these images, "found only in sepulchral art, serve to point out that the deceased was a Christian by representing the two sacraments. [Baptism and communion] It is no longer only the intervention of God but participation in the sacraments of the Church which assures the salvation of the dead."¹⁹¹⁹

Earlier we considered a number of works in early to later Christianity of Christ's descent to rescue the souls of the dead out of the jaws of hell. If the story of Jonah was considered a type of baptism, baptism for the dead, the descent, and resurrection, then it may be that the ascension up out of the jaws of hell, in many cases, in the shape of the jaws of a great fish, may be considered as a possible hint to baptism for the dead.¹⁹²⁰

Anglo-Saxon work, 8th century A.D., London, Victoria & Albert Museum. Along with other art works throughout historic Christendom, are interesting depictions of baptism that reminds us of some of the symbolic hand clasps of Christ's descent, for just as Christ raises souls out of the grave, hades, & limbo, etc., in a similar manner, a person is being raised out of a baptismal bowl, as if also coming up out of the grave. The font was symbolic of the underworld, the grave, etc., in many cases in early to later Christianity, & thus the artist may have wanted to present a type of Christ's descent, & the hand clasp that is depicted there also. For Christ clasps, with his left hand, the right wrist of the person in the baptismal bowl, while His right hand has been placed on the head of the person. The depiction above this one shows the ascension into heaven. Among other scenes, in other places, the descent seems to always include the way that souls are raised in the resurrection, which is by hand & wrist grasping. Christ, with his right hand grasps the right hand of a person being raised up. In other cases, the Ladder of Salvation, shows souls ascending a ladder, etc., plus the descent of Christ into hell, in which the souls coming forth clasps Christ's right hand. Another example is the S. Angelo in Formis, Church. N. Wall of Nave. New Testament Scenes, depicting Christ's descent, in which he is in the act of lifting a person up by grasping, with his right hand, the person's right hand wrist. Another is Rome, S. Clemente, Lower Church, Nave. Descent into hell, etc. Christ clasp the right wrist of a person with his right hand. Another is of the Harrowing of Hell, showing Satan bound as souls come forth from the jaws of hell to be blessed and grasped by the hand by a giant Christ. In other areas Christ, in the iconography of the Anastasis, is "where He grasps Adam and Eve to deliver them from Hell" ¹⁹²¹

Another depiction shows Christ grasping the soul who has struggled up the rungs of a ladder just as He seizes Adam and Eve to deliver them from the jaws of Hell in scenes of the Anastasis. Another shows the soul exiting the body at the moment of death. The soul reaches out to clasp the hand of one of the angelic guides. Another source shows a right-hand shake between an angel and a person about to ascend. ¹⁹²²

The post-war in heaven battle for souls, not only continues in mortal life, but in the after life, during Christ's descent into hell, limbo, hades, purgatory. But also during the ascension of souls into paradise, or into heaven, for dark demonic fallen angels-demons are often depicted fighting with the good angelic guides who are guardian angels for the souls ascending. The hand & wrist grasping seen in ascensions, thus seem to also represent the final arrival of those to the safety & assurance of final deliverance from the evil forces, but also the welcome of souls into the safety of the heavenly realms. The art works of these types, only seem to serve as reminders to those who passed through their ritualistic types in baptism & baptism for the dead, prayers for the dead, masses, & liturgical rites for the dead too. ¹⁹²³

Not only did the hand & wrist clasping represent the safety & welcome of souls into higher heavenly realms, but also, as in the rituals, they represent the deification process too. Thus, in the act of Christ reaching down towards Adam's hand to clasp it, Adam also reaches up towards Christ's hand, for the "reentry to paradise has already begun & his deification (along with the deification of mankind) is already under way in this miracle of re-creation, as the Anastasis came to be known." ¹⁹²⁴

John of Damascus, 675 or 676 – 4 December 749, Concerning the Descent into Hades: "The soul when it was deified descended into Hades, in order that, just as the Sun of Righteousness rose for those upon the earth, so likewise He might bring light to those who sit under the earth in darkness and shadow of death: in order that just as He brought the message of peace to those upon the earth, and of release to the prisoners,... so He [too] might become the same to those in Hades: That every knee should bow to Him, of things in heaven, and things in earth and things under the earth. [citing Phil 2:10], And thus after He had freed those who had been bound for ages, straightway He rose again from the dead, shewing us the way of resurrection." ¹⁹²⁵

The early to later Christians had conflicting views on what these rites should include, what they meant, how they were to be done, who could pass through them, and who was worthy to enjoy the fruits of their proxy works for the dead. ¹⁹²⁶

Baptism for the Dead & Protective Garments: Later Symbols & Types of the Post-War in Heaven Battles over Souls

Baptism for the dead themes that were preserved to a certain extent in the ritualistic battle over the soul, also includes protective garments, robes, or blankets, that covers the naked ascending souls. Thus, as spirits "pass on," or "pass away" or depart their own mortal life, sometimes by martyrdom, they are clothed to thus not be exposed so much to the arrows, fiery darts of black winged demons of the air. At least according to later legendized versions, & art works depicting souls ascending into the air, or progressing up ladders towards Christian moral perfection & deification. ¹⁹²⁷ While in other cases, as they are being resurrected, clothed in their glorified perfected body. (The physical, or spiritual one, depending on those early to later Christians that accepted the physical resurrection. Or those who'd dogmatically argued for a spiritual one, as noted earlier). Thus, after death, when souls ascend, a sort of post-war-in-heaven-battle in the air rages between guardian angels of God & dark demonic fallen angels that fight over the souls ascending. Like in the baptismal garment types, in art, ascending souls are covered by protective garments, robes, blankets to cover their nakedness in passing through death. Baptismal themes, symbols, & types in art works, illustrates these different types of baptism for the dead themes, even in later eras of historic Christendom. ¹⁹²⁸

Basil (329-379 A.D.), had likened baptism unto the grave. "How can we be placed in a condition of likeness to His [Christ's] death? By being 'buried with Him in baptism.' How are we to go down with Him into the grave? By imitating the 'burial' of Christ in baptism; for the bodies of the baptized are in a sense buried in water." (De Baptismo). Notice here that Basil seems to hint of the descent into the grave or realms of the dead, in that he asked: "How are we to go down with Him [Christ] into the grave?"

590–604, Pope, Gregory the Great, helped popularize the dogmas of purgatory. A place of purification for souls that didn't have enough works of merits, & did not take sufficient advantage of the rites, or sacraments of the church to obtain salvation, & thus enter paradise. Thus, the connections between the ascension robes, often white in color, & faded versions of baptism for the dead, are seen in the Masses & Liturgical rites for the dead, for those in the purification realms' fires. The fires in purgatory, (also limbo, hell, the pit, etc.), even the fires during the churches' burnings of "heretics," during the Inquisition. ¹⁹²⁹ were believed to be like a refiner's fire, purging & burning out the impurities caused by original sin & one's own sins. Without the protective garments, the naked souls suffer for their sins & were in the process of going through the required penitence sufferings that purges, cleanses, & purifies by punishments, the effects of sins. In later Christianity, the self-punishments or penance, penal prisons, penal systems, have their roots in these dogmas & earlier beliefs of the Middle Ages. Thus, the self punishing penitents will take off part of their clothing to expose their backs to whipping, or flogging themselves, a certain amount of times, for certain types of sins. In penal systems, clothing is changed to prison wears to identify the penal prisoners paying & suffering different types of punishments, for their crimes & sins. While in the case with souls in purgatory, they are naked, without the protective garment, so that their naked souls will suffer, until the masses or liturgical rites, or in later centuries, indulgences have been paid to the church to help free the souls from purgatory. Many art-works show souls, in purgatory, in some cases being baptized for the dead, by having the sacramental chalices in the hands of angels, pouring out drops onto them. They are then lifted out of the fires by hand & wrist grasping, to then be clothed in ascension robes on their way to paradise with the saints who rescued them, or with their angelic guides, or even with Christ, or the Virgin Mary, who harrows & liberates souls from purgatory. Thus, this is what became of baptism for the dead, & the ritualistic protective garments, in later centuries when they were in the process of being legendized.¹⁹³⁰

In many early churches ritualistic-dramas & baptismal types, upon ascending up stairs into higher parts of the church, this must have been considered as a type of Christ's ascension up out of the grave, the spirit world, the pit, limbo, hades, etc., as Christ & the newly resurrected saints ascended into paradise. Thus, the proxy, upon having followed Christ's example, had brought souls out of the spirit prison house over into paradise, where their naked souls are clothed in ascension robes.

In some cases, a 2nd anointing would take place, & garments would be put upon them after they had ascended out of the font. The anointing, the putting on of garments,¹⁹³¹ and the ascension may have been a type of how the angels in the other realms had taken the spirits by the hand to guide them over into paradise.¹⁹³²

Other examples of post-war in heaven activities of good angels & the dirty deeds of fallen-angels, are the protective missions of the holy good guardian angels against the dangerous activities of the demons that seek to destroy souls, or win them over to their side, in their continual war against God. Popular themes of guardian angels' protective missions are ones like where Michael conducts the souls out of hell into the holy light of paradise, such as in a chant in "Masses for the dead." Here they ask the Lord to "deliver the souls of all the faithful departed from the pains of Hell and from the deep pit". The chant continues to plead that the dead would be delivered from the lion and jaws of hell that they would not be swallowed up. It asked that "the standard-bearer Michael [to] conduct them into the holy light, which thou didst promise of old to Abraham and his seed." The mass included prayers and sacrifices for and in behave of the dead in the hopes that they would be allowed to pass from hell over into paradise with Michael as their guide.¹⁹³³ All the now old early Christian mystery ritualistic types, symbols & realm travel journeys are here in the art works, later writings too, though becoming more legendized. For example, a Christian mosaic on the cupola of the Baptistery of S. Giovanni, Florence, 13th century A.D., shows an angel conducts the souls of the virtuous to the door of paradise. Another angel is standing inside the half-open door and welcomes a soul by clasping, with the right hand, the soul's right hand.¹⁹³⁴ In later centuries, a number of art works have depicted death-bed scenes in which angelic guide come to guide the soul, by hand & wrist grasps, over into heaven.¹⁹³⁵

Certainly, in the Catholic rites, the idea of how the sponsor answers for the child by proxy at the time of the "baptism," the anointing, & the placing of the white cloth on the child's head, etc. All these later traditional & later ceremonies seem to suggest fragmented hints to the use of proxies, anointings, and garments.¹⁹³⁶ In earth life, as they, the proxies, were passing through these rites of passage, those to whom the baptism, prayer, mass, liturgical rites, indulgence payments, all such works for the dead were being done for. As these rituals were being done, on the other afterlife side, those thus benefitting were also passing through the heavenly coronation ceremonies, and rites of passage, with the angels, as they literally ascended out of the spirit prison, limbo, & purgatory, towards paradise or heaven. At least, this is what numerous art works & writings show, as in also Last Judgment scenes too.¹⁹³⁷

Tertullian and Augustine saw a type of baptism in how the Israelites crossed through the Red Sea, while the Egyptians were drowned. The drowning Egyptians in the story were a type of how the devil was said to been drowned in baptism.¹⁹³⁸ Thus, more post-war in heaven battle themes associated with the ritualistic descent into hell to destroy the devil, while liberating many others, represented by the Israelites as a type of those being set free from the watery abyss.

Since some of the art-works about Christ's descent into limbo, hades, the grave, were found near, or on baptismal fonts. And since, in many of art works and writings, the devil and his demons were being thrust through with different types of weapon-crosses, and crushed under the doors of hades, limbo, or hell, etc., as Christ and hosts of the freed resurrected come forth out of the spirit prison. And since some fonts show beasts being crushed by the baptismal font too. And since the descent down into the font was seen as a type of Christ's descent. It may be that the proxy, or those being baptized for the dead, they may have thought of themselves as having defeated the devil in an under world battle to free their dead relatives, or other spirits, from hades, limbo, etc., during baptism or other rites performed for the dead.¹⁹³⁹

Some versions about the descent say that it begun at midnight in the nether world. A bright light shown forth in the darkness like unto the light from the sun. Abraham, other versions have Adam, commenting about the bright light. Isaiah and John the Baptist repeat prophecies they made about it. John warns the idolaters to take their last chance to repent by worshipping Christ. Death and Satan talk with each other about how Jesus had taken Lazarus away, and Death feared that all of the dead would be soon taken out of hell. Thunder is heard with the command to lift up the gates so that the King of glory can come in. Satan and his demons attempt to bar the gates, asking who is this King of Glory? Isaiah and David, and the other prophets mock the devil and his demons. Angels answer back from the other side of the gates that it is the Lord might in battle. The gates of brass break and the bars of iron break and in through the doors comes the King of glory. Light floods all the dark places of death, and the bound are set free. Death and his host protest and ask who this King is that has so much power over the living and the dead? Christ seizes satan and tells the angels to gag his mouth, bind him hand and foot and then have Death hold him until the second coming. While Death scorns satan, Christ lifts up Adam and takes him over into paradise along with the other patriarchs, prophets, martyrs and forefathers. He blesses them all by making the sign of the cross. Enoch and Elijah meet them at the gate, they are joined by the penitent thief who gives them Christ's promise to him, as a password. "In some sense the risen dead are certainly thought to be on earth, for some of them were baptized in the Jordan and kept the passover of the resurrection in Jerusalem."¹⁹⁴⁰

A Christian mosaic, on the cupola of the Baptistery of S. Giovanni, Florence, 13th century A.D., shows an angel conducting the souls of the virtuous to the door of paradise. Another angel is standing inside the half-open door and welcomes a soul by clasping, with the right hand, the soul's right hand.¹⁹⁴¹ Furthermore, in the early Christian mysteries' symbolical types, it was as if they were clothed in resurrected bodies. Hence, the garment was a type of this.¹⁹⁴²

"Framea scutoque juvenem ornant. Tacitus, Germania, c. 13." St. Gregory the Great mentions the white vestment (birrum) in which a person was clothed when he rose from the font. St. Ambrose calls the garments of the mysteries the chaste veil of innocence. While S. Cyril of Jerusalem in his lectures on the mysteries called it the garment of salvation, and said that it was a type of the cloth that Christ's body was covered in while his body was in the tomb.¹⁹⁴³

LATER VISUALS OF WHAT HAPPENS TO SOULS, AS MASSES, LITURGICAL RITES & PRAYERS ARE SAID FOR THE DEAD

315–386, Cyril of Jerusalem, Lectures on the Mysteries, on prayers for the dead: "I have often heard people ask: What good does it do the departed spirit, whether the person was good or bad in life, to be remembered in prayer?... Answer: By doing for them and for ourselves what a loving God requires, we make available the atoning sacrifice which Christ made for our sins."¹⁹⁴⁴

442, Synod or assembly of clergy at Vaison, second canon, thought that a sort of proxy penance & sacramental mysteries done for the dead was acceptable: "When people who, after undertaking a penance lead a good life in satisfactory penitence, and die unexpectedly without the communion... oblations shall be accepted for them... For it were wrong if the memory of those who were excluded from the saving sacrifice who longed for those mysteries with a believing mind... [though regarded themselves unworthy because of their sins] and longed to be remitted to them [mysteries] when they had been purified more, suddenly died without the viaticum of the sacraments when the priests perhaps had not refused them the absolutissima reconciliatio."¹⁹⁴⁵

By this time, baptisms for the dead were being replaced by prayers, masses, liturgical rites for the dead. Baptisms by immersions were still being done where there was plenty of water sources, while immersing the head, pouring, sprinkling had become the acceptable modes of infants, & adults baptisms.

In later centuries, though many basic ideas about the descent of Christ into the spirit prison were passed down and preserved and retained in later art works, writings, songs, & creedal debates. Preserved to a certain extent in Easter ceremonies of lighting candles at doors representing the gates being commanded to be lifted up, or opened. Just like in later legends of Christ standing before the gates of hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, & the Anastasis or resurrection. The candle lit, being used to fire up other candles in the group by the opened door. Thus also representing the light of the resurrection, Christ, the Light of the World, lighting up the underworld, & then the world during his post-descent & post-resurrection victory march throughout the world.¹⁹⁴⁶ Such things as these helped preserved, descent themes, & resurrection baptism for the dead types & later themes. While in the case with the different ritualistic types, Baptism for the Dead, prayers, masses, & liturgical rites for the dead, it was a different matter. Eventually, Baptism for the Dead, was eventually faded out & replaced in later centuries by prayers, rites, & different masses, & liturgical rites for the dead, which were believed to have had the same types of effects on souls in the afterlife, as baptism for the dead had earlier.

PROXY MERITS, FOR THE LIVING & DEAD:
TREASURY OF MERITS: It was about 1095, that the false concept that a Pope could distribute forgiveness, was encouraged even more. About this time, Indulgences were first offered as a motivation & incentive to get different ones to answer to a rally call of Pope Urban II, to go on a Crusade to take back the Holy Land from Muslim occupation.¹⁹⁴⁷ From these types of incentives & motivators, other concepts developed about how there was believed to be a Treasury, or Reservoir, or sort of Bank collection of good deeds & graces, called Merits, that the saints were said to have done.¹⁹⁴⁸ These could become proxy deeds for the wicked & unrepentant, so long an act of penance was performed, or payments were made to the church by the living on behalf of themselves, or for the dead.¹⁹⁴⁹

Thus, proxy merits meant that there was in the Treasury of the Church, enough good deeds that could be credited towards the day of judgment, counted towards even the most unrepentant wickedest sinners, as if they had done those good deeds themselves.¹⁹⁵⁰ But, would this mean the wicked could go on in their wickedness even unto the days of their deaths? At first, in the original earlier penance systems, this didn't seem to be the case, for the penitents were doing good works, like community service, as part of the punishment for past sins done, & they were under the watchful eye of the church that they were changing, repenting, & on probation, not to do those things again, & again. Whereas under the later penance & indulgence economic system that eventually developed, the wicked could continue on in their wickedness, because they had paid for the remissions of sin-debts of present & future sins that they wanted to go out & do! They believed, or were led to believe by the clergy, that they were not only going to be judged by their own works alone, but by the works of someone else, the good deeds of the saints, etc., proxy merited to them.¹⁹⁵¹

Unfortunately, as with all apostate doctrines (like indulgences) that arise out of true ones, that get perverted, as true salvation for the dead themes did get perverted, this was done by different corrupt power hungry clerical leaders. Some of them used the promises of forgiveness through Indulgences, to do a lot of evil things, such as slaughter others, not of their faith. Thus, many were led to believe by these rally cries, that to be forgiven of lesser crimes, on up to murders; such forgiveness could come about through going on different crusades. It was clear too, what was at stake, what they would be doing, for to obtain what the different Popes' promised, they were going to have to receive pardoned for their sins, by turning around & slaughtering "heretics," & non-Christians! During the Great Apostasy, had different ones in the later church retrogressed, so far away from the teachings of Christ & his apostles & prophets, that by this time, murder & mayhem done earlier, (or in the future), could be "forgiven," by doing more murders & mayhem during a crusade, or by pre-payments of indulgences, before the sins & crimes were committed against their future victims? The historical records tell how that the crusaders were going to seek to force different groups to comply with Catholic dogmas & decrees: "The popes used the Crusade indulgence against Roger II of Apulia-Sicily in 1135, Ireland in 1152, and the King of Leon in 1197. The war launched against the Markward of Anweiler, Hohenstaufen regent in Sicily, in 1199 was institutionally a Crusade."¹⁹⁵²

During the 13th century, Friars, monks and parish clergy combined to enhance the role of sacerdotal or priestly functions & authority by proclaiming the miracle of the mass and expanding penitential police, & as Judges, they could establish what might be required by the penitents to pay for their sins.¹⁹⁵³ James of Vitry, (1160–1240), a student of Peter the Chanter, & who became bishop of Acre, 1216, & in 1227, cardinal-bishop of Tusculum, dealt with the issue of rasing money. How lay brethren wanted monks to attract lay donors by singing masses for the dead donors and the Virgin, but the monks liked the quiet of the cloister. During 1211 to 1213, he preached the Albigensian Crusade, touring France and Germany with William, the archdeacon of Paris, and recruiting many Crusaders in the name of how crusader could obtain forgiveness through indulgences & going on crusades.¹⁹⁵⁴

About 1300, the doctrine of the treasure of the works of supererogation of Christ and the saints took a fixed form. This concept & idea of such a treasure, the common possession of all the faithful, in so far as they are members of the mystic body of Christ, which is the Church, was by that time, very ancient. But the way in which it was applied, wasn't popularized until later during the 14th century. Earlier, as the concept developed, it was based on the sense that the superabundant good works built up over time, & continued to be built up every day, were accumulating good works & merits. It was seen as a treasury so large & ever growing as to be an inexhaustible reserve. One of which merits the Church could then tap into, disposing them by retail, or sales. This doctrine was not known yet in earlier centuries before the 13th century. In other words, the good works done by others were for sale so that the buyers didn't have to do those good works themselves, even if they could freely do them. Some people of the Middle Ages just didn't want to change their evil ways, even though they were concerned for their own soul, & the souls of their dead relatives, so many asked: "What could be done?" Did they know about the doctrine of Christ's descent into purgatory to rescue souls out, liberate them? Did they think it was possible that, should they go there, they could one day be released? The Catholic church & others that taught Christ's descent, the harrowing of hell, could have thus given them hope.¹⁹⁵⁵

But, as the Catholic papacy came in need of more funding, as it grew larger, got entangled in wars, more enforced thought policing, heretic hunting, & other agendas. Plus, building projects, some in the Catholic church came up with these schemes that would generate more revenues.¹⁹⁵⁶ They said to the rich & poor alike, to not worry about their sins, or the sins of their dead relatives, that was 'no problem,' we have a 'solution' to your concerns. Which were often built up with fiery sermons & graphic art works of souls burning in purgatory, thus making many worry about their own soul, & those of their dead relatives frying in the flames of purgatory.¹⁹⁵⁷

As if taking advantage of these fears of the afterlife, some in the Catholic church told the people, in a sense, to not worry, 'just buy some of the good works of the saints & others, stored up in the treasury of merits, & it will be credited to your salvation account!' Plus, those of your dead relatives too! That was the basic sales pitch, as others developed later on too. This concept is said to have been first used by Alexander of Hales, who used the word thesaurus in the technical sense, which it has kept ever since. "The doctrine did not fail to excite resistance. In the end, however, it prevailed and was officially formulated in 1343 in the bull Unigenitus of Clement VI."¹⁹⁵⁸ Reigned as Pope, 1342–52.

Earlier, it was understood by clergy & church members, that originally, penances required & that were needed to be done, were for the penalties attached to sins. In the Sacraments of penances, the guilty were believed to be removed from the penalties & sufferings of purgatory. Penance was required by the Divine Justice that was believed was required by the church's medieval judicial systems. The fulfillment of these required penances meant, as it was believed, that sinners would be forgiven, & the penances done, in other cases, through masses & prayers for the dead, meant that the souls of sinners in Purgatory could also be forgiven, & thus released from suffering further. As the economics of indulgences developed, the community service type projects & works that were done, were believed to offer the penitent sinner means of discharging this debt during his life time. In the 13th century, it came to be regarded as a remission of the penalty of sin itself, both here & in purgatory. At a later stage, it was regarded like paying fines are today, as a release from the guilt of sin as well as from its penalty. Like today, you pay the courts' fines, do community service hours, the amount set by the judge, perhaps be also ordered by the judge to pay to take some behavior modification classes, & all sins forgiven, but only so long as you did what the courts decreed! At least you didn't have to go to jail, in many cases! In like manners, but with a diverse difference, the indulgence economy of the Middle Ages, developed into pay as you go, & pre-pay programs, of buying others, like the saints' good deeds (merits), to be counted towards your soul's debt. The merits thus acquired could even be for future sins, & this scandalized practice started to also develop, as the indulgence economy became more & more legalized scandalize escapes from the consequences of a life of sins of all types. By 1343, Gregory VI, the funds of merits at the Church's disposition, thesaurus meritorum (Greek thesauros 'storehouse, treasure' of merits), as defined by Gregory, is a treasury of spiritual assets consisting of the infinite merits of Christ, the merits of Mary, & other saints, which the church uses by virtue of the power of the keys, (keys unlock gates & doors, in this case the doors or gates of purgatory). It was believed, therefore, that 1 drop of Christ's blood, was sufficient for the salvation of the world, but Christ, having shed all his blood, & Mary without stain, had thus caused the storehouse of merits to be an endless supply of proxy merits for those who pay into the system! With masses & prayers for the dead being performed by the Priests, in many cases for a fee, or donation, or exchange of work needed to be done. It was easy for the sale of indulgence to go beyond applying to not only the living, but the sinners' dead relatives too: "The application of indulgences to the realm of purgatory by Sixtus IV (1476), was a natural development of the doctrine of the prayers and other sufferings of the living to inure to the benefit of the souls in that sphere [purgatory]."¹⁹⁵⁹

"If by a papal indulgence a soul in purgatory could be immediately released and given access to heavenly felicity, the question of guilt was of no concern."¹⁹⁶⁰ Some art works showed releases going on, as drops from the chalice of the masses for the dead, drippings (like a faded legendized version of baptism for the dead, by the baptismal mode of sprinkling). Like in art showing a chalice in the hands of an angel, pouring out drops on the heads of souls in purgatory, & angelic releasing rescues, as angels grasp arms, hands, wrists, or both hands, to lift souls out of the fires of purgatory.¹⁹⁶¹ A few examples in many are like those of art of a cleric (an Abbot? Or a man who is the head of an abbey of monks). He has a key in his left hand, (keys unlock gates, & doors, in this case the doors or gates of purgatory?) Is reaching down to those reaching up to him, with his right hand, as if they are about to clasp hands, like in so many hand clasping guides to paradise themes, illustrated in art, in Last Judgment depictions. Another art work of Pope Gregory (Gregory XII 1406–15, ?), pulling up out of the fires of purgatory a crowned Emperor, by grasping with his right hand to Emperor Trajan's left arm, near left wrist, (reigned as Roman Emperor, 98–117). The Emperor is stripped of his royal robes, down to some dark underpants. (Symbolic of suffering mostly naked in the fires of purgatory, not having protective robes on?). Did these types of clerical & papal types of rescues of souls from purgatory, & of guiding the rescued over into paradise, by hand & wrist grasping, become the later symbols of the faded, legendized versions of baptism for the dead?¹⁹⁶²

13th–14th centuries, as simony, (the buying & sales of clerical positions), papal taxes, fees for services performed, increased. Providees or those elected, paid fees for confirmation, the amounts varying according to the wealth of the benefice and the litigation involved. Fees usually included common services, about 1/3 of the 1st year's revenue of a benefice). While, minor services fees for curial personnel, but also a required fee to have a private audience with the pontiff. The wealthy prelates paid heavily, while others, had to take out loans, like in 1302 an Abbot of St Albans's, through simony, confirmed his election at Rome, but at a cost above 10,000 florins, (or the equal to 10,000 English gold coins). He borrowed the sum from Italian money-lenders, and consequently had to buy a dispensation for conniving at usury. Some abbots were required to visit Rome at specific intervals, & required to pay fixed payments. In 1300 Rouen and Rheims each paid 2,000 florins, every other year, Canterbury, 1,500, York, 600 every third year.¹⁹⁶³

As money became the focus of many clergy, there still were those who did good deeds out of love & charity for others.¹⁹⁶⁴ But, because for some, charity & parish care had a price, when they were supposed to be for free, customary fees began to cause some disputes! Cases in points were those between the parish priests of Toulouse, & their parishioners just before 1251 or 1255, over treatments, burial, marriage & other things. There were also fees for performing prayers, singing & masses for the dead too.¹⁹⁶⁵ Some sermons, like James of Vitry, pointed out how the religious gave little to the poor in order to gain much for themselves. John of Salisbury, (1120–1180), bitterly remarked how the Hospitallers sought out & made friends with the rich more than instead of embracing the pauper Christ. The motives of doing things out of Charity, love & being hospitable, were, in some cases, thus being lost in other ulterior motives, that of acquiring more wealth & resources. Thus, some monks, upon going after & caring more for the rich & nobles, than for the poor, were alleged to be doing so in order that they might then find favor with them, & thus receive their riches, lands, mills & rents, should they happen to die in their care.¹⁹⁶⁶ Perhaps tired of the abuses & money grabbing clergy, Switzerland's Reformer, Ulrich Zwingli (born 1-1-1484), about 1522, at his instigation, he got the city council of Zurich to abolish baptismal & burial fees that were being collected by the clergy.¹⁹⁶⁷

In addition to James of Vitry's rally calls, the use of the pulpit to preach the need for penance, & the court of conscience, was helped along by different ones like the Franciscan, Alexander of Hales, (died 1245), & the Dominican, Thomas Aquinas (of Aquino, died 1274), who both expounded the doctrine of the treasury of the saints, a reservoir of superabundant grace on which to draw on for forgiveness to be granted the fallible. Like a sort of heavenly bank account, the saints over abundance of good deeds could be become proxy good deeds to cover the sins of those willing to pay the church to tap into that treasury of grace.¹⁹⁶⁸ The commercializations of freeing souls from purgatory through the Catholic church's sales & trafficking of indulgences, reached out to many through clever sales tactics & clerical sermons of the times. Thus, eventually, the later concept of the soul's escape from the spirit prison changed, evolved and developed over the years until the concepts about a realm called purgatory became popular. The doctrine is said to date back to a papal letter of 1253, but it was not finally confirmed till the Catholic counter-reformation Council of Trent, January 1562 – 12-4-1563. The Catechism which came out of this council said that "there is a purgatorial fire in which the souls of the pious are purified by a temporary punishment so that an entrance may be opened for them into the eternal country in which nothing stained can enter." Souls detained there are "helped by the suffrages of the faithful, but especially by the acceptable sacrifice of the altar."¹⁹⁶⁹

The effects that these later rites & sacraments for the dead were believed to have had on souls held in purgatory were depicted in a number of art works during the 13th–17th c.. A 14th c. work shows a soul being rescued out of the mouth of hell.¹⁹⁷⁰ Souls ride up on a garment as they ascend into heaven with their guardian angels, who have come to protect them from the demons who are busy grasping souls and pulling them down to hell. Other portions of this work show the mass being performed for and in behalf of the dead. Lines are drawn from the sacrament in the up-lifted arms of the priest, down to the souls in flames of purgatory. One soul has just ascended up out, suggesting that while the priest was performing the mass, souls were being set free from purgatory. At the top a number of naked souls are presented to God by their angelic hand-clasping guides and protectors.¹⁹⁷¹

Other art works, funerary monuments & foundations seem to combine several ideas that all hint to be later fragments and retrogressed forms of baptism for the dead. For some would combine the ideas of the traditional place of Adam's grave under the cross, the Golgotha chapels, were masses for the dead were performed, and a funerary foundation with an altar for prayers for the dead. Plus, in some cases, the deceased were placed under the cross, or the place usually reserved for the body of Adam. Thus, some must have thought that as the blood from the cross had washed over Adam, as a sort of baptism and sacrament for the dead, so also would the souls of the deceased receive the benefits of redemption, and be raised like Adam was.¹⁹⁷² Perhaps retaining these baptismal types for the dead, that connect baptism, with the foot of the cross, the bottom areas perhaps being a type of Adam's grave in the underworld, is a 9th century Reliquary of the True Cross, from the Sancta Sanctorum of the Lateran, Museo Sacro. The bottom area of the cross shows a naked younger looking Christ being baptized. If so, then the river Jordan would be flowing down into the underworld. An angel, witnessing the baptism, holds the traditional white baptismal robe, or perhaps, Christ's clothing.¹⁹⁷³ With baptism being a type of resurrection, & with the resurrection, (= Anastasis, often associated in art, especially iconography), with the underworld, lower regions, the pit, the grave, & hades. While in the Latin churches, with limbo, & in later centuries, purgatory. It's from these lower realms that souls are rescued-resurrected or raised from, (most often by hand wrist grasp). The symbolical types seem to connect up to offer later baptism for the dead themes, though in legendized conditions & fading reminders.¹⁹⁷⁴

The later fragmented versions, seem to have faded further away from the earlier ritual, while still retaining to a certain extent, the symbolical artistic types and symbolical meanings, such as in the ways in which a number of later Christian tombs and funerary monuments would sometimes depict hand clasps under the cross symbols. Or different funerary monuments and tombs which depicted orants, or persons with up-lifted hands in prayers, some of which were the prayers of the deceased, others of prayers for the dead. In some cases, one of the orant's up-lifted hands is grasp by the hand of God as a symbol of being raised up in the resurrection.¹⁹⁷⁵

At altars, in the churches, was where a lot of masses & liturgical works, & prayers for the dead were performed.¹⁹⁷⁶ Thus, it's fitting that an altarpiece dated 1454 shows, Christ on the cross, while to the lower left side, an angel is about the grasp the hands of a soul who is about to be set free from hell's fire.¹⁹⁷⁷

During the 1460s a depiction of a mass being performed for the dead shows the priest at the altar, while another portion shows what many believed was taking place in purgatory, for while the priest did the rite, angels were busy releasing souls from purgatory. One angel clasp the hands of one soul as they ascend up out of purgatory. Under this scene, another soul awaits to be rescued next.¹⁹⁷⁸

A.D. 1474, during a mystery play cycle, in France, the great mystery of the birth of Jesus Christ was performed out-of-doors at Rouen. In it, the pre-existence, and the council in heaven were enacted in a scene that depicts a meeting in heaven. Here, the redemption of mankind is discussed, and plans were made for the redemption of the world. In others, Christ's descends into "hell-mouth" to rescue the souls held captive there.¹⁹⁷⁹ A play, from A.D. 1474, begins like unto the old liturgical plays, with the witness of the prophets. There is also a scene "in Limbo where Adam is shown lamenting his fate, and another in Heaven where the Redemption of mankind is discussed and the Incarnation decided upon."¹⁹⁸⁰

An interesting 15th century depiction of purgatory from the French Book of Hours, shows angels clasping the hands of some of the souls they are lifting up, some liberated souls are carried off in the arms of angels.¹⁹⁸¹

1480, another one shows a priest as he raised up the sacrament over his head, (reminding us of the traditional prayer gesture with up-lifted hands). At that very moment, angels on the other side of the veil were also in the very act of lifting up souls out of purgatory. And like the hand clasps depicted in the works showing Christ's descent into purgatory, there are angels clasping the wrists of the souls they are lifting up. Thus, the sacrament for and in behalf of the dead was believed to have had the same effect that baptism for the dead had in earlier centuries. A number of art works show how that when the rites were being performed, the angels descended down to take the souls by the hand to raise them out of purgatory, in some cases on a garment, and they guide them over into paradise where Peter was waiting to clasp their hand again as they entered through the door or gates to paradise.¹⁹⁸²

1483, another shows a soul ascending out of the fire from the underworld, the soul is being raised by a Saint who is clasping, with his right hand, the person's left wrist in a similar manner as many depictions of Christ's descent.¹⁹⁸³

Sales of Indulgences: Salvation for the Dead, For Sale!

A later retrogressed and fragmented off-shoot practices, that hint to the descent, & baptism for the dead, but by these later centuries, now in legendization forms, were changed, they took on forms of ways believed could bring about the same types of results: That of salvation for the living & the dead. We already explore some aspects of some of these ways, that of buying merits, or good deeds done by saints to count towards, by proxy, the buyers' lack of good deeds. In the later centuries after Augustine's time, & his influences of "original sin," dogma on the 5th century church & thereafter, the rites in the church were for sale: "One could be forgiven by virtue "of th sacrifice of the mass," and the penalty for the sins could be avoided by the payment of a sum of money. The role of the church was extremely important, since the church could forgive any sin any number of times."¹⁹⁸⁴

590–604, Gregory I, taught hell-fire, for those who are guilty of the slightest sin, while the righteous went to heaven at once, when they died. However, sins could be forgiven, but it had to include a repentance process, which involved contrition (feeling & expressing remorse). Plus, confession & satisfaction, that included penance measurements that needed to be satisfied according to the levels of degree of seriousness of the sins. On these, the vast penitential system of the Middle Ages was built up, and, combined with the doctrine of purgatory, (a realm where the spirits of the dead were held captive). However, the spirits could escape from it, with help from Christ, often depicted descending & rescuing souls out of purgatory. But also, all these aspects were combined with the rescue & of penance & indulgences, that Martin Luther would later protest, during the 16th century Reformation.¹⁹⁸⁵

The church also set up codified sins, & the penalties to be imposed on the sinner, just like judicial systems today has codes, penalties for non-compliance, punishments, fines, fees, bailouts, jail times, & imposes them on criminals, & people, often who are ignorant of ever increasing regulations, codes, & laws that get written into laws. Under the indulgence system, the number of sins to expiate increased, but the penances required were mitigated, & could be redeemed with a certain price. Books called Penitentials, indicated the penalty attached to each serious sin. Certain church imitated the Germanic custom on the Wergeld, it permitted the redeeming of the penalties listed in these books, by a certain price of money, "permettent le rachat de la peine a prix d' argent."¹⁹⁸⁶

5th – 10th centuries, Irish monks & those of St. Columban introduced the custom of fixing penances for certain crimes, which were established according to set codes, called Penitentials. They listed the penances for each species of sins. Confessions being where the priests, & clerics would find out what the people had done, & thus prescribes the proper established penance, or payments, this might be why confessions became, in many areas, an increasing process, & even an annual duty. In time, public penance was replaced by private penances & repeated penance payments ordered by the church. The range of payments varied according to the seriousness on down the scale to the less serious sins, & less expensive payments for those minor sins.¹⁹⁸⁷

Payment plans developed, where the rich could get out of having to do penance, by paying like in today's judicial system, certain fines & community service, rather than going to jail, for minor "offenses." Thus, payments were substituted for penances prescribed, & so there developed a system of fixed tariffs, according to the crimes, & the fixed required punishment-payments, like fines that became part of the whole economical system & sources of revenues for the church. By the 8th century, the Penitentials contain tariffs showing the sums which, should those subject to payments might be unable to make, or to fast, the penitent must devote time to pious work, (like modern community service hours). Were these private agreements between the penitents & the church? For some suggest that the public penance, such as buying-off can't be traced farther back than the 9th century.¹⁹⁸⁸

By the 9th & 10th century in Europe, it had become an acceptable practice to pay pious gifts to the church to cover for sins, in order to escape the perils of hell.¹⁹⁸⁹ In these later centuries, the later Christian practice of paying for souls to be able to escape out of purgatory, called Indulgences. As these sales became more scandalous, different ones braved to write & complain about them during 14th–16th centuries, in France & the Netherlands, & Germany. A case in point is in Pierre d' Ailly's De Reformatione, for he acknowledges the good being done by the holy & pious amongst the numerous religious orders, church hospitals, etc. But he also notes & complains that there are too many, with such diversity, exclusiveness, rivalry, pride, vanity, & lacks of social unity, & with lack of sufficient funding for so many endless multiplicities of church programs & projects.¹⁹⁹⁰ Many of which also have too many special church officers to run & manage, sometimes mismanage, the ever growing number of churches, convents, festivals, saints, holy days, images & paintings, vigils, fasts, new building projects, etc. With all these ever growing multiplying organizations & springing up of new institutions, the churches were spreading themselves too thin, their coffers or treasuries were being continually drained & there must have been the question as to how to replenish them with a continual flow in of money.¹⁹⁹¹ Out of these types of settings, more forced, at times, tithing & taxes, & other money collecting schemes were often increased, or new ones born. Thus, retrogressed concepts of salvation for the living & salvation for the dead, became for sale in the corrupt sale of Indulgences. But when such things get out of hand, different ones like Pierre suggest to: "Let the sellers of indulgences be banished from the Church, which they soil with their lies and make ridiculous."¹⁹⁹²

1095, Urban II, at the Council of Clermont, got the first Crusade going with promises of indulgences to those who would go, for they were promised they would enter Heaven, for going, & if they died, they enter into the heavenly mansions. Urban II declared that the crusade should be expiation (or atone for sins) for the robbery, murder, & oppression that sullied Christendom. He granted a plenary indulgence to those who went on the crusade: "You, oppressors of orphans and widows; you murderers and violators of churches; you robbers of the property of others; you, who like vultures are drawn to the scent of the battlefield, hasten, as you love your souls, under your Captain Christ, to the rescue of Jerusalem. All who are guilty of such sins as exclude you from the Kingdom of God, ransom yourselves at this price, for such is the will of God." The people responded "God wills it! God wills it!"¹⁹⁹³ The crusade indulgence was like the later sale of indulgences, in their basic concepts, both were believed to "ransom" sinners from their temporal punishments in this world, & from the pains of purgatory in the after-life realm.¹⁹⁹⁴

The basic concepts of beliefs for these types of indulgences: Prisoners were set free for this price in mortal life, & spirit prisoners were set free from the spirit prison of purgatory in the after life realm. The sinners that paid these prices to the church, while in mortal life, could buy their way out of purgatory's flames, reduce the time they'd have to fry there, or, it enough was paid, make it so they didn't have to even go there, but could go right to paradise. These were the basic incentives that were behind the sales of both the crusades indulgences, & the sale of indulgences. The papacy therefore granted "plenary indulgence" for the "forgiveness of past sins and the forgiveness in advanced of any sins they might commit while engaged in crusading, with the assurance of freedom from purgatorial pain. The prisons of Europe were thrown open and the worst criminals were encouraged to join the crusading hosts on the same generous condition."¹⁹⁹⁵

As the papacy became the leading power in the Western world, the pope, not the emperor, had become the warlord. Was it due to legendary militant-Christ traditions, such as in those of Christ defeating the devil & devils in the infernal regions to release captive spirits held in hell, limbo & purgatory? Plus, the traditions of Christ's post-resurrection world wide victory-march throughout the nations? These types of themes turning legends? Whatever might have been the inspiration, motives, & religious types that still survived by this time, & that the popes used, or knew about, they still used their positions of power to rally the people behind the banner of Christ, their militant "Captain," often depicted in art as the cross-banner bearer, in earlier to later centuries, & different areas of Christendom.¹⁹⁹⁶

1209, the same with those who equipped a crusader, or built, or helped build churches, or even public edifices built. In 1209, Innocent III recruited indulgences for the building of a bridge over the Rhone.¹⁹⁹⁷

1318 & 1327, John XXII, attached an indulgence to the recitation of 3 Hail Marys in the evening, this became a later custom that developed further into the Angelus.

1428-1475, Alan Derupe, popularized a rosary (which in the Roman Catholic Church is a form of devotion in which 5 or 15 sets of ten Hail Marys are repeated, or prayers to the Virgin Mary. A Dominican preacher in northern France & Flanders the Holy See attached numerous indulgences to the recitation of the rosary. (A rosary is a string of beads is used to help the prayer keep track of how many recites they have done, as they go on with other recites).¹⁹⁹⁸

1469-1527, Machiavelli, an Italian statesman, & powerful political thinker of his time, noted with regrets the conditions of the existing church & its ordinances, or rituals: "Had the religion of Christianity been preserved according to the ordinances of the Founder, the state and commonwealth of Christendom would have been far more united and happy than they are. Nor can there be a greater proof of its decadence than the fact that the nearer people are to the Roman Church, the head of their religion, the less religious are they. And whoever examines the principles on which that religion is founded, and sees how widely different from those principles its present practice and application are, will judge that her ruin or chastisement is near at hand."¹⁹⁹⁹

1506, the rebuilding of the Church of St. Peter in Rome, began & as time went by, Pope Leo X saw that he needed more funds to keep the project going. Consequently, he proclaimed a general sale of indulgences to increase the necessary funding to build his Basilica.²⁰⁰⁰

1509, in Rome, Martin Luther, (born 11-10-1483, died 1546, monk of the Augustinian order, (1505), ordain priest (1507), Professor of philosophy, University of Wittenberg, Germany (1508). Sent on a mission to Rome about 1509, he noted the corruption going on there amongst the clergy. The hurried manner the priests said mass, joked around with it, saying in Latin: "Bread thou art and bread thou shalt remain; wine thou art, and wine thou shalt remain." How they'd apply in derision the term 'good Christian' to those stupid enough to believe in Christian truth. He noted the splendor of the ceremonies & processions. But, though all this bothered him, it wasn't enough to shake his faith & cause him to apostatize. However, such things were some of the aspects that he thought needed to be changed & reformed in the Catholic church he still remained part of until he was looked upon as a rebellious trouble maker for the church. In 1512, he became Doctor of Theology, & Professor of Theology, with the Bible being used as his main part of his teaching. In 1515, he was appointed vicar, with oversight of 11 monasteries. The more he studied scripture, the more he contrasted them with the Catholic church. In 1517, he prepared his famous 97 theses of problems, corruptions, differences, & issues that he had with the Catholic church's practices, policies, doctrines, & perversions that went against scripture. One of the main issues was the sale of indulgences, as money was being siphoned from Germany to Rome. Pope Leo X, in Rome, needed building funding for the construction of the magnificent church of Saint Peter in Rome, which monumental project begun in 1506. Thus, he declared a general sale of indulgences to raise the necessary funds. England, France & Spain refused to permit the sale, but Maximilian I allowed the Pope's request. Germany was divided into three districts, by the Pope, & he appointed the archbishop Mayence to manage the district which Saxony was a part of. His chief salesman, & indulgence agent was the Dominican friar, Johann (John) Tetzel, c. 1464–1519), who traveling about, gave some elaborate sales pitches to scare people, & guilt-trip them into buying indulgences for themselves & their dead kin, “suffering” & frying in purgatory. Frederick the wise had forbidden sales in Saxony, so Tetzel, established himself at Jüterbock in Brandenburg, a few miles from Wittenberg. The sale of indulgence in Germany included an elaborate sales pitch that built up the purpose, incentives & reasons why the people should want to buy some indulgences, as soon as possible. How that the punishment for sins was a sure thing that everyone is obliged to undergo in the flames of purgatory. But, the amount of time needed to blot out sins, could be reduced through a contribution to the money chest, for the building of the Saint Peter church in Rome. The contributors were to understand how that their sins & their dead relatives’ sins, would be remitted. For as the living places in the money chest their contributions for themselves & their dead kin, they will be given indulgence receipts, “letters of indulgence,” that assures the release of their dead relatives souls from purgatory, & also assures those living, the remissions of their own sins too. “The preachers, by daily sermons, hymns and processions, urged the people, with extravagant laudations of the pope’s bull, to purchase letters of indulgence for their own benefit, and at the same time played upon their sympathies for departed relatives and friends whom they might release from their sufferings in purgatory “as soon as the penny tinkles in the box.””²⁰⁰¹ Tetzel traveled about Germany, & with great pomp & rally calls, he gathered large crowds about him to hear his sales pitches about indulgences. He was received like a messenger from Heaven, & was effective in his presentations, that also included solemn processions with songs, flags, candles, bells-ringers, & visual aids of the times. They caught the attention of the common folks & clergy alike.²⁰⁰²

DIFFERENT VERSIONS OF JOHANN (JOHN) TETZEL’S INDULGENCE SALES JINGLE

However, Tetzel went far beyond the authority granted by the papal indulgence bulls & presented notions of purgatory never really taught, & was later condemned by the Catholic church. The sales-pitch-jingles, attributed to him, may not have even been his jingles! If so, where did it originate from? If it even was known & was used in the first place. But if from someone else, not Tetzel, there were different slight variables of them, some of which go like this:

“As soon as the gold in the basket rings, the rescued soul to heaven springs.”²⁰⁰³

A woodcut by Jan Breu the Elder, 1530, shows different ones paying for indulgences, etc., with the indulgence sales pitch of: “AS THE PENNY IN THE COFFER RINGS, THE SOUL FROM PURGATORY SPRINGS”: or so the Dominican friar Tetzel and other purveyors of papal pardons are supposed to have taught their hearers and customers.”²⁰⁰⁴

Tetzel may have had more than one jingle? “One of Tetzel’s sale jingles was, [He had others?] “As soon as the coin into the box rings, a soul from purgatory springs.”²⁰⁰⁵

“According to the Luther, Tetzel’s favorite jingle was: “As your money into the coffer rings, a soul from purgatory springs.”²⁰⁰⁶

Tetzel’s “doctrine,” “was virtually that of the drastic proverb: “As soon as the money in the coffer rings, the soul from purgatory’s fire springs.” The papal bull of indulgence gave no sanction whatever to this proposition....”²⁰⁰⁷

Tetzel, an experienced “vendor,” is reported to have preached & guilt-tripped his hearers, speaking to them as if it was their dead relatives, what they might be pleading in purgatory, & then the final jingle: “As soon as the coin in the coffer rings, The soul from purgatory springs.”²⁰⁰⁸

TETZEL SOLD SO MANY INDULGENCES BECAUSE HE PROMISED IMMEDIATE SATISFACTION!

Tetzel’s sale’s jingle, if it was originally his, & if it was even said by him, (perhaps differently, in different villages, towns, or at different places), was what sold so many indulgences, to the point where many coins were being minted right there on the spot. Like a good salesman, in reports of his sermons, he promised immediate satisfaction! But it was said to go beyond what the Church was claiming to offer in the papal’s bulls.²⁰⁰⁹ If Tetzel’s doctrine of immediate salvation was actually condemned later, the question is then: Did the Catholic church give the money back, if gotten by ill-gains & condemned teachings? As far as I know, there’s no record of them ever giving back the money to the contributors, which would have been hard to do, for the economics of the sales of indulgences, the profits, revenues, were often split up in percentages of different amounts going to different ones in on the cuts, & to fund different areas of the church’s facilities, & projects.²⁰¹⁰

But if they didn’t give it back to the contributors: Did they justify the use of such money, despite whom, how & by what means it was acquired? As for Tetzel’s promise of immediate salvation, other questions that must have been asked: Didn’t some mass for the dead have to be performed first? Or at least a prayer for the dead, thus paid for, to be done by a priest? No! Tetzel was suggesting, for as soon as the coin was paid to the church, spirit prisoners would be set free from purgatory. No waiting around from other rituals to be performed by proxy, by a living priest for the dead relative of the contributors. In reports of his sermons for the sales, he built up the guilt tripping climax of the sales pitch jingle with, a play upon their sympathies for departed relatives & friends whom they might release from their sufferings in purgatory, as being immediate, “as soon as the penny tinkles in the box.”²⁰¹¹

To get the potential contributors’ sympathies for their departed relatives built up, Tetzel used descriptive negative imagery of the sufferings of their dead relatives frying in purgatory. Their extreme pains, the flames unmercifully torturing their souls. He then throws in some guilt tripping aspects into his dramatization, by asking his listeners if they can hear the pleas of their dead relatives? How that they are pleading for immediate relief! So, what’s the big deal? It’s only a coin! Pay it so they can get that immediate relief & release. He then also builds up what seems to be fragments of deification themes still around during those later centuries. For he goes from the negative aspects of purgatory to the ultimate rewards offered to the forgiven, the cleansed, the souls admitted into paradise, that of deification! So who wouldn’t want that type of a deal? Going from one negative extreme into the positive! Going from being burnt black with flames & sins, to being purified, becoming spotless of sins, glorified as promised, as they become divine on their way towards the gates of paradise! So it seems that some of Tetzel’s sermons threw in the incentives of paying indulgences for a two for the price of one type deal, for their dead relatives, & themselves! For not only would the living be able to go right to paradise, & escape the torments, but their dead relatives were going to experience immediate relief! But then, experience the promised glory, deification, that was going to also be their rewards for being cleansed of all sins & taken over into paradise.

Tetzel: “‘Won’t you part with even a farthing to buy this letter? It won’t bring you money but rather a divine and immortal soul, whole and secure in the Kingdom of Heaven.’”²⁰¹² In another case, Tetzel said that the indulgence would restore them “...to that innocence and purity which you possessed at baptism; so that when you die the gates of punishment shall be shut, and the gates of the paradise of delight shall be opened...” from that time forwards, until their death, a plenary indulgence.²⁰¹³ “After a vivid sermon on hell and its terrors... [Tetzel, moving to the largest church], gave an equally vivid sermon on purgatory and the sufferings not only awaiting the audience but presently endured by their dead relatives and loved ones: “Do you not hear the voices of our dead parents and other people, screaming and saying: ‘Have pity on me, have pity on me . . . for the hand of God hath touched me’ [Job 19:21? We are suffering severe punishments and pain, from which you could rescue us with a few alms, if only you would.’” He then gave a sermon picturing heaven, & by that time, the audience was ready to buy indulgences according to what they could afford.”²⁰¹⁴ In another sermon, Tetzel: “Listen now, God and St. Peter call you. Consider the salvation of your souls and those of your loved ones departed.... Listen to the voices of your dear dead relatives and friends, beseeching you and saying, “Pity us, pity us. We are in dire torment from which you can redeem us for a pittance.” [Or a very small or inadequate amount of money.] Do you not wish to? Open your ears, Hear the father saying to his son, the mother to her daughter, “We bore you, nourished you, brought you up, left you our fortunes, and you are so cruel and hard that now you are not willing for so little to set us free. Will you let us lie here in flames? will you delay our promised glory?...”²⁰¹⁵ (He then gives the final jingle). From “Instructions” given to those who were to proclaim indulgences in Germany, amongst other promises, the contributors would be remitted of all their sins and the pains of purgatory, “completely blotted out”.²⁰¹⁶

THE PRICE TETZEL HAD TO PAY FOR HIS SALE OF INDULGENCES!

Perhaps Tetzel didn’t reason out what might happen to him when he told his potential contributors that when they buy indulgences, they would be forgiven of future sins. Myconius, a Franciscan friar heard Tetzel’s performance, 1517, and reported: “It is incredible what this ignorant monk said and preached. He gave sealed letters stating that even the sins which a man was intending to commit would be forgiven....”²⁰¹⁷ There is a story of a time, when after Tetzel made a large sum of money from the sale of indulgences in Leipzig, a nobleman asked him if he could buy an indulgence for a future sin. Tetzel said he could upon immediate payment, consequently: “When Tetzel departed from Leipzig, the nobleman attacked and robbed him with the comment that this was the future sin he had in mind...”²⁰¹⁸

MARTIN LUTHER’S REACTION TO THE SALES OF INDULGENCES: This was one of the things that bothered Martin Luther, for as a parish priest, monk, and professor in the Saxon town of Wittenberg, he felt that his congregation had been undermined when they crossed the river to foreign territory in order to buy letters of indulgence with the name of the pope on them. Those purchasing them, were told that they would not only be relieved of the temporal consequences of their sins, but it would also relieve the souls of their dead grandparents from the burning fires of purgatory, for they would be released, just as soon as the coin in the coffer rang. Luther protested against this practice in his Ninety-Five Theses of October 1517.²⁰¹⁹

Martin Luther entirely rejected the idea that God would forgive sins just for paying for an indulgence, or going on a crusade. An indulgence was a very special kind of banking, that was approved by the Pope. It was based on the belief that because the saints lived such perfect, spiritual lives, they earned more credit with God than what they could ever use up. “Why not sale that unused grace? Pay enough and you guarantee that you will go to heaven, no matter what you did in life. This was a good deal for sinners, especially the wealthy, and a nice source of income for the church. To Luther it was the most obnoxious perversion of religion.”²⁰²⁰

1518, Martin Luther was summoned to respond to his 95 (97?) Thesis, before a council in Augsburg. Before Cajetan, the representative of the pope, Martin humbled himself by throwing himself on the ground & asked what the errors he was to recant. Cajetan names 2, sole authority of the scriptures in matters of faith, & Luther’s teachings on the sacrament. In his 58th thesis, Luther had denied the merits of Christ being the treasures of the church distributed by indulgences. Cajetan cited a bull of Clement VI, to prove Luther’s error. Luther replied that the bull did violence to the scriptures. Luther said he couldn’t recant his doctrine of justification by faith alone without works, claiming his “error” was the teaching of scripture. Cajetan gave him an ultimatum to willingly, or unwillingly, he must recant! On the second day, Luther said that he hadn’t said anything contrary to holy scripture, the church Fathers, the papal decrees, or right reason, & that he submitted himself to their judgment. Dismissed again, Luther prepared an answer to Cajetan’s charge of heresy. He found out that the council had already decided on vilifying him a heretic, even before hearing his defense. Cajetan published a bull affirming the doctrine & sale of indulgences.²⁰²¹

1518, Ulrich Zwingli, (born 1-1-1484 at Wildhaus on the west side near the south end of Lake Constance in Switzerland). He opposed the sale of indulgences by Bernhardin Samson, apostolic commissioner, who crossed the Alps from Italy. With such opposition, backed by the archbishop of Constance & officials of Zurich, Samson returned to Rome. Zwingli also attacked the doctrine of purgatory, & later, about 1524, he rejected the Roman mass & images in the Churches. The Swiss Diet expressed a willingness to help in the abolition of the sale of indulgences too.²⁰²²

1523, Martin Luther later wrote his sermon on the dead into the Church Pastil: “For the dead, inasmuch as the scripture says nothing about them, I hold that it is not sin to pray somewhat on this wise in private devotion (for my friends) ‘Dear God, if souls can be helped, be merciful to them.’ And when this has been done once or twice let that be enough.”²⁰²³

THE ECONOMICS OF THE SALES OF INDULGENCES: As noted earlier, the incentives for different ones to sale indulgences were multi-leveled, for it had become a complicated system of economics, & lively-hood for many people. The proceeds were also split up in percentages of different amounts going to different ones in on the cuts, & to fund different areas of the church’s facilities, & projects.²⁰²⁴ Martin Luther got himself in trouble with many who were in on the whole economics of indulgences, because he was threatening their flow of revenues. If what he was preaching was right, not as many people would be willing to buy indulgences, so Martin had to be discredited, vilified, made to stop his preaching & writings against the sales, & he had to be vilified as a heretic. For what Martin was doing was like in cases in earliest Christianity, when pagans complained that the early Christians’ teachings against idols & idol worship, was threatening their economics of idolatry, reducing their lively hood in crafting things to sale for performing sacrifices to the Roman & pagan “gods” (Acts 19:24–41).²⁰²⁵ In like manners, those like Martin Luther, who preached against the sale of indulgences were making enemies of all those who were making a living off of them. Too many conflicts of interest cases were going on behind the scenes for the Catholic church to want to reform the sale of indulgences, for the ones who could repeal & change the system, reform it, like the Popes, archbishops, & civil authorities, were the same ones benefitting off of the sales, & thus the incentive was to keep it going, even increase the sales through clever salesmen, like Tetzl. So Martin Luther was going against the tide, spitting into a hurricane of established winds of economics, & soon found this out. He tried to enlist the support of archbishop of Mayence, who was also the Imperial Chancellor, very influential in Germany, but he was in on the splits & got part of the revenues. He had paid the pope a lot of money (simony), to be put into office, & was to receive half of the receipts for the sale of indulgences in his territory. The archbishop of Mainz was to share 50 % of the proceeds from the sales to repay his bank loan. So these were the types of challenges that Martin faced.²⁰²⁶

Further retrogressions of Salvation for the Dead: Eventually, these later retrogressed-forms of works for the dead, were rejected by many of the Protestants during the Reformation. Protestants discarded beliefs which were apparently at the heart of the ever day religion of the majority. Such as, prayers as efficacious for the dead. By the late medieval era, religion has been called a religion practiced by the living on behalf of the dead. But now it was taught that such good works contributed nothing to salvation. If they could not help the living, they could certainly do nothing for the dead. This was against traditional Catholic dogmas & established traditions.²⁰²⁷

In Catholic thought, the concept that souls can eventually escape out of purgatory through the communion of souls: The union of the faithful on earth, the saints in heaven, and the souls in purgatory, these concepts were established dogmas & traditions, by the 13th–16th century. Moreover, all these reflected fragmented hints that go back to the basic concepts of the earlier beliefs in the descent and baptism for the dead. The results were believed to be basically the same thing, for the souls in the spirit prison, later called purgatory, would be set free and allowed to cross over into paradise. An interesting depiction of the communion of souls depicts a soul in purgatory pleading towards one of the saints, who in turn is pleading to the three members of the Godhead.²⁰²⁸ Earlier, depictions of Christ's descent into limbo, hades, etc., also showed the souls in the lower regions with up-lifted hands pleading and praying to God for help. When help does come, during Christ's descent, the prayers of the dead, turn to prayers of Thanksgivings and praise, as the Grateful Dead come forth out of captivity & are resurrected, lifted out by hand & wrist grips.²⁰²⁹

Certain saints, such as St. Theresa [born March 28, 1515], have been portrayed in the act of pleading for souls in purgatory. In one work, she kneels before Christ who gestures with his hand toward an angel, who is in the very act of raising a soul out of the flames of purgatory, by grasping the soul's right hand.²⁰³⁰

The Emperor Salvatus reports in the Chester Last Judgment play of the sufferings that souls have to endure in purgatory. However, the different types of sufferings that different souls have to go through will eventually come to an end (Chester XXIV.90, 97—100). “Those in Purgatory thus are also in some sense pilgrims who, purging away their sins, are destined eventually for salvation, and they too can hence be assisted both by earthly prayers by people in this life and by the saints in bliss.”²⁰³¹

The jaws of purgatory, seen so often in the art works, where soul exit out of, during Christ's descent, are also mentioned as being what happens on the other side of the veil, during the mass for the dead, in which the sacramental “bread of the angels made food for wayfarers (“panis angelorum/ Factus cibus viatorum”) now will provide a safe journey through the mouth of death and into the heavenly kingdom, where man's sight will no longer be defective but will be made to see the Good, the Beatific, in the land of the living: “Tu nos bona fac videre/ In terra viventium.”²⁰³²

In order that souls may pass over from purgatory to the safety of Paradise, angelic protection and guidance were needed. Hence, in the offertory anthem of the mass for the dead, Michael the archangel, is charged with the care of all departed souls. He is also the holy standard bearer, so that those who benefit from the mass for the dead, may be introduced to the holy light, which was promise of old to Abraham and to his seed.²⁰³³

Thus in later Christian legends, they tell how Christ “...led out the holy fathers, who were in Limbo, and what He Himself did there.” Also: “His Resurrection was of great profit, for He led the prey with Him. It is written: ‘The lion is come up out of his den, and the robber of nations hath aroused himself.’ And again, ‘And I, if I be lifted up from the earth,’ that is, when I bring My soul from Limbo and My body from the grave, ‘will draw all things to Myself.’”²⁰³⁴

1545–1563, The Council of Trent, issued a decree on purgatory, affirming its existence, & the possibilities of the faithful to lighten the sufferings of the souls detained there by their prayers & masses for the dead. The Council affirmed that Christ had given power to the church to grant Indulgences, & maintained their utility. The council decreed that the Mass is a propitiatory sacrifice for the living and for the dead. The basic concept was that those present partaking of the mass and the dead are benefitted by receiving forgiveness of sins and, at least in the case of the dead, irrespective of anything they have done or do.²⁰³⁵

Later Fragments, Hints to Baptism for the Dead

Depictions of the deliverance of souls from purgatory during Masses for the Dead, was a popular theme in religious art throughout the Catholic world from the 17th to early 20th century A.D.²⁰³⁶

Later beliefs that the dead could pray to be released from hell, the spirit prison, limbo, hades, etc., seems to have eventually become part of the later practice of the communion of souls, which may have also branched out from each other from a common doctrinal and traditional source going back to the descent, prayers for the dead, and baptism for the dead.

In 1708, one Beissal, upon accepting a literal interpretation of Paul, baptized for the dead, for Emanuel Eckerling was baptized for his dead mother, and Alexander Mack for his father.²⁰³⁷

Second half of 19th century: Some of the “Holy Cards” published by Bouasse-Lebel, illustrate Catholic beliefs & rites for the dead, and the power of the clergy, whose celebration of masses could liberate souls from Purgatory. One card showed a mass being performed for the dead, during which an angel grasps the arms of a soul being liberated out of the fires of purgatory.²⁰³⁸

Further retrogression away from the original ordinances of baptism, & baptism for the dead may have resulted in how washings and anointings, plus baptism seem to have been eventually blended together to become the so-called rite of “baptism” in which water was sprinkled on the head of infants. Another retrogressed version, which would also continued on into later centuries, was developed as a results of further blending of other nations' customs and rites for the dead, in which water would be sprinkled on the corpse, and in some cases, on the coffin too.

After a person died, there was a time set aside in which friends and loved ones would come to view the body before it was placed in the grave. During this time, each visitor would bless the corpse by tracing the sign of the cross with a twig in the air above the dead person's body, while simultaneously sprinkling holy water on the body. The holy water during masses for the dead, and funerary rites was said to regenerate the dead, and was a symbol of immortality. This is very much like the rite performed by Anna Le Guen in the Plouguerneau cemetery, this gesture is said to have been derived from a long-established Indo-European & Semitic folk tradition that depicts the dead as thirsty and dry. Water was believed to metaphorically represented fertilization, & regeneration in folklore motifs, and the practice of providing libations for the dead is well known from classical sources. Archaeological and ethnographic contexts in Palestine & other parts of the Near East and the Mediterranean world show that graveside containers held water and other liquids as offerings to the dead. In Brittany, blessing with holy water figuratively regenerates the dead and symbolically grants them immortality. In later centuries, & in some cases, masses for the dead included the sprinkling of water on the corpse, at the wake and in the cemetery, this was symbolically linked to the conception of regeneration and immortality.²⁰³⁹

On up to World War II, on of the tableaux, used in helping to teach church doctrine at Breton missions, there was the depiction of the deliverance of souls from purgatory. Depicting a mass for the dead, below this scene is another that shows souls benefitting from the mass, for an angel empties a golden chalice by sprinkling drops of water on the up-stretched arms and faces of the souls in purgatory. Chalice shaped baptismal fonts seem to be retrogressed fragments of baptism for the dead. Here is another possible fragment, for after this retrogressed form of a sort of baptism for the dead by sprinkling, another portion shows what happens next. For another angel raises purified souls up out of purgatory. The soul stands clothed in a robe, and is about to embrace the angel who grasps the soul's arms as they begin to ascend. In another portion, an angelic guide is about to ascend with a soul through the clouds up into heaven. Above this, in heaven, the purified souls meet with the Virgin Mary and the Christ child who both had been crowned, enthroned and glorified centuries earlier.²⁰⁴⁰

Masses for the dead were believed to shorten the time that the deceased spent in purgatory. Hence, people continue to give Masses and services with the intentions of helping the soul of the dead.²⁰⁴¹

1950s, Masses for the dead increased in Brittany, several types of Masses for the dead were offered. "The spiritual justification for requesting Masses has its roots in medieval Catholicism, which taught that the soul must do a period of penance in purgatory before achieving heaven's grace. The prayers of the living, including services and Masses, were held to hasten the release of those suffering in purgatory."²⁰⁴²

1960's Breton and René Le Corre, note how in some cases in traditional Catholicism in Brittany, the clergy would sing the petits services, some "singing as quickly as possible the Latin psalms and matins for the dead. . . those verses of which he understood nothing and which no one understood. But people didn't need to understand: the rite functioned by itself."²⁰⁴³

1980's, in Plouguerneau and La Feuillée, there were several other types of Masses for the dead.²⁰⁴⁴ Before funerals, the curé asks the family where they would like the Masses given for the deceased relative to be sent.²⁰⁴⁵ while in other cases, Masses were not done in public, hence doubts arose as to whether or not they were actually done, even though such services were paid for.²⁰⁴⁶

WATER SPIRITS, FURTHER RETROGRESSION IN LATER LEGENDS & TRADITIONS

Now, even though later Christians continue to argue about what Paul meant in 1 Corinthians 15:29, and what it was that the earlier Christians had practiced, or if they had practiced it at all, or if Paul was making reference to a pagan rite.²⁰⁴⁷ Still, despite this, there are some lingering reminders of rites for the dead, during later centuries, when the practice, baptism for the dead, had almost faded out of the later Christian picture completely.

1st-early 4th c.? 24th Ode of Solomon as connecting baptism, with anointing and the deliverance of the dead (resurrection). While in Ode 6, too, we have a stream bringing water to the temple, and which water brought back from the dead, them, who were dying.²⁰⁴⁸ The fountain of youth, the living waters, or waters of life, & pools, etc., (Isa. 12:3, 35:6-10, 55:1, Jer. 2:13, Zech. 14:8, John 4:10, 7:37, Rev. 7:17, 21:6). Many of these were considered sometimes, types of baptism, often illustrated in art works in baptisteries of early to later Christianity, & with Christ's blood, as a type of river, flowing down to give life, wash away sins, whitened garments (Rev.7:14), & baptizes-the-dead in the place of the scull, under the cross, sometimes representing the underworld.²⁰⁴⁹

After the baptismal waters have been blessed, exorcized of evil demons & evil water spirits, later believed that might be dwelling underneath the water. The water becomes safer to enter in, & is like a fountain of eternal youth, which resurrection is too, especially in deification themes & types.²⁰⁵⁰ Thus, in later centuries, blessing of the water, blessing rivers, lakes & containers of water could be faded fragments of baptism for the dead themes.²⁰⁵¹

Restrictions of when baptisms could be performed became a challenge of what to do with all the infants that were dying un-baptized. Quarrels, such as at Sherborne, argued about what should be done to deal with these types of issues, plus about the availabilities of fonts. Plus, in other places & times about the rights, licenses, fees, or non-fees, & the privileges of administering the sacraments, especially baptism. Moreover, because many chapels sometimes didn't have fonts, there were issues of having to travel to other areas where there were fonts. These issues, plus many others, attributed to these concerns of what to do with all the babies that were dying without baptism, so in some areas, compromises were being made, as the restrictions to times when baptisms could be performed were relaxed. Plus, as laws were decreed that infants had to be baptized sooner, just in case they might die before the baptismal seasons. For example, the laws in Ine (c. 690), said that every child is to be baptized within 30 days of birth. In the Canon of Edgar, 37 days, in the laws of the Northumbrian Priests, 9 days. One of the superstitions that created the urgency to baptize infants soon after their birth was this: Many layfolk believed that the devil would fly away with those children before the canonical recognized baptismal season arrived, thus cheating them out of the chances for baptism.

1148, villagers at Herpt complained to the Abbot of St. Trond, Belgium, that their children were dying unbaptized. Thus, to comfort them in this on going issue, instructions were given to the midwives to have on hand water, in the event they need to perform an emergency clinical baptism, before the child died.²⁰⁵²

However, during the Reformation, 1500s, the blessing of the water, according to the way the Papistry of Roman Catholics did it, was rejected by different Reformation sects, like Anglicans in England. It was further thought & believed that water in a ditch, rivers, lakes, & tubs at home, could be just as holy as water in the old baptismal fonts in churches, & thus baptisms of infants could be just as valid in a ditch full of water, as in fonts. If these views spread to other areas, this may be partly why later baptismal formulas got simplified down to just prayers said by streams, lakes, & rivers for water spirit nymphs, believed to be the spirits of un-baptized babies.

1536, the Lower House of Convocation, in the Province of Canterbury, England, sent to the Upper House a list of erroneous opinions, some of which were things done in by papistry, & thus, during the reformation, they wanted to get away from. Some of the things condemned were when & where baptisms of infants could take place, that it didn't have to take place in the church only, but could be done in a tub at home, in a ditch, as it was also done in the fonts. That the holy oil "oyle" they'd use was just as good as the grease or butter that the Bishops of Rome used. That running waters in the channels, or common rivers, were just as holy as other hollow water. Such views as these, & other influences on Anglicans changes & split from Roman Catholic versions of Baptism, began to be noted. Thomas Becon, chaplain to Cranmer, in Catechism, points out that when Philip baptized the eunuch, (Acts 8:27-39), there was no hallow font, nor holy water, salt, oil, cream, spittle, candle, or other parts of the papistry. In his Humble Supplication, the anti-Roman Catholic Reformation attitude shows its contempt for the older ways, rejecting the exorcism of the water, how the "Baal's priest" bewitched the water, before the infant is baptized. Conjured the devil out of the poor infant, & rejects the use of the "vile spittle," etc.²⁰⁵³

All these factors contributed to the changes made in baptismal settings & baptism for the dead themes & settings, where fonts were changed, & baptismal prayer formulas were developed to baptize children before they died, or after they had died, when their spirits began to haunt those who neglected to have them baptized in a timely manner, according to later lore. Such concerns became parts of the legendization of baptism for the dead.²⁰⁵⁴

Baptism for the dead by immersions, in practice, in themes, in ancient settings for them, had become so faded by these later centuries, that they only retained faded hints of them, in older art, descent types, in art works of masses, liturgical rites, & prayers for the dead, & in later Christian water-nymphs fables.²⁰⁵⁵

In later centuries, when beliefs & rites became legendized in the Lowlands of Scotland, folklore about "Spunkies," have different versions of what they are said to be about, some saying they are named so, as given to the WILL O' THE WISP, a fiery devil, (pre-existence themes turned folk-lore. But, as legends go, themes often get blended together, confused, & different versions grow out of other similar themes. In Somerset, there is a belief that the Will o' the Wisp is a spunky, the soul of an unchristened child, doomed to wander until Judgement Day. In the Lowland legend, SHORT HOGGERS OF WHITTINGHAME, like baptismal prayer formulas, said to count as baptism for the dead unbaptized babies, as in other later Christian cultures, "...the bestowal of even a nickname is enough to rescue a child from the limbo inhabited by the nameless. In a similar legend of the Isle of Man told by Sophia Morrison, the little waif is saved by a token Christian baptism, an old fisherman who blesses some water, makes the sign of the CROSS in the air and says, 'I christen you as John if you be a boy and Jean if you be a girl.'" Here the heathen name-giving has been christianized."²⁰⁵⁶

Perhaps symbols, artworks, certificates, small tokens, like the said small bibs, were believed to be good-enough reminders, of the earlier mysteries. Consequently, in some cases with simple baptismal formulas & prayers, even ones to baptize the dead with, such as water spirits nymphs, (Believed in Russia & other places to be babies, who had died un-baptized & thus seek help). These simple prayers seemed to suffice, in the minds of later Christians, to give salvation to the dead, though such beliefs became parts of fables. Thus, many didn't seem to want to bother with the actual going through the motions of the original earlier Christian mysteries, even if they still knew what they were by those later centuries. But, if not, or if they did, (such as a well read illuminating manuscript writing Priest). Many perhaps still settled for later more convenient & simple prayer formulas of baptisms, & baptisms for the dead, that could be said by anyone, because authority wasn't also so much an issue anymore, & nor was priesthood powers & authority required in their thinking. Thus, in the later superstitious beliefs systems, when the doctrines & rituals were legendized, the earlier ancient settings for baptisms & baptisms for the dead were no longer being used as much.²⁰⁵⁷

In later centuries, Baptism for the dead themes retained garment themes, though in legendized forms. Moreover, the early Christian mysteries, in later times, might not have preserved their original forms, but the art works, symbols, & later types still retained many aspects, though they too began to be legendized. The times to expect the appearing of these water nymphs called the Navky & Rusalky were around Whitsunday, (the later traditions that kept in remembrance the white robes worn after baptism), the time when the dead were honored, or appeased with different gifts, & it was a time for remembering the unfortunate dead. A time when the resurrection was celebrated. Plus, the baptismal white garments associated with Whitsuntide, Whitsunday, or White-Sunday, so named after the white baptismal robes, these were remembered, for they often commemorated Easter Sunday, a favorite, & in some places designated baptismal day. We note how earlier, catechumens spent a long time getting ready, preparing for baptism, thought unclean, they had to spiritually get ready for the purification, or whitening of their souls, the washing & anointing, & bathing ceremonies to start the cleansing process before going into baptismal fonts to do baptisms for themselves, & baptisms for the dead. Plus, there going in through white curtains, possibly entering by hand & wrist grasping through those curtains. Them dressing down naked, & going down into the font, like they were symbolically dying as to the old person of sin, or descending into the watery abyss. Then being resurrected, which is what Whitsunday is a reminder of in later traditions. Then later in the initiation ceremony, them being clothed in white baptismal robes. Then later, when nude adult baptisms were changed to nude infant baptisms, near baptismal fonts, a table was provided to pile their clothes on. Like for example at Bueil in France, 1508, the children were undressed of their swathe, which is wrap that things are sometimes wrapped up in, or in several layers of fabric, or a strip of material in which something is wrapped in. In this case swaddling clothing for babies, like the swaddling the infant Christ was wrapped up in. But also, just like infant looking souls are swathed in, during assumptions of the soul after life, when the swathed soul is passed on into the hands of angels. Thus, with possible artistic reminders of this type of fragments of garment themes thus preserved to a certain extent in ritualistic afterlife symbolical death, & rising, as baptism was still a type of in these later centuries, the disrobing of adults was changed to disrobing or unswathed infant baptisms, to have them robed again, or swathed (desmailloter et mailloter).²⁰⁵⁸

Such things were later turned unto fables in later versions of this, for it seems to be in the descriptions of how the Navky & Rusalky appear, that the white garment themes were retained, though in fragmented forms. Thus, in Slavic later Christian folklore in Russia, the Rusalky, water nymphs, water-spirits, are said to be half naked, or at least have on only a white shirt. They cover their beautiful bodies with green leaves, or a white shirt without a belt, and during Whitsuntide they sit on trees, asking women for a frock, which could be a girl's dress, or a loose outer garment, in particular a long gown with flowing sleeves worn by monks, priests, or clergy. Or they'd ask girls for a shirt, thus women hanged on branches strips of linen, or tore strips of clothing from their dresses to appease them. These water nymphs were believed to be angry at times, because their mothers had let them die un-christened, or un-baptized, thus they can sometimes get mischievous, deadly & were sometimes feared by the peasantry. But, during the festivals, "Rusal'naya Week," the village girls would dance happily to the rivers and woods, where rites to dispatch the "unclean" dead were performed. Thus, these rites were done for these disembodied infant-spirits that had lived as mortals for a short time & unfortunately had died before they could be baptized. They were amongst the other "unclean" dead, which were different types of water spirits. Consequently, the Rusalky could be banished for another year. Or, as other sources say, they could be released, baptized, by a simple prayer-formulas, & these strips of clothing seem to appease their wants & pleas to be baptized & perhaps give them the clothing that sets them free from haunting the rivers, wooded areas, lakes & small streams.²⁰⁵⁹

I wonder if these were the types of lore that inspired the part in Joanne Rowling's recent Harry Potter series, when clothing given to Dobby, the house elf, to set him free: "A house-elf who serves the Malfoy family. Dobby is a pitiable creature who is bound by honor to serve his assigned family, no matter how badly they treat him. Under normal circumstances, only death will release him from his eternal servitude, unless the master of the house releases him by giving him a gift, an article of clothing."²⁰⁶⁰

The clothing, was a sock, hidden by Harry in a book, then given to the elf's master, who in turn, not knowing it was there, gives the book to the elf to carry for him. Dobby opens the book & sees the sock in it & confronts his "master" about the clothing item, how that he's now free! Perhaps these types of traditions inspired such a thing.

Thus, when the ancient settings for baptism & baptism for the dead in different types of fonts were changed & legendized. The later settings for a baptism for the dead in mythical forms, were near lakes, rivers, forests, & trees, where these water-nymphs plea for baptism. Moreover, one of the traditions that preserved in part the use of baptismal garments, in later centuries was the festival known as "Whitsuntide," Whit Sunday, or "White Sunday."²⁰⁶¹

Consequently, as with other doctrinal themes in the earliest Christian church, that became legendized to fables, many themes blended with each other, & fragments were passed down in much later centuries. For it seem possible here that Whitsunday, & its later Easter traditions, of giving new clothing to each other, (white garment themes), were still passed down into later baptismal themes, even legendized baptism for the dead themes. In that in the blends of pagan-Christian fairy tales & fables of later centuries, the giving of clothing to a fairy, elf, naked water-spirit, broonies, or other traditional character, (many believed to be the spirits of the dead, in some cases unclean spirits that seek christening. While other traditions say they're amongst the fallen angels).²⁰⁶²

Consequently, the act of giving new clothing, or strips of cloths, etc., was said to have all kinds of variable effects, depending on the stories, the location & Christian-pagan blends of customs. For some clothing items, covers their nakedness, because many fairies, & others of their mythical types, were said to often be going around naked. (This might remind us of the early Christian mysteries, how the initiates were said to strip off the old clothing, symbolic of putting off the old sinful ways, to later be clothed in white baptismal robes. Thus, later Whitesunday, and later new Easter Clothing). Thus, in different fairy tales, & lore, the different types of clothing items' variable effects will: Help them be christened, calm them, make them happy, banish them, scare them off, even set them free, or set the giver free from being bothered by these mythical creatures. For example, fathers would lay their trousers (or an outer garment covering the body from the waist to the ankles), over a new born baby's cradle, before christening, & in so doing, this was believed to protect the child, (protective garment themes), & keeps him or her safe from being carried off by fairies, in some lore, evil water spirits. Other protective clothing lore blended in with water-spirits & the like, lore (legendized baptism for the dead themes), of this type says, how if led astray off a path by pixies, that person was turn his coat, thus: "TURNING CLOTHES, may have been thought to act as a change of identity, for gamblers often turned their coat to break a run of bad luck." etc.²⁰⁶³

The people of Corinth, in Greece had the doctrine and practice of baptism for the dead, but later it retrogressed into fairy tales and legends. "According to Bulgarian tradition in Macedonia, the Navi and Navjaci (meaning dead) are invisible spirits (genii), scaring in the depths of the firmament, appearing in the shape of birds and crying like infants. They are the souls of children who have died unbaptized and in their search for their mothers they attack and trouble women in childbed. They may be set free however, if the baptismal formula is said over them." (III Myth of All Races 253).

"Ghost children who called from the dark" is the heading for a part about the navky, with art work by Winslow Pinney Pels, showing a sad, partly closed eyes, white female youth, dress in a white hooded clothing. Up in a tree, the youth's mouth is open as if calling out in the darkness, wailing in sorrow. A full moon is seen in the distance behind the youth, so its night time. This is a modern illustration of the ghost children who called out in the dark. The side comment reads: "Among the various sorts of ghosts that confronted travelers, few were as piteous as the navky, haunTERS of Slavic lands. They were the spirits of children who had died unbaptized or at their mother's hands. Most often they appeared in the shapes of infants or young girls, rocking in tree branches and wailing and crying in the night. Some begged for baptism from passersby. Some—thirsting for revenge against the living, who had let them die nameless—lured unwitting travelers into perilous places. But they were not always human in form. In Yugoslavia, it was said, the navky took the shapes of black birds, which cried in a manner that chilled the soul."²⁰⁶⁴

In the Balkan countries, the Slovenian Savje, in like manner, are believed to fly about in the form of huge black birds pleading to be baptized. If anyone should happen to have pity on them and should baptizes them, they will become their great benefactor. (III Myth of All Races 253).

Could it be that the earlier baptismal fonts, with Greek letters, & birds depicted in the art work, down in the font, which if filled with water, would have the birds down under water? Birds & eagles sometimes symbolic of heavenly messengers of the gospel, like with the Apostles who wrote the four gospels, an eagle symbolic of St. John. But also, birds help prophets ascend to heavenly places, which is also the symbolism of baptism, the ascend out of the underworld, the grave, in ascending in the resurrection to the garden paradise of God, often depicted with trees, flowing live giving water, birds & other animals.²⁰⁶⁵ Could these be earlier symbolism in baptismal settings, have later passed into legends that eventually became legendized in Greek speaking Christian lore about the birds pleading to be baptized? Birds that are supposed to be the dead spirits of babies that died without baptism, & thus seek a sort of baptism for the dead, for them through baptismal prayers?

In Little Russia, always orthodox Greek Catholic, the Mauky, are children who have either been drowned by their mothers, or were not baptized. They are said to have the appearance of small babies, or young beautiful girls with curly hair. During the fairy week they run about the fields and meadows lamenting "Mother had borne me and left me unbaptized." They are angry at those who allowed them to die unchristened, and whoever chances to hear their wailing voices should say: 'I baptize thee in the name of God the Father God and the Son and God the Holy Spirit.' This will set them free; but if for seven years they find no one to take pity on them they are turned into water nymphs." (III Myth of All Races, 253).

Among the Poles, such spirits were called "Latawei." A child that has died unchristened wanders about the world for seven years and begs for baptism; but if it meets no one to take compassion on it, it will be turned into one of these spirits."

In Russian folk beliefs, the rusalka is a water spirit which "leads travelers astray, abducts children, and is connected with the impious dead. Like the water spirit (vodianoi), he often resides in deep pools."²⁰⁶⁶ This might remind us of earlier beliefs about how the baptismal waters were bless because of the earlier type of the baptismal waters being a type of the abyss, hell, hades, limbo, etc., was eventually legendized into thinking that demons dwelt there, and thus, the waters needed to be cleansed and blessed.²⁰⁶⁷

Furthermore, in Russian folk beliefs: "Devils supposedly lived in swamps, dark thickets, deep pools or lakes on the one hand, and in hell, imagined as an expanse beneath the earth, on the other. They moved between the upper and the lower worlds through special holes in the earth (skovz' zemliu). . . [There are folk tales about how] a peasant discovered these holes in the earth and then fell into hell or, in one popular tale, pushes a wicked wife down one of them. Devils gathered in bathhouses or abandoned dwellings."²⁰⁶⁸

"A particularly large number of superstitions accompanied the Yuletide celebrations. In some areas peasants thought that unbaptized children were released from hell to walk the earth from Christmas to the Baptism of Christ."²⁰⁶⁹

The Russians believe in a species of water and wood-maids, called Rusalki. They are of beautiful form, long green hair, & swing & balance on tree branches. They bathe in lakes, rivers & play on the surface of the water. Whitsuntide is chiefly when they appear, and the people singing and dancing, also weave garlands for them, & cast them into the stream.²⁰⁷⁰

To many of the people of Southern Great Russia and the Ukraine, these rusalki were "souls of unbaptized or stillborn babies and drowned maidens."²⁰⁷¹ Faded reminders of baptism for the dead are seen in the Rusalka Week celebrations, the "farewell" or burial of the rusalka, which, by the end of the 19th century, was still wide spread in the southern province of Voronezh, Russia, even down to the 1930'. In some cases, such as in the region of the Riazan' Province, some of the peasants would fashion dolls of rags about the size of a small infant, and then place them in coffins, covering them with muslin and flowers. The village youths would then carry the coffins to the banks of the river. "Some girls pretended to be priests or deacons; they made a censor from an egg shell and sang "Lord have mercy." At the river the girls combed the rusalka's hair and bade her farewell, both laughing and crying. Then, fastening a stone or two to the coffin, they threw it in the water. After this they sang and danced the Khorovod." In acting as priests and deacons, and singing that the Lord will have mercy on these spirits who had died without baptism, and upon throwing the coffins in the water, all these seem to be faded and legendized reminders of baptism for the dead.

In historic Christianity, like in iconography of Russia & other places, hell is very often depicted as an open pit, caves, underground caverns, underneath the ground.²⁰⁷² Which is why in modern times, many of us point to the ground & say: 'If you don't repent, you're going down to hell!' Or as in Blues songs, references to "going down slow," as Howling Wolf sings in Goin' Down Slow, a song about being close to the time of dying. Perhaps why also the 1970s rock band, Led Zeppelin, sings about "In My Time of Dying," how the dying soul doesn't want to go down, but rather up! Thus, singer Robert Plant pleads for Jesus to meet him in the air, for if his wings should fail, please Jesus bring me another pair.²⁰⁷³ Going down, falling angels crashing down into the underworld, & then later fables about underground folks, are part of the legendization of the earlier Christian doctrine of salvation for the dead.

For example, in Scandinavia fables, the Elves, good ones are white, who dwell in the air, etc., & are as bright as the sun; while evil ones are black, & live underground. Other traditions of them tell of the Hill-people, (Högfolk), who are believed to dwell in caves and small hills. When seen, they have handsome human shapes. "The common people seem to connect with them a deep feeling of melancholy, as if bewailing a half-quenched hope of redemption." Occasionally, on summers nights, they can be heard outside their hills singing. When this happens, one is not to be so cruel as by the slightest word, "to destroy their hopes of salvation, for then the spritely music will be turned into weeping and lamentation." Moreover, people use to hear the people out of the hill under Gärün in the parish of Tanum, the playing of the best music by the hill-people musicians. Anyone who had a fiddle and wished to play was taught lessons by them, provided that they promised them salvation. Whoever did not, might hear them within their hill, breaking their violins, & crying bitterly.²⁰⁷⁴ The underground folks, like the underground spirits in prison in early to later Christian art works, & icons, also hoped for salvation, which was given to them, during the harrowing of hell, the Anastasis, or resurrection. In Liturgical rites for the dead, the underground souls come up out of the underworld, as "The Grateful Dead," singing praises to Christ, their deliverer.²⁰⁷⁵

The Neck in Scandinavian water spirit fables, is a great musician, sitting on the water playing a golden harp. "To learn music of him, a person must present him with a black lamb, and also promise him resurrection and redemption." In Sweden, there's the story of two boys who were playing near a river. The Neck rose to the surface of the water and played on his harp. One of the children said to him, 'What is the use, Neck, of your sitting there and playing? You'll never be saved.' The Neck began to cry bitterly & sank down to the bottom of the river. At home the children told the story, their father, who was the parish priest, told them they were wrong to say what was said to the Neck. He wanted them to go back and console the Neck with the promise of salvation. They did & upon seeing the Neck on the surface, weeping & lamenting, they said to him: 'Neck, do not grieve so; our father says that your Redeemer liveth also.' The Neck then took his harp and played most sweetly, until the sun was gone down." In another form of this legend, a priest told the Neck that: 'Sooner will this cane which I hold grow green flowers than that thou shalt attain salvation.' The Neck grieved by this flung away his harp and cried. After the priest rode on, his cane soon began to do just that, sprout green leaves and blossoms, so he went back, & told the Neck the glad tidings, & the Neck thus began to joyously play on all the whole night.²⁰⁷⁶

In Germany, there are fables about Water-people, one fable about The Peasant and the Waterman, souls of drowned people are put under pots, underwater in a house under water, & were held captive by the Waterman. The peasant waits for the Waterman to be away from his house & descend into the water house, turned up the pots, one after another & immediately the souls of the drowned people ascended out of the water & regained their freedom.²⁰⁷⁷

In numerous art works that show the baptism of Christ in the river Jordan, down in the water can be seen "water gods." In Russian folk belief, the devil tricks Adam into signing a note that said Adam and his offspring would belong to the devil when they died. After Adam signed the note, the devil "hid it under a rock in the river Jordan so that no one would find it and take Adam and [the rest of] the people from him."²⁰⁷⁸

"And from that time Adam and all the people until Christ had to go to hell and be under the devil's power after death. Christ was born and came to Jordan to be baptized. The Lord stood on the same rock under which Adam's voucher lay. The rock moved from its place, and the voucher turned up under the Lord's feet, and now all the writing was erased from it. And the voucher was destroyed, and there was no way that the devil could keep Adam and all the people in hell any longer. And the Lord came to hell and led Adam and all his race out."²⁰⁷⁹

ROOTS OF A TREE AS TYPES: Another ancient to later Christian type for the descent, and the watering (baptism) of the souls of the dead in the underworld, were the roots of a plant which extend down into the earth. Some art works show a hand clasping the hand of Adam to raise Him & the others there up out of the pit, which is right under the cross. Many early to later Christians may have saw symbolical types in the roots, trunk, branches, & higher up parts of a tree, as being types of those in different realms of existences. Those in heaven, (the higher branches), on the earth, (the trunk), & those underneath the earth, (the roots,) could have been considered as being a type of those who were in the underworld, or the lower regions, etc. Isaiah warned how that different ones had gone down, or descended into captivity, and upon being in hell they were "dried up with thirst." Hell or "the pit," was believed to have been a hot & water-less pit of fire. Thus, those who go there would be among a "multitude dried up with thirst" (Isa.5:1-14).

In some cases in early to later Christendom, Christ's flowing blood from the cross is like a life-giving stream that washes over those in the pit below the cross. Thus, the blood of the covenant watered the roots of Israel who extended down from the tree into the lower regions of the earth. Some Christian translations of the Old Testament reflect these traditions too. David wrote that those who sat in the shadows of death, or in the underworld were those who had been rebellious against the words of God, & 'contemned the counsel of the Most High.' Thus they had fallen into the pit, or into the darkness of the shadow of death. Hungry & thirsty, their soul fainted in them. They prayed unto the Lord &, He came down unto them & satisfied their hunger, & thirst by giving to them his word, which healed them. He broke down the gates of brass, and cut the bars of iron which held them prisoners & led them out of captivity by the hand, & raised them out of hell, so that they ascended up the right way into a city.²⁰⁸⁰

Every notes that the root of the connection between the tree of life and Christ's death goes back to the beginnings of Christianity. "Jesus, the second Adam, dying on Golgotha, the place of Adam's skull, must pass down the tree into the nether world, to the root of the tree in his throat, and come up again through the sepulchre, bringing Adam and Eve with him, for hell must be harrowed if the human race is to be saved. The fruit of the tree, of life or of knowledge, must be below the crucifix, on the way whereby Christ finds man, even at hell's bottom."²⁰⁸¹

On an altar cross, dated 1100—1130, the lower portion, a male and female figure, perhaps Adam and Eve, are grasping at the lower section of the cross, which is also a branch or tree. Perhaps this symbolically represents how Christ's "roots" will be rescued out of the underworld, as they cleave to Christ.²⁰⁸²

In the Fragments From The Lost Writings of Irenaeus, [A.D. 120-202.] Irenaeus used a mustard seed as a type of what Christ did. The seed was sown in the world, as in a field, and from that seed grew a tree that spread out from the heart of the earth into all the world. The descent, baptism for the dead, the resurrection, and the post-resurrection pilgrimage of Christ and his missionary forces into all the world seems to be symbolically presented here in such a way. The Pastor of Hermas, or The Shepherd [A.D. 160], also used branches, willows, twigs, trees, etc., as symbolical types for how Christ and his servants were to spread the gospel and water (or perhaps baptized) the different nations' people of the world. Tertullian [A.D. 145-220], likened the 12 apostles to fountains and rivers which should water the Gentile world. Christ, as it was predicted by Isaiah, was as a root in a thirsty land (Isa. 53:2). Christ was also likened unto a seed through which the nations of the earth would be blessed. Clement of Alexandria, [A.D. 153-193-217], used a "seed" as a type of how God had filled the universe with "the seed of salvation." Christ was "diffused over the whole face of the earth; by whom, so to speak, the universe has already become an ocean of blessings."²⁰⁸³

Later Christian artists depicted Christ as the true vine which branches are his disciples. In the Painting by Pacino di Bonaguida, some of the symbolical types were that of a great river from which the roots of a tree would be watered. Thus, there were "four heads, to water the paradise of the whole Church. Next, from the trunk of the tree let there come forth twelve branches adorned with fronds, flowers, and fruits; and let the leaf of the tree be a most effective medication, both preventing and healing, against every kind of disease, because the word of the cross is the virtue of God for the health of every believer."²⁰⁸⁴

Historic Christianity continued to use these old types, that of branches, vineyards, trees, roots, etc. One of these types was the tree of life and the tree of death, the good fruit, which the Church encouraged the saints to taste was the tree of life in paradise. The cross was seen as a type of the tree of life too, its lower portion pierces the serpent, and thus overcame death and sin. Its upper branches contain the life-giving fruit, the crucified Christ.²⁰⁸⁵ For example, the ancient Jewish apocryphal story of Seth son of Adam, journeying to Paradise in search of the oil of mercy, this was known in Europe as the Vita Adae et Evae, in Latin. The origins of the wood for the cross, in legend, is said in Geoffrey of Viterbo (c. 1180), to have come from one of the "three twigs which Hiontus, the apocryphal son of Noah received when he journeyed to Paradise."²⁰⁸⁶ Though these fragments and types were Christianized in later Christian lore, still the imagery of these types, and the use of twigs, branches, wood, and trees were preserved in later legendized versions. Which versions often connect up with types about the descent into hell and the resurrection. The fruit of the tree of Life in Paradise, in the case with historic Christian lore, "the Tree of Life in Paradise, its evergreen leaves being the word of God," have redemptive powers, to raise the human family up from the underworld, the grave, and to feed the nations with the sweetest faith.²⁰⁸⁷ Hence, such a tree is very desirable to press towards, despite the trials and tribulations which the forces of hell may put in the way to block the souls ascent towards it, because they know that if these souls cling unto God as he clings to them, clinging which often is illustrated in the art works by different types of hand and wrist grasps,²⁰⁸⁸ that these souls will be protected, and out of their grasps, and hence will be perfected and deified, when they are pulled into heaven or paradise by their hands or wrists.²⁰⁸⁹

In historic Christianity, these different parts of trees, and plant types, were used to illustrate how God and his servants sought to nourish the human family with the gospel, so they could grow up to be productive members of the assembly of the gods in the universe. Hence, there is the imagery of how the pure rivers represent the waters of life, which river proceeds out of the throne of God and the Lamb. Plus, how that the roots of the tree represent the lower regions of the underworld, the place of Adam's grave. Moreover, connecting such a place with the tree of life and the cross, which penetrates the regions of death to provide a means of ascension for the human family, and the descent into hell for God to lift souls up by their hands out of hell.²⁰⁹⁰ Hence, there is also the imagery that the roots, or souls who have been rescued out of hell, are perfected too, as they ascend through the virtues towards moral Christian perfection in their victory over the vices of hell.²⁰⁹¹

As noted, rituals often blended or acted out a number of doctrines at the same time. Baptism being a type of resurrection, often included in being a part of Christ's world wide trek themes. In that Christ's post-resurrection world trek is also part of Christ's victory over death, hell & devils.

Part 7: Christ's Post-Descent, Resurrection & World Wide Treks, Christ as Victorious Cross-Banner Bearer

CHRIST'S Victory March Throughout the World: The post-war in heaven battle between good & evil, between Christ & the Devil, are often written about & depicted in the battles that take place in the after life realms. These on going battles take place everywhere that good combats evil. The fallen angels turned demons, remember whom they fought against in the war in heaven during the pre-existence, & thus continues the war in mortal life, as, most often, unseen tempters. They also continue the battle during Christ's, Michael the arch-angel's, other angels' descents, along with St. John the Baptist's, Christ's apostles', St. Mary's & other saints' descents into the lower after-life realms, to free captive spirits. After Christ's descent, comes the Anastasis, or the resurrection, often symbolized by Christ holding a weapon-cross lance, with a banner or flag that has the cross symbol on it. For example, with the banner in his left hand, Christ reaches down as if he is in the act of pulling another soul up through the arch ways of limbo, for there are others naked souls off to the side, as if they had already been raised by the hand of Christ.²⁰⁹²

In Christian art works, Christ's cross banner is seen in numerous depictions of the descent into hell. Hence, inasmuch as seas, rivers, lakes, in some cases, were types of baptismal waters, and even where baptisms took place, it could be that this later tradition has preserved, to a certain extent, the idea of Christ's victory march throughout the world, after his ascension out of the baptismal waters, again, the ritualistic ascension out of hell to bear the sign of the cross to all nations, wandering door to door. Consequently, in Constantinople, "the baptism of Christ is celebrated at Christmas. The head of the church throws a wooden cross out into the Bosphorus and three boys swim out after it. The boy who gets the cross is blessed by the priest and given a present. He takes the cross from door to door and receives many gifts which the people give him in gratitude for being permitted to see this sacred object."²⁰⁹³

Cyril of Jerusalem [315-386 A.D.], also wrote that Christ had descended into the realms of the dead, or hades. "...He who was crucified on Golgotha here, has ascended into heaven from the Mount of Olives on the East. For after having gone down hence into Hades, and come up again to us, He ascended again from us into Heaven...." In another part of his writings: "...Death was struck with dismay on beholding a new visitant descend into Hades, not bound by chains of that place. Wherefore, O porters of Hades, were ye scared at the sight of Him? [Christ]. What was the unwonted fear that possessed you? Death fled, & his flight betrayed his cowardice. The holy prophets ran unto Him, [Christ], and Moses the Lawgiver, & Abraham, & Isaac, & Jacob; David also, & Samuel, & Esaias, & John the Baptist, who bore witness when he asked, Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another? . . . All the Just were ransomed, whom death had swallowed; for it behooved the King whom they had proclaimed, to become the redeemer of His noble heralds. Then each of the Just said, O death, where is thy victory? O grave, where is thy sting?" (1 Cor.15:55). For the Conqueror hath redeemed us. Of this our Saviour the Prophet Jonas formed the type, when he prayed out of the belly of the whale, and said, I cried in my affliction, and so on, out of the belly of hell, (Jonah 2:2), and yet he says that he is in Hades; for he was a type of Christ, who was to descend into Hades.... I am a type of Him, who is to be laid in the Sepulcher... And though he was in the sea, Jonas says, I went down to the earth since he was a type of Christ, who went down into the heart of the earth...."²⁰⁹⁴

An interesting depiction which seems to have combined the later part of the descent with the resurrection show Christ with a banner in his right hand while he clasps the hands of a naked soul as if guided the soul and others who follow, up out of the under-world below his tomb. By the tomb a number of guards lay fast asleep. And so it seems that the artist decided to depict the later moments of the descent drama at the point where Christ was almost out of the grave upon ascending up out of the under-world. Another work shows the harrowing of hell taking place in the background, for Christ clasp a hold of Adam's wrist to raise him up, others follow close behind Adam as being next in line to be rescued from hell. Another portion shows Christ coming out of the tomb during the resurrection.²⁰⁹⁵

The cross-banner became another symbol of power and victory,²⁰⁹⁶ in the dramas, and traditions of Christ's world wide march. As we have noted earlier, Christ uses it as a weapon too, when he descends into hell²⁰⁹⁷ and breaks down the doors, or gates of hell. Consequently, as they fall, they crush the devil underneath. As the host of liberated souls come out, they trample over the devil, or demons as they step on the doors, or gates. Christ defeats the demonic forces by thrusting them through with his weapon, the cross-banner spear or lance. Many artists show Christ during the moment when he is resting his foot, or standing on the fallen doors of hell. We also see the cross-banner as he ascends up out of the grave,²⁰⁹⁸ and into heaven.²⁰⁹⁹ "The figure of the risen Christ, standing with columnar strength and in the attitude of eternal triumph at the edge of the sepulcher," shows Christ as the battle banner bearer too.²¹⁰⁰ We see this banner, as he marches forth to meet with different ones, during his post resurrection visitations, after which he marches through the gates of all the nations of the earth. Hence, Christ is the reigning King of Kings, the unconquered Son, and the inspiration for the Christian Knights who also carry this same type of cross banner as they go marching onto the battle field.²¹⁰¹

Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, born a few years before A.D. 318, died 386, said this in a discourse about Christ's militant descent into the underworld, and of his victory march as the Battle Banner Bearer. "He despoiled Amente, He brought up therefrom the [souls who were in] captivity, and departed with them to His Good Father." He also follows this by mentioning how Christ redeemed the captives, and displayed "the Cross like the standard-bearers of an army."²¹⁰² Cyril then follows this with comments that hint to different aspects of the ritualistic drama of the descent into hell,²¹⁰³ which, in many cases, baptism is.²¹⁰⁴ In addition, how the devil is trampled under their feet, and how Christ is raised from the dead by the Father. Also, how he begins to appear to his apostles to instruct them and command them to go forth into all nations.²¹⁰⁵

Cyril also relates the story about one of Christ's post resurrection visitations, in which he was bearing a cross of light. According to Cyril, a righteous man, by the name of Kleopaa, saw "the form of a Cross of light that proceeded from the tomb, and rested on the bier of the dead man; and straightway the dead man rose and sat up . . ." Later, the Jews asked him to tell them who raised him, he answered: "It was a Man of light Who came forth from the tomb bearing a Cross of light, and He stood over me, and raised me up . . ."²¹⁰⁶ Thus, did Christ's resurrected body shine with great light as he grasps this person's hand to raise him?

In Hans Holbein's allegory of the Old and New Testament, Christ ascends out of the grave with his banner cross in his right hand. Under his foot is a skeleton and demonic monster, to symbolize his victory over death and the devil.²¹⁰⁷

13th–14th, a number of artists preserved numerous elements of Christ's world wide trek traditions, such as the customs of receiving poor and hungry wanderers, etc. But also, some series of art works show Christ, as the battle banner bearer ascending out hell with the saints of old. Then of him ascending out of the tomb. Then, of him appearing to Mary in the garden, perhaps in the guise of a gardener. His wounds being clasped, or felt by St. Thomas. Furthermore, in this same series, Christ is shown making his victory march throughout the world, for he is standing, or perhaps even striding on a sphere, while holding the cross-banner. In another section, the Holy Spirit descends on the apostles to empower them with spiritual gifts, one of which would equip them with the languages they would need to speak the gospel in the languages of the peoples in the different nations they were about to be sent to. Then, in another section, Christ is enthroned in a last judgment scene.²¹⁰⁸ All of these elements, as we have seen, make up different aspects of the concepts behind the themes of Christ's world wide treks.

1555, an altarpiece by Lucas Cranch the Younger, shows Christ, with his right foot on a skeleton, representing death, and under his left, is a fiendish lion, perhaps representing his victory over the devil. In his hands is a clear see-through banner cross, which he thrusts into the mouth of the lion.²¹⁰⁹

Father Louis Coulange notes how that the "lieutenants of Satan, were, on many occasions, expelled by Christ. But Satan himself gained a brilliant victory over Christ, since he succeeded in crucifying Him. But never was victory more ephemeral! Satan had scarce ended his toil when he suffered a double defeat: a defeat upon earth, where mankind was delivered from his yoke, a defeat in hell, which ceased to be under his dominion. The victor was vanquished." To further demonstrate this point, Coulange goes on to cite from comments about this from such Christian Fathers as St. Augustine and St. Gregory the Great.²¹¹⁰

Isaiah's words about the Lord lifting up an "ensign," the flag or banner, may have inspired Christian Knights, and Christian artists, for the LORD: "will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly" (Isaiah 5:11-24, & 26). Also: "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." (Isa. 11:1-2, 9-12).

The scriptures predict how the many different races of people, from the four quarter parts of the earth, would come out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people in order to be gathered on Christ's right-hand side before his throne during The Final Judgment. However, before this was to happen, the different nations of the earth would have to be given a fair chance to hear the gospel. And if they didn't hear it in this life, they would get a fair chance in the afterlife realms.²¹¹¹

In Athanasius' 6th Letter, written about A.D. 334, he says that: "This does not mean that the descent of the Lord was without profit, for it gained the whole world . . ."²¹¹²

In speaking of Christ's enemies, the later Church father, S. John Chrysostom, A.D. 354—407, says that they were ignorant of Christ's dispensation. For "the dispensation which is being accomplished, and the mystery, they are ignorant of. For they knew not that the Cross is to shine forth so brightly; that it is made the Salvation of the world . . ."²¹¹³

Another aspect of this whole drama of Christ's intercontinental victory march is how Christ was also seen as the Victorious War Lord. This is an image that Christian kings attempted to live by because of how they were considered to be God's chosen anointed ones on earth.²¹¹⁴ Furthermore, during the "sacral anointing" they promised to protect churches "under the obligations contained in the office or ministerium bestowed on him by God to act as His 'vicar on earth.'"²¹¹⁵

This aspect is connected with the idea of how Christ is the Pantocrator. For example, a medallion around A.D. 1148, has an inscription in Greek which says that the Almighty says: "The heaven is my throne, the earth is my footstool."²¹¹⁶

In the numerous depictions of Christ post resurrection activities, artists have made him appear as though he is on the march throughout the world, and throughout the different realms in the after life. Christ is often depicted as the great standard bearer, the victorious King of Kings who makes war on the evil forces scattered throughout the world, and in the underworld.²¹¹⁷ This is one reason why he is often depicted holding a cross-banner which he uses as a weapon too. The symbolical imagery of the crushed beasts²¹¹⁸ of hell,²¹¹⁹ the fallen devil, & his fallen host, being crushed,²¹²⁰ thrust through, defeated, & trodden under-foot.²¹²¹ All these are parts of the whole drama, make up different aspects of Christ's march throughout realms, and worlds. Its ritualistic types in baptism, also had many types of this march too, for as it was dramatized, and enacted during early to later Christian mysteries, baptismal initiations, and later liturgies; it became a type of Christ's descent, resurrection & triumphant march over death. Those who received the mark, or stigmata, the wounds of Christ, during the baptismal ceremony, were types of Christ on the march as the wounded warrior. Those who passed through the ritualistic aspect were also likened unto anointed Christs, ready to go forth and defeat the demonic forces, and march forth to free captive spirits out of the underworld, just as Christ did during the descent into hell.²¹²² And as they ascended up out of the font, they were like Christ, again, still on the march.²¹²³ As Christ rests his foot upon his fallen enemies, this symbolized how he was the Father's champion, the victorious undefeated Son. Hence, not only could no door, or gate stop him from marching through;²¹²⁴ there was also no demonic force in the universe which could defeat and stop him too.²¹²⁵ This is why we often see the demons with expressions of dismay,²¹²⁶ for they can't stop the harrowing of hell, from taking place.²¹²⁷ They can't defeat the Son of God. All who attempt to challenge him become his foot stool, as they fall before him.²¹²⁸ Christian Knights must have been inspired to see works of art showing Christ breaking into Satan's castle—fort in order to free the captive souls from his dungeons.²¹²⁹

Furthermore, since baptism was considered the ritualistic type of Christ's descent into hell,²¹³⁰ It is no wonder that we should see the same types of symbolism on baptismal fonts, as we do in depictions of how Christ is crushing the devil under his foot, as with also evil demons, during the harrowing of hell, where he liberates the captive spirits held there.²¹³¹ Wherefore, under some baptismal fonts, a number of beasts, symbolic of the forces of evil, are being crushed by "the grace of baptism."²¹³²

A.D. 1065, in the St. Maria in Kapitol, Cologne, is a carving on a door depicting Christ's baptism. It shows Christ in the river Jordan crushing under his feet "a sea monster from Greek mythology, which may be doing double duty as a symbol of evil crushed by the Saviour."²¹³³ Thus, one of the symbols of a victory over ones' enemies was to depict a victorious King, Queen, or Knight crushing their enemies under their feet.²¹³⁴

In an early ninth century plaque from Genoels—Elderen, Christ, holding a book in his left, and a cross over his shoulder held by his right hand, is "treading on the beasts" under his feet. Hence, it is as though he is represented here as making his victory march, defeating the forces of darkness, as he takes the gospel to the different nations around the world.²¹³⁵

800, on a book cover, Christ is treading on the beasts, dressed in militant clothing and arms.²¹³⁶ Lundy notes some of the similarities between Greek monuments and those of the Christians, for example, Hercules' return from Hades, may have been considered to be similar to Christ's descent & ascension out of Hades. Concerning this, Lundy asked this question: "Can all this be a type of what is so often grouped together on the Christian monuments, Christ, after his resurrection, subjugating the powers of darkness, and doing His work of human restoration in founding His Church by Apostolic commission to preach the Gospel to all nations, and thus undoing the effects of the first human transgression?"²¹³⁷

St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, A.D. 395, wrote in his City of God, that Christ defeated the Devil, and trampled him under his feet. And that all the ends of the earth will remember, and turned to Christ. Thus, all nations will worship him for he is the ruler over them all.²¹³⁸

Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, 296—373, wrote that Christ defeated death, and the devil, for by trampling death, he made him loose his strength. He then follows this with a type, for just as the sun rose from the darkness to lighten up the world, so also did Christ shine forth, driving away the darkness. Thus, "the whole regions of earth is illumined by him."²¹³⁹ Again hinting to the combat which Christ had in the underworld, and of his victory march throughout the world, after he had trampled over death, and the devil, when he rose from the dead.

A document read and used by early Christians from the late second century onward is the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. These writings are said to be the utterances of the dying patriarchs, the sons of Jacob. Early Christians saw in these Testaments, a number of prophetic types of Christ. In The Testament of Asher Concerning Two Faces of Vice and Virtue, we read about the dispersion of the descendants of Israel being scattered unto the four corners of the earth. And how that the "Most High shall visit the earth; and He shall come as man . . . breaking the head of the dragon through water. He shall save Israel and all nations, God speaking in the person of man."²¹⁴⁰ The type which early Christians may have seen in this case is how the Lord would go among the descendants of scattered Israel, by going into the four corners of the earth, after he has trampled over Satan or has broken "the head of the dragon through water." This became a type of Christ's ascension out of hell, for in certain depictions of the baptism of Christ, he crushes the dragon in the waters of Jordan.²¹⁴¹ This is followed by the victory march of Christ throughout the world.

In the early to later Christian art works that show the doctrine of the two ways, and which show souls struggling and trampling Satan under their feet as they ascend up the right-hand path toward Christ. They would have made it all the way to the top where Christ stood with open arms to receive them, and grasp their hands as he welcomed them into paradise.²¹⁴²

MILITANT CHRIST CONQUERS UNDER-WORLD & THE WHOLE WORLD

CHRIST, AS THE LIBERATOR: In Ivan Karamazov's vision of the Grand Inquisitor, Christ returned to earth, but is arrested, by orders of the Grand Inquisitor. They don't realize that Jesus the prisoner, is in fact, Jesus the Liberator. Hence, "Christ's return to the streets of Seville was a threat, and the Inquisitor ordered him to "go, and come no more." And the legend concludes: "The Prisoner went away."²¹⁴³

MILITANT-CHRIST: Christian Knights, Kings, and artists, may have also been inspired by other passages, such as the one in Daniel, who wrote that, "the judgment was set, and the books were opened. . . . And there was given him [the Son of man] dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. . . . And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."²¹⁴⁴

The early Christian, Lactantius, A.D. 260—330, cites Daniel 12:13 & Psalm 110:1, which foretold Christ's victory march throughout the world, and how he would reign over all peoples, tribes, and languages, and make his enemies his foot stool.²¹⁴⁵ Passages like these must have been used to encourage the militant conquests of later Christian Kings, and Knights who may have sought to scripturally justify the actions of their militant Orders.

During the 12th century, art works of Christ, as the great Battle Banner Bearer, must have inspired Church leaders, Christian Kings, Nobles, Knights, and missionaries, to march forth into the world to spread the gospel.²¹⁴⁶ And like Christ had earlier, to fight against the forces of darkness, and for the cause of Christ. Even later song writers have preserved this theme as they added a poetic note to the whole drama, Onward, Christian Soldiers.²¹⁴⁷ In it, Christ is the Battle Banner Bearer, leading the way as they go marching off to war to defeat Satan's forces of darkness. In the hymn, We Are All Enlisted, there are the same types of righteous militant Christ themes. Furthermore, it contains a rally cry to "rally round the standard of the cross" and join the army marching forth to fight against the forces of evil throughout the world.²¹⁴⁸

Julia Ward Howe's The Battle Hymn of the Republic, also present this topic too, that of a Militant Christ, treading forward and onward while making his victory march to spread truth throughout the world.²¹⁴⁹

A.D. 1095, Pope Urban called a great meeting of churchmen and nobles. During it he preached a powerful sermon urging the nobles to rescue the Holy Sepulcher from the infidels. "It is the will of God that you fight this quarrel in his cause," said he. "All who heard him were deeply moved by his words and gave the shout: "Deus vult!" (God wills it!). After falling to their knees, they took an oath to service in the holy war. "Then noble after noble pressed forward to receive the cross of red cloth to wear upon his breast as a symbol of his vow. Those who took the cross were called crusaders, that is, cross-bearers."²¹⁵⁰

Some of the Orders that were created, as a result of the Crusades, were the Knight Templars, A.D. 1119.²¹⁵¹ Their jobs were to protect pilgrims, and wage war on infidels. Another Order was the Knight Hospitalers, A.D. 1131. They were to aid the sick and the poor. Other Orders went by the names of the Cistercian Order,²¹⁵² and the Teutonic Knights.

The Teutonic Knights were a militant Christian Knight Order which rose to power during the 12th century. Some of these Orders remained true to their vows and quests to go forth and attempt to win souls over to Christ. And like the militant—Christ, in the art works,²¹⁵³ they believed that they were fighting battles against the forces of darkness,²¹⁵⁴ and were fighting for the cause of Christ. Thus, many of them justified bringing souls to Christ through brutal combative methods, and force of arms. Furthermore, when the traditions about Christ's intercontinental victory march throughout the earth had faded into these later traditions about the militant-Christ, who marched throughout the world to conquer the nations. This element of the whole theme and drama faded even further among those who sought to justify evil versions of conquests for more lands and power. And so, as the militant-Christ version of Christ's world wide march was passed on into certain militarized Orders, it became perverted, and distorted, among the war-Lords, and war-Kings of Christendom.²¹⁵⁵

On the other hand, the more charitable Orders followed a different theme in the whole drama that makes up the different elements to the stories, legends, doctrines, customs, and symbolism behind Christ's world wide trek. The Order after Saint Benedict, or the Benedictine monks, nuns, and the friars, or mendicant Orders, for example, took to heart the charitable side. In fact, they built their lives around the idea that Christ was wandering about the earth in the guise of a poor person, leper, pilgrim, and wounded wanderer.²¹⁵⁶ One of the rules²¹⁵⁷ in their quests for Christian perfection,²¹⁵⁸ were to make themselves ready for Christ's visits on earth. In so doing this, they believed that this would help them be ready for their pilgrimage into his heavenly Kingdom, when they died. For Christ, according to this version of the whole drama, was considered among these charitable orders, to be in the guise of an ordinary looking peasant who passed by in the streets, or the old woman begging for food at the door, or a man of sorrows. In a scriptural sense, he was considered to be in the guise of "one of the least of these, his brethren" (Matt. 25), when he wandered about from places to places. This was one of the ways in which he would test them to see if they were doing their duties, living his teachings, and striving toward Christian moral perfection.²¹⁵⁹

"The knight was a Christian soldier, and he and his fellows were supposed to form, in a way, a separate order, with high ideals of the conduct befitting their class.... In short, chivalry was the Christianized profession of arms."²¹⁶⁰

Furthermore, while the Christian Knights were inspired by the Militant Christ version, they strived to be as bold, and as strong in battle as Christ, when he defeated Satan in the underworld.²¹⁶¹ Many Friars and monks, on the other hand, were inspired by the charitable version, such as St. Francis.²¹⁶² Thus, they sought to follow the example of the wandering Christ by becoming beggars, and pilgrims. They "wandered from place to place, living on charity—hence [they were] called "mendicant" or "begging" orders."²¹⁶³ These orders came into prominence during the 13th century, and the best known were the Franciscans, named after St. Francis, and the Dominicans.²¹⁶⁴

After the descent into hell, comes the victory march throughout the world where the kings of the world make way for the reign of the King of the world.²¹⁶⁵ For example, the Florentines, and the feast of the Epiphany, includes a ritualistic gift bearing procession of earthly Kings, in which those who take part in this procession represent the magi. Their gifts were likened to the gold, frankincense, and myrrh presented to the Christ-child. The Kings' offerings "could signify the submission of all earthly rulers to the divine kingship of Christ."²¹⁶⁶ Thus, another guise, in which Christ wanders the world in, is that of the victorious King of Kings. A theme that inspired some of the later Christmas traditions, but of which also has its roots in the militant Christ traditions. During sixteenth century Germany, Christmas gifts for children were tied up in bundles supposedly brought by "der Haus-Christ." As time went by the old tradition of das Christ-kind became so distorted that different versions eventually began to become popular. Occasionally the Divine Infant was presented as an angel, a good fairy, or a tall child. Even a girl in a white dress, and with long blond hair. The tinsel angel with the same description is placed on the tree as the "Christ Child of Nürnber" because it is made there.²¹⁶⁷

CHRIST, THE UNCONQUERED SON: We will now consider how some aspects of this particular earlier guise relate to December 25, and later Christmas customs. Hence, among different guises, types, and doctrinal themes, in the different elements for some aspects of the Militant Christ, we can see how its later versions, impersonations, and legacies, are traceable through the layers of time to some of the practices & policies²¹⁶⁸ of certain Church Fathers.

"The first recorded December 25 celebration was in Antioch, the middle of the second century. Some priests and members of the church there had a feast in honor of the occasion. They tried not to be too noticeable when they did it—Christians were being persecuted at the time. There were few of these celebrations for another hundred years or so. It was a real risk to have one. When Roman Emperor Constantine became a Christian, though, a lot of people in the church could openly express their joy by making their celebrations of Jesus' birth into elaborate festivities."²¹⁶⁹

One of the parallels, Christian and pagans noted was between the Christians' version of Christ as the Unconquered Son, and Saturn, the Unconquered Sun, a pagan god of the Romans.²¹⁷⁰ Thus, some Christmas traditions in northern Europe, were adopted from the pagans' religions & they date back to the times of the pagan Roman festivals of "Natalis Solis Invicti (the Birth of the Invincible Sun-god)."²¹⁷¹ And so, Christians attempted to convince pagan Romans, that their version was a satanic counterfeit. For Christ was the true Unconquered Son. Upon writing about how these pagan versions were later Christianized, Coffin wrote that: "the Church Fathers were ultimately successful in regrouping the excitements of the Roman mid-winter about the Mass of Christ, Jesus, becoming the "Unconquered Son" and December 25 emerging as a major feast-day of the Church."²¹⁷²

One of the Greek gods was renamed "Saturn" by Romans, who then called their new solstice celebration

“Saturnalia,” which lasted from December 17 to 24. During the reign on Roman Emperor, Aurelian, 270–275, he sought to have the people worship Persian sun gods, & proclaimed “Dies Invicti Solis,” or “Day of the Invincible Sun,” on December 25, the birth date of Mithra, a Persian god of light. Thus, in Mithraism, as it was blended in with early Christians’ versions of the militant-Christ, the unconquered son, the birth date of Christ as being December 25th, was taken over through Roman Emperor, Constantine’s influences, during the 4th century. He still believing in paganism & Mithraism, & using Christianity to become the State religion, he also changed December 25 from a day celebrating Mithra’s birth, to a day celebrating Jesus’ birth instead. By 529, Roman Emperor Justinian declared December 25th to be a civic holiday during which there was to be no work for his subjects. As later Christian missionaries spread throughout the world, they began to adopt the winter customs of the various nations and then blend them with Christmas worship. In Northern Europe & Britain, in December, for winter solstice, they’d hang up evergreen branches in front of their homes to remind them to have faith that the warm planting weather would eventually return again.²¹⁷³

Consequently, in 601, Pope Gregory (the Great, reigned 590–604), told Augustine of Canterbury to follow the pagan custom of decking the temples with greenery, by doing it to the Christian churches. The pagan feasts were to be Christianized too.²¹⁷⁴ In so doing this to the pagan feasts, they hoped to eventually bring the people slowly over from them & the gods of the Romans, to the worship of Christ. Thus, one of the policies of Pope Gregory I was this. Rather than make war on the pagans for celebrating their festivals, he tells his fellow Church leaders, let us let them hold them, while we slowly turn them toward Christianized versions of their festivals. Therefore, let us at least “meet the Pagans half-way, and so bring them into the Roman Church.”²¹⁷⁵ Furthermore, instead of having the people think about the pagan gods when they held their feasts. If the feast was Christianized, so they thought, the people will begin to eventually start to think more about Christ during the birthday of the “Invincible Sun-god.”²¹⁷⁶

“Nor let them now sacrifice animals to the Devil, but to the praise of God kill animals for their own eating, and render thanks to the Giver of all for their abundance . . . For from obdurate minds it is impossible to cut off everything at once.”²¹⁷⁷ Thus, many Christians of this time believed that the militant—Christ was the true Unconquered Son. And so, the pagans’ version had to some how be smothered out of the picture, and this was one way they figured it could be done.

Consequently, the British Christians were allowed to keep of their own traditions & customs, those aspects judged as not evil. Thus, “...in accord with sound Catholic principles he [Pope Gregory the Great, reigned 590–604] decided that whatever was not evil in the tradition and customs of these people should not be destroyed but taken over by the church and filled with Christian spirit.” Gregory advised that “the pagan feasts be transformed, but not done away with.”²¹⁷⁸

Tristram Potter Coffin notes how earlier Christians couldn’t agree upon the time for the commemoration of Christ’s birth. Also, how in many places, it was celebrated during the feast of the Epiphany, January 6, “when Jesus was supposed to have manifested Himself to the Magi and so to the Gentiles.”²¹⁷⁹ Epiphany was a “celebration of the manifestation of the divine nature of Christ to the Gentiles as represented by the Magi.”²¹⁸⁰ While in the Eastern Churches, during the 12th century, baptism was among the 12 feasts celebrated. It “was an important feast in Byzantine liturgy, for the eastern Church regarded this event as the true Epiphany, the revealing of Christ to the world.”²¹⁸¹

Whitsunday, was often connected with baptism, because the very name Whitsunday was derived from the white robes and garments²¹⁸² which people would be clothed in after they were baptized. In this ritualistic type for the ascension out of the underworld, the garment was a type of how Christ clothed Adam, who represents humanity, in a glorious immortal body.²¹⁸³ “He thereby clothes the nakedness of Adam, and with him that of the whole of mankind, in the garment of glory and incorruptibility.”²¹⁸⁴

In some areas of Christendom, Epiphany also commemorates the “founding of the Church, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and the mission to bring the Christian faith to all people throughout the world.”²¹⁸⁵ What part baptism and these garments played in the whole ritualistic drama of Christ’s underworld battle, and victory over the devil, and his forces there²¹⁸⁶ was this! They served as a ritualistic reminder of Christ’s ultimate victory over death and the grave. Furthermore, of his glorious power to clothe, or vest the human races in the resurrection. As the body puts on the white baptismal robes in rituals; so also does Christ put on our spirits our renewed bodies in the resurrection. This is why many art works of the Christ’s descent into hades, hell, limbo, purgatory, & anastasis (or resurrection); often show souls being raised naked, by different types of hand & wrist grips.²¹⁸⁷ For as Christ’s post-resurrection victory march begins, they are clothed in robes, garments or some type of blanket, as part of these post liberation dramas.²¹⁸⁸ This got incorporated into the types of Christ’s victory march throughout the world, in the ceremonies of becoming a Christian Knight, & in the ceremonies of investitures. Note the word investiture includes “invest,” this is the aspect of protective clothing, for the investiture is promised protection by force of arms, if necessary. So also, in the earlier Christian mystery dramas, as the clothing in baptism, are types of clothing in the resurrection & soul’s ascent into heaven or paradise were to protect the naked souls, thus clothed, from the arrows, darts & weaponry of the demonic forces in the air. So also, the Christian Knight is clothed in protective armor to thus join in the victory march as a soldier for St. Michael, the arch angel often depicted defeating the devil, who is sometime depicted with Christ during his battles in the underworld. The Knight is also a soldier for Christ, which in these cases are a militant Christ, crashing through the gates, or kicking down the doors of hell to militantly gain victory over the devil & hell, which are often personified as having fallen, crushed under the gates, or doors of hell, limbo, hades, as seen in so many art works all over early to later Christianity.²¹⁸⁹

The ceremonial hand clasping rites of paying homage to the Christian Kings, where Lords, Earls, Barons, Knights & Nobles would place their hands in between the Christian king’s hands, & swears an oath to fight for the Kings, is also part of this later carry over of the Militant Christ’s victory march throughout the underworld & his post-descent into hell, victory march throughout the world to defeat evil wherever it might be found.²¹⁹⁰

Hence, in ascending up out of the underworld as the victorious undefeated champion of the Father,²¹⁹¹ his victory march throughout the world was announced by the fact that the saints of old had been raised, and clothed in immortal bodies, and had appeared to many to testify of these things.²¹⁹² Consequently, this ritualistic reminder, was part of the whole drama²¹⁹³ of how he manifested himself to all the nations of the world.²¹⁹⁴ It is fitting then, that baptism, as a ritualistic type of Christ’s descent, underworld battle,²¹⁹⁵ and ascension out, should also be connected with Epiphany. Accordingly, in this ritualistic type in Baptism, there is this motif, that of the manifestation, & the revealing of Christ’s true identity,

“when He openly begins His service to redeem the world.”²¹⁹⁶

Another element to all this is in the way in which many Christians believed that Epiphany represented how the earthly Kings submitted their rule to Christ. This is why Christ is also entitled the King of Kings.

Inasmuch as baptism was, in many cases, a ritualistic descent into the underworld, hades, limbo, etc., to defeat the devil and his forces there, and to rescue the captive spirits, & to preach the gospel there. We also note how in historic Christendom, in the different versions of this type, that there are elements that tie into the ritualistic types of Christ’s victory march throughout the world. For in some cases, in some baptismal ceremonies & liturgies, there is the baptismal message that invites the initiated to join in the victory march: “You are reconciled and the cosmos is pacified, because the powers which swayed it have been despoiled and now follow in the train of the triumphal progress of Christ.”²¹⁹⁷ In other liturgical dramas enacting these types of things, perhaps they follow behind the “grateful dead” who sing and give thanks unto the King of Glory, (Christ). Christ emerges from the tomb “as the conqueror comes from hell, where he has put the tyrant in chains and has opened Paradise.” Leading this victory march is Christ, who raises the “bright banners of his victory.”²¹⁹⁸

In other baptismal types, which illustrates Christ’s defeat over the tyrant of the watery abyss, is this: Christ’s descent into the abyss is likened unto how Moses, and the children of Israel, passed through the Red Sea. Augustine²¹⁹⁹ used this type, but also, it is seen in some baptismal exorcisms too.²²⁰⁰ Consequently, they present the imagery of how the “Pharaoh” and his armies were likened unto how Satan and his fallen angels were defeated through baptism. Which again, is the ritualistic type of Christ’s descent, resurrection, and victory march throughout the world. All of which caused the kingdoms of powerful kings to be made low.²²⁰¹ Thus, one of the imageries, basic messages, and concepts that some baptismal liturgical dramas presented was how Satan’s complete dominion over the underworld, and the whole world, was to give way to Christ, the battle banner bearer and conqueror. For as Christ marches forth to take over his enemies’ dominion, no demonic force can stop his advances.²²⁰²

Other types of processions in connection to the resurrection have preserved this same type of imagery too. For example, the Florentines, during the feast of the “Epiphany” included a ritualistic gift bearing procession of earthly Kings, or those who represented the Magi, who gave gifts to the Christ-child. In the case with the Kings’ offerings, this very act “could signify the submission of all earthly rulers to the divine kingship of Christ.”²²⁰³ Christians also saw a type in the first manifestation of Christ to the Three Wise Men as likened unto “his manifestation to all mankind on the day of resurrection.”²²⁰⁴

This, of course, is certainly the day when Christ began his post resurrection intercontinental trek around the earth to manifest himself unto the nations. Wherefore, the Magi were believed to represent humanity paying homage and devotion, and acknowledging the majesty of Christ as King of Kings.²²⁰⁵ In earlier centuries, Christians, in defense of their beliefs against the charges made by early anti-Christians, and pagans, wrote how Christ went to other nations around the world. He did this, says Origen, in order to shows his superiority over all rulers of the world.²²⁰⁶ And as Tertullian says, Christ entered the nations by breaking through the doors and gates of the different kingdoms, and entering into their provinces, he causes them to pay him homage, to become his subjects, and to reign as King of Kings.²²⁰⁷ Accordingly, in these later traditions about Christ’s post resurrection trek, and the feast of Epiphany, or his manifestation to the world; we see how those earlier beliefs and types were passed down to later generations of Christians. The doors and gates are opened so that the King of glory may enter in, and so that all the Kings of the earth will adore him, and all nations serve him.²²⁰⁸

However, unlike the fierce fighting Knights of later centuries, who accepted the later versions of the Militant Christ, earlier Christians, such as Arnobius, upon writing, A.D. 297—303, against the early anti-Christians among the Heathens, asks: “Did He [Christ] ever, in claiming for Himself power as king, fill the whole world with bands of the fiercest soldiers; and of nations at peace from the beginning, did He destroy and put an end to some, and compel others to submit to His yoke and serve Him?”²²⁰⁹

In some cases, the militant Christ traditions, eventually were blended in with other rituals of the old mysteries, such as anointing or coronation ceremonies. “Christmas and Easter were favourite coronation days; as commemorations of the Lord’s Advent and the promise of salvation, they were appropriate for the beginning of a reign—for the advent of a new king.”²²¹⁰ After all, as Rev. Professor James S. Stewart, D.D., put it: “Easter is the triumph of God over death.”²²¹¹ Consequently, the anointed Christian kings, in many ways, were looked upon as a type of Christ on the earth. Having passed through the coronation ceremony, the unction, or the anointing of the holy chrism, they were looked upon as “anointed ones” just as Christ is the “anointed one.”²²¹² In earlier centuries, the Christians were anointed ones, or “Christs” ready for combat against the demonic forces of darkness in this life, and in the after life realms.²²¹³

Geoffrey R. King wrote how Christ is “invading a universe, filling all things! By virtue of His dying as this world’s Redeemer, He is supreme in Heaven—He is supreme in the world of the dead, even down to the depths of hell where the devil’s angels are held captive for the last great Assize. The Mighty Lord! Mightiest in Heaven! Mightiest on earth! Mightiest in hell! Lord of the universe! Lord of eternity! Best of all, my own dear Saviour!”²²¹⁴

As the centuries went by, the Christian kings took on this militant Christ imagery, and thus became imitations of the militant Christ on the march throughout the world. “According to Byzantine theory, God was the universal source of all authority, both religious and secular; Christ as the Divine Logos was the supreme priest and king on earth united.” While in the East, “the emperor was God’s minister on earth and he ruled in imitation of the Almighty” this is why in some of the icons, the emperor looks like Christ, as he is being crowned by Christ.²²¹⁵

During these centuries, numerous religious leaders also played the part of the “vicar of Christ,” for they were the substitute Christs on the earth.²²¹⁶ This may be one reason why they would greet each other with the hand clasping kiss of peace, as if they were seeing Christs in his substitutes. Just like the monks would see Christs in the strangers, pilgrims, the poor, and royals that came to their doors.

Furthermore, other elements of the earlier Christian mysteries were preserved, to a certain extent, in the Easter and Christmas coronation ceremonies, and liturgical rites, that enthroned Christian kings, and emperors too, for along with anointings, crownings, and hints to the deification, there is also references to how the imitation of Christ “is robed in majesty”. Plus, references to imagery about victorious combats, with the defeat of the enemies, after which they become their footstools.²²¹⁷

“Kings favored it [Christmas] as a day for coronations. Charlemagne was crowned Holy Roman Emperor on Christmas Day, 800 A.D. William the Conqueror chose Christmas of 1066 for his coronation as King of England. Later.... Baldwin of Edessa received the crown of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem on Christmas of 1100.”²²¹⁸ Hence, the militant and civil powers preserved, in such ceremonies, the traditions of the militant Christ, whose earthly counterparts, the anointed ones, or coronated Kings, were likened to militant Christs who enforced the civil and religious laws, and went forth, as Christ had, to conquer and bring souls to Christ, even if by force of arms, such as during the crusades.

Earlier, the early Christians at Rome, and in other areas, upon noting, like their critics, that there were parallels between the Christians and the pagans, presented the following polemical response: There were similarities because the pagans’ forefathers had borrowed from the divine things of God. Furthermore, there were resemblances because their forefathers had heard about the knowledge of Christ’s birth, life, death, resurrection, & the mysteries through the true prophets who foretold such things among the nations of the world. Also, the demons among the nations caused certain ones to set up rival counterfeits, and thereby discredit the true prophetic version among the people in the different countries around the world. Consequently, these counterfeits were what the pagans inherited. That’s why there were correlations between the pagans’ versions, and the Christians’ true prototype.²²¹⁹

SYMBOLS OF POWER AND CONQUEST: Orbs: A number of earlier Christian writers believed & defended the doctrine that Christ reigns over the whole world, as compared to earthly kings, and rulers, who could only reign over certain areas only.²²²⁰ In later centuries, this concept was symbolically depicted in the royal symbols which were to become a part of the later symbols used by Christian kings. A good case in point is an art piece that depicts Charles V, by Pieter Balten, 1580, and which shows the orb representing royalty. Furthermore, the “earth or heavenly globe with a cross atop it is also common in the religious art of the period.”²²²¹ It is also interesting to note here a possible symbolical connection with the hand wounds of Christ. For in some cases the τ symbols on a number of orbs are “three of the four arms of a cross.”²²²²

In the case with the wandering Christ, he is often depicted as he travels in and out of the afterlife realms,²²²³ and his earthly kingdoms. During this royal progress, he marches forth while holding in his hand a cross—banner, or orb.²²²⁴

The early Christian, Lactantius, A.D. 260—330, cites from Isaiah 42:6—7; 66:18, to point out how the covenant-hand-clasping-rite would be given to the Gentiles too. And that it was a type of how the nations would be gathered together and would see the glory of the Lord. Further on he writes how Christ was lifted up upon the cross, and that: “. . . His majesty and power became known to all, together with His passion. For in that He extended His hands on the cross, He plainly stretched out His wings towards the east and the west, under which all nations from either side of the world might assemble and repose.”²²²⁵

Another art work from the 12th century shows angels with orbs that have cross symbols on them. Christ, the Pantocrator’s book is open in this case. The angels are under the Mother of God in “the hierarchies of the world, [for] archangels clad like emperors and wielding the imperial labarum and globe are paying homage to their suzerain.”²²²⁶

“All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the LORD: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the LORD’s: and he is the governor among the nations.” (Psalm 22:27—28). According to other scriptures, “a Sceptre’s coming out of Sion, and extending to the most distant places, plainly agrees to the Messiah... [And] that Jesus of Nazareth was truly the Person, in whom these things were fulfilled ...Add to this, that his sceptre, that it, the word of the Gospel, came out of Sion, and without any human assistance, extended itself to the utmost limits of the earth...”²²²⁷

Gordon C. Thomasson notes that the orb is a symbol of “earthly rule and heavenly power, and its use in royal and religious iconography is an implicit claim to worldly dominion, symbolizing its possessor’s power over this earth.”²²²⁸

Orbs in Christian art works symbolize Christ’s power and authority to rule and reign over the whole earth. In some cases, the Christ-child is not only the enthroned King, but also, he is the wandering King, with the universe as his play ground. He is often seen, in art works, holding an orb, or large ball that represents the earth, as if the earth was also his play thing, or play ground to wander around on. At any rate, Christ also sits enthroned on a globe, but also with the mandorla symbol () suggesting, again, that he is a realm wanderer too.²²²⁹ A wanderer who goes seeking souls to save, and rescue, for another type is found in an ancient funerary theme of hunters, to which is “an allusion of Christ, hunter of souls.”²²³⁰

A number early Christian art works show “Christ striding forward over the body of Satan” reaching out with a hand to Adam and Eve to ascend with them out of hell.²²³¹ After ascending out of hell, Christ’s world wide striding began, for a Christian legend says that Christ, walked with unequal giant strides over the earth in many directions.²²³² This later legend, related by Peter D. Roo in 1900, may have been inspired by, or inspired different Christian artists to depict Christ as if he were striding over the earth. Alonso Cano, A.D. 1601—1667, depicts the Christ—child standing on a giant globe. In another work on painted wood, the Christ-child, bearing the cross on his left shoulder, and with his left foot forwards, has stepped onto a globe that represents the world.²²³³

The early Christian, Cyprian, A.D. 200—258, cites from the Apocrypha, & Psalms,²²³⁴ to testify that Christ is the highest among the kings of the earth; furthermore, how that he stepped throughout different realms, and among every people, and in every nation throughout the earth.

“Ecclesiasticus: “I penetrated into the depth of the abyss, . . . I stood in all the earth; and in every people and in every nation. . .” (Citing here a portion of what is now Psalm 89:27—33): “And I will establish Him as my first born, the highest among the kings of the earth.”²²³⁵

Melito, The Philosopher, A.D. 160-170-177, wrote of a number of symbols which were types, likened unto Christ. Some of these were the feet of the Lord, while another hints to Christ’s pre-existence and his descent to earth, or, “The descent of the Lord— His visitation of men. As in Micah, “Behold, the Lord shall come forth from His place; He shall come down trampling under foot the ends of the earth.” (Micah 1:3). Still, another type is how Christ is as one: “...leaping upon the mountains, bounding over the hills.” The Going of the Lord is his visitations, or his coming. While The footsteps of the Lord are footsteps which, as Psalm 77:19 says, shall not be known.”²²³⁶ Perhaps there were paths and ways “in the sea,” or “great waters” which were unknown to the early Christians. Furthermore, perhaps there may be some areas of the world which Christ went to, but of which the early Christians didn’t know existed. Thus, these steps of the Lord shall not be know, at least to them. Tertullian, for example mentions how Christ’s world wide trek would take him over the seas or great waters into many remote nations, and provinces, & many islands, “to us unknown” but known to Christ.²²³⁷

Victorinus, 3rd—4th century A.D., wrote, in an early Christian writing, Commentary on The Apocalypse of The Blessed John, about this type of Christ’s wanderings: “He calls the apostles His feet, who, being wrought by suffering, preached His word in the whole world; for He rightly named those by whose means the preaching went forth, feet.”²²³⁸

During the 14th or 15th century, a Christian King Olaf Haroldson, king of Norway, is depicted with an orb in one hand, and a foot on a figure representing paganism. Thus, we have a double symbol of power and victory.²²³⁹

A Christian artist, during the 11th – 1st quarter of the 12th century, presents not only the concept of how Christ is the great Pantocrator, but also, how he is the divine ruler over this world. As a divine ruler over this earth, and afterlife realms, and even the universe, he is seen as a traveling Pantocrator, a pilgrim King, who travels in, and about his entire kingdom. Thus, in this case, as in others, the artist blends two concepts together, the one of how Christ is a traveling Pantocrator, with the one of how he is wandering about, at times, in the guise of a beggar in order to test his servants. Another clue that suggests that he is a realm traveler is a symbol that is like a tunnel or door way to other pre and post afterlife realms. Thus, Christ is depicted on his throne in the mandorla symbol (). A symbol that is often seen around afterlife realm travelers, or pilgrims, as though they were passing through it, like it was the exit, or entrance way to another state of existence.²²⁴⁰ For example, we see this in art pieces that show Christ, saints, or souls ascending into heaven,²²⁴¹ and in ones of Christ's descent into hell.²²⁴² The fact that Christ is depicted in this symbol while enthroned as the Pantocrator of the universe, suggests that he is a realm traveling Pantocrator. Perhaps even a heavenly ruler who makes pilgrimages throughout his earthly, and other realm kingdoms throughout the universe. Furthermore, this same work also has a portion that shows St. Martin giving a coat to the vagabond Christ who comes to him disguised as a beggar. Wherefore, along side works that show Christ as a beggar, are also those of Christ as Pantocrator enthroned in the mandorla.²²⁴³

In another work, A.D. 1455—60, Christ looks as though he is striding on a globe under his feet. The globe most likely represents the world, suggesting that as Judge of the world, he is also out touring his Kingdom to witness the good acts of mercy that different ones perform. For on the top portion of this same work, is a series of smaller art works showing Christ in the back ground, as different acts of mercy are being performed. This is according to the traditions centered around Matthew 25. At the bottom on Christ's right hand, an angel is clasping the hands of those who have been judged worthy to be on Christ's right hand, and who can enter into heaven.²²⁴⁴ Another artist, A.D. 1550, shows Christ enthroned over a globe.²²⁴⁵ One dated A.D. 1500, showed Christ enthroned, within a mandorla () symbol, and with an orb at his feet. Another, A.D. 1525, shows the globe at his feet, but no mandorla. In another, A.D. 1511, it seems he is really striding throughout the world. In a different one, A.D. 1588, he sits on an arch with a globe at his feet. A similar one to this one is from A.D. 1526.²²⁴⁶ These globes,²²⁴⁷ or disks²²⁴⁸ at his feet, or under one foot; all these are not only symbols that suggest that he is a wandering ruler²²⁴⁹ that travels all over the world.²²⁵⁰ But also, that he has conquered the world,²²⁵¹ and has made it his foot stool,²²⁵² that he is both Ruler, and Judge over all humanity too.²²⁵³

There are many aspects of heritages that clashed and blended together, when explorers from the Old World met with rulers in the New World. In 1519, Hernando Cortez, was galvanized, among other lucrative and adventurous motives, by the later militant-Christ legacies. Customs which were based on Christian Knight Orders' triumphs to bring souls to Christ, even by force of arms, & conquests, if necessary.²²⁵⁴ Accordingly, the “...sudden expansion of horizons to unbelievable dimensions, intellectual as well as physical, was now coupled with a sense of destiny as the [Spanish believed they were] appointed agent of God for the tremendous task of Christianizing the globe.”²²⁵⁵ Furthermore, as also battle-banner-bearing crusading Conquistadors,²²⁵⁶ out to conquer territories for their Spanish King, & Jesus Christ.²²⁵⁷

Severus, Archbishop of Antioch, A.D. 512—19, said: “...God shall judge the whole race of men...”²²⁵⁸ One of the popular imagery of this, as we have already noted, is how Christ is depicted in the upper section of many domes, on the inside, as the divine ruler and judge over all the human family. Part of the symbolic design of the Domus Aurea, in Antioch, A.D. 327 and 526—588, was dome shapes portions of the church, which shapes could have had the same type of meaning as the orbs. Presumably begun by Constantine, and finished by Constantius, these emperors attempted to symbolically connect their own conquests for power and their rights to rule with militant Christ imagery. Hence, the domical shaped portions, like the top part of orbs, were symbolical types of triumph. “Here in this temple, with the title of “Concordia poenitentiae, was worshipped Christ, the heavenly ruler and conqueror, who accorded to his universe the gift of Concordia, just as the Emperor, after his triumph of 325, brought about a union of the Roman universe in the unique religion of Christ.”²²⁵⁹

To signify the new King's dominion, in a number of cultures' ancient Coronation Ceremonies, “the new king performed a rite, such as taking a set number of ceremonial steps, touring the kingdom.”²²⁶⁰ This, of course, is certainly what tradition, and art pieces suggest Christ did, when he was enthroned as the Pantocrator, or ruler of the world, and universe. For art works show him out touring the world with an orb in his hand.²²⁶¹ This may be what these art works are suggesting, when they show him stepping onto globes. An ancient American tradition has a similar type of theme that of how God measured the whole world by footsteps.²²⁶²

In The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, citing perhaps a different version of Malachi, the Lord is reported to have said: “...I am a great King, saith the Lord, and my name is wonderful among the nations.”²²⁶³ In the present day King James Version, it reads: “I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.” (Malachi 1:11, 14).

1336, Christ and the Virgin Mary sit side by side on a throne with crowns on their heads. Christ holds in his left hand a map of the world inscribed on an orb, while in his right, he raises a scepter. It also shows friars in “a kind of Dominican communion of saints gathered before an image of Christ and the Virgin that could hardly be more expressive of their universal reign.”²²⁶⁴

Romanesque works, such as “The illustration that fills the upper zone has as its centerpiece a large roundel with a depiction of the Lord seated, an embodiment of Wisdom. Armed with a globe, symbolic of worldly dominion, and a long staff, He tramples upon two crouching figures who may be interpreted as Salientia's enemies: error and darkness or heresy.”²²⁶⁵

In another work, dated shortly before A.D. 1097, Christ has a mandorla behind him. The upper part of the mandorla () symbolizes “the boundless space of the galaxies and the mystic universe of the Heavenly Jerusalem” while the smaller lower part is the solar system. The earth is represented as a disc attached as a footstool at the base of the mandorla. The four Evangelists are in the corners. In this disc that represents the world is the ⊕ shaped symbol.²²⁶⁶ Another from the 11th century, shows a similar disk with the ⊕ symbol at Christ's feet. He sits in majesty and governs the heavens and the world with his power, as indicated by this disk at his feet.²²⁶⁷ These symbols, seem to further demonstrate that Christ was considered to be the wandering ruler of the universe who passes through the mandorla to wander all over the earth, and to visit other realms, and perhaps even other worlds in the endless galaxies in the universe to which he is the Pantocrator over.²²⁶⁸

1159, Christ, holding a ball or orb in his right hand, is "treading on the beasts." Book-cover of the Ratmann Sacramentary.²²⁶⁹

Another artist, from the 11th or early 12th century, shows Christ enthroned over the circle of the heavens, with the earth supporting his feet. The mandorla is behind him, while the Evangelists' symbols are in the four corners. In his left hand he holds a book, or "the Word," which may thus represent how he, as The Word (John 1:1—5, 14), took "the Word" or the gospel throughout the world, and into different afterlife realms, and throughout the universe.²²⁷⁰

In a Latin manuscript, A.D. 1052, Christ is enthroned, holding a large ball in his hand.²²⁷¹ Another composition shows the "God-Father holding [his] sleeping Christ-Child and orb."²²⁷² As noted earlier, in some sagas & legacies, the Virgin Mary is the Christ-child's traveling companion throughout the world. Hence, in religious art pieces, depicting the Virgin, we see a "Globe, which [when] placed under her feet, implies her sovereignty."²²⁷³

936--1075, though the earthly Christian kings of Germany weren't omnipresent, they could attempt to give that impression. For like in the traditional wandering Christ-king stories, they had their different royal residences they lived in during different seasons, while traveling. In some societies the king and the royal court stayed almost constantly in motion, visiting the regions marked as their royal centers of power. In other cases, the Merovingian and Carolingian kings traveled extensively, but not constantly, residing in favored residences. When Charlemagne's kingdom was split into smaller areas among his three heirs, these traditional ways of running their kingdoms, by traveling about in them, continued among the Ottonian and Salian kings, as with others.²²⁷⁴

900, on a book-cover, Christ, in the mandorla, sits enthroned in Majesty, while the 4 evangelists' symbols, 2 above, & 2 below, are also seen here.²²⁷⁵

On the high altarpiece used for the Dominicans of San Marco celebrations. The Virgin Mary and the Christ child sit enthroned. Christ holds a royal orb bearing the map of the world with the inscription: Europa & Asia, symbolizing his universal reign. Thus, Christ is "shown as the King of Kings not only by the throne, but also by the royal orb held in his left hand, bearing the map of the world."²²⁷⁶

Christ is the Pantocrator, in a late 8th century ivory panel; here, he holds a book in his hand, while trampling under his feet a lion and serpent, perhaps symbolic of his victory march over the devil. In his right hand is a cross, and he appears to be on the move, suggesting that he is on a campaign to not only defeat the devil, but also, to take the gospel into the areas where he is the great Pantocrator over.²²⁷⁷

One writer notes that in some of the art works of Jesus. "When he is seated among the apostles, the image of the sage teaching is presented; in another conception, it is the universal sovereign enthroned in majesty and receiving the homage of his subjects; or else he directs, from his place in heaven, the Christian prince who is his lieutenant on earth and secures the victory to him."²²⁷⁸

In "the frescoes of S. Maria Antiqua of the early eighth century, and in a contemporary mosaic of the lost chapel of John VII in Old St. Peter's. It entered the Creed as a necessary provision for the universal salvation of mankind that should include those who lived before Christ's coming as well as later generations."²²⁷⁹

In another, c. 870, it shows Christ as Majesty, holding a ball, or perhaps, as in other art works, an orb which is symbolic of how Christ reigns over the whole world.²²⁸⁰

Early 9th century work, Charlemagne(?) holds an orb or ball in his right hand, while riding on a striding horse. Hence, this seems to suggest that this Christian king is going forth into the different areas of his kingdom to visit, or to go forth on conquests to extend his kingdom.²²⁸¹

In the octagonal church of San Vitale, A.D. 526-547, there is an apse in a vaulted recess at the end of the church that has two mosaic scenes on the walls. One shows Justinian and the Empress Theodora with their retinues. "In the half-dome of this apse there is a beardless Christ, flanked by angels and saints, seated on a globe, from which flow the four rivers of Paradise."²²⁸²

Others show the Christ-child holding an orb with a map of the world on it. So it may be that the globe, in this case at the church of San Vitale, is symbolic of how Christ reigns over the whole world, or perhaps the universe. The four rivers²²⁸³ could represent how the waters of life, or the gospel, flow out into the four corners of the earth. Thus, the nations of the earth are healed and nourished by the life-giving waters of the gospel. Domes shaped like Orbs, are seen on many Churches throughout Christendom, they seem to have similar insignias, that of signifying God's rule over the whole earth, and the heavens.²²⁸⁴

A mosaic of Christ as the supreme ruler dates back to about the 5th century A.D. It was in the church of St. George at Salonica. The mosaics may have been created under Hellenistic influences, but also linked with Eastern ideas. The dome represents the vault of Heaven where Christ's "image of the invisible God," reigns supreme. "Even where the figure of Christ as victorious Pantocrator is not explicitly displayed, it seems to be alluded to in the extreme luxuriance of natural forms rejoicing in the 'deliverance from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God.'"²²⁸⁵

In the Santa Maria Maggiore, the church's structure was restored by Sixtus III. In that same area, the basilica was founded toward the end of the 4th century by Pope Liberius. The second construction took place just after the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431. It is here that Christian iconography has entered into legend. The Christ-child "takes on all the attributes of royal dignity; and certain scholars emphasize the relationship between Christian iconography of the Christ King and the types of compositions found on imperial monuments." Christ's position, suggests that he is to be seen in this depiction as seated like royalty. For there are angels and others there who are in the act of rendering homage to him.²²⁸⁶

Some of the writers, among the earlier anti-Christian pagans, claimed that the pagan gods reigned over the whole world, where as the Christians' God didn't. In response to this, some of the earlier Christian writers wrote that Christ's reign had extended everywhere. Christ is the King of Kings! (Rev.17:14). And is the supreme ruler over the whole world, as in other worlds, and after life realms (Eph. 4:7-10; 1 Peter 3:15-22; 4:5-6).

Eventually, the basic concepts behind this early Christian doctrine began to be depicted in symbolical types & symbols in these types of art works, in architectural designs, monuments, manuscripts, and gospel books, some of which we have already considered.

Clement of Alexandria, A.D. 153-193-217, wrote that "in power the Lord is the God of all, and truly Universal King." Also: "Because I am a great King, saith the LORD omnipotent; and My name is manifest among the nations." What name?" Clement asked. "The Son declaring the Father among the Greeks who have believed." In another place Clement again suggests that the gospel was for not only those who dwell in the spirit prison hades. But for all the world too. "For God is not only Lord of the Jews, but of all men." Further on Clement wrote that God had revealed some truths to others too, for he was the one Lord, & the only God of the whole human family.²²⁸⁷ In another translation of Clement, although he wrote the Christ is "never passing from place to place," still he follows this by writing, "but existing everywhere at all times and free from all limitations... all eye, all light from the Father, seeing all things, hearing all things, knowing all things, with power searching the powers. To him is subjected the whole army of angels and of gods. ... He is the source of Providence both for the individual and the community and for the universe at large.... This is he who bestows on the Greeks also their philosophy through the inferior angels. For by an ancient divine ordinance angels are assigned to the different nations. . . . he distributed his own bounty both to Greeks and to barbarians, and to the faithful and elect, who were foreordained out of them and were called in their own season.... And how could he be Saviour and Lord, if he were not Saviour and Lord of all".²²⁸⁸

EARLY CHRISTIANS' DOCTRINES ON CHRIST'S WORLD WIDE TREKS

In the early Christians responded to the early anti-Christians, we see how a number of them wrote that Christ, and his gospel was not confined to the known world only. But rather, they testify and argue that the gospel was a universal message which had been preached throughout the world before Christ's birth, and during his descent into hell, and during his post resurrection world wide trek. Hence, the early Christians' responses to ancient critics set the foundations for these later legacies, and epics about Christ's intercontinental sojourns.

Origen of Alexandria, A.D. 185-230-254, was a pupil of Clement of Alexandria. Here is a case in which these types of statements like the whole world is to be interpreted in a literal way, for Origen would have this expression to include the whole world and afterlife realms before the time of Christ's birth and after. Thus, Origen wrote that those who preached Christ even before the sojourn of Christ in the flesh; their good words make up the collective body of the gospel message. By this we might note that the ancients must have had a knowledge of Christ even before Christ's birth, or "sojourn" in the flesh.²²⁸⁹ Origen then wrote: "And when the Gospel is said to be declared throughout the whole world, we infer that it is actually preached in the whole world, not, that is to say, in this earthly district only, but in the whole system of heaven and earth, or from heaven and earth."²²⁹⁰ Moreover, the Gospel, says Origen, was ministered by men, angels, authorities, powers, thrones, dominions, and "every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in the world to come and indeed even by Christ Himself."²²⁹¹

St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, A.D. 395, wrote in his City of God, that the church throughout the world is not just in the Roman Empire, but in the four corners of the earth.²²⁹² Thus, in this case, the world was not just the known world, or Roman Empire at that time, but rather, a much larger region, the four corners of the world. Augustine also boldly declared that it was the one Christian God who "controls all states and all human endeavor," not the Roman "gods" who are "demons," the evil spirits, fallen angels, and servants of Satan.²²⁹³

In The Apocalypse of Paul, written in Coptic, we read of how Paul saw a river of water that encircled the whole world. This river was the Ocean. Beyond this ocean was a country illuminated by the sun. A country of inheritance, which will appear when Christ will appear in his kingdom, for this country will appear above this. "God knoweth all His saints, and the Christ shall reign over [them] for a great number of years, and they shall eat of the good things of the country . . ." Further on Christ is called "the King of the Worlds."²²⁹⁴ While Paul was taken through different realms, was he also shown the world at a distance? If he was, did he see a large land mass lit up by the sun, perhaps even the American continent? Is Christ not only the King of other realms, but also, other "worlds" across the ocean?

"Denying that Jesus was sent merely as the redeemer of the Jews, Paul proclaimed Christianity to be a universal religion. Furthermore, he placed major emphasis on the idea of Jesus as the Christ, as the anointed God-man whose death on the cross was an atonement for the sins of humanity."²²⁹⁵

Concerning these "other worlds" beyond the sea, St. Clement of Rome, A.D. 30—100, may have learned from an apostle,²²⁹⁶ that there were "other worlds" across the sea which were known to God and governed by him too. Thus, "God," wrote Clement to the Corinthians, knows of the "unsearchable places of the abysses, and the indescribable arrangements of the lower world, are restrained by the same laws." As in the heavens, by his command, but also, the "ocean, impassible to man, and the worlds beyond it, are regulated by the same enactments of the Lord."²²⁹⁷

Now even though the ocean was believed by some to be "impassible to man" it was not "impassible" to God, or his Son Jesus Christ, and priesthood endowed apostles. Moreover, there are symbols and traditions in early Christianity, and in the ancient Americas that suggest that Christ made a pilgrimage over the ocean. This, we will consider later on in this book. Another source about Clement is mentioned by a Catholic historian, P. D. Roo, who wrote that Sahagun makes mention of Clement of Rome. Hence, according to Sahagun, he (Clement) was a "contemporary of the apostle St. Thomas, from whom he may have learned the existence of "the other world" that he speaks of in his letter to the Corinthians."²²⁹⁸

St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo in North Africa, A.D. 395, was influenced by the dogmas that came about as a result of the Nicene Creed era of A.D. 325. This may be one reason why he wrote in his Confessions about how God is every where present, and can't be contained anywhere.²²⁹⁹ The Apostle Paul, when writing to the Corinthians, and Ephesians, likened the church organization unto the human body, (1 Cor.12, Eph.2:16-22, 4:10-16, 5:23-33). Did these types of scriptures, when interpreted under the pressures of the Nicene Creed controversy,²³⁰⁰ give way under this, and the pressures of anti-physical resurrection Greek philosophy?²³⁰¹ Consequently, did these dogmas cause later Christians to view the body of the Church to be likened unto the body of God? Thus, as God was viewed as being everywhere present, was the church also too?

The concept, that of how the gospel was spread throughout the world, is still visible in the way in which many Christians believed that the church has spread throughout the world. This concept is thus shrouded behind the theme and imagery of the universal church's march throughout the world. The word "Catholic" means "universal." Wherefore, the universal (or Catholic) church was believed to not be just confined to a certain corner of the world only, but rather, it was a "universal church."²³⁰² These concepts, as we have already noted, show up in later versions and guises of the militant Christ. Thus, later Christians, like Augustine believed that their particular version of Christianity had spread into all nations.

In his Letter 23 (A.D. 392), Augustin to Maximin, Augustin is entitled Presbyter of the Catholic (or "Universal Church"). He expresses the belief that the church or the gospel had been preached throughout the whole world.²³⁰³

Letter 43 (A.D. 397), Augustine to Glorius, Eleusius, the two Felixes, Grammaticus, he mentions how the church had spread throughout the world.²³⁰⁴

Letter 53 (A.D. 400), to Generosus from Fortunatus and Augustin, they argue that the Universal Catholic Church's version of Christianity had been published to all nations, unlike the Donatist sect's version.²³⁰⁵

Letter 76, A.D. 402, contends that the church has spread, and has been preached in all the worlds, even unto the ends of the earth. Furthermore, it mentions how that the gospel is among all nations.²³⁰⁶

Letter 102 (A.D. 409), Augustine to Deogratias, he attempts to answer the question about rather or not the wounds in the body of Christ will remain, or if Christ wills them away, and then reveals them at times when he wants to show them to his followers. Thus, in so doing this, his wounds become marks of identification that they may know that it is he who was crucified and had risen from the dead. Moreover, that he has the same body, and not that of another man's body.²³⁰⁷

Letter 130 (A.D. 412), Augustine to Proba, we read how Christ is glorified among all nations.²³⁰⁸

During Augustine's time, there were discussions and different points of view going throughout Christendom, concerning whom, what, when, and where the gospel was preached too. For example, Letter 163 (A.D. 414), Bishop Evodius to Augustin of Hippo, he asks Augustin to give his interpretations on, 1 Peter 3:15—22. In Letter 164 (A.D. 414), Augustin wrote back a response and discussed what different ones have said about this, and other passages of scripture, concerning the preaching of the gospel before Christ's birth, in the spirit world, and throughout the nations. He notes and explains how some used this passage in discussions about who got saved out of the spirit prison, and who was preached to. In addition, who did and did not get to hear the gospel preached before and after Christ's birth. He considers what the different implications with the different interpretations of this, and others' views could mean. In addition, how some have different conflicting views about this, and are perplexed over whom the gospel was, and wasn't preached to. He goes on to point out how some believed that hell was emptied after Christ's descent, and considers how this might, and might not have been the case. He also notes how some saw in Isaiah 9:2, a type of Christ, for some said that the "light" in the portion, "Upon them hath the light shined," meant that the gospel was preached throughout the world.²³⁰⁹

Letter 66 (A.D. 402), Augustine to Crispinus, the Donatist, Bishop of Calama, Augustine contends over rather or not Christ had lost the whole world, and been left with Africa alone.²³¹⁰

Letter 93 (A.D. 408), Augustine to Vincentius, he says that the universal church extends throughout all nations. Furthermore, he says that the Donatists denied that Christ's glory is spread over all the earth.²³¹¹ Further on in this same letter, Augustine discusses how the gospel was preached throughout all nations, all the earth, and even unto the ends of the earth in far remote nations, while other sects were not.²³¹²

Letter 208 (A.D. 423), Augustine to the Lady Felicia, Augustine claimed that the Catholic, or Universal Church, unlike the Donatist sect, had spread into all nations. The apostle says, "Bringing forth fruit, and increasing in the whole world."²³¹³

St. Gregory the Great believed that the "Holy Church has now preached the mystery of His redemption in all parts of the world."²³¹⁴

Roo presents a number of writers²³¹⁵ who suggest²³¹⁶ that Pope St. Gregory plainly asserts that: "the mystery of our redemption has been announced in every part of the world. The two great continents of America could not well be excluded from the meaning of such an expression."²³¹⁷ This might explain why the wounded hand symbols, and the different types of hand and wrist grasps are similar in both the ancient Americas, and in historic Christendom's mysteries, or rituals.

Theophylactus also believed that the mysteries were spread throughout the world too.²³¹⁸

St. John Chrysostom, born about A.D. 347, believed that even though the gospel had been preached every where, the mysteries or ritual of the church hadn't been shown to nonbeliever.²³¹⁹

Roo also tells us that St. John Chrysostom, "the only son of Secundus and Anthusa, of good family in the city of Antioch, and was born about A.D. 347." And Theophylactus were also of the opinion that the Gospel was preached in all the nations of the earth, as well as St. Gregory, thus some of these early Christians believed that the mystery of redemption had been announced in every part of the world in a literal way. Consequently, the Americas must have been included too.²³²⁰

In one of the translations of St. John Chrysostom, this early Christian presents a commentary on different passages of scripture. The writer of Romans presents his discourse by presenting a series of questions. "Whosoever shall call upon the Name of the Lord shall be saved. Now somebody might say perhaps, But how could they call upon Him whom they had not believed? Then there is a question from him after the objection; And why did they not believe? Then an objection again. A person certainly may say, and how could they believe, since they had not heard? Yet hear they did, he re-implies. Then another objection again. And how could they hear without a preacher? Then an answer again. Yet preach they did, and there were many sent forth for this very purpose. And whence does it appear that these are those persons sent? Then he brings the prophet in next, who says, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! You see how by the kind of preaching he points out the preachers. For there was nothing else that these men went about telling every where, but those unspeakable good things, and the peace made by God with men. And so by disbelieving, it is not we, he implies, whom you disbelieve, but Isaiah the prophet, who spake many years ago, that we were to be sent, and to preach, and to say what we do say. If the being saved, then, came of calling upon Him, and calling upon Him from believing, and believing from hearing, and hearing from preaching, and preaching from being sent, and if they were sent, and did preach, and the prophet went round with them to point them out, and proclaim them, and say that these were they whom they shewed of so many ages ago, whose feet even they praised because of the matter of their preaching; then it is quite clear that the not believing was their own fault only. And because God's part had been fulfilled completely... [Later on in his commentary, Chrysostom wrote]... For as he had said that they must call upon Him, but that they who call must believe, and they who believe must hear first, but they who are to hear must have preachers, and the preachers be sent, and as he had shewn that they were sent, and had preached... [Later citing Rom.10:18 & commenting on that he wrote] ...But I say, Have they not heard? What, he means, if the preachers were sent, and did preach what they were bid, and these did not hear? Then comes a most perfect reply to the objection. Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world... " [Commenting of this, he wrote] "What does you say? He means. They have not heard. Why the whole world, and the ends of the earth, have heard. And have you, amongst whom the heralds abode such a long time, and of whose land they were, not heard? Now can this ever be? sure if the ends of the world heard, much more must you. Then again another objection. Ver. 19. But I say, Did not Israel know? For what if they heard, but did not know what was said, nor understand that these were the persons sent? Are they not to be forgiven for this ignorance? By no means. For Esaias had described their character in the words, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace." [Isa.52:7.]

"...And so they ought even from him to have been able to distinguish the preachers, not from the fact of their preaching peace, not from the fact of their bringing the glad tidings of good things, not from the word being sown in every part of the world, but from the very fact of their seeing their inferiors, those of the Gentiles, in greater honour. For what they had never heard, nor their forefathers, that wisdom did these on a sudden embrace... See how by every means God had given from old indications and clear signs of these times, in order to remove their blindness. For it was not any little corner in which the thing was done, but in land, and in sea, and in every quarter of the globe..." [Later he goes on to cite verse 21, & then follows with further comments that might hint to the hand of God extending down to the nations of the earth to come unto His kingdom upon hearing & obeying the gospel]. 'But unto Israel He saith, All the day long have I stretched forth My hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.' [Isa.65:2.] "...here meaning by the day the whole period of the former dispensation" [of the Jews]. "But the stretching out of the hands, means calling and drawing . . . them to Him, and inviting them. Then to shew that the fault was all their own, he says to a disobedient and gainsaying people. You see what a great charge this is against them! For they did not obey Him even when He invited them, but they gainsaid Him, and that when they saw Him doing so, not once or twice or thrice, but the whole period. But others who had never known Him, had the power to draw Him to them. Not that, he says, they had the power to do it, but to take away lofty imaginings even from those of the Gentiles, and to shew that it was His grace that wrought the whole, He says, I was made manifest, and I was found. It may be said, Were they then void of every thing? By no means, for the taking of the things found, and the getting a knowledge of what was manifested to them, was what they contributed themselves . . ." Then to prevent these sayings, But why was He not made manifest to us also? he sets down what is more than this, that I not only was made manifest, but I even continued with My hands stretched out, inviting them, and displaying all the concern of an affectionate father, and a mother that is set on her child. See how he has brought us a most lucid answer to all the difficulties before raised, by showing that it was from their own temper that ruin had befallen them, and that they are wholly undeserving of pardon. For though they had both heard and understood what was said, still not even then were they [many of the Jewish nation] minded to come to Him.... For a child often will not submit to its father when it is called, but continues obstinate. But when another child has notice taken of it, then it even though not called comes to its father's bosom, and what calling could not do, provoking to jealousy will. This then God also did. For He only called and stretched out His hands,... [unto them, but still, they would not come.] It seems that this early Christian writer is suggesting here that the arm of the Lord was stretched out unto all nations as a gesture & symbol of the Lord's invitation for them to come unto him. But there were some, like those of the Jewish nation, who would not come, or who, upon hearing the message of the gospel would not obey it. And so the gospel was extended to other nations too.²³²¹

Chrysostom also wrote that some things were hidden secrets. Was this a belief, practice or rite that was hidden away from nonbelievers, lest they should mock such things? "And though it be every where preached, still is it a mystery; for as we have been commanded, what things we have heard in the ear, to speak upon the house tops, so have we been charged, not to give the holy things unto dogs, nor yet to cast our pearls before swine." [Matt. 7:6] "For some are carnal and do not understand: others have a veil upon their hearts, and so not see: wherefore that is above all things a mystery, which every where is preached, but is not known of those who have not a right mind; and is revealed not by wisdom, but by the Holy Ghost, so far as is possible for us to receive it."²³²²

John Chrysostom and Jerome attested that "the universal evangelization had been very rapid."²³²³

Saint Jerome, who was born about A.D. 345, near the Italian-Dalmatian border to Christian parents, believed this. That Christ, after his resurrection, had been with Thomas in all the places of India. Furthermore, there were times in which Christ had not only been with Thomas but also "with all the preachers of the Gospel, wheresoever they came."²³²⁴

Eusebius, in his Church History, written some time between A.D. 323 & 325, wrote that Christ pre-existed with the Father before the world began, & before the creation of all things. Christ had appeared to the different saints & prophets of old before his birth to Mary. However, he gives his opinion as to why the Gospel was not preached in ancient times to all men and to all nations as it was during the early Christian era.²³²⁵

Eusebius also wrote that, "That the divine Word, therefore, pre-existed, and appeared to some, if not to all, has thus been briefly shown by us. But why the Gospel was not preached in ancient times to all men and to all nations, as it is now, will appear from the following considerations." And: "Eusebius pursues much the same line of argument in his Dem. Evang., Proem. Bk. VIII., and compare also Gregory of Nyssa's Third Oration on the birth of the Lord (at the beginning). The objection which Eusebius undertakes to answer here was an old one, and had been considered by Justin Martyr, by Origen in his work against Celsus, and by others (see Tzschirner's Geschichte der Apologetik, p. 25 ff.)" Eusebius went on to explain why he thought that the gospel was not preached in ancient times to all men and to all nations. It was because, "The life of the ancients was not of such a kind as to permit them to receive the all-wise and all-virtuous teaching of Christ." And: "Then, finally, at the time of the origin of the Roman Empire, there appeared again to all men and nations throughout the world, who had been, as it were, previously assisted, and were now fitted to receive the knowledge of the Father, that same teacher of virtue, the minister of the Father in all good things, the divine and heavenly Word of God, in a human body not at all differing in substance from our own. He did and suffered the things which had been prophesied. For it had been foretold that one who was at the same time man and God should come and dwell in the world, should perform wonderful works, and should show himself a teacher to all nations of the piety of the Father. The marvelous nature of his birth, and his new teaching, and his wonderful works had also been foretold; so likewise the manner of his death, his resurrection from the dead, and, finally, his divine ascension into heaven." Eusebius goes on to cite from Dan.7:9-10 & 13-14. A portion of which he may have considered was a type or a prediction of Christ's kingdom spreading out to all the world. The Son of man was to come in the clouds of heaven, and he " ...hastened unto the Ancient of Days and was brought into his presence, and there was given him the dominion and the glory and the kingdom; and all peoples, tribes, and tongues serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom shall not be destroyed." It is clear that these words can refer to no one else than to our Saviour, the God Word who was in the beginning with God, and who was called the Son of man because of his final appearance in the flesh." Eusebius also wrote how Moses, and the prophets after him, knew through their prophetic callings about the plots against Christ, and how he would be rejected. And how that his calling of the nations would be through him. Jeremiah, for instance, speaks as follows: "The Spirit before our face, Christ the Lord, was taken in their destructions; of whom we said, under his shadow we shall live among the nations." (Lamentations 4:20). He later cites a passage from the Psalms: "The Lord said unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Eusebius also wrote about the prophets, how that they are as anointed ones, and are types of Christ. However, it is Christ who is the "heavenly Word, who is the only high priest of all, and the only King of every creature, and the Father's only supreme prophet of prophets." Eusebius wrote that the anointing of the prophets made them types of Christ, or Christs. But even though anointed kings, priests, & prophets have been, for many generations, among their own people. These anointed ones didn't have as much influence on the whole world as the true Christ had. "And never did so great a commotion arise among all the nations of the earth in respect to any one of that age; for the mere symbol [the anointing and types of Christ, the kings, priests and prophets] could not act with such power among them as the truth itself which was exhibited by our Saviour." Further on, Eusebius wrote that Christ: "has filled the whole earth with the truly August and sacred name of Christians, committing to his followers no longer types and images, but the uncovered virtues themselves, and a heavenly life in the very doctrines of truth." Eusebius continues to expound further on the idea that the doctrine of Christ had been known in pre-Christian times. He argues that the Christian doctrines and religion "have not been lately invented by us, but from the first creation of man, so to speak, have been established by the natural understanding of divinely favored men of old." Further on, Eusebius wrote again how the prophets before the time of the Christian era knew the one and only God over all who was the very Christ of God. Also, Christ was the one who appeared unto Abraham, and gave revelations to Issac, talked with Jacob, Moses, and the other prophets after them. "Hence you will find those divinely favored men honored with the name of Christ, according to the passage which says of them, "Touch not my Christs, and do not my prophets no harm." (1 Chron. 16:22, & Psalms 105:15). "So that it is clearly necessary to consider that religion, which has lately been preached to all nations through the teaching of Christ, the first and most ancient of all religions, and the one discovered by those divinely favored men in the age of Abraham." Eusebius follows with scriptures that show it was through the ancient pre-Christian time prophets who had seen Christ, and through Christ and his doctrines, that all the nations of the earth would be blessed. And how that the very religion of Abraham had reappeared again through the Christians alone throughout the world. Eusebius also suggests that those who were of Christ in times of old, & in that early Christian era, had basically the same religion.²³²⁶

Later artists retained the concept that Christ was known and spoken of in pre-Christian times. For example, a stone work from the 13th century A.D., shows the patriarchs & prophets arranged in chronological order. They all symbolize or foretell "Jesus Christ and at the same time summing up the history of the world." Certain ones represent different ages of mankind on into the New Testament age. All these present different symbols that relate to different prophetic types and sacramental symbols of Christ. In addition, these symbols relate to his birth, suffering, and death. "Each of the figures is a Christ-bearer, a christophorus, transmitting from generation to generation the mysterious sign."²³²⁷

In Eusebius Pamphili's Life of Constantine, Book 3, chapter 9, he give tribute to Constantine, and hallowed the remembrance of the cross symbol which he seen in the sky, and how that "our emperor thus adorned in the hope of proclaiming the symbol of redemption to all mankind [that is, the Cross]."²³²⁸ Which may be why in later Militant Christ lore, Christ is the battle banner bearer, taking cross symbol throughout the world during his victory march. And why Christian knight orders, used the cross banner with different types of cross symbols on them, when they were on the march too.

In Eusebius' The History of the Church from Christ to Constantine, the concept of how Jesus Christ, the only begotten of God, transmits all honors to the Father in heaven, the God of the universe. It may be that the imagery of a universal church spreading throughout the world, as a prototype of the heavenly church, the heavenly new Jerusalem, etc., themes that shows up in early to later Christian art works, which must have been inspired by the concepts expressed by the church fathers, such as Eusebius: "Such is the great cathedral which throughout the whole world under the sun the great Creator of the universe, the Word, has built, Himself again fashioning this Spiritual image on earth of the vaults beyond the skies, so that by the whole creation and by rational beings on earth His Father might be honoured and worshipped."²³²⁹ Hence, many early to later Christian art works of Christ, and the Father as rulers of the Universe, and especially of Christ as the pantocrator, or ruler of the world, all these were perhaps inspired by these earlier fathers' writings, types, & imageries. Especially, about how Christ, as ruler, didn't neglect other nations, as the Christians charged the pagans' "gods" did. Actually, as we have already noted, both the Christians and the pagans had charged each others' "gods" as being neglectful and unable to rule the whole world. And, as we have already noted too, the Christians responded by saying that Christ's rule was so much more superior than the pagans' "gods," and all of the earthly rulers, for unlike them, Christ had extended the boundaries of his reign throughout the world, into the after life realms, and throughout the universe too.²³³⁰

When the early critic Celsus charged that God neglected other parts of the earth, and was asleep for ages before his birth, and thus ought to have sent down many Christs throughout the world. Origen [A.D. 185—230—254], responded to these charges by writing the following:

"But if any one desires to see many bodies filled with a divine Spirit, similar to the one Christ, ministering to the salvation of men everywhere, let him take note of those who teach the Gospel of Jesus in all lands in soundness of doctrine and uprightness of life, and who are themselves termed "christs" by the holy Scriptures, in the passage, "Touch not Mine anointed, and do not My prophets any harm." [1 Chronicles 16:22; Psalms 105:15] For as we have heard that Antichrist cometh, and yet have learned that there are many antichrists in the world, in the same way, knowing that Christ has come, we see that, owing to Him, there are many christs in the world, who, like Him, have loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and therefore God, the God of Christ, anointed them also with the "oil of gladness."²³³¹

Thus, inasmuch as there were demonic forces or “antichrists” throughout the world, there were also God’s messengers, even Christ “the Word” (John 1:1-14), and “His partners” the anointed prophets who were also out in the world to combat the false teachings of the antichrists.²³³² Note the Militant Christ aspect of this too, anti-Christians were out in force in the world, thus, so also were Christ and his army of anointed ones, or prophets.

In the Constitutions of The Holy Apostles, A.D. 3rd—4th cent., we read that after Christ’s resurrection, the apostles received a command from him to, preach the Gospel to all the world, and to make disciples of all nations.²³³³

It seems that in these early centuries, there were some Christians which understood Christ’s words to be literal, when he said to go forth and teach all nations. For example, S. Cyril of Jerusalem, 318— March 18, 386, Archbishop of Jerusalem, is reported to have had a conversation with a monk: “‘Who sent thee about to teach these things?’” (Concerning his own particular views on Mary and the Godhead). The monk replied: “‘The Christ said, Go ye forth into all the world, and teach ye all the nations in My Name, in every place.’ [Matthew 28:19—20] And Apa Cyril said unto him, “Dost thou take the Gospels literally?” And the monk said, ‘Yea, absolutely...’”²³³⁴

260–300, Lactantius states how the name Jesus in Latin, “is called Saving, or Saviour, because He comes bringing salvation to all nations... [And that] Emmanuel signifies God with us; because when He was born of a virgin, men ought to confess that God was with them, that is, on the earth and in mortal flesh.”²³³⁵

260–312, Methodius also present this earlier aspect of the Militant Christ guise too; for the dragon was cast to earth and sought to destroy the Christ child, just as soon as he was born. “And she [Mary] brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron...” (Rev. 12:1—6).²³³⁶

200–258, Thascius Cyprian, upon writing against the Jews, lists a number of types of Christ, one of which was how he reigns as a King over the nations. As we have already noted, this concept was passed on into later Christian types and guises such as The Militant Christ. To help him illustrate these types, Cyprian often cites from the scriptures, such as Malachi, “I am a great King, saith the Lord, and my name is illustrious among the nations.” (Malachi 1:14). And from Psalm 22:27—28, “All the ends of the world shall be reminded, and shall turn to the Lord: and all the countries of the nations shall worship in Thy sight. For the kingdom is the Lord’s: and He shall rule over all nations.” Cyprian goes on to cite from Psalms 23, (in modern Bibles, Psalm 24): 7—10. This, to Cyprian, may have been seen as a prophecy about Christ’s victory march through the doors and gates of earthly kingdoms, and spirit realms. Then, later from Psalm 73 [74:12], “But God is our King before the world; He hath wrought salvation in the midst of the earth.” Further on he cites from Matthew 25:31—46,²³³⁷ a passage which became part of the wandering Christ traditions in later centuries, as already noted. Still, further on, he points out other scriptures about Christ reigning as King of the nations, and how that: “all nations shall come and worship in Thy sight...”²³³⁸

Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, said to have preserved the utterances of the dying patriarchs, the sons of Jacob. Some scholars date this work as belonging to 192, or earlier.²³³⁹ Perhaps they were collected in order to be used by early Christians of the 2nd–3rd c., onward as a missionary tool. It was used in this way because of how they saw in them prophetic types of Christ. Some of which hinted to a world wide Redeemers, a King who comes to reign, rule, and who appears to every race of people in order to minister among them. In our study here we shall consider those types which many early Christians may have seen as types of Christ’s treks around the earth.

In The Testament of Simeon Concerning Envy, we read of a King, God and man who would arise from Judah to “save all the Gentiles and the race of Israel.”²³⁴⁰

In The Testament of Levi Concerning the Priesthood and Arrogance, we read of one who would, “...proclaim concerning Him who shall redeem Israel; and by thee and Judah shall the Lord appear among men, saving in every race of men . . .”²³⁴¹ Further on there is reference to how, “the Lord shall visit all the heathen in the tender mercies of His Son, even for ever.” And how that the Son shall be crucified, thus, this Son, as a crucified wounded wanderer, would appear and minister to every race of men. Other types are how he is likened unto a shining light to all the seed of Israel, and as the light of the world, “which was given among you for the lighting up of every man. Him will ye desire to slay . . .”²³⁴² Other old types, such as the ones mentioned in The Testament of Levi Concerning the Priesthood and Arrogance, must have been seen by early Christians as prophetic types in reference to Christ. In addition, the spreading of the gospel throughout the world, are these: 1. The Branch of God. 2. The Well-spring. 3. The “sceptre.” 4. The Light. 5. The root. 6. The seed. 7. A rod of righteousness.²³⁴³ All of these Jewish prophetic types were also known and used by ancient American prophets, because of how they were descendants of Israel. This same Testament also prophetically tells of his star which will arise in heaven. The star is likened unto, “a king shedding forth the light of knowledge in the sunshine of day, and He will be magnified in the world until His ascension.”²³⁴⁴

ANCIENT POLEMICAL ISSUES

As noted earlier, Celsus, citing also early anti-Christian Jews, wrote against the early Christians, 170–180, & was answered by Origen, in eight books.²³⁴⁵ Another rival, Trypho the Jew, some have suggested that he was an imaginary Jewish Rabbi which was made to personify the charges, which the antagonists among the Jews were making at that time.²³⁴⁶ In later centuries, some of the other early faultfinders were different ones among the Romans, Greeks, and Pagans. 210, a polemical discussion which took place between the early Christian Octavius and Cæcilius, a critic, but was said to be converted by the “weighty arguments” of Octavius, while the Christian Minucius Felix sat between them, as a sort of referee.²³⁴⁷ Other antagonists were, Pliny, the Roman, Galen, the Philosopher, Porphyry a Neoplatonic philosopher, 233 C.E., and Julian, The Apostate, & Roman Emperor, 361–63 C.E.²³⁴⁸

Some the basic issues which ancient critics hashed over are as follows:

1. The pagans’ gods have extended the boundaries of their kingdoms beyond the seas and path ways of the sun, whereas the Christians’ god couldn’t have because he can’t even save them from their persecutors in this life.

2. Christians believed God only spoke to them alone, and had no concern for other nations.

3. Christians believe that they will be the only ones saved from the fire while everyone else will be roasted.

Julian the Apostate, [361—63]: “Moses says that the creator of the universe chose the Hebrew nation, that to that nation alone did he pay heed and cared for it, & he gives him charge of it alone. But how & by what sort of gods the other nations are governed he has not said a word” (100a). Julian asks the Christians if Judaea was the only land that he chose to take thought for, what about the other lands? Why did God only send prophets to a certain land, “but to us no prophet, no oil of anointing, no teacher, no herald to announce his love for man which should one day, though late, reach even unto us also?...If he is the God of all of us alike, & the creator of all, why did he neglect us? (106d).²³⁴⁹ Was Julian right? Had God neglected the rest of the human family? According to the early Christians, he hadn't.

Troubled by the parallels he saw between the Christian mysteries and those of the pagan mysteries, Julian rejected Christianity "when he discovered that it was only a corrupted copy of the Ancient Mysteries, in which he was initiated."²³⁵⁰ It may be that in Julian's day, and with the apostasy under way, perhaps, there were a number of pagan elements, and influences which had entered into the Christian churches by his day. However, Christian apologists before, and after him would continue to explain "the striking conformity existing between Christianity and Paganism, by asserting that "a long time before there were Christians in existence, the devil had taken pleasure to have their future mysteries and ceremonies copied by his worshipers."²³⁵¹

Porphyry, an early anti-Christian writer A.D. 3rd century, asks the Christians: "What about the souls of people who lived before Jesus and had no opportunity to believe?"²³⁵² He also charged that the early Christians' God couldn't be the way, and the truth and the life, in which men and women could have only had access to God, since the time of Christ's appearing in the flesh. Hence, their God "excludes those who have gone before and those who have no knowledge of Jesus of Nazareth."²³⁵³ Was Christ restricted to just a certain area of the world, as the early anti-Christian Celsus had claimed?²³⁵⁴ Other critics, or "detractors in the Roman empire were able to sneer that he [Christ] had put his appearance "in some small corner of the earth somewhere."²³⁵⁵ The answer to these types of charges, as we have seen, was No!²³⁵⁶ The early anti-Christian, Porphyry took a passage in John 14:6, & then asks: "If Christ says he is the way, the grace, & the truth, & claims that only in himself can believing souls find a way to God, what did the people who lived in the many centuries before Christ do[?] ...What became of the innumerable souls, who can in no way be faulted, if he in whom they were supposed to believe had not yet appeared among humankind?...Why did he who is called the Savior hide himself for so many ages?" It is arrogant for Christians to think that only since the coming of Christ have men & women had access to God. Realizing that Christians answered this objection by appealing to the antiquity of Jewish tradition, he says": "Let them not say that the human race was saved by the ancient Jewish law, since the Jewish law appeared & flourished in a small part of Syria, a long time after [the ancient cults in Italy], & only later made its way into the Italian lands, after the reign of Gaius Caesar, or probably during his reign. What, then, became of the souls of Romans or Latins who were deprived of the grace of Christ which had not yet come until the time of the Caesar? [August. Ep. 102.8]..."²³⁵⁷

"Borrowing, theft, adulteration. We have dwelled on the confrontation of comparative chronology since it seems to have weighed heavily on the Christian's evaluation of the features they shared with classical paganism. From the moment they thought that, by virtue of their connection to the Jewish people, they preceded Greek history, they were able to consider resemblances to their adversaries only as cases of plagiarism committed against them by the latter. The direction of influence seemed beyond all doubt; as Justin unambiguously puts it, "It is not we who think like the others, but all of them who imitate us in what they say" (First Apology 60.10). Tertullian would recall the determining role played by chronology: "That which first existed is necessarily the origin of what followed. And this is why you have things in common with us or things that resemble ours"; so it is, he continues, that our Wisdom (sophia) gave you philosophy, and our prophecy your poetic divination."²³⁵⁸

Theophilus of Antioch argued that, "These tortures were predicted by the prophets, but later poets and philosophers stole them from the Holy Scriptures in order to make their own teachings seem trustworthy."²³⁵⁹

Clement of Alexandria argued as follows, "Let us now see, since the Scriptures treat the Greek as "thieves" who stole barbarian philosophy, how we may briefly prove that they were indeed thieves. Not only shall we establish that it was by copying the miracles of our history that they described their own, but we shall also convict them of digging up and falsifying the most important of our dogmas— our Scriptures are older than theirs and we have shown this— concerning faith, wisdom, gnosis, and knowledge, hope and charity, repentance, continence, and in particular the fear of God." (Stromateis 2.1.1.1).

"...Tertullian also implicates demons in this theft, calling them "spirits of error," but he attributes much subtler intentions to them: by falsifying the true doctrine, demons established fables similar to it and offered these to poets and philosophers; since they would not be believed by the public, these fables would discredit the Christian faith, which was similar to them— but when doubt would thus have destroyed the faith, there would be a return to the poets' and philosopher's fables, which are the alternative to faith. This truly diabolical calculation is made clearer through the examples which follow . . . " Tertullian then goes on to list the parallels between the pagans and Christians in order to suggest that the pagans had borrowed or stolen the Christians' themes. (Apologeticus 47.11-14). Other arguments mentioned in this article are that the early Christians charged that the pagans were counterfeiting Christian prophecies.²³⁶⁰

John P. Lundy also wrote that: "Infidelity has been accustomed to say, from the time of Dupuis to the present, that Christianity is only a sort of copy of ancient Paganism: that is has no new ideas, and must therefore be rejected. But where did Paganism get its sublime conceptions of God, its notions of immortality and human destiny? Whence did all ancient nations derive them, hold them, and agree so marvellously about them? This universal faith must have an adequate cause; and Christianity is but the more full, clear, true and glorious exponent of it all . . . If Christ was before Abraham, as He claimed to be, then surely He must have manifested Himself to other nations beside the Jews, or other nations, including the Jews, must have derived their religious systems and ideas from some common source."²³⁶¹

EARLY CHRISTIAN ANSWERS: 1. Christ showed is superiority over all rulers by entering into their several provinces, and summoning men out of them to be subject to himself. Also, Christ enters into numerous nations and islands of the sea, many of which are unknown to us, but known to him. Upon having entered into these nations, he extended the boundaries of his kingdom far beyond what any earthly king or ruler could do. In these different areas of the world to which he went to, are the people of Christ. He knows them, and they know of him and worship him as King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.

2. Christians don't believe that God only speaks to them alone, for he spoke to many other nations of the world through prophets. Thus, he loves and cares about other nations too. For Christ not only descended into hades to preach the gospel, but he also went to all the earth in order that people could be saved wherever they were. Hence, God didn't neglect the other people in the different nations around the world.

The early Christian, Arnobius, writing sometime between 297—303 against the Heathens, said this about Christ: He was so much more than a normal man, for when he uttered a single word, it was thought by nations far removed from each other, and of different speech that he was "using well-known sounds, and the peculiar language of each..." Furthermore, he asks: "Was He one of us, who, when He was teaching His followers... suddenly filled the whole world, and showed how great He was and who He was, by unveiling the boundlessness of His authority?" He goes on to point to other miracles, and how that after his resurrection he began to show himself to many people. In this way he was so much more than just an ordinary man. Thus, Arnobius continues to ask: "Was he one of us, who... manifested Himself in open day to countless numbers of men; who spoke to them, and listened to them; who taught them, reprov'd and admonished them; who, lest they should imagine that they were deceived by unsubstantial fancies, showed Himself once, a second time, aye frequently, in familiar conversation; who appears even now to righteous men of unpolluted mind who love Him, not in airy dreams, but in a form of pure simplicity..."²³⁶²

Further on, Arnobius, like Tertullian earlier, suggest a number of areas around the world which the gospel of Christ had been spread to. When Christ gathered the nations, he did not use, as the Heathens do, arguments, speculative quibblings, but rather, "His virtues have been made manifest to you, and that unheard-of power over things, whether that which was openly exercised by Him, or that which was used over the whole world by those who proclaimed Him: it has subdued the fires of passion, and caused races, and peoples, and nations most diverse in character to hasten with one accord to accept the same faith. For the deeds can be reckoned up and numbered which have been done in India (Ethiopia), among the Seres, Persians, and Medes; in Arabia, Egypt, in Asia, Syria; among the Galatians, Parthians, Phrygians; in Achaia, Macedonia, Epirus; in all islands and provinces on which the rising and setting sun shines; in Rome herself, the mistress of the world, in which, . . . they have nevertheless hastened to give up their fathers' mode of life, and attach themselves to Christian truth..."²³⁶³

3. Also, many others besides the Christians get to escape the fire for these same reasons mentioned above.

185-230-254, Origen response: "Celsus next makes certain observations of the following nature: 'Again, if God, like Jupiter in the comedy, should, on awaking from a lengthened slumber, desire to rescue the human race from evil, why did He send this Spirit of which you speak into one corner (of the earth)? He ought to have breathed it alike into many bodies, and have sent them out into all the world.... [Origen:] We stated, indeed, in what precedes, that it was not as if awakening from a lengthened slumber that God sent Jesus to the human race... the advent of Jesus apparently to one corner (of the earth) was founded on good reasons, since it was necessary that He who was the subject of prophecy should make His appearance among those who had become acquainted with the doctrine of one God, and who perused the writings of His prophets, and who had come to know the announcement of Christ, and that He should come to them at a time when the Word was about to be diffused from one corner over the whole world.' "And therefore there was no need that there should everywhere exist many bodies, and many spirits like Jesus, in order that the whole world of men might be enlightened by the Word of God. For the one Word was enough, having arisen as the "Sun of righteousness," to send forth from Judea His coming rays into the soul of all who were willing to receive Him. But if any one desires to see many bodies filled with a divine Spirit, similar to the one Christ, ministering to the salvation of men everywhere, let him take note of those who teach the Gospel of Jesus in all lands in soundness of doctrine and uprightness of life, and who are themselves termed "christs" by the holy Scriptures, in the passage, "Touch not Mine anointed, and do not My prophets any harm.... For as we have heard that Antichrist cometh, and yet have learned that there are many antichrists in the world, in the same way, knowing that Christ has come, we see that, owing to Him, there are many christs in the world ... the Word, knowing that the nature of God is unaffected by sleep, may teach us that God administers in due season, and as right reason demands, the affairs of the world . . . There is therefore nothing ridiculous in the Son of God having been sent to the Jews, amongst whom the prophets had appeared, in order that, making a commencement among them in a bodily shape, He might arise with might and power upon a world of souls, which no longer desired to remain deserted by God."²³⁶⁴

Hippolytus [A.D. 170-236] includes, so it would seem, the other far away nations of the world when he wrote that Christ was offered for the sins of the world. "And a king speaking among the people:" so Christ reigns over the nations, and speaks by prophets and apostles the word of truth."²³⁶⁵ Christ also appeared and showed his own body to "the world," that "the gospel might be preached to the whole world."²³⁶⁶

Origen also wrote that, "the Christ of God thus shows His superiority to all rulers by entering into their several provinces, and summoning men out of them to be subject to Himself."²³⁶⁷

Later, Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 296-298 or Aug. 29, 284—May 2—3, 373, wrote during the Nicene Creed era, that, it was through Christ that the Father made all things, and "extended His Providence unto all things; by Him He exercises His love to man, and thus He and the Father are one . . ."²³⁶⁸

3rd or 4th cent., in Constitutions of The Holy Apostles, it says, "Instead of one tribe, He has appointed that out of every nation the best should be ordained for the priesthood..." and those so ordained should perform the sacrament,²³⁶⁹ and perhaps even the other ordinances, also called mysteries. "...Who is not struck with admiration when he represents to himself our Saviour at that time foretelling that his Gospel should be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, or, as Origen (who rather quotes the sense than the words), to serve for a conviction to kings, and people, when, at the same time, he finds that his Gospel has accordingly been preached to Greeks and Barbarians, to the learned and to the ignorant, and that there is no quality or condition of life able to exempt men from submitting to the doctrine of Christ? As for us, says this great author, in another part of his book against Celsus, "When we see every day those events exactly accomplished which our Saviour forefold at so great a distance; that his Gospel is preached in all the world, that his disciples go and teach all nations; and that those who have received his doctrine are brought for his sake before governors, and before kings, Matt. x. 18; we are filled with admiration and faith in him is confirmed more and more. What clearer and stronger proofs can Celsus ask for the truth of what he spoke?"... Origen would still have triumphed more in the foregoing arguments, had he lived an age longer, to have seen the Roman emperors, and all their governors and provinces, submitting themselves to the Christian religion, and glorying in its profession, as so many kings and sovereigns still place their relation to Christ at the head of their titles."²³⁷⁰

153-193-217, Clement of Alex.: Christ went to preach the gospel to not only those in hades, but "to all the earth" so that the different peoples around the earth could also be saved "wherever they were."²³⁷¹

between about 200-210 A.D., he argued this: The pagan gods deserve the worship of all the world for they had extended their power & authority into the whole world beyond the paths of the sun, & beyond the bounds of the ocean. "Thus, in that they acknowledge the sacred institutions of all nations, they have also deserved their dominion." Furthermore, he argued that they have increased because of their antiquity. This ancient critic may have also asked where Christ was? Was he also able to have power over the whole world? He may have thought that he could not have, because he could not help the Christians in their present struggles, while in this life. For he is reported to have said: "...Where is that God who is able to help you when you come to life again, [in the resurrection], since he cannot help you while you are in this life? Do not the Romans, without any help from your God, govern, reign, have the enjoyment of the whole world, and have dominion over you?..."²³⁷²

210, a number of ancient critics must have heard about the wandering Christ stories and thus objected to them too. For example, the early anti-Christian Octavius charged that the early Christians' God "...runs about everywhere, and is everywhere present: they make him out to be troublesome, restless, even shamelessly inquisitive, since he is present at everything that is done, wanders in and out in all places..."²³⁷³

115-168-181, Theophilus of Antioch asks the early anti-Christian Autolycus: Why was Iupiter found in only one part of the earth & not everywhere? He must have either neglected the other parts of the earth, or was unable to be present everywhere, & thus could not help all people everywhere.²³⁷⁴

145-220, Tertullian taught that the gospel had been spread abroad, and that Christ had entered through the doors or gates of hades, and in through the doors of the nations, to reign everywhere as the King of Kings.²³⁷⁵ "Else to what epoch belongs that life of the Lord which is to be manifested in our body? It surely is the life which He lived up to His passion, which was not only openly shown among the Jews, but has now been displayed even to all nations. Therefore that life is meant which "has broken the adamantine gates of death and the brazen bars of the lower world,"—a life which thenceforth has been and will be ours. Lastly, it is to be manifested in the body. When? After death, how? By rising in our body as Christ also rose in His."²³⁷⁶

"It surely is the life which He [Christ] lived up to His passion, which was not only openly shown among the Jews, but has now been displayed even to all nations. Therefore that life is meant which "has broken the adamantine gates of death and the brazen bars of the lower world."²³⁷⁷

Early to later Christian art work also depict the idea & belief that Christ could break through any barrier, as Tertullian had suggested, for as the doctrine spread to different areas, & started to fade off into later traditions, art works, & legends. Many early Christians must have believed that there was no place, though they are blocked off, or were, symbolically in some cases, locked gates, doors, or path ways, etc., that could stop the Lord Jesus Christ from entering and passing through. For, as noted many times here, Christ is depicted as if a Knight, with the cross as if it were a spear, doing battle with hell & the devil & his demons, or the hellish monsters of the under world. In later art works & legends, the devil & Hell are depicted as horned-demon-persons who are thrust through with Christ's spear. The doors, (John 10:7-8) or gates of hell, limbo, hades, etc., come crashing down on the devil, or hell, etc., who has been bound in chains, or irons, both hand & foot, (Matthew 12:24-30; Luke 11:14-22). Christ tramples the underworld adversary beneath his feet, & frees the captive spirits, who, in some depictions, with up lifted hands, give thanks unto the King of Glory. Christ, upon clasping their hands, lifts them out of the pit, or through the doorway, or up out of the jaws of hell, etc.²³⁷⁸

Tertullian notes hand clasping rites of passage as Christ pilgrimages through the doors & gates into the different nations to also open the doors of their minds and thereby enlighten their minds with the truth of His gospel. Christ also became their King, extending His Kingdom into all the nations of the earth, everywhere. Even into the nations which were unknown to Tertullian & the Jews, but of which were known unto God the Father & His Son Jesus Christ. For God the Father held the hand of Christ. "For whose right hand does God the Father hold but Christ's His Son?—whom all nations have heard, that is, whom all nations have believed."²³⁷⁹

"The LORD hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God . . . So shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider." Isa.52:10, 15.

"The LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly shewed" ["revealed"] in the sight of the heathen. He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God." (Psalm 98:2-3).

The mind's door or gates of unbelief would open to Christ. But also, Tertullian tells the Jews (who opposed the early Christians), that the doors of the nations could not keep Christ out. A number of Historians cites Tertullian as saying that the doctrine of Christ had been heard in all nations of the earth, for "the same voice and doctrine had been heard by the inhabitants of many more strange countries & islands unknown to us, and which, he says, we could not enumerate, yet in which is known the name of Christ, who has come and reigns, before whom the gates of all cities have opened and none remained closed, before whom all iron chains have been broken and steel locks have been unbarred. "Does not Tertullian," Solorzano says, "indicate, as it were, with his finger the distant regions of which we have no knowledge?"—of America?"²³⁸⁰

In one modern translation, Tertullian wrote against another Christian named Marcion, who was considered a heretic by a number of other early Christian writers too. Toward the end of Tertullian's 4th book "Against Marcion," chapter 43, Tertullian closes this book with these words: "Even to the last He [Christ] taught us (the same truth of His mission), when He sent forth His apostles to preach His gospel "among all nations"; [Luke 24:47] "for He thus fulfilled the psalm: "Their sound is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." [Psalms 19:4.] "Marcion, I pity you; your labour has been in vain. For the Jesus Christ who appears in your Gospel is mine."²³⁸¹

Tertullian, upon writing an answer to the early anti-Christians amongst many of the Jews, asked them: "For why should God, the founder of the universe, the Governor of the whole world, the Fashioner of humanity, the Sower of universal nations be believed to have given a law through Moses to one people, and not be said to have assigned it to all nations? For unless He had given it to all by no means would He have habitually permitted even proselytes out of the nations to have access to it. But—as is congruous with the goodness of God, and with His equity, as the Fashioner of mankind -- He gave to all nations the selfsame law, which at definite and stated times He enjoined should be observed, when He willed, and through whom He willed, and as he willed. For in the beginning of the world He gave to Adam himself and Eve a law... Therefore, in this general and primordial law of God, the observance of which, in the case of the tree's fruit, He had sanctioned, we recognise enclosed all the precepts specially of the posterior Law, which germinated when disclosed at their proper times. For the subsequent super induction of a law is the work of the same Being who had before premised a precept; since it is His province withal subsequently to train, who had before resolved to form, righteous creatures."²³⁸²

In response to the Jews, Tertullian reasons: "For unless He [God] had given it [the law] to all by no means would He have habitually permitted even proselytes out of the nations to have access to it. But -- as is congruous with the goodness of God, and with His equity, as the Fashioner of mankind -- He gave to all nations the selfsame law, which at definite and stated times He enjoined should be observed, when He willed, and through whom He willed, and as He willed."²³⁸³

160, The Pastor of Hermas, or The Shepherd, wrote symbolically in similitudes that the Lord would not neglect other parts of the world, for they would be "watered" or nourished with the "water" or gospel which would be preached to all the ends of the earth.²³⁸⁴

120–202 Irenæus: "On completing His thirtieth year He [Christ] suffered, being in fact still a young man, and who had by no means attained to advanced age. Now, that the first stage of early life embraces thirty years, and that this extends onwards to the fortieth year, every one will admit; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year a man begins to decline towards old age, which our Lord possessed while He still fulfilled the office of a Teacher, even as the Gospel and all the elders testify; those who were conversant in Asia with John, the disciple of the Lord, [affirming] that John conveyed to them that information."²³⁸⁵ If Irenæus had learned from some of the sayings & traditions of the "Elders" who in turn had learned from the apostle John that Christ had been a "Teacher" for some time after Christ had suffered. Where might Christ have gone to in order for Him to have acted in the office of a Teacher?

Upon writing about some of the beliefs held by some of the post-Christian Gnostics: the Ophites, Francis Legge wrote: "After His Resurrection, Jesus remained upon earth eighteen months, and perception descending into Him taught what was clear. These things He imparted to a few of his disciples whom He knew to be capable of receiving such great mysteries, and He was then received into heaven."

"...The stay of Jesus on earth after His Resurrection, and His teaching His disciples "quod liquidum est," that is, without parable, is also told in the Pistis Sophia, but His post-Resurrection life is there put at 12 years. Irenæus' Latin translator has, as has been said, evidently here got hold of some later developments of Ophitism not known to his author at the time that the Greek text was written. Yet some traditions of a long interval between the Resurrection and the Ascension were evidently current in the sub-Apostolic age. Irenæus himself says on the authority of "those who met with John the Disciple of the Lord in Asia" that Jesus' ministry only lasted for one year from His Baptism, He being then 30 years old, and He suffered on completing his 30th year; yet that He taught until He was 40 or 50 years old."²³⁸⁶ An early Coptic Christian work, the Pistis Sophia, "tells how Jesus spent twelve years after the resurrection teaching his disciples the mysteries of the heavenly places."²³⁸⁷ Other writers have also wondered about the exact length of time of the post Resurrection sojourns of Christ, and have so noted the conflicting opinions as to the exact time.²³⁸⁸

After reminding us again of the predictions concerning Christ's descent into the spirit prison, Irenæus later cites from the predictions of the Old Testament prophets when he wrote that from the Jerusalem area in the old world, the Lord would "send out His praise through all the earth." Irenæus cites the prophet Habakkuk, in writing that God's, or "His power covered the heavens over, and the earth is full of His praise. Before His face shall go forth the Word, and His feet shall advance in the plains." [Habakkuk 3:3, 5]. Irenæus saw in these words, types, and predictions concerning Christ's earthly mission.²³⁸⁹

Again, Irenæus seems to suggest that Christ's message of liberty has been "diffused, not throughout one nation [only], but over the whole world. For the one & same Lord, who is greater than the temple, greater than Solomon, & greater than Jonah, confers gifts upon men, that is, His own presence, and the resurrection from the dead."²³⁹⁰ Irenæus also wrote that: "The tradition of the Apostles (this Father saith) hath spread itself over the whole universe; and all they, who search after the sources of truth, will find this tradition to be held sacred in every Church."²³⁹¹

Irenæus on Christ's pre-existence, descent into the realms of the dead to preach there too, he thus, also tells how God the Father & Christ weren't neglectful of others: "...For it was not merely for those who believed on Him in the time of [Christ's birth during the time of] Tiberius Caesar that Christ came, nor did the Father exercise His providence for the men only who are now alive, but for all men altogether, who from the beginning, according to their capacity, in their generation have both feared and loved God, and practiced justice and piety towards their neighbors, and have earnestly desired to see Christ, and to hear His voice."²³⁹²

Irenæus: "Therefore the Son of the Father declares [Him] from the beginning, inasmuch as He was with the Father from the beginning, who did also show to the human race prophetic visions, and diversities of gifts, and His own ministrations, and the glory of the Father, in regular order and connection, at the fitting time for the benefit [of mankind] . . . And for this reason did the Word [Christ] become the dispenser of the paternal grace for the benefit of men, for whom He made such great dispensations, revealing God indeed to men, but presenting man to God, and preserving the same time the invisibility of the Father, lest man should at any time become a despiser of God, & that he should always possess something towards which he might advance; but, on the other hand, revealing God to men through many dispensations, lest man, falling away from God altogether, should cease to exist. For the glory of God is a living man; & the life of man consists in beholding God. For it the manifestation of God which is made by means of the creation, affords life to all living in the earth, much more does that revelation of the Father which comes through the Word, give life to those who see God."²³⁹³

Irenæus also wrote that after Christ's resurrection, He gave a discourse "with the disciples... proving to them from the scriptures themselves "that Christ must suffer, and enter into His glory, and that remission of sins should be preached in His name throughout the world."²³⁹⁴

To the righteous, Christ says, "there is one and the same God the Father, and His Word, who has been always present with the human race by means indeed of various dispensations, and has wrought out many things, and saved from the beginning those who are saved, (for these are they who love God, and follow the Word of God according to the class to which they belong.)"²³⁹⁵

For this "one and the same God is set forth as He who did indeed choose the patriarchs, visited also the people, and called the Gentiles."²³⁹⁶

The world had waited for the advent of Christ, and had waited for the same salvation that "is shown throughout the whole world. For to her is entrusted the light of God; & therefore the "wisdom" of God, by means of which she saves all men, "is declared in [its] going forth; it uttereth [its voice] faithfully in the streets, is preached on the tops of the walls, & speaks continually in the gates of the city." (2 Tim.3:7). For the Church preaches the truth everywhere, & she is the 7-branched candlestick which bears the light of Christ." (Rev.1:10-20).²³⁹⁷

In the lost fragments of the writings of Irenæus, we come across another comment that may be literal, but then again, it may be that "all the world" mentioned there, may have reference to only the known world at that time. Christ was said to have been "...believed in among the Gentiles... He was glorified, by being preached throughout all the world."²³⁹⁸

110-165, Justin Martyr explained that the reason why there are so many parallels between the Christians and the heathen mythology of other nations was this: "And these things were said both among the Greeks & among all nations where they [the demons] heard the prophets foretelling that Christ would specially be believed in; but that in hearing what was said by the prophets they did not accurately understand it, but imitated what was said of our Christ, like men who are in error, we will make plain."²³⁹⁹ Justin then gives some examples of the things that were counterfeited by the demons,²⁴⁰⁰ such as some of the predictions of the virgin birth, the scriptures, baptism, the sacrament or "Eucharist," the mysteries or ordinances, etc.²⁴⁰¹

30-100, Clement of Rome is one of the earliest Christian converts, a Gentile, and a Roman, he may have been at Philippi with St. Paul, about A.D. 57. In a letter, he wrote to the Corinthians about other "worlds" beyond the sea; in other words, there was "the whole world" as it was known to be the area of the Roman Empire at that time. But there were also "other worlds" or far distant lands across the sea that were known to the Creator of the universe, and which were governed by Him. Clement wrote that God knows of the "unsearchable places of the abysses, and the indescribable arrangements of the lower world, are restrained by the same laws." As in the heavens, by his command, but also the "ocean, impassible to man, and the worlds beyond it, are regulated by the same enactments of the Lord."²⁴⁰²

P. De Roo, a Catholic historian, wrote that Sahagun makes mention of Clement as having been a "contemporary of the apostle St. Thomas, from whom he may have learned the existence of "the other world" that he speaks of in his letter to the Corinthians."²⁴⁰³

The early Christians were clear on the point that Christ had visited other nations of the earth. Consequently, as time elapsed, these earlier beliefs began to fade off into legends, stories, and traditions concerning the wandering Christ Child. The many different Christmas traditions in the different nations, to a certain extent, preserved the idea of Christ's pilgrimage to other nations of the earth.

New Testament writers say that Christ would visit his other sheep (John 10:16). The Old Testament Prophets used sheep and branches, as a type of the descendants of Israel. Thus, the sheep were scattered among the nations. And the branches extended over waters, into the under world, and throughout the world. Early Christians used these types too, for Christ was often seen in the art works as going throughout the world, and into the spirit prison to gather his lost sheep. Roots, and branches were a type of his descent, and of how he went to other nations too. Mat. 25 became another prophecy of Christ's intercontinental trek, for Christ was that man traveling in a far country, wandering about the world in different guises in order to test different ones.

Peter seems to suggest that all nations would get a fair chance at salvation. "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:)" (Acts 10:34-36).

P. De Roo notes how these early Christian writers used passages from the scriptures, which they had during their particular times, in order to show how these particular beliefs were based on the scriptures. "These ancient Doctors of the Church relied especially, in making their bold assertions, upon text of Holy Scripture and, in particular, on the commission which the apostles received from our Lord Jesus Christ, and on the statements of the apostles themselves."²⁴⁰⁴

Roo continues, " ...But he said to them: You shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and you shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and even to the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1:7-8). The apostles had been passive witnesses of Christ's words and deeds, and now should be active witnesses to the same, as they actually became in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria, and, why not logically add? in the most distant portions of the world." And: "That they were faithful servants and fulfilled the Lord's command is evidenced by their own testimony. St. Mark closes his gospel with the words: "But they [the apostles] going forth, preached everywhere, the Lord working withal, and confirming the word with signs that followed" (Mark 16:20). "We should not exaggerate the meaning of the word "everywhere;" but neither could we grammatically allow it to cover only one-half of the earth, or even the Roman empire only."

"St. Paul, who, according to known history, travelled as much as any other apostle, and is said to have preached in America, testifies in several places that he and his colleagues evangelized the whole world. Writing to the Romans," [Rom.10:13-18.] he tersely argues on the responsibility of all who did not believe in the teachings of Christ. He acknowledges that such as did not hear the Gospel preached--that is, individuals--cannot be held responsible or as guilty; but, he says, where are they--namely, the nations -- which at this day, in all the world, can allege invincible ignorance as an excuse, since the words of authorized preachers--this is, of the apostles and of their co-laborers--have resounded everywhere?" [He cites from Romans 10:13-18.] "...St. Paul had already before said to the Romans that the Christian faith in which they believed "was spoken of in the whole world," [Col.1:3-6], "and, consequently, had already then been preached in every country of the earth."

"Equally strong, if not even more conclusive, are the words of the Apostle to the Colossians: "We give thanks to God and the Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ,... hearing your faith in Christ Jesus,... which is come unto you, as also it is in the whole world; and bringeth forth fruit, and groweth, even as it doth in you." And farther on, in the same chapter, ... he adds: "He [Christ] hath reconciled you,... if so ye continue in the faith,... which you have heard, and which is preached in all the creation that is under heaven." [Col.1:3-6, 21-23].

"The reader has noticed that Holy Scripture has made use of almost every possible wording to make us believe that the Gospel, at the very time of the apostles of Christ, had been preached everywhere, among all nations, to every creature or human tribe, even to the uttermost part of the earth, unto the ends of the whole world, and in all the creation that is under heaven."

"An honest reader would feel disappointed if he should be told that the whole selection of these universal expressions, in spite of well-known historical facts, only designates a relatively small portion of the earth, or only the Roman Empire; and the most saintly and learned men have, at all times, understood them in their obvious, grammatical sense. As a proof of this we will mention only one learned author, who was upright enough, although he had assumed to defend a widely different thesis, to give us a list of the most authoritative writers that stand in favor of our persuasion." Roo cites Don Juan de Solorzano Pereira, for being against this thesis-- that the Spaniards had first introduced Christianity into America.²⁴⁰⁵ Furthermore, the names of St. Hilary, St. Chrysostom, St. Jerome, St. Thomas, Euthymius, Theophylactus, Tostatus, Gagnaeus, Jansenius, Maldonatus, and other commentators of St. Matthew's 24 & 25th chapters, and St. Ambrose, interpreting the 10th chapter of St. Luke, and Bede, on the 13th chapter of St. Mark and Adrian Finaeus,²⁴⁰⁶ all these gave their own interpretations and understandings about the passages of scriptures which suggests the gospel was preached throughout the earth. Some, he notes, had conflicting opinions, as we will see, while others like Pinstus, commenting on the second chapter of Daniel, and Leo Castrensis, in the first book of his Chronography, and Fr. Stephen de Salazar^[2407] and Acosta was of the opinion that the apostles' personal preaching in America did happen.²⁴⁰⁸ While others' conflicting, opinions and interpretations about this clashed with other authors' opinions about these subjects.²⁴⁰⁹

For example, Roo says that Solorzano, however, in defense of his "false theory, objects to the grammatical understanding of all those scriptural expressions, and alleges^[2410] similar phrases, having a quite restricted meaning..." such as, Luke 2:1. "In those days there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that the whole world should be enrolled." The parity, however, is more apparent than real; for, as regards the quotation, the authority of Caesar Augustus, restricted within the boundaries of the Roman empire, evidently confines the meaning of "the whole world" within the same limits; while the context of any of the scriptural passages, adduced as records of the apostles' universal evangelization, does not oppose the belief that the Church, already in its beginning, truly was, as it is more in keeping with the mercy of God, with the general tenor of Holy Scripture, and with the duties of the apostles, expressed by St. Paul, when he says, '[Rom. 1:14.] "To the Greeks and to the Barbarians, to the wise and to the unwise, I am a debtor."

"Solorzano also objects the text, "Now there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven." [Acts 2:5.] "But while it does not appear how these words should weaken our opinion, they might well be brought forth as an argument in favor of it, because there is evidently question here of the Jewish colonies "among all nations under heaven," the "Jews." Should it be proved, as it seems to generally admitted, that the Israelites had established small colonies, not only within various parts of the Roman empire and other countries mentioned in the same chapter," [Acts 2:9-11.] "but, as they have now, among every nation under heaven, we might readily argue that, as they are scattered yet all over the world, to bear witness to the truth of the Christian religion, so they had been, by an especial providence of God, during their Babylonian and Assyrian captivity, sent out to every portion of the earth to be, as other St. Johns the Baptist, path-finders and harbingers of the first heralds of the fulfillment of their own typical religion." Roo continues to offer logical arguments about the possibilities that some of the apostles could have sailed over to the different nations, & then eventually to the Americas too. He cites a couple of examples of miraculous modes of travel in the Bible. And offers additional sources concerning St. Thomas' missionary activities in different countries, including the Americas.²⁴¹¹

Concerning the knowledge that God has of other parts of the world, Melito, The Philosopher, 160-170-177, wrote the following: "But they [those who make images because they believe that God is concealed from their view;] are unaware that God is in every country, and in every place, and is never absent, and that there is not anything done and He knoweth it not."²⁴¹²

The devil & his fallen angels, the demons, are said to have gone everywhere, as evident by evil found in all nations, so why couldn't Christ & his angels, prophets, apostles & saints also have gone forth to combat them? Or was Christ restricted to just a certain area of the world, where as Satan could go wherever he wished?²⁴¹³ Also, was it, that Christ couldn't do any better than the earthly Kings who couldn't extend their power & the boundaries of their Kingdoms beyond the confines of their own particular Kingdoms? Or was Tertullian right, when he said that Christ could & did do such a thing?²⁴¹⁴

"The angels are on every page of the Golden Legend, because they were so much in the thoughts of the people. They are particularly to be relied upon when the Devil makes his appearance, and the Devil is everywhere, and the author of every ill, great or small, that befalls a saint... Everywhere he works his malign wiles, and everywhere he is vanquished by the saints and the angels."²⁴¹⁵

According Augustine, the apostles could have been transported to the New World on the wings of angels.²⁴¹⁶ Tertullian [A.D. 145-220], wrote that "Every spirit is possessed of wings. This is a common property of both angels and demons. So they are everywhere in a single moment; the whole world is as one place to them."²⁴¹⁷

331-335-395, Gregory of Nyssa, The Great Catechism, about 385, he acknowledges the fact that demonic forces had gone throughout the world. However, he also testified that Christ did go forth among the nations to combat their evils too. Thus, he wrote: "... there exists no slight proof of the Deity having sojourned here..." The proof, he says, is in how Christ's sojourn in the flesh among the nations, had caused a major decrease in idolatry. For whom will doubt that the demonic forces had established among the nations their own bloody rites through idolatry? But, says Gregory, during Christ's sojourn in the flesh, he overthrew and abolished such things, so that: "...throughout the whole world there have arisen in the name of Jesus temples and altars and a holy unbloody Priesthood... [etc.] and indisputable proof of that Divine Sojourn among men."²⁴¹⁸

It is interesting to note that Gregory of Nyssa says that temples of Christ had arisen throughout the whole world. If this was the case, this might explain why we can now find fragments of that same type of Temple endowment or mystery, which is similar to what Christ showed the earliest Christians, all over the world.²⁴¹⁹ When Gregory speaks of Christ's "sojourn" in the flesh, does he have Christ's mortal life in mind? Or his post resurrection intercontinental pilgrimage in the flesh among the nations? While it may be that he has both in mind, it is more likely he has Christ's post resurrection sojourn in mind, and this, because of how he mentions temples of Christ being established among the nations. Furthermore, as we have already seen from the historical records, monuments, art works, and scriptures. It was during Christ's post resurrection trek throughout each continent that he taught the mysteries in the different nations which he went to. Gregory must have also passed through a version of the Christian mysteries too. Consequently, in A.D. 376, during a sermon for the Festival of the Epiphany or Theophany, when the Eastern Church commemorated the Baptism of Christ, Gregory closed this sermon by saying, that the Lord did:

1. Banish us from Paradise, and did recall us.

2. Strip off the fig-tree leaves, an unseemly covering, and puts upon us a costly garment.

3. (Baptism was the ritualistic type of Christ's descent into hell to release the spirit prisoners.²⁴²⁰) Thus, during this sermon on Baptism, he says how Christ did open the prison and did release the condemned.

In addition to this, he says how Christ did:

4. Sprinkle us with clean water, and cleanse us from our filthiness.

5. He also guides the resurrected into paradise.

6. How that they are then clothed with "a garment of salvation,... a robe of gladness..."²⁴²¹

The ancients also reasoned, as we might today that, if the gospel had not pre-existed before the Christian era, and had not been revealed by true prophets in the different nations, because there were no prophets in other lands beside in the old world, then:

A. Why would God have allowed the demons to set up barbaric versions of the gospel throughout the world?

B. Did God neglect these other parts of the world? Julian the Apostate, [361-63 C.E.], asked the early Christians: Why had God sent prophets to the Jewish nation, but to no others? For no prophets, "no oil of anointing, no teachers, no herald to announce his love for man which should one day, though late, reach even unto us also?... If he is God of all of us alike, and the creator of all, why did he neglect us?"²⁴²² Was Julian right?

C. Didn't he care or love the millions of souls who lived and died without a knowledge of Christ or his gospel? (Romans 8:38-39).

According to the ancient critics: Christ didn't go to other nations before his birth because, Celsus,²⁴²³ & 3rd century early anti-Christian Porphyry argued that Christ had hid himself for ages before appearing among the human family. Therefore the early Christians' God could not be the way, and the truth and the life, in which men and women could have only had access to God, since the time of Christ's appearing in the flesh. Therefore, early and modern Christianity "excludes those who have gone before and those who have no knowledge of Jesus of Nazareth."²⁴²⁴ And Celsus was right when he asked: "But, why was it only after so many years that God decided to involve himself in humans affairs? Had he not cared about men before?"²⁴²⁵

St. Augustine (354-430), answers Porphyry's charge of neglect by asking the critics the same type of questions. What about your rites, do you say they are needed for salvation? Or are they, as we say, useless? If not, what happened to those who died before these were instituted?²⁴²⁶

Furthermore, Augustine points out that Christ is the Word (1 John 1:1-14), which the Father reigns over as ruler of the universe. In later Christian art works, though Christ is called the ruler of the universe, the Father appears above Christ who is enthroned as a ruler of the universe.²⁴²⁷ Further on, Augustine says this about those who, from before Christ's birth, even from the beginning of the human race, believed. Whosoever believed in him, and knew him, and lived a pious life, and according to his precepts; even they were saved by him in whatever time & place that they lived in. Augustine also seemed to belief that the pre-Christian rites of those who knew Christ were basically the same as the Christians, even though they were called by different names. Thus, the symbolical types were basically the same, though greater light is now shed on them. Furthermore, he said: Why should Christ, because he foreknew that many in different places wouldn't believe him—Why should we wonder if Christ knew that the world was full of unbelievers in former ages, and that he righteously refused to manifest himself to them, and to be preached? And yet, He never did cease to preach by his prophets, even from the beginning of the human race. Why must we believe this critic that many others in other nations, besides the Hebrews, who were also worthy of salvation, were not also saved? For, from the beginning it was preached to either their advantage or disadvantage, depending on how they reacted to it. While those to whom it was not preached were those, of whom it was foreknown wouldn't believe.²⁴²⁸

But Augustine created for himself & later generations that accepted his doctrines, a lot of difficulties in dealing with the questions of the ancient critics, & questions that many could ask today about: How those who didn't hear the gospel, could be saved? Or those who could have heard, but wouldn't have understood, being infants, & dying before the age of understanding, but needing baptism & dying without that, could be saved or not? Thus, Augustine's doctrine of free grace, "original sin," predestination, infant baptism & other beliefs & doctrinal themes, like pre-existence, (that had been challenged by later Christians during the anti-Origin controversy). All these doctrines of Augustine made answers to these logical & difficult questions of his opponents more difficult. Questions that many also ask today, as they must have, in Augustine's time. Such questions as these: If God is all-powerful and could save all the human family, why did He (under predestination) choose to save only a certain number, out of so many? Why did God create those who were predestined & abandoned to damnation? If predestination is true, why does God not give perseverance to all who begin to be good so that they will continue being good? But if God saves only those whom He will, & if it's entirely out side of the mankind's power to do good, why preach and exhort to do good? Augustine tried to answer these, & many more types of questions, which I will try to summarize here: No one is saved from original sin of Adam except through faith in Jesus Christ. Even those who could say that they didn't hear the gospel of Christ, or who pretend to say they didn't, will not be free from the sentence incurred by Adam. Those who say they didn't hear, we didn't receive perseverance, might ask: Why are we lost, seeing that we didn't receive perseverance, so that we might not go back from good to evil, but remain good? To these, there's no excuse, & so they too can't escape their just condemnation by such excuses. Even those who couldn't believe because they were infants, needing infant baptism, but dying without it, all these are still sentenced to the loss of God, by reason of one, (the original sin of Adam?), they all fall under condemnation. While those who do not endure to the end, but fall from the Christian faith & conduct & die, they will not be counted amongst the elect, not even at the time during which they are living in goodness & piety. Even they are not selected from the lost by the foreknowledge & predestination of God. To this, Augustine says he didn't know why even those who once lived a good Christian life & once had God's love, could still not be amongst the elect. This was one of the difficulties of Augustine's predestination doctrine, it made it difficult for people to have hope that they were amongst the elect, even if they believed & lived a good life. It made it difficult to know if their loved ones, some who might not have heard the Gospel, would also be amongst the elect. Augustine still continued to try to answer by saying he didn't have all the answers, didn't know, so he placed it under one of those many mysteries. He & no one else could thus understand (under predestination), how & why one receives this gift of being amongst the elect & another doesn't. For, no one can penetrate the inscrutable, (or impossible to understand or interpret), judgments of God in this regard. When some of Augustine's time therefore asked questions, that came out of these predestination issues: What would then be the point of being good, of being preached to & given commandments, if its God who affects in us the will & deed? Especially if not even the elect know in life that they are the elect, because no one knows yet that they are, or who is. Augustine attempts to answer by claiming that: No one knows who, not even the elect, because if they knew they might get puffed up with pride. Plus, if they knew, they might not feel obligated to reach the goal, thinking they'd already made it. Moreover, because we don't know who is saved & who is not, we must act like all should be saved, & must administer to all the strong medium of admonition to be faithful & endure to the end. Augustine also knew about the issue & questions about those in far away places & under predestination doctrines, it was to be understood that the meaning of passages about how God would that 'all' would be 'saved,' to mean that & understood that 'all the predestined'. When asked about all those who have not heard the gospel or name of Christ, Augustine points out that though there are a lot of areas in the world that the gospel was preached to, there still were remote far away places where the gospel was not found. He answers by pointing out if this were the case, that even the remote areas didn't or wouldn't hear, eventually, then this would make it that Christ died in vain, the cross would be of none effect. But, this doesn't seem to be the case, for Augustine, in other areas of his writings, as noted, suggest the gospel was preached, would be, because God is not neglectful. However, if they, in far away remote areas of the world, should be unrighteous, it was because they wished to be, not because they were unable to be. But any righteousness done by them, the heathen nations, without through the grace of Christ, can't be counted for righteousness. Thus, Augustine's doctrines, in his controversy with Julian of Eclanum, & Augustine's attempts to harmonize predestination with 'free will,' also presented great trouble for him, just as it did for others that came up with their own doctrines, & rejected earlier beliefs, like pre-existence themes, that help answer these types of issues a lot easier than the complicated later "mysteries" they created with the types of things Augustine came up with, without true revelations & spiritual gifts.²⁴²⁹

GOD DIDN'T NEGLECT PEOPLE IN OTHER NATIONS & REALMS

Julian the Apostate, [361-63 C.E.], charge was unfair when he said that the Christians' God had neglected them because he had sent them "no prophets, no oil of anointing, no teachers, no herald to announce his love for man which should one day, though late, reach even unto us also?"²⁴³⁰

An early Christian named Cyprian, [A.D. 200—258], says that God did speak to all nations, and to all the earth through angelic messengers,²⁴³¹ and prophets. The problem was, however, that: "... neither have we hearkened to the words of Thy servants the prophets, which they spake in Thy name to our kings, and to all the nations, and to all the earth."²⁴³²

Another source says this concerning Julian's views of the Jewish race being a chosen race by God: "Why, he asks, did the Demiurge single out this obscure people for his especial protection and neglect the remainder of the world? "By what gods are the other nations ruled?"²⁴³³

It may be that Julian had come across a number of Jews who held to this belief: The only generation which would be the beneficiaries of the divine development of the world would be the last ones who were lucky enough to experience the coming of the Messiah. While all earlier generations of mankind would be "consumed with the longing for fulfillment but would die without experiencing it."²⁴³⁴

Cyprian, suggests that the Jews had departed from God, and had lost God's favor, which had been given to them in times past. In the case with the early Christians, they were their successors, and "deserving well of the Lord by faith, and coming out of all nations and from the whole world."²⁴³⁵

Clement of Alexandria, "...the true Ruler and Director is the Word of God and his Providence, superintending all things and neglecting the charge of none of her household. And such would be they who have chosen to attach themselves to the Word, viz., those who are perfected through faith."²⁴³⁶

And even though Porphyry knew of Origen, and thus, must have learned some of the responses that the early Christian apologists were giving to these types of questions, and charges.²⁴³⁷ Still, he seems to have suggested that God had neglected the people before the time of Christ when he asks "What about the souls of people who lived before Jesus and had no opportunity to believe?"²⁴³⁸ These were unfair charges and questions because a number of early Christians during, and before their times, had written that God had sent out prophets throughout the world, so as to not be found neglecting other parts of the earth. Porphyry either didn't accept these types of responses that Origen and others had given, or he ignored them in order to make other charges seem reasonable. For Origen, in response to Celsus' charge of neglect had said that there were numerous "Christs" or anointed ones (prophets) representing the one Christ throughout the world.²⁴³⁹ Origen had also wrote, "But nothing has been neglected by God, or will be neglected by Him; for He does at each particular juncture what it becomes Him to do in a perverted and changed world."²⁴⁴⁰

However, despite these doctrines and beliefs, critics still charged that the pagans' gods weren't neglectful of other nations,²⁴⁴¹ but rather, it was the Christians' Gods who were, for he had sent down from heaven²⁴⁴² only one Christ into one corner of the earth.²⁴⁴³

Celsus also had to reject, and then by pass what he had heard about Christ's descent to preach to those in the "infernal regions,"²⁴⁴⁴ in order for him to make another charge of neglect.²⁴⁴⁵ But also, to claim that it was an early Christian belief to say that God was only interested in just a few, or a certain corner of the world only. Consequently, that the Christians' god, like a cook, will roast in fire,²⁴⁴⁶ the rest of mankind, or all those who do not profess the Christian faith. For the Christians alone, says Celsus, believed that "they alone will escape unscorched."²⁴⁴⁷ However, Celsus knew, that what he was suggesting was an early Christian belief, was in reality, contradictory to their actual beliefs. In addition, how they viewed Christ as mindful, and merciful of the world's pre-Christian nations, nations then, and future ones. For it contradicted their beliefs of how Christ wandered about the world, and through different realms, in order to preach the gospel to the whole human family, no matter where they were.²⁴⁴⁸

One writer presents Celsus' distorted view of early Christian beliefs as follows, charging them for being absurd "to assert that God would be especially interested in only a few of the human race. He works always for the whole. Hence the Christian Doctrine is peculiarly absurd." And: "Did God, at that particular time, arouse from slumber, and resolve to rescue a few people from sin? Was He indifferent to all mankind before, to all the nations of the earth? And is He to continue to show the same special favor only for a select number?"²⁴⁴⁹

"Celsus should not have scoffed at the time and place of the Incarnation. It is not as if the Logos had neglected the human race until recently; God has always inspired people to obtain reason and truth. Nevertheless, the Logos fittingly appeared as human when the Roman peace made it possible for God's message to spread unimpeded and among the people to whom that coming was predicted."²⁴⁵⁰

Again, these types of anti-Christian arguments were not always made out of ignorance, but, in some cases, outright rejections of doctrines and beliefs that they knew about. Doctrines which spoke of God's willingness to help the whole world, & to provide the world with numerous chances to hear the gospel through prophets, angelic messengers, & even visitations by Christ. In fact, one of the very reasons why so much effort was put into seeing that the gospel was declared throughout the world, and in the afterlife realms, was because of this: In so doing this, the rebellious wouldn't be able to say that God hadn't been fair with them, because they didn't get a chance to hear it. This is the very point which Clement of Alexandria, A.D. 153-193-217, comments on throughout in his writings. He also notes this point in the writings bearing the name of Peter. For he says that the Lord said to the apostles to "Go forth into the world, that no one may say, We have not heard."²⁴⁵¹ Further on he repeats this point about how Christ sent the apostles out into the world, so that "they who heard and believed should be saved; and that those who believed not, after having heard, should bear witness, not having the excuse to allege, We have not heard."²⁴⁵²

This same point is also suggested by the apostles Barnabas, and Paul who said that God "in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good" (Acts 14:16—17). Then Paul to the Romans points out how they were sent into all nations to preach the gospel, but they didn't all obey the gospel (Romans 10:6—21). He also presents that saving hand of God that is stretched out to the people to grasp, "I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people." (Romans 10:21). And then as Isaiah also says, that saving hand is there for you to grasp, even in the spirit prison, and if you take hold of it you will be led out (Isaiah 42:6—7). But then, he also notes those who seem to suggest that God can't save or hear them, and then points out what the real problem is. "BEHOLD, the LORD's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." (Isaiah 59:1—2).

Peter also shows Christ's willingness to even give those, who, while they were in their mortal bodies, "were disobedient." But who, after they died and went into the spirit prison, they were given another chance to hear the gospel, accept it, and then "live according to God in the spirit." This, afterlife chance to repent and obey the gospel was made possible because Christ preached the gospel in the spirit prison. (1 Peter 3:15—22; 4:5—6).

Clement of Alexandria further argued that after Christ and the apostles had gone forth into all the earth to preach the gospel. The apostles, following Christ's example, descended into Hades to preach the gospel there too.²⁴⁵³ The apostles' afterlife descent into hades, he notes, is also mentioned in The Pastor of Hermas.²⁴⁵⁴ Furthermore, this act of mercy is carried over into later Christian symbolism. For in some cases, to be in the baptismal font during baptism, this was a type of being in the underworld, hades, limbo, or the abyss, etc.²⁴⁵⁵ And if this is the case, a 12th century baptismal font is of interest here, as a possible later Christian example of these acts of mercy. The font rests on the back of 12 oxen in a circle. The oxen, may represent the 12 tribes of Israel who were scattered among the nations. And to which, according to historical records, and scriptures, Christ, and the apostles went to visit. However, these same 12 oxen could also represent the 12 apostles. If so, then it could be that this represents the 12 apostles, facing the different directions to which they went to when they preached the gospel throughout the world. Moreover, in addition to this possible interpretation, it could also include how they went into many different directions in the underworld realm, limbo, etc., when they descended to preach the gospel there too.²⁴⁵⁶

Further on Clement of Alexandria continues to argue & reasons about how God caused the gospel to be spread throughout this mortal existence, & in the after life realms of the spirits. For in so doing this, those who may have sinned in ignorance, could repent and be forgiven at the time, place, or realms that they should happen to hear and accept the gospel.²⁴⁵⁷ "For it is not right that these should be condemned without trial, & that those alone who lived after the advent should have the advantage of the divine righteousness."²⁴⁵⁸

Furthermore, even though Celsus, the early anti-Christian faultfinder, knew of these dogmas, he still used the same type of ill-reasoning, as others have, in order to reject other doctrines. These concepts would have also answered his charges & claims, had he only accepted them.

S. M. Pellistrand notes that Celsus was "struck by the Christians' presumption, like that of the Jews, in claiming to have a privileged source of divine revelation: "Jews and Christians remind me of a flock of bats or a group of ants coming out of their holes, or of frogs settled beside their marsh, or of worms chatting in a corner of their slime pit, telling each other, 'God reveals & announces everything to us in advance. He hasn't another care in the world. He lets heaven and earth do whatever they want so he can concern himself with us.'"²⁴⁵⁹

The early Christian, Hippolytus, A.D. 170-236, suggests, how when Christ was in the underworld he reigned, and "preached to the souls of the saints," and overcame death.²⁴⁶⁰ And as a King speaking among the people, He also "reigns over the nations, and speaks by prophets and apostles the word of truth."²⁴⁶¹ This belief ought to have answered any charges ancient critics might have made in charging Christ with having neglected other nations. Unfair, and inaccurate too were Porphyry's charges, such as how that the Christians' God "excludes those who have gone before and those who have no knowledge of Jesus of Nazareth."²⁴⁶² It was unfair for him to have said this because of how many early Christians repeatedly state over and over again that God had appeared and talked to the pious in earlier dispensations,²⁴⁶³ before the Christian era.²⁴⁶⁴ And, that he wasn't restricted to just a certain area of the world, as Celsus too had charged he was.²⁴⁶⁵ For many Christians believed that he went, in his Spirit form, to other nations before he was born to Mary. That he went to preach the gospel to the spirits in prison, after his death, and that he went to other nations around the world, after his resurrection.

"What became of the innumerable souls" before Christ's birth? Asks Porphyry. The answers had already been given; so why weren't critics accepting these answers? For if the people before the time of Christ didn't get a chance to hear the prophets in their own lands, they would hear the gospel in the after life realms. (1 Pet.3:15-22, 4:5-6, Eph.4:7-10). And sense the Christians had already answered that Christ had spoken to, and had appeared to many people before his birth to Mary. It was not fair to charge God with neglect by saying that he had "not yet appeared among humankind?... hide himself for so many ages?"²⁴⁶⁶

The Pastor of Hermas, or The Shepherd, A.D. 160, had also symbolically pointed out in a parable that the Lord would not neglect other parts of the world, for he and his servants had "watered" the world unto the ends of the earth with the gospel.²⁴⁶⁷

Justin Martyr had also explained earlier, that the demons had counterfeited what the true prophets had taught the people in the different nations, thus, suggesting that other nations had prophets too, and the gospel.²⁴⁶⁸ Therefore, the demons were out in the world setting up counterfeits²⁴⁶⁹ based on what they had heard from the prophets among all nations; that's why there were similarities between the Christians and the pagan nations.²⁴⁷⁰ Justin also wrote that Christ had been foretold by not only the prophets among the Hebrews, but also "We find it also predicted that certain persons should be sent by Him into every nation to publish these things, and that rather among the Gentiles [than among the Jews] men should believe on Him. And He was predicted before He appeared, first 5000 years before, and again 3000, then 2000, then 1000, and yet again 800; for in the succession of generations prophets after prophets arose."²⁴⁷¹ This being the case, the critics, even if they didn't agree with these beliefs, could hardly argue that the Christians' God had been neglectful of other people around the world. "To suppose that God could have left the Indians without his light during the many centuries that separated the coming of Christ from the dispatch of Spanish missionaries to the New World "violates the natural, divine and positive laws, and is an insult to the mercy and justice of God."²⁴⁷²

Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, was bold enough to "conceive of a Greek prophetist corresponding to the Jewish: "Just as God, wanting to save the Jews, gave them prophets, he also inspired among the Greeks the most prominent personalities to be their own prophets in their language, according as they were capable of receiving the gift of God, and he distinguished them from ordinary people...." ²⁴⁷³

Another translation reads, "For that, as God wished to save the Jews by giving to them prophets, so also by raising up prophets of their own in their own tongue, as they were able to receive God's beneficence, He distinguished the most excellent of the Greeks from the common herd..." Clement goes on to name Sibyl's writings as inspired by God.²⁴⁷⁴ Clement even suggested that the Greek poet Homer "was favored with an authentic gift of prophecy."²⁴⁷⁵

Clement also wrote, "And by one God are many treasures dispensed; some disclosed by the law, others by the prophets; some to the divine mouth."²⁴⁷⁶ Clement also wrote that bits of the truth could be found throughout the world, even among the pagan nations.²⁴⁷⁷

Clements says that the Gospel had been diffused over the whole world, where as philosophy had not been. Prophets had been the ones who had become the organs of the divine voice.²⁴⁷⁸

Lactantius, A.D. 260—330, wrote how that after the Jews had rejected the prophets that were sent to them, God sent His Son whom they also rejected. And because of this, "... He would assemble to Himself a more faithful people from foreign nations. But they not only persisted in their course, but even slew the messengers themselves.... [Thus] He sent His own Son, to call all nations to the favour of God. Nor, however, did He shut them out, impious and ungrateful as they were, from the hope of salvation; but He sent Him to them before all others, that if they should by chance obey, they might not lose that which they had received; but if they should refuse to receive their God, then, the heirs being removed, the Gentiles would come into possession. Therefore the supreme Father ordered Him to descend to the earth, and to put on a human body, that, being subject to the sufferings of the flesh, He might teach virtue and patience not only by words, but also by deeds."²⁴⁷⁹ Note the italics part (italics added): "He sent Him to them before all others" seems to suggest that God the Father sent His Son, Jesus Christ, to the Jews first, when Christ was sent down from heaven to be born. Then to all others, or to foreign nations, perhaps after his resurrection, in order, "to call all nations to the favour of God." And in as much as the Jews had rejected the prophets, and the Son; the Father would send his Son Jesus Christ to the Gentile nations.

In the Recognitions of Clement, first through the fourth centuries A.D., Clement was concerned about what happened to those who lived in the times before Christ's birth, how could they be saved. Peter answered Clement by telling him that Christ had pre-existed, for he was from the beginning, for Christ had been secretly present with the pious throughout all their generations, especially with those who had waited for Christ. For it was to them that Christ frequently appeared. However, the time was not yet that there should be a resurrection of their bodies after their bodies had been dissolved. Therefore when they passed on into the next life, and those who pleased his will, they were translated to Paradise so that they should be kept for the kingdom. While all those who hadn't been able completely to fulfil the rule of righteousness, but still had some remnants of evil in their flesh, their bodies were also eventually dissolved too, while their spirits were kept in good and blessed abodes, so that at when they are resurrected, or when they shall recover their own bodies, purified even by the dissolution, they too may eventually obtain an eternal inheritance according to their good deeds. While those who were blessed enough to attain to the kingdom of Christ shall have not only escaped the pains of hell, but they shall have also remain incorruptible, and shall have become the first to see God the Father, and shall have obtained the rank of honor among the first in the presence of God.²⁴⁸⁰

Later, 1100s, Peter the Venerable, polemically upset with the Jews continued rejection of Christ, wrote: "How long, wretched ones, will you not believe the truth? How long before your iron hearts will soften? Behold how, for a long time now, nearly all the world has recognized Christ, and you alone do not recognize him. All the nations obey him; you alone deny him."²⁴⁸¹

CHRIST AS THE WOUNDED WANDERER & REALM TRAVELER

To understand more about some of the guises Christ wanders the world in, we need to consider more about the symbolical meanings behind the rituals, and early Christian mysteries. In addition, how they influenced later traditional ways and illustrations, in which the Wounded Wanderer is to be greeted. All throughout historic Christendom, doors, gates, hills or mountain tops; also, tunnels through the clouds, ladders, and open pits, have all symbolized entrance ways into other realms in the afterlife.²⁴⁸² These things are also part of the settings for the ritualistic journeys of souls in and out of afterlife realms. They are the places where, according to the art compositions, the hand and wrist grasping rites of passage takes place too.²⁴⁸³

Furthermore, we also see this sort of thing in the way in which different ones are greeted before entering a holy place. However, the ancient Temples on earth²⁴⁸⁴ became the places where ritualistic enacted extra-celestial meetings, and close encounters between mortals and immortals were dramatized in plays called the mysteries. Here, mortals encountered those playing the part of the divine beings, as they were ritualistically making the transitional pilgrimages into afterlife realms. Thus, it was in these mysteries that they were greeted by divine beings, (or those playing the part of divine beings), during ascensions into higher afterlife realms.²⁴⁸⁵ Some passage-ways into higher realms were symbolically done through door ways, at least, this is what some art pieces seem to suggest took place in the ritual dramas. Consequently, this is where ritualistic greetings are enacted in preparation for the actual events, when mortals will encounter angelic and other divine personages, during the afterlife journeys of souls to the different afterlife realms. Hence, the ritualistic types in the mysteries, these encounters which were depicted in numerous art compositions, such as the ascent into heavenly Temple,²⁴⁸⁶ these had their earthly enacted counterparts, iconography, and imagery which served as visible reminders as to the ritualistic types of these afterlife journeys. For example, David's hand is held as he is being greeted by Christ at the entrance way to a church building, while, up above this scene, can be seen the hand of God the Father extending down rays of blessings and light.²⁴⁸⁷ A "door was opened in heaven" in an early depiction of Revelations 4:1. After St. John ascends a ladder to this door, an angel lifts him up by his wrists to assist his entrance into heaven.²⁴⁸⁸ In another composition, two angels assist Christ during his ascension into heaven, one, by grasping his hand. This scene was carved into the wood on a door at Santa Sabina, Rome, A.D. 432.²⁴⁸⁹

Consequently, when the time did come, when doctrines faded off into fables & legends, the wandering Christ knocks at the door, it's opened, and the person inside doesn't realize who he is. If he is rejected, he moves on. If welcomed in, he blesses that home and those in it. One custom, that seems to have been derived from the wandering Christ-Child traditions, is this: Groups of children of all ages, would go door to door "As king for New Year's cakes from house to house on the Isle of Man."²⁴⁹⁰ In Great Britain and the United States, the same type of custom is observed. Groups of Children would go door to door begging, and singing carols. "As they knock at each door, they are welcomed in and given something delicious to eat and a warm drink."²⁴⁹¹ This also might remind us about "trick-or-treat" door to door begging customs too. In the Victorian piece, The Light of the World, Christ stands at a door without a door nob on the outside. William Holman Hunt wrote that "'The door at which Christ knocks is the door of the human heart . . . Its only handle is inside."²⁴⁹² The peasants of southern Russia, also have a door to door custom, in which, Christmas guests, were chosen by the villagers to go door to door.²⁴⁹³

6th c., the traditional door to door knocking treks of Christ were believed to take place from time to time. Hence, Encomium of Theodosius, Archbishop of Alexandria, A.D. 536, said to a group of people to rise up and withdraw themselves away from the door into the outer hall, so that, "...when our Lord the King cometh in with His holy archangel [Michael] we may make supplication unto him. Peradventure he will shew a little mercy unto us, even as he doth unto those others who beg for alms at the door..."²⁴⁹⁴

GOD'S ANGELS SPREAD THE GOSPEL THROUGHOUT THE WORLD: CHRIST AS THE ANGEL OF THE LORD

In early Christian thought and writings about Christ's pre-existing mission as a divine Spirit, and as God the Father's divine messenger to the nations. Christ is entitled, the Messenger of the Great Council in Heaven, and the Angel of the Lord.²⁴⁹⁵

Concerning angelic messengers sent into the four quarters of the earth, we read in Revelation 7:1: "AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth." The 4 symbols of the 4 Gospel writers, are often depicted with wings, perhaps symbolic of how the gospel spread into the 4 directions of the world. But also, that they were able to travel to far distant lands because of the miraculous modes of travel which traditions said the Apostles were capable of.²⁴⁹⁶

Encomium of Theodosius, Archbishop of Alexandria, 536, said this of Saint Michael the Archangel. He who "...sheweth compassion upon all mankind... is the great Archangel Michael, the Commander-in-Chief of the hosts of heaven." Further on he says one of his tasks is to be a "... messenger of glad tidings unto every one... His rule is not over one order [of angels] only, but all orders of heaven are subject unto him, according to the command of the Almighty... & he taketh counsel for the salvation of man, who is the image and likeness of the Living God... [established this angel as a] governor over all His kingdom[s]... [Who will also] present the Offering on behalf of the whole race of the sons of Adam."²⁴⁹⁷

Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217: "For regiments of angels are distributed over the nations and cities. And, perchance, some are assigned to individuals. The Shepherd, then, cares for each of his sheep..."²⁴⁹⁸

6th c., an icon of the archangel Michael, a diptych in the British Museum in London, shows him "holding the orb that symbolized imperial power, now transformed into a Christian attribute."²⁴⁹⁹ Other artists depict Christ as a ruler over the world and universe, who also has princes as governing angels over different areas of the cosmos, and the world. For example, a 12th century artist shows "archangels clad like emperors and wielding the imperial labarum and globe."²⁵⁰⁰

MIRACULOUS MODES OF TRAVEL: The apostles were commanded by Christ to go forth to preach the gospel, and thus they did, even "to all the ends of the earth, declaring to men the blessing of heavenly peace, having all of them, and every one alike, the Gospel of God."²⁵⁰¹ For Christ, apostles, & angels, transportation to far distant lands was not a difficulty,²⁵⁰² while for normal mortals, it was, especially back then. Clement of Alexandria, wrote that, God being good, and the Lord being powerful, would "save with a righteousness and equality which extend to all that turn to Him, whether here or elsewhere." He also says that it is not only here alone that the active power of God is beforehand, but it is also everywhere. And it is always at work. And that Christ chose the apostles to be sent into the world so that "they who heard and believed should be saved; and that those who believed not, after having heard..." should not be able to excuse themselves on account of not having heard.²⁵⁰³

Tertullian, A.D. 145-220, wrote that in "the Lord's apostles we possess our authority; for even they did not of themselves choose to introduce anything, but faithfully delivered to the nations (of mankind) the doctrine which they had received from Christ."²⁵⁰⁴ In another place in his writings, he returns to the commission of Christ to his disciples to go forth throughout the world to preach the gospel. The designation and meaning of the office of apostles mean "the sent."²⁵⁰⁵

Cynthia Pearl Maus wrote that the "early leaders of the infant church were known as "apostles," which literally means "those who are sent." Further on, we read that "the apostles were helped and guided in the work He [Christ] had told them to do--which was to go out into all parts of the world and tell the people of every land that the Saviour of mankind had come, and had died upon the cross that they might be saved."²⁵⁰⁶

During Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost descended upon the disciples, from that moment on "the disciples were suddenly able to speak many foreign languages. This helped them go forth and preach Christianity to the rest of the world."²⁵⁰⁷ In The Teaching of Addæus The Apostle, 3rd-4th cent., we read how the disciples who were born Hebrews, could only speak Hebrew. Now, however, at that time, they were able to speak "in all languages, in order that those who are afar off may hear and believe, even as those who are near.”²⁵⁰⁸ In the 3rd or 4th century Christian work from the Ancient Syriac Documents, The Teaching of The Apostles, when the apostles heard the command to go forth into the different nations, some of them wonder how they would be able to understand strange languages, and how that such diverse peoples would be able to understand them. While they were perplexing over this problem, Simon Cephas is reported to have said that this was a difficulty which the Lord would help them overcome, “for He knoweth how it is possible for us to preach His Gospel in the world . . .”²⁵⁰⁹ Soon after this, and other comments, they were enlightened with the abilities to speak and understand the different languages of the different peoples to whom each one would be sent to. For “according to the tongue which every one of them had severally received, so did he prepare himself to go to the country in which that tongue was spoken and heard.”²⁵¹⁰

Early Christian, Lactantius, 260 —330, wrote that after Christ’s resurrection, Christ went into Galilee and assembled his disciples and gave them commands, the Holy Spirit, and power to work miracles. In having “arranged for the preaching of the Gospel throughout the whole world,”²⁵¹¹ He returned to the Father on the 40th day.

In The History of Joseph The Carpenter, third through the fourth centuries, Christ gathered his disciples and warns them about the time he will be crucified. He tells them that they are to declare his gospel throughout the world. That they will be endowed with power, and the Holy Spirit to help them with this task. They are to declare repentance and remission of sins to all nations. He tells them to “go declare to all nations,” that as administrator of justice and the rewards due the nations, he will judge them all according to their actions and words.²⁵¹²

Eusebius Pamphili of Cæsarea, born about A.D. 260—265, and died about A.D. 337—40, wrote his History of the church about A.D. 323—325. In it, he wrote about the holy apostles and disciples who were “dispersed throughout the world.”²⁵¹³ Christian artists also developed symbolical depictions that preserved the concepts that all the various tribes, families and nations of mankind would benefit from Christ’s atonement and gospel.²⁵¹⁴

SELECTIVE SALVATIONISM: CONCERNS OR LACK OF CONCERNS ABOUT WHO GOT OR GETS SAVED!

The Mission of the Apostles, is seen in the tympanum of the center portal of the narthex, Ste-Madeleine, Ve’zelay, not far from Autun in Burgundy, A. D. 1120-32. An enlarged portion this stone work shows two figures clasping hands, representing the “Pig-Snouted Ethiopians.” These & other figures were seen as representatives of “the heathen world, a veritable encyclopedia of medieval anthropology which includes all sorts of legendary races.” On the archivolt, or the arch framing the tympanum, we see the different signs of the zodiac “and the labors appropriate to every month of the year, to indicate that the preaching of the Faith is as unlimited in time as it is in space.”²⁵¹⁵ Thus, Christ’s “...saving grace streams from his finger-tips and inspires his apostles, who will preach his Gospels to all the nations of the world. “Its tympanum represents the mission of the Apostles: Christ appears to the Disciples between his resurrection and ascension . . . All around, the peoples of the world—sometimes in fantastic shapes—wait for the Gospel tidings.”²⁵¹⁷

Though there were areas & times in Christendom where the questions got answered about how, when & where everyone who has ever lived, lived then, & will live, will all get a fair chance, or more, at being saved, because of the love of God for all people, no matter what races, times & places they were born in to, (Romans 8:38–39). Though there are on going questions about opportunities of repenting in mortal life, or in the spirit prison, for those once disobedient, (1 Peter 3:15–21, 4:5-6). Questions about those who never heard about Christ, while they were alive. Despite how these questions were answered by the doctrines about Christ & the gospel pre-existing before Christ’s birth to Mary. Plus, answered by the doctrines about Christ’s descent into hell to preach the gospel, &, his post-resurrection world wide treks, to also preach the gospel throughout the nations. Despite these earlier polemical answers, as given by earlier Christians, unfortunately, as time went by, as these doctrines became rejected in many areas of Christianity, like many pre-existence themes. Or became legendized, like in many Christ world wide trek themes.²⁵¹⁸ Plus, as Christianity became more militant in different areas, & began programs of forced Christianization of non-Christians in different areas that Christian warriors conquered.²⁵¹⁹

During the 15th c., others felt that their selective salvationism should include the black race of Africa, even if these souls were collected by force! Thus, the slave trade was also seen as a way to collect souls for Christ, although Christ of the New Testament wouldn’t have done it that way. While the Militant Christ of the Middle Ages, onwards, perhaps was seen & believed would have, as Christ was often depicted marching forth with his flag-banner weapon, during his post-resurrection world wide treks. This may be what Portuguese Prince, Henry the Navigator, had in mind, when he went forth to collect souls for Christ. Known as Infante D. Henrique of Portugal, Duke of Viseu (4 March 1394 – 13 November 1460), (Portuguese: Infante Dom Henrique, o Navegador). He must have been taught the Militant Christ themes, in later themes, of Christ’s world wide treks. Thus, with the traditional banner of Portugal and of Christ, under the flag of the Order of Christ, set out on the Crusade of Discovery. He was determined to extend the rule of Christ on earth, & amongst other reasons, sailed to find souls that without their enterprise would be lost forever. For over 30 years his plans were put into action as he set sail & explored different possible routes to get to India, from Africa. Establishing along down the cost of Africa, Western outposts, the European slave trade began to collect souls. “At first the prince promoted this vigorous trade as a tool of Christian conversion. It was seen as an act of charity, guided by the will of God, even as Africans violently resisted the brutality of their purported saviours. Even after the Navigator died in 1460, the impulse toward further discovery (and further slavery) continued undiminished. Portugal reigned as the great seapower of Europe.”²⁵²⁰

Many later Christians also became desensitized to having love, or concerns for all people, races & indifferent ones that they enslaved, dehumanized & categorized as “sub-humans,” “monstrous men,” “races of fallen angels,” “heathens,” & man type creatures that probably didn’t have “souls” to save! Like in the 15th c., Spain, during the forced Christianization of Jews, & Muslims, during the Spanish Inquisition, Spain was a “...nation cleansing itself through torture, execution, and exile now had to account for unknown people in unknown lands. This forced the Spanish to face the question that had been debated for centuries: Were monstrous men human or not? Were they human who could be saved, or were they demons that must be destroyed?”²⁵²¹

These categories were added to & illustrated in art works, as stories began to circulate about mythical races of “humans,” or “sub-humans,” in far away lands, or even on other worlds, like the “inhabitants,” on the moon. There were those who debated over if different ones in these categories needed to be saved. If so, how could the word of God be spread to other far away lands? Could the preachers somehow get bibles to the moon for the “inhabitants” on the moon? (Like in early 19th century America).²⁵²² Some pointed out the inconsistencies of those who forbade slaves from learning to read, especially the Bible, & who supported the slave economic system, & regarded slaves as subhuman, probably without souls to save. But, then how those same ones were concerned for the heathens on the other side of the world, & who along with the slave dealing preachers, sought to send bibles to them, like to those in China. Thus, some former slaves complained: You care more for the heathens, than for your own slaves, whom you mistreat in brutal manners, etc. So during those eras, 1800s, as earlier, it was selective salvationism for those of a certain sect only, or those of a certain type of race only, or those who were amongst the predestined elect.²⁵²³ Or those who could afford to pay for large indulgences (from about the 11th century onwards), to keep themselves & their dead relatives & dead friends out of, or released earlier, from purgatory.²⁵²⁴ As many became indifferent towards their fellow members of the human family, as love, charity, & religious tolerance died out during the Middle Ages. As the rich, the nobles, & royalty often treated others as lower classed peasants & serfs. Selective Salvationism infected those who didn’t seem to care about others’ salvation, but only cared about their own soul. There seemed to have been an attitude amongst the higher class, & the rich, that went something like this: As long as I’ve paid my way with indulgences out of purgatory, why should I care about anybody else. There was, of course exceptions to this selfish attitude, & that of the times when the rich might have been guilt tripped, or sales pitched, into paying for the releases of their dead family members, & dead friends from suffering in the flames of purgatory for longer periods of time than they might have, already. Or cared enough to the point where they bought indulgences for them, or paid for some church building to be built, to give themselves an even greater margin of purgatory release time, or a full guarantee of being saved from even going there, no matter what wickedness they continued to do, & no matter what their dead relatives’ wickedness had been done. Thus, the selective certain amounts, the proxy paid for, or payees, could thus be bailed out of purgatory.²⁵²⁵

Another case of selective salvationism is of the doctrine of Predestination, where only the elect of God will be saved, & only God knows who they really are, & they will be save no matter what they do or don’t do, good or bad. Thus, during the Reformation era, the doctrine of predestination themes must have influenced different ones beliefs about how to view others in far away lands, or those in their own societies. Predestination themes must have caused some of the “elect” to prejudice themselves against the damned! They must have had a tendency to look upon others with contempt, harshness, & indifference, because they thought the un-elect were predestined to burn forever in hell, so why treat them with religious tolerance, with charity, & love? Those they judged as probably not amongst the chosen predestined elect, there was nothing they could do for them, their fate was already sealed, so many must have prejudiced themselves against them, & had little concern about what happened to them, because they were destined for the flames, no matter what they did to try to escape their “just” punishments. (Augustine’s influence on doctrines of the Middle Ages, Calvinism, & Reformation beliefs, 5th c. to 16th c., onwards).²⁵²⁶ Such beliefs, attitudes, & the loss of the earlier answers as given in earlier doctrines about the pre-existence, descent, & Christ’s world-trek themes. All these factors, the loss of, or legendizations of themes, all seem to have attributed to these later notions, & attitudes of many seemingly guilty of selective salvationism. Thus, the concerns, or lack of concerns, about who got saved, & who didn’t, &, or who were looked upon as not having souls to save. Or if different ones amongst the mythical monstrous men, the heathen races in far away lands, could be saved, or not. These were all parts of the on going selective salvation controversies during different eras of Christendom.

Martin Luther, 1483–1546, selective salvationism must have been influenced by his furious anti-Semitism attitudes towards Jews, vilifying them as being a disease to fight, not as souls to be saved. “Even as Europeans stretched stories about Ham and Noah and medieval ideas of monstrous men to account for people from other lands, battles over Luther’s Protestant faith caused a revolution in thought.”²⁵²⁷

During the late 1200s, monks read in ancient manuscripts what led to the creating of later images of the varieties of monstrous men that were depicted in later manuscripts. About 1550, in Spain, Bartolomé de Las Casas, a priest, who earlier in 1510, had witnessed the horrific treatment of “Indians” in Cuba by the Spanish invasion there. 40 years later, 1550, he took part in debates going on in Spain about if the people in the Americas had souls that needed to be saved. “...Las Casas arguing against a learned scholar name Juan Ginés de Sepúlveda. The dispute was about new people in a new land, but it was just the latest version of the medieval argument over Jews, Muslims, and monstrous men. The question was the same: Are these people with souls, who can be saved? Or are they subhuman creatures, put on Earth as a warning to Christians?...”²⁵²⁸ Unfortunately, during late 1600s, into the age of Enlightenment, through mid 1800s, when the slavery trade made many used selective salvationism ideas to justify enslaving the Negroes from Africa. The earlier attitudes & ways of thinking about other races being encountered around the globe by Europeans, must have influenced the selective salvationism of those who tried to justify slavery of the Negroes from Africa, & the whole economics of slavery: “To Enlightenment thinkers one possible explanation for the variety of human beings was that they were not, in fact, all human.... Scottish philosopher David Hume claimed that dark-skinned people were of a different, and inferior, species...”²⁵²⁹ Thus, with many like him thinking whites were superiors to the other races, this must have contributed to the selective salvationism attitudes that were being used to justify not treating others with respect, kindness, & true charity, like they should have. Moreover, if they, as many others, were led to believe in their own superiority as a race, & also that the variety of human beings out there, were “not all humans,” this must have added to the lack of concern for the salvation of those considered, branded & listed as being amongst the “non-human” races, or “inferiors” ones that thus probably didn’t have souls to be saved. It also made it easier in their minds to “justify” enslaving them too. Under Hume’s thinking, dark & light-skinned people must have been created by God separately, making Adam not the father of all, but only of whites. The Swedish botanist, Carolus Linnaeus, 1700s, didn’t agree with Hume, but instead thought there were 4 regular types of people, & 2 exceptions, “wild children reared by wolves and monstrous men.... [Thus he] still believed the ancient stories of monstrous men.”²⁵³⁰ Consequently, the selective salvationism controversy, caused many to question the amounts of efforts that should be put towards attempting to Christianize these other far away races, or those closer to home: The “savages” amongst the Indian tribes of the forests of the Americas. The Negroes from Africa, the Chinese working to build the rail roads in America, plus, inhabitants of the different Polynesian islands encountered & vilified as cannibalistic head-hunters. Many thought that they needed to be Christianized, even if by force, like when the Spanish explorers & priests encounter the Aztecs, & others in the Americas. Or like when the Spanish Inquisition forced the Christianization of Jews & Muslims in Spain. There were those who believed that these "sub-races" needed to be also saved, while there were those who argued from their selective salvationism world views, that they probably didn't need to be saved because they weren't all humans.²⁵³¹

MORE ON THE SPREADING OF THE GOSPEL: "Various manuscripts discovered in modern times claim that after his resurrection Christ himself gave his Apostles certain ancient writings the Jews didn't possess."²⁵³² Languages could be understood & spoken, through the spiritual gifts, (Acts 2:1– 24, 1 Cor. 12:4–11), & also the Apostles were able to overcome long distant travel issues, as Christ did, during his world wide treks.²⁵³³ Origen tells us why, for they "were filled with the power of His [Christ's] divinity, to itinerate [travel] throughout the world."²⁵³⁴

Paul wrote: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, will be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Romans 8:38-39).

According to traditions, and art works, an angel appears to Mary to tell her that in three days, she would rejoice her son in paradise. The angel says that, "the Apostles, wherever they were preaching in the various parts of the earth, should be miraculously reunited to her for a final leave-taking."²⁵³⁵ Soon, the dispersed Apostles were caught up from the different areas of the world they were at, and instantaneously brought to Jerusalem to be at her side during her last moments in mortality.²⁵³⁶

WINGS & FEATHERS: In the case with the Old World's disciples, Augustine suggests that long distances were overcome by the apostles with the help of angels who carried them wherever they wanted to go. Thus, on the wings of angels they would be able to travel to far distant lands.²⁵³⁷ Tertullian [A.D. 145-220], wrote that, "Every spirit is possessed of wings. This is a common property of both angels and demons. So they are everywhere in a single moment; the whole world is as one place to them."²⁵³⁸ Several early Christian documents mention how the priesthood endowed apostles' gospel winged "its way rapidly into the four quarters of the world."²⁵³⁹ Another reads that Christ's "Gospel has winged its way through all the earth by the signs which His disciples my fellows do in all the earth..."²⁵⁴⁰ Hence, wings seem to not only symbolize the speedy ways in which the angels, apostles and Christ were able to travel about, in order to spread the gospel throughout the four quarters of the earth.²⁵⁴¹ They also seem to represent how they gathered the people together too. Christ (John 3:14-15, Num.21:5-9), also used this type, (Matt.23:37, Luke 13:3, 34), and later, so did certain Christian artists,²⁵⁴² for they depict some of the apostles with wings.²⁵⁴³ Melito, The Philosopher, A.D., 160-170-177, also presents this type, saying, that the wings of the Lord offer hope to those who seek his divine protection.²⁵⁴⁴

CHRIST WITH HIS APOSTLES AS HOLY PILGRIMS: 5th century onward, pilgrimages to the Holy Land and to the Holy Sepulcher were regarded as the surest way to obtain merits that were believed would atone for the most horrific & grievous sins. Pilgrimages were done, in many cases, by walking, begging along the way for food, all the way to Palestine. Many Pilgrims believed that if they should die along the way, they'd go right away to the entrance of paradise & into heavenly bliss.²⁵⁴⁵

During the eighth through the ninth century, the number of pilgrims, vagrants, & travelers of all sorts, who sought monastic hospitality, increased drastically. In fact, they were so large that the scholar monk Theodulf complained that if St. Benedict had lived during that time he would have closed the door against them. However, for the most part, numerous monks during this time were faithful to the traditions of receiving Christ in those who came to them. Most lay guests were wholly ignorant of the inwardness of their status, for they didn't know that they were being received as Christ.²⁵⁴⁶

While the charitable themes behind the traditions about Christ's world wide treks were being dramatized in the roles that pilgrims, etc., played in monasticism. The militant—Christ aspects were always present during these centuries, and earlier ones too.

For example, a seventh century mosaic in S. Venanzio, a chapel adjacent to the Baptistry of St. John at the Lateran, depicts, "Christ in heaven and, on earth, the orant Mary surrounded by saints.... It is a bold schematic figuration of the work of God sub specie aeternitatis et universi, for it invites us to contemplate simultaneously, and in order corresponding to the structure of the cosmos, God apart from the Incarnation (above) and, by allusion, God made man for universal salvation (below)."²⁵⁴⁷

RECEIVING STRANGERS & PILGRIMS AS IF THEY WERE CHRIST: Saint Benedict of Nursia, [A.D. 480-544], preserved the charitable aspects of the earlier Christian doctrines, concerning Christ's world wide trek, in the traditional ways in which guests were to be treated. From the seeds of these earlier concepts grew many later Christian legends about Christ's world wide wanderings.

529, & afterwards, at Monte Cassino, Benedict demolished a pagan temple & founded a monastery. In time, the monastery, like others, followed the general rule of giving help to others. "Alms & hospitality were to be given, within the means of the monastery, to all who asked for it. "All guests who come shall be received as though they were Christ." ... The indiscriminate giving of alms came to be considered one of the sure means to salvation.... In an age of war and chaos, of doubt and wandering, the Benedictine monastery was a healing refuge."²⁵⁴⁸

In 540, Benedict's monastic rule was established to help those who were on pilgrimages. Centuries later, many monasteries continued to follow the Benedict rule. In Benedict's rule, chapter 36, special care was to be given to the sick: "even before and above all else, so that in very deed they may be served as Christ, for he himself said: 'I was sick, and ye visited me'; and 'What ye have done to one of these little ones, ye have done to me.'"²⁵⁴⁹

During the 10th century, western pilgrimages grew in frequency and size. The Cluniac monks organized them, and built abbeys to provide hospitality along the way. Three well-marked land routes went through Balkans, Asia, other routes went over the sea. An elaborate hospice was built in Jerusalem to welcome pilgrims there. At the hospitality, all guests who come to them were to be received as if they were Christ.

From the 12th century onwards, towns overtook monasteries as the focal point of social activities in which brotherhoods were formed, hospices were built, and charitable Orders founded. During the Middle Ages, on up to our modern era, the Benedictine monasteries have remained true to the ideals of their founder, St. Benedict of Nursia [A.D. 480—547], which are, to honor Christ in strangers, the sick, and pilgrims, etc.²⁵⁵⁰ In so doing these things, they believed that they were preparing for the Day of Judgement, according to Matthew 25: "I was a stranger, and ye took me in."²⁵⁵¹ The poor and sick were to also be treated as extensions of Christ. St. Benedict's rule for sick brethren was, that they may be served in very deed as Christ Himself, for he has said, "I was sick and you visited Me." And "as long as you did it to one of these My least brethren, you did it to Me." Thus the monks attempted to always see in human personalities, the divine personality of Christ. Or as St. Benedict put it: "ita eis serviatur ut sicut revera Christo." They were reminded that the sick must be served in the person of Christ, and Christ must be served in the person of the sick. Those who weren't monks perhaps didn't understand, or know of these rules. While in the case with a sick monk, he was to remember & consider that they were being served for the honor of God, and ought not to grieve his brethren who served him by their importunity. Thus, they were to show that they were worthy of being treated with kindness, and of being reflections of Christ who is served in them.

One of St. Benedict's rules for the reception of guests was that of seeing Christ in all who come to the monastery. "Let all quests that come be received as Christ Himself, for he will say, 'I was a stranger and you took Me in.' And let fitting honor be shown to all, especially however to such as are of the household of the faith and to pilgrims. When therefore a guest is announced, let him be met by the superior or brethren with all marks of charity." Thus, "the recognition of Christ in the person of the guest is an ideal which necessarily recommended itself forcibly to early Christian monasticism." The abbot was to pour water on the hands & wash the feet of all guests, after which they were to say: Suscipimus, Deus, misericordiam tuam in medio templi tui. Special care and solicitude were to be shown in the reception of the poor and of pilgrims, because in them Christ is more received. Thus, they were to always see the representative of Christ in the person who knocks at their doors.²⁵⁵²

Later Christian Order have kept alive St. Benedict's rule, such as The Order of Saint Benedict, for in their writings we have this: "Let all guests who arrive be received like Christ, for He is going to say, 'I came as a guest, and you received Me' (Matt. 25:35). And to all let due honor be shown, especially to the domestics of the faith and to pilgrims." Further on we read about how these "Christs" are to be treated with great respect when they arrive or depart, all of which was to be done, "in adoration of Christ, who indeed is received in their persons." Like in the art works where the feet of the wandering Christ are washed, so too, the Abbot is to perform a washing rite on their hands and feet of all guests.²⁵⁵³

Late 11th to early 12th century, St. Bruno also known as Master Bruno of Cologne, who became the founder of a monks' order, the Carthusian order, the most solitary of all forms of organized religious life produced in this period. Plus, the most withdrawn from the world, he said, after 25 years of life at Chartreux, from his solitude in Calabria, in a letter to Ralf Green (Radulfus Viridis): "I live the life of a hermit far from the haunts of men on the borders of Calabria, with my brethren in religion—some of them learned men—who await the Lord's return in holy watching, that, when He knocketh, they may open to Him immediately...."²⁵⁵⁴

May 1, 1946, Thomas Curtis Clark wrote a poem that says how Christ is a brother of the poor, and a homeless transient. Another line hints to these traditions about how he walked a pilgrim way.²⁵⁵⁵ Fra Angelico, Giovanni Guido, 1387—1455, depicts, Christ the Pilgrim, in an art composition found in the Monastery of San Marco, Florence, Italy.²⁵⁵⁶ In this fresco, painted about 1440. The Two Dominican monks receive and welcome a pilgrim who is none other than Christ,²⁵⁵⁷ in the guise of a pilgrim. The original fresco was in the lunette over the guest room door to remind the monks of their duties of entertaining strangers, and of responding to all the other calls of mercy. As they welcome this world pilgrim to the hospitality of their convent, they don't realize who he really is. Here we see the earlier aspect of that which shows up in later traditional Christmas guises. For as we have already noted, according to the later legends, if one was to see the wandering Christ, they wouldn't be able to tell who he is, because of the different guises he travels all over the earth in. Thus, in this earlier case, the monks come forth eagerly to let this unknown in, for Christ's sake. Christ, in this guise, carries a walking staff, and as the nearer monk "reaches out his hand of welcome, the two arms make with the staff the secret sign of the cross." This sign is "the password by which all the poor and the travel-stained may enter 'In His Name.'" Christ's face is utterly otherworldly. The cruciform nimbus, or the light that shines forth from his countenance, gives it a sort of unearthly setting. It's the face of one whose citizenship is in heaven and of "a pilgrim and a stranger who can tarry but a night."²⁵⁵⁸ The hand clasp between the monks and Christ, the pilgrim, must have also reminded the Christian monks of the same types of ones depicted in The Ascension into heaven. Furthermore, it was to remind them of the future Last Judgement too. In art works of this, souls are being greeted in the same types of ways, as they pass through the gates, or doors of paradise.²⁵⁵⁹

Thus, if the monks continued in their quests for moral perfection,²⁵⁶⁰ and continued to receive pilgrims in this way, as if they were the wandering Christ himself.²⁵⁶¹ And, if they didn't forbid them from entering their monasteries, and other holy sanctuaries. Sanctuaries believed by them to be models after the heavenly prototype, the heavenly Jerusalem, or Church in heaven.²⁵⁶² Then, in like manners, upon the monks' deaths and ascensions into heaven, Christ wouldn't turn them away either. Instead, he will be there to welcome them in the same types of ways as he was greeted by them when he was roaming about the earth in the guise of a pilgrim, leper, or beggar. He will take them by their hands & welcome them into heaven by guiding, lifting, or pulling them up into the heavenly city. Consequently, this work may have served as a reminder of this sort of thing.²⁵⁶³ For just as "the sign of the cross" or this hand clasp is used to enter the earthly prototype of heaven, or the monastery. So also, in earlier Christian writings, such as The Gospel of Nicodemus, does Adam use a gestural sign of the cross, and a hand clasp, to enter into paradise.²⁵⁶⁴ The fact that the pilgrim Christ is over the entrance to the guest quarters on the south flank also reminds us of the later Christmas traditions about welcoming Christ in at the door. In the best Monastic mannerism, it's a representation of "two Dominican friars welcoming Christ." These manners were according to the Rules set forth centuries earlier in Saint Benedict's Rule. In it is a moral code and policy on how monks ought to welcome guests, and "pilgrims as though they were Christ himself."²⁵⁶⁵

Another depiction of Christ as a pilgrim shows "Saint Augustine washing the feet of Christ as a pilgrim." From: Tanner's Altar, museum of Barcelona.²⁵⁶⁶ A number of German artists show Christ, not only as a pilgrim, but also as one who is sick and needs to be nursed back to good health. Other works, showing acts of mercy and love, are presented in a way as to suggest that the artists knew about the legacies about a roving Jesus.²⁵⁶⁷

In ancient scripture & later Christian traditions, Christ is sometimes portrayed as a pilgrim on a journey away from his heavenly home.²⁵⁶⁸ Thus, on the earth he is the homeless vagabond. He was sent from his heavenly Father's Kingdom, by setting aside his own glory to become flesh like unto man.²⁵⁶⁹ Upon his return, He would be glorified again. (John 17:5, 24). But while he lived on the earth, he was like the homeless transient. His divine nature was sometimes camouflaged from others, for that was part of the test. He would come unto his own, would they receive him? Would they be gathered unto him? Many of his own accepted him not, while others did. Some didn't receive him because they thought that he was just an ordinary man. (Matt.13:54-58, Luke 13:34, John 10:22-39).

After his resurrection, Christ appeared to some of his followers who were on their way to a village called Emmaus. At first, they didn't know it was the resurrected Lord.²⁵⁷⁰ For "their eyes were holden that they should not know him" (Luke 24:16). While they walked along, they talked about what had happened concerning Christ. Then Christ, in the guise of a fellow disciple,²⁵⁷¹ began to expound upon the prophecies. As he did, it was then that "their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?" (Luke 24:31-32, verses 12-53).

According to an early Christian legend, it is the Archangel Uriel, not the commuting Christ, who appears, and then accompanies the two disciples to Emmaus. "Or if it were Christ, He was in the garb of a Pilgrim. The supper at Emmaus is considered a type of the Sacrament of the Last Supper."²⁵⁷²

12th century northern gallery of the cloister of St. Trophime in Arles, the resurrected Christ is seen in a carving on a corner pillar. Two Emmaus pilgrims are seen here too. Thus, in Spain, Compostela bound pilgrims must have rejoiced to see Christ as a pilgrim to Compostela!²⁵⁷³

12th century, traditional iconography was enriched by liturgical plays which were presented in the churches from the 10th century onward. One of the popular themes in liturgical dramas, which were enacted during Easter Weeks, illustrates Christ's trek round the world. He travels about in the guise of a pilgrim. All throughout historic Christendom, baptism has been a type of Christ's descent and ascension out of the underworld. Consequently, popular times for baptisms were during Easter Weeks. After all, this week, Easter, commemorates the lifting, or the Anastasis, meaning the resurrection. Another important theme connected with baptism, is the harrowing of hell. In this theme is the victory of Christ over the forces of darkness in the underworld. And how Christ, and the saints of old, trample over the devil, and the doors of hades, limbo, or hell, as they ascend out of the underworld. After this, they appear to many on the earth, and then ascend to paradise.²⁵⁷⁴

Thus, it seems that later liturgical dramas preserved certain aspect of another guise, the Militant Christ. For the ascension out of the underworld marks the beginning of Christ's post resurrection victory march throughout the world. A milder version of this guise is made when it is blended with the quieter ones. In these, he sits back in the back ground and observes who is, and who isn't living his teachings. Hence, along with the baptismal celebrations and Easter liturgical dramas are those which show Christ as a pilgrim. On Tuesday, "the meeting of Christ and the pilgrims of Emmaus was enacted in a number of churches."²⁵⁷⁵ Two travelers, in one scene, see him approaching from far away. In another, "Christ appeared in the dress of a pilgrim, also carrying a staff, with a shepherd's scrip slung over his shoulder."²⁵⁷⁶ The travelers don't recognize the drifting Christ then, but later they do, as he enacts out for them the sacrament. At that moment, they realize who this rambling pilgrim really is. It is then that he vanishes out of their sight.

In the middle of the eleventh century A.D., its church was rebuilt, and it wasn't too long after this that the First Master sculpted a craftsmanship of "Christ as a pilgrim."²⁵⁷⁷

During this time, these types of liturgical plays were also taking on the form of a mystery play, which in turn, inspired and exerted their influences upon art compositions too. For example, a bas-relief, dated A.D. 1130, the cloister of Silos, in Spain, resembles the French monuments of Aquitaine very closely. It "shows the pilgrims passing along the pilgrimage road of Santiago de Compostela. We recognize here the trappings of the liturgical drama." Another work from this same time period is the English psalter in the Abbey of Saint Albans. It shows "Christ with a cap on His head, carrying a shepherd's scrip and a double staff." Another version is on the portals of the Abbey of Vezelay, and is said to have elements derived from the play enacted in the Cathedral of Rouen. Still, another version of Christ, as a pilgrim, is seen on the pillars of the cloister of Saint—Trophime at Arles.²⁵⁷⁸ Consequently, during the days of pilgrimages and quests, travelers and pilgrims visited monks at the Benedictine monastery at Silos, even though it was off the more popular pilgrim route.

1410—1420, a series of art pieces shows, St. Elisabeth giving a drink to the drifting Christ who is dressed as a pilgrim. Other sections in this series show her greeting Christ, then feeding him, and then helping disabled people.²⁵⁷⁹ Furthermore, many of these traditions seem to have personified the guises mentioned in Matthew 25. Thus, this scripture was seen as the scriptural backbone for the later traditions, stories, and folklore about Christ's treks round this globe, when the doctrines of Christ's world wide treks started to legendized into fables in later centuries.²⁵⁸⁰

1598, the Italian painter, Michelangelo de Merisi, also called Caravaggio, painted, The Supper at Emmaus. It reflects the Baroque period in which it was painted in. Christ, in the guise of a pilgrim, sups with his fellow travelers at a table. The artist depicts the very moment in this scriptural event in which Christ's real identity is discovered by these disciples. Another element that shows up here, as in lore about the Holy Grail, is this; Caravaggio's The Supper at Emmaus is likened unto the sacrament. Furthermore, one of the disciples has a cockleshell badge on, the symbol of a pilgrim.²⁵⁸¹

Christ mentions his homeless wanderings when he said that: "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head." (Luke 9:58, Matt.8:20). Some have suggested that this was originally an old Jewish Wisdom saying which the tradition changed into a saying of Jesus. Thus, traces of the theme of Wisdom's rejection & homelessness²⁵⁸² were considered as prophetic types of Christ's rejection and homelessness.

CHRIST SEEKS HIS SCATTERED SHEEP

Other types of symbols that added other aspects to this whole drama, concerning Christ's world wide trek, were derived from Christendom's Jewish heritage. For from the many prophetic types concerning the Messiah's coming, grew a number of symbols, and monuments, in early to later Christianity. Some of these are the ways in which Christ is likened unto The Good Shepherd, and his people, sheep.

For example, the prophet Jeremiah wrote that: "Israel is a scattered sheep" (Jeremiah 50:17). Where did the sheep, or some of the descendants of Israel go? They were scattered among the nations. Would the Good Shepherd also go among the nations in search of his lost sheep? According to historical and monumental records, he did go. Thus, our journey back through time takes us back to earlier centuries in historic Christendom. Christ set the foundations for later Christian symbols, types, and traditions, when he likened himself unto The Good Shepherd.

WHERE DID THE SCATTERED SHEEP GO TO? Christ said: "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matthew 15:24).²⁵⁸³ While different groups of the descendants of Israel, or sheep, remained in the Jerusalem area, other sheep, or groups, were scattered among the nations of the earth. These events were foreseen and prophesied repeatedly by Old Testament time prophets. "And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste." (Leviticus 26:33). These later descendants would fall into apostasy, even to the point where they would lose the basic concepts as to what God is like. "And the LORD shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the LORD shall lead you. And there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell. But if from thence thou shalt seek the LORD thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the LORD thy God, and shalt be obedient unto his voice; (For the LORD thy God is a merciful God); he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which he sware unto them" (Deuteronomy 4:26-31). They were to be among the nations which the LORD had led them to (Deuteronomy 28:37). "And the LORD shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known even wood and stone" (Deuteronomy 28:64). In some of David's Psalms we read: "Thou hast given us like sheep appointed for meat; and hast scattered us among the heathen" (Psalms 44:11; 106:27). Jeremiah also prophesied: "I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them." (Jer.9:16, 13:24-25, 18:17, 44:28).

"Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries. And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives" (Ezekiel 6:8-9).

"Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel" (Eze. 11:16-21).

"And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; and I will draw out the sword after them. And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries. But I will leave a few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from pestilence; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; and they shall know that I am the LORD" (Ezekiel 12:14-16).²⁵⁸⁴ "And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee" (Ezekiel 22:15-22). Ezekiel chapter 37 prophesied of a time of gatherings, but also, that different writings from the different descendants of Israel would be gathered together too.

WANDERERS IN A STRANGE LAND: Max I. Dimont notes that, "Two Judaism's had been created, one in Palestine, the other in Diaspora, a word from the Greek meaning a "scattering," or "scatter about," and signifying that body of Jews scattered about in the gentile world outside Palestine."²⁵⁸⁵ In the symbolism behind the types about scattered sheep, Christ is depicted as eventually going to wherever "the sheep" have been scattered to. At first, Christ tells his followers to not go into the "way of the Gentiles" while he was alive on the earth, (Matthew 10:5). However, that policy changed after his resurrection, for he told his Apostles to go into all the earth. They were to go to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matthew 10:5-6), & then, eventually, to the sheep which were among the Gentile nations too.²⁵⁸⁶

Isaiah wrote that: "The Lord GOD which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him" (Isaiah 56:8). Thus, Christ's later command to seek after the lost sheep also included "others" who were amongst the different nations. Christ's followers were to do their best to go to wherever the human race could be found. But also, it seems that the resurrected Lord would go with them too. Thus, Christ would visit different parts of the world wherever the human race could be found. For "the LORD of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle" (Zechariah 10:3).

Ezekiel prophesied, "For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day" (Ezekiel 34:11-12, italics added).

Christ would seek after the lost sheep of Israel who had been scattered amongst the nations, some of which had fallen into sin, and had suffered different times of apostasy too. He would guide them back into the fold, if they would repent, and thereafter follow his voice.²⁵⁸⁷ There can be no doubt here that the prophetic words speak of how groups of Jews were scattered amongst the nations, and how the Messiah passed through different nations to visit them, and other people too.

"GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock" (Psalm 80:1). "Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace." (2 Chronicles 18:16). Would the Lord gather them and become their master, & shepherd? The Lord had led them, (by the prophet Moses), out of Egypt. For the Lord had "made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock." (Psalm 78:52). Moreover, even though, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." (Isaiah 53:6). Would the Lord seek after his sheep who had all gone astray? David wrote, "Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me. I have gone astray like a sheep; seek thy servant; for I do not forget thy commandments." (Psalms 190:175-176; 16:10; Acts 2:27, 31, 13:33-37). Cornelius A Lapide, a Catholic writer, upon commenting on portions of John chapter 10, wrote in The Great Commentary, that: "Christ rejoices in the title of Shepherd, as being most appropriate and most sweet. He used to be thus represented in very ancient pictures, at Rome, as carrying a sheep on His shoulders. Many of the patriarchs, who were types and ancestors of Christ, were shepherds, learning thereby (says Philo) to be shepherds of men, &c." Concerning John 10:16, he wrote: "And other sheep I have, &c. Other sheep, i.e., those who will be My sheep. This is spoken by anticipation. He means the Gentiles, and thus predicted their call and conversion, to show that He was to be the King and Shepherd of all nations, just as up to this time He had been of the Jews:

and that, consequently, He did not care (comparatively) whether the Jews (few as they were in number) would be unbelieving and rebellious, since He was about to put countless Gentiles in their place." Further on, when Lapidé comments about this portion, "And there will be one fold, and one shepherd" He wrote: "It was, that after His death and resurrection His apostles would be dispersed among all nations, and convert them, so that both Jews and Gentiles would be gathered into one Church of believers, under one Shepherd, Christ, and His Vicar, the Roman Pontiff. This is not to be looked forward to as something future, for it took place in the time of Constantine the first Christian emperor, who Christianised nearly all the nations which were subject to him. The Apostle graphically sets this before us (Eph. ii.)" It seems that this Catholic scholar is suggesting that the gospel was preached among the nations, or at least in all the nations of Constantine's empire, during the 4th century A.D.²⁵⁸⁸

Lapidé made comments about passages in Matthew too, suggesting that: "God went into a far country, because as Origen says, when He had given His law and covenants to the Jews, appearing to them on Mount Sinai, He did not afterwards appear to them as though He had gone elsewhere."²⁵⁸⁹

In another commentary, we read this about the "Other sheep. There are others who shall be members of my redeemed church. . . . I have. This does not imply that they were then his friends, but that they would be. There were others whom it was his purpose and intention to call to the blessings of the gospel and salvation. The purpose was so sure, and the fact that they would believe on him so certain, that he could use the present tense as if they were already his own.... God has a plan in regard to the salvation of men, [or the human family] and that the number is known and determined by him. [For] ...it is not a question of hap-hazard whether men shall be saved." Further on, the comments are made about this portion, Not of this fold: "Not Jews. This is a distinct intimation that the gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles—a doctrine extremely offensive to the Jews. This prediction of the Saviour has been strikingly confirmed in the conversion of millions of the Gentiles to the gospel." Comments were also made on, Them also I must bring. "Bring into the church and kingdom of heaven. This was to be done, not by his personal ministry, but by the labor of his apostles and other ministers." Concerning, One fold, we read how that in this, "One church; there shall be no distinction; no peculiar national privileges. The partition between the Jews and the Gentiles shall be broken down, and there shall be no preeminence of rank or honor." This commentator wrote this concerning One shepherd, "That is, the Lord Jesus—the common Saviour, deliverer, and friend, of all true believers in whatever land they were born, and whatever tongue they may speak. This shows that Christians of all dominations and countries should feel that they are one—redeemed by the same blood, and going to the same eternal home."²⁵⁹⁰

Lundy, suggests that the symbol of the Royal Good Shepherd, as it is seen in other nations, were seen by early Christians, and himself, as faded prophetic types of how Christ rules over heaven and earth. And that the world had some how learned about what Christ would come and do for all the earth, as The Good Shepherd of the planet. "He rules over all in both spheres of existence in virtue of His Incarnation." In these pagan types, Lundy went so far as to suggest that "The Syrinx or Pan's-pipe is the Gospel, with whose sweet sounds He has gathered together and folded His universal flock of Jew and Gentile. The lamb on His shoulders is the whole of our redeemed humanity, crucified with Him, and now risen into the new and better and endless life."²⁵⁹¹ Furthermore, Lundy goes on to write that when Christ said that he was the good Shepherd, "He is to be understood as summing up in Himself all Jewish and Pagan types and prophecies respecting His divine office of gathering together into one fold all the scattered members of His flock."²⁵⁹²

Irenæus 120—202, wrote many times about how Christ would raise the ancient fathers out of hades. He also points out that they were just as much of Christ's other sheep as those who had been scattered amongst the nations. Justin Martyr & Irenæus claimed that the prophets of old had predicted that: "The Lord God remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation." In further comments about Christ's descent into hades, Irenæus also wrote that: "It was necessary, therefore, that the Lord, coming to the lost sheep, and making recapitulation of so comprehensive a dispensation, and seeking after His own handiwork, should save that very man [Adam] who had been created after His image and likeness."²⁵⁹³ Christ said: "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd" (John 10:16).

"What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing. . . . for I have found my sheep which was lost" (Luke 15:3-7). In early to later Christian traditions, and art works, Christ is often depicted as the Good Shepherd. In some cases, he is holding a lamb in his arms as he guides his sheep through the valley of the shadow of death toward paradise. Accordingly, Christ also descends down into the grave, limbo, hades, the pit, the valley, or the land of the shadow of death²⁵⁹⁴ to seek out the lost sheep, or, in other words, the members of the human family who are lost in the afterlife realms.²⁵⁹⁵ "Representations of the Good Shepherd bringing the strayed sheep back to the fold, are among the most common subjects found painted by the early Christians over the altars in the catacombs at Rome. It is symbolic of the Resurrection."²⁵⁹⁶

On some early Christian rings are depictions of Christ as the Good Shepherd, holding the lost sheep on his shoulders.²⁵⁹⁷ In the cemetery of Priscilla, on the Salarian way, after Bosio, Christ is depicted as the Good Shepherd, while holding the front and back legs of the lamb on his shoulders.²⁵⁹⁸ Another depiction is described by Lundy. The Good Shepherd is the one Supreme Head and Lord. "In the four intermediate spaces are doves, indicative of the universal presence of the Holy Spirit in every part of the world....The two sheep at Christ's feet, like the two Orantes, [praying figures with raised hands], represent the Jewish and Gentile Churches as united in the one Shepherd and Bishop of souls; and the two Apostles, again, represent the two-fold ability and diverse gifts necessary for the unity, peace, and prosperity of the Church."²⁵⁹⁹ The Good Shepherd "was a favorite symbol in the catacombs and on sarcophagi The appropriateness of this symbol in sepulchral art is plain enough." The shepherd of the Psalm 23 leads his sheep "through the valley of the shadow of death." Peter received from the Lord the charge, "Feed my sheep" (John 21:16, 17). "But it is to be understood that Peter did not carry the sheep to paradise, like the Good Shepherd, but back to the Church."²⁶⁰⁰ In many cases, dome shapes in Christian art and architectural symbolisms represent heavenly realms, and paradise, hence the Good Shepherd was sometimes represented as being in paradise.²⁶⁰¹ The example of the ninety-nine sheep, and the one who went astray (Matthew 18:12-13), inspired Christian artists to portray young shepherds carrying sheep on their shoulders. In this way they represented " . . . Jesus as the Good Shepherd, a theme that was used until the beginning of the fourth century."²⁶⁰² One example of this is seen in the Catacombs of St. Callistus, 4th century A.D.²⁶⁰³

CHRIST AS A WORLD WIDE GARDENER

A 13th century for Easter liturgical type play, acted out the drama, for the crowds of Klosterneuberg in Germany: "Mary Magdalene meets Christ disguised as a gardener; Christ is led by two Angels to the gates of Hell, which he forces open to free the imprisoned souls; the Marys and apostles proclaim the resurrection of Christ."²⁶⁰⁴

In an art-work by Albrecht Dürer, 1471—1528, the raised Christ appears to Mary Magdalene in the guise of a gardener with a spade or hoe resting on his shoulder, and with a gardener's hat on. The nails' marks in one of his hand, and in one foot, are the only visible marks of identification as to whom this gardener really is.²⁶⁰⁵ This is in harmony with other traditions about the wandering Christ who travels about in guises, like that of common folk. Consequently, this guise of Christ, as the world wide gardener, can be added to the list of traditional disguises that he uses during his intercontinental excursions.

A 12th century painting shows Mary Magdalene grasping Christ's left foot, as if examining up close the wound in his feet, or as if, upon recognizing whom he really is, she bows to worship him. Christ, as a Gardener, holds a gardening tool in his left hand, while his right is raised.²⁶⁰⁶

In old Jewish & Christian types, and similitudes, God is like a gardener planting seeds in the ground all over the earth. The seeds are symbolic of the human race which grows up to become either good or bad plants, depending on how they respond to the nourishment that God provides. Hence, rain and water are likened unto the word of God.²⁶⁰⁷

Origen, 185-230-254, in his response to the early anti-Christian Celsus, used this illustration too. He wrote how God, like a Gardener, or "... as a husbandry performs different acts of husbandry upon the soil and its productions, according to the varying seasons of the year, so God administers entire ages of time, as if they were, so to speak, so many individual years, performing during each one of them what is requisite with a reasonable regard to the care of the world..."²⁶⁰⁸

This theme of how Christ is as a world wide gardener, still lingered on in the symbolical types that present his treks around the earth. For example, among the Chichicastenango Indians, Christ wanders around the world and visits, among other places, 5000 gardens all over the world.²⁶⁰⁹

In later traditions, some aspects of the earlier mysteries are seen in the ways in which young couples hold hands in gardens, and in the hand clasping wedding ceremonies that take place in gardens too.²⁶¹⁰ It's also in these gardens, like in the early Christian mysteries,²⁶¹¹ where one might expect to be visited by Christ.²⁶¹² Another example is of the one we considered earlier, that of St. Dorothy clasping the hand of the wandering Christ-child, while in a rose garden.²⁶¹³

WATER AND TREES AS TYPES²⁶¹⁴ In the writings of the prophets, the scattered descendants of Israel are likened unto different parts of plants, such as fruits, trees, vineyards, roots, branches, or boughs which spread out. For example, in The Old Testament, the prophet Amos prophesied that the Lord would be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph, for He would visit his descendants. One of the "several provinces" which Christ entered into to summon "men out of them to be subject to Himself,"²⁶¹⁵ Thus, Christ would pass through other parts of his vineyards, or go to other groups of people too. "For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant" (Isaiah 5:1-7; Amos 5:15-20, italics added).

Jeremiah: "Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?" (Jeremiah 2:21).²⁶¹⁶ This type is explained in an ancient commentary: "Thrust in the sharp sickle, and gather in the grapes of the vine," he signifies it of the nations that should perish on the advent of the Lord."²⁶¹⁷ Note here that grapes of the vine were considered as a type for different people in the different nations which were to be gathered.

The Bible repeatedly predicts that branches, vines, and boughs would extend to other parts of the world. These symbolical types are in reference to people, genealogical trees, or lineages. Thus, the descendants of Israel would go over the sea to different parts of the world. Some of Joseph's descendants were to be separated from their brethren, just as Joseph had been separated. His descendants were to spread unto the ends of the earth, even over the sea from the Old World. For "Joseph is a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall" (Genesis 49:22-6). Jacob, through some of his son's, or Joseph's descendants, would "push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." Note again the type: "precious fruits brought forth by the sun" are likened unto Joseph's descendants (Deuteronomy 33:13-17).

The word "plant" is used to symbolically describe what the Lord would do in bringing the Israelites out of Egypt into what was to become their land in the Jerusalem area. Would the Lord also "plant" other "vineyards" around the world? (Exodus 15:11-17).

David: "Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt: thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it." He also suggests that other descendants of Israel would spread out from the Jerusalem area, even unto the sea. "She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river." (Psalm 80:8, & 11; Ezekiel 15:6-8).

Ezekiel also used some of these types too. The vine would extend toward water, some of it, or the wicked branches (descendants), would be burned in the fire (Ezekiel 15:6-8). Some had been planted in good soil by great waters that "it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine." Those who rebelled against God would be led away into captivity. Or they would fall by the sword. The Babylonians would cause some of the people of Jerusalem to flee from their lands, while "they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds: and ye shall know that I the LORD have spoken it." Other people would be "planted" in other parts of the world, during this time of scattering (Ezekiel 17:7-24). Some descendants would be planted near water (Ezekiel 19:10-13). In another passage, the Lord promises that he would gather their descendants together with their records. Thus, not only would they be restored again to their forefathers' inheritance, but the writings of the descendants of Judah, and scattered Joseph would be restored and brought together (Ezekiel 37:15—28).²⁶¹⁸

The Lord also said: "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain [in the Hebrew "stone"] fall upon the earth" (Amos 9:9).

Early Christian work, 3rd—4th cent., presents a similar symbolical type; for in the Constitutions of The Holy Apostles, there is a prayer to God to "...gather together Thy Church from the ends of the earth into Thy kingdom, as this corn was once scattered, and is now become one loaf."²⁶¹⁹

"And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again." (Zechariah 10:9).

In early Christian thought, Christ is the hand clasping guide through the depths of hell, and the mist of darkness during the ascension out of hell.²⁶²⁰ Joseph Campbell presents a number of tree of life symbols in the Old World area, and then suggests that a "pole" or tree extends down in the abyss. He even suggests that the Christmas tree, with the star on top, and the gifts underneath, and the Christ-child as the greatest gift of all, are "in the crèche at its base; while below . . . are its roots in the fiery abyss. But equally, it is symbolized in the Cross."²⁶²¹

Isaiah, after warning the Israelites about how their sins had caused them to descend into the pit of hell, wrote symbolically of Israel: "Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the LORD of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel . . . And he [the LORD] will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly" (Isaiah 5:11-24, & 26, 11:1-2, 9-12, 53:2).

Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, during the 4th century, A.D., wrote: since Christ's sojourn among men, all nations on every side began to know God. He then cites Isaiah 11:10: "For 'there shall be,' he saith, 'the root of Jesse, and he that riseth to rule the nations, on him shall the nations hope.'" ²⁶²²

CHRIST, AS THE LORD OF THE VINEYARD

As we have already noted, Amos predicted that the Messiah would pass through or travel through different parts of his vineyards. In other words, "in all vineyards," the vineyard being symbolic of scattered Israel, the Messiah would "pass through" them, or visit scattered Israel. In this passage, one of the branches of Israel is named as "the remnant of Joseph."

"Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live: and so the LORD, the God to hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken. Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the LORD God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph. Therefore the LORD, the God of hosts, the Lord, saith thus; Wailing shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing. And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the Lord. Woe unto you that desire the day of the LORD! to what end is it for you? The day of the LORD is darkness, and not light. . . . Shall not the day of the LORD be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?" (Amos 5:14-18, & 20).

In the Patriarch Levi, "And by thee and Judah shall the Lord appear among men, saving every race of men. And from the Lord's portion shall be thy life, and he shall be thy field and vineyard." ²⁶²³

In another translation of The Testament of Levi Concerning the Priesthood and Arrogance, we read that Levi was to be a teacher and minister for the Lord to: "...proclaim concerning Him who shall redeem Israel; and by thee and Judah shall the Lord appear among men, saving in them every race of men..." He follows this by making reference to this type, vineyard; for the Lord "...shall be thy field and vineyard..." ²⁶²⁴

This same type of imagery, that of God not neglecting this world of souls in all ages of time, and in all places, is seen in Origen's response to Celsus. Here, Origen wrote that, "It is, then, always in order to repair what has become faulty that God desires to amend His work afresh. For although, in the creation of the world, all things had been arranged by Him in the most beautiful and stable manner, He nevertheless needed to exercise some healing power upon those who were labouring under the disease of wickedness, and upon a whole world, which was polluted as it were thereby. But nothing has been neglected by God, or will be neglected by Him; for He does at each particular juncture what it becomes Him to do in a perverted and changed world." Origen continues by likening God unto a Gardener, or as "... a husbandman performs different acts of husbandry upon the soil" in order to improve the conditions in the world for souls to grow up in righteousness, rather than continue to retrogress in their wickedness. Thus, God, like a husbandman tilling the soil, also doesn't neglect to care for the world and all the souls thereon. ²⁶²⁵

Jewish literature, the writings of the Old Testament time prophets, as well as other Greek works, were studied by many early Christian scholars; consequently, these earlier types and symbols were also used by Christians down through the centuries too. For example, in Fragments From the Lost Writings of Irenæus, A.D. 120-202, Irenæus used a mustard seed as a type of what Christ did. The seed was sown in the world, as in a field, and from that seed grew a tree that spread out from the heart of the earth into all the earth. ²⁶²⁶

160, The Pastor of Hermas, or The Shepherd, also used branches, willows, twigs, trees, etc., as symbolical types for how Christ and his servants were to spread the gospel and water (or perhaps baptized) the different people in the different nations of the world. And how the servants made sure that the plants had plenty of water so that they would not be neglectful. Or, in other words, God and his servants didn't neglect other parts of the world, for they made sure that the gospel was spread unto the ends of the earth. ²⁶²⁷

Tertullian, 145-220, likened the 12 apostles to fountains and rivers which should water the Gentile world. Christ, as it was predicted by Isaiah, was as a root in a thirsty land (Isa. 53:2). Christ was also likened unto a seed through which the nations of the earth would be blessed. Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, used a "seed" as a type of how God had filled the universe with "the seed of salvation." Christ was "diffused over the whole face of the earth; by whom, so to speak, the universe has already become an ocean of blessings." ²⁶²⁸ The same type is mentioned in the Recognitions of Clement, A.D. 1st—4th centuries, for Peter speaks of all nations as having "... he who shall be sent to sow the word among the nations . . . " ²⁶²⁹

Water also seems to have been used by the ancients as a symbolical type of the law or words of God that comes down from heaven, and flows over the earth, & down under the earth. Thus, rain seems to have been a symbolical type of how the Lord covers the earth with the words of knowledge. "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea." (Habakkuk 2:14; Isaiah 11:9; Zech. 8:12-13).

An ancient fresco from the Dura Europus synagogue depicts Moses producing twelve streams of water, and figures representing the 12 tribes of Israel. [Before AD 256. National Museum. Damascus.] "...Here the miraculous spring is shown as a well, from which the water flows in twelve streams . . . In the well some archaeologists have discerned fishes - living creatures in the Water of Life." ²⁶³⁰ Dr. Hugu Nibley gave the date for this art work as being from "A.D. 245," and wrote that Moses is depicted "as he creates the well of living water at the door of the Tabernacle... A symbol of the Divine Law, it flows to each of the tents of the Twelve Tribes, where praying figures receive it with joy." ²⁶³¹

"The tree of life is an ancient symbol, and has appeared frequently in Near Eastern art. Its fruit was believed to bring immortality.... Hippolytus wrote: "In this Paradise were found the tree of knowledge and the tree of life. In the same way today, there are two trees planted in Paradise, the Law and the Word."²⁶³² Christ is the Word in John 1:1-14; consequently, is Christ guiding into Paradise, or perhaps, planting the saints of old in Paradise, & the preaching of the Law or gospel there?

In the Ancient Syriac Documents, Bardesan, we read how Christ, at his advent, "planted in every country and in every region" the new race of us Christians.²⁶³³ "The faithful are referred to as God's planting, in both Old and New Testaments, a concept carried further by the early church fathers. Isaiah 60:21 refers to "the shoot of my planting" and 61:3 to "the planting of the Lord." "Closely related to the tree of life is the vine, also a part of the "planting" theme." Danielou, supplies numerous references, and interpretations, of these, and other symbolical type, from the literatures and writings of the early Christian Fathers.²⁶³⁴ "In the parable of the vineyard, we find that "the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel" (Isaiah 5:7). Many of the parables of Jesus pertained to the vine: laborers in the vineyard, new wine in old wineskins, and others. The most familiar passage concerning the vine is found in John 15:1-7. Jesus says, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the vinedresser," signifying that he is the true Israel; and "I am the vine, you are the branches," symbolizing the union of Christ with his disciples."²⁶³⁵

The symbolical use of roots and plants as types for people is seen on a silver goblet believed to belong to the first century of the Christian era. In this case, Jewish symbolism is blended with Christian symbolism. On a silver goblet, the "relief is described in detail: Twelve vine-branches grow in pairs from the ground, and in each of twelve garlands they leave free spaces for one sitting figure. The figures are the twelve apostles grouped around the Lord."²⁶³⁶

120–202, the Fragments From the Lost Writings of Irenæus, this old symbolism is used to present the idea that Christ, after his ascension out of the underworld, went to other nations with his servants to spread the gospel. In this particular case a mustard seed is used as that type, for the seed is sown "in the world, as in a field, . . . For the Judge of the whole world is thus proclaimed, who, having been hidden in the heart of the earth in a tomb for three days, and having become a great tree, has stretched forth His branches to the ends of the earth. Sprouting out from Him, the twelve apostles, having become fair and fruitful boughs, were made a shelter for the nations as for the fowls of heaven, under which boughs, all having taken refuge, as birds flocking to a nest, have been made partakers of that wholesome and celestial food which is derived from them."²⁶³⁷ In Christ being likened unto a seed, as a type, it is also interesting to note how "Seed, [is also symbolic] for the Word of God."²⁶³⁸

160, The Pastor of Hermas, or The Shepherd of Hermas, branches, willows, twigs, trees, etc., in a symbolical way. Some of the servants who had branches that produced fruit were let into the tower, symbolic of the Church, and they were clothed in white (compare: Revelation 19:8). Some of the withered branches were considered too, for the following question was asked. How can we make these withered branches live? The answer was that they should pour water upon them, "and if any of them live I shall rejoice with them, and if they do not I at least will not be found neglectful." The Shepherd, after gathering together his servants of different ranks, plants the branches in rows, waters them with much water, even to the point where the branches could not be seen because they were under much water. It was the Shepherd's hope that after they had been watered, they would all live. What was all this a type of? The question is asked: "Sir, explain to me what this tree means," & the cut off branches, etc.? The answer is that: "This great tree . . . that casts its shadow over plains, and mountains, and all the earth, is the law of God that was given to the whole world; and this law is the Son of God" Note 6 says: "And by this law the Son of God was preached to all the ends of the earth." Vat. And, ". . . proclaimed to the ends of the earth; and the people who are under its shadow are they who have heard the proclamation, and have believed upon Him. And the great and glorious angel Michael is he who has authority over this people, and governs them" [see also: Daniel 10:21, 12:7; Revelation 12:7], . . . for this is he who gave them the law [Note 8- "That is, the New Law, the gospel of the Son of God."] into the hearts of believers; he accordingly superintends them to whom he gave it, to see if they have kept the same. And you see the branches of each one, for the branches are the law. You see, accordingly, many branches that have been rendered useless, and you will know them all -- those who have not kept the law; and you will see the dwelling of each one."²⁶³⁹

S. Cæcilius Cyprian, presents these types too, when he explains how the Church flowed forth into all the earth; for just as the one sun has many rays, and a tree has many boughs, and as many streams flow down from one source. The same could be also said about the Church, for when it is flooded with the light of Christ, it "puts forth her rays through the whole world, with yet one light, which is spread upon all places . . . She stretches forth her branches over the universal earth..."²⁶⁴⁰

260–312, Methodius, also called Eubulius, was Bishop of Olympus and Patara, in Lycia. Later he was removed to the episcopal See of Tyre in Phœnicia. About A.D. 312, he suffered martyrdom at Chalcis in Greece.²⁶⁴¹ In his The Banquet of The Ten Virgins, he cites Zechariah 4:1–3, saying that: "These [two olive—boughs on the right and left hand pipes of a candlestick] are the two sons of fruitfulness ["Anointed ones,"] which stand by the Lord of the whole earth." These, says Methodius, are symbolic types of the two firstborn virtues, which ". . . supply around the wick, through the boughs, the spiritual oil of God, that man may have the light of divine knowledge." He also suggests that the two boughs of the two olives are the law and the prophets.²⁶⁴²

St. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, was born some time between A.D. 296 and 298, and died May 2, 373. In his De Incarnatione Verbi Dei, or Incarnation of the Word, he wrote: "But since the sojourn of the Saviour among men all nations also on every side began to know God . . ." [Citing Isaiah 11:10]: "For "there shall be," he saith, "the root of Jesse, and he that riseth to rule the nations, on him shall the nations hope."²⁶⁴³

In some of the art works underground in the catacombs "Christ is shown as vine, as lamb and even more often as fish, the Greek word for which is an acrostic of Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour."²⁶⁴⁴ Furthermore, "Aaron, at God's command, laid a dry branch in the Ark of the Covenant; next day the branch flowered and bore fruit. The sterile branch bearing fruit is the Virgin Mary who gives birth to Jesus Christ."²⁶⁴⁵

In later centuries, later Christians still used these types of symbolical similitudes or facsimiles, for example, Peter Damiani, 1006 or 1007, died at Faenza on Feb. 22, 1072, in a speech entitled, The Glory of the Cross of Christ, he said: "By the Cross, or rather by Him who vouchsafed to hang upon the Cross, all things are restored, all things are blessed, all things are covered with the dew of heaven.... O truly noble tree, which proceedest indeed from an earthly origin, but stretchest forth thy happy boughs beyond the stars! Once thy fruit was the prey of hell; now thou bearest the cedars of Paradise, and those living stones come forth from thee with which the dwellings of the heavenly Jerusalem are constructed."²⁶⁴⁶

In historic Christendom, flowers from root-of-Jesse became a vivid symbol used as a type of Christ by the Christian church fathers. Thus, St. Ambrose wrote: "The root is the family of the Jews, the stem Mary, the flower of Mary is Christ."²⁶⁴⁷ In Christian lore, flowers with five golden petals, such as Avens, was symbolic of Christ's wounds. Hence, to the imaginative mystic of the Middle Ages, they symbolized "the Five Wounds of Christ."²⁶⁴⁸

As late as the 15th century, Dominicans sang: "Rorate, celi, de super, et nubes pluant justum. Aperiatur terra, et germinet Salvatore." "Drop down dew, you heavens, from above, let the clouds rain down the Just One. Let the earth be opened and bud forth the Savior."²⁶⁴⁹ These words hint to Christ's descent from heaven to be born to Mary, and his ascension up out of hell.

Another art-work, The Dream of Mary, Christoforo Simone dei Crocefissi, 1350, shows a tree, representing Christ, growing out of Mary.²⁶⁵⁰ In symbolism of the later Christian mysteries, that includes world-wide-trek-types of Christ's sojourns. The ancient agricultural symbolism includes the encounters with the Messiah-Christ, in the guise of a Gardener. From Mary grew forth the tree of knowledge, the Word-Christ, whose genealogical root from Jesse was seen as an Old Testament prophetic type in foretelling of Christ's universal reign. Who, like a tree, extends forth roots & branches throughout the underworld & the world. Such symbolism, also includes the whole journey of the soul through the pre-existence, mortal life, death, descent, & resurrection. Plus the post-war in the underworld continuation of the war during the global trekking missions of the militant-Christ, the apostles, & good angels. Who often were also out guising as different types of people, in order to pass through different places undetected, if possible. Or, as in other cases, to make themselves & their gospel message known, as they marched forth with the cross-banner, & with great pomp, with the victorious resurrected Christ, leading the march. This whole cosmic journey was illustrated in many early to later Christians' use of complex ritualistic biblical types & prophetic connections thus symbolized with the use of: Trees, seeds, watering of plants, palm branches, plant growths, gardens, the act of planting, or sowing, reaping, harvesting, Christ under the grape-press & the flow down of the grape juice, (sacramental blood), etc. Examples: The pre-existence theme of Christ, as a type of tree of knowledge, is also teaching the Word of Knowledge to Adam & Eve. This was sometimes presented as happening during the post-garden of Eden encounters between Adam & Eve & the world Gardener-Christ. Other examples: A tree as types of Christ's birth to Mary. Then later, of his descent, like roots, down into the underworld. Then of his resurrection up out of the underworld, to then extend his branches & knowledge of his gospel, throughout the world, reigning as the wandering world Gardener, who does not neglect his vineyards. For Christ is also likened unto the water that nourishes & cleanses, by his atoning blood, that flows down from the wooden cross (sometimes in the shape of a tree), as it flows down into the underworld, like the cleansing-water-of-baptism, plus, as the living water of his live giving gospel.²⁶⁵¹

Justin Martyr, 110—165, Dialogue With Trypho, it was on "the eighth day, wherein Christ appeared when He rose from the dead, for ever the first in power. For Christ, being the first-born of every creature, became again the chief of another race regenerated by Himself through water, and faith, and wood, containing the mystery of the cross; even as Noah was saved by wood when he rode over the waters with his household."²⁶⁵² Note here the plant types, "the mystery of the cross," made of wood like Noah's ark, which saved him from the dangerous deep, the watery abyss. Plus, regeneration—baptism, which is the ritualistic type of Christ's death, descent & resurrection.

Semitic and Biblical traditions were incorporated into medieval iconography, for under the Tree of life a number of birds, etc., "drink from the four Rivers of Paradise which gush from the baptismal Fountain of Life into a continuous stream at the root of the Tree. Higher up, the trunk and main branches form the Cross which bears its fruit in the crucified Christ and is flanked by the Virgin and St. John." With the traditions which said how Adam's grave was under the cross,²⁶⁵³ the "cosmological Tree of Life thus penetrated the very regions of death and provided the means of ascent for man and descent for God."²⁶⁵⁴ Other traditions say that when Adam was sick, he told Seth to ask the angel that kept paradise for the oil of mercy to anoint his body with, however, the angel gave him three grains of the same tree which eventually became three trees, and later the wood for the cross "that bare good fruit and blessed, namely our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom Adam and all that come of him, should be saved and delivered from dread of death without end, unless it be by their own fault."²⁶⁵⁵

Later Christian artists depicted Christ as the true vine which branches are his disciples. In the Painting by Pacino di Bonaguida, some of the symbolical types were that of a great river from which the roots of a tree would be watered. Thus, there were "four heads, to water the paradise of the whole Church. Next, from the trunk of the tree let there come forth twelve branches adorned with fronds, flowers, and fruits; and let the leaf of the tree be a most effective medication, both preventing and healing, against every kind of disease, because the word of the cross is the virtue of God for the health of every believer."²⁶⁵⁶ In early Christian symbols, olive branches, and olive oil, are symbols of the healing power of Christ. Hence, "Jesus, Fruit of the womb of the Virgin Mary, healed the wounds of the world made by sin."²⁶⁵⁷

It may be that the four rivers of paradise, as seen in early to later Christian art works, also represent how the gospel flows forth into the four corners of the earth to nourish the people of the world with God's word.²⁶⁵⁸ In a plaque from a book cover, 1150—70, the four rivers of Paradise are personified, and in some cases are equated by the Fathers with the Evangelists. An inscription to this work reads: "the light quadriga of the Evangelists bears Christ throughout the world."²⁶⁵⁹ George Ferguson suggests that the four rivers flowing from a single rock were used as "symbols of the four gospels flowing from Christ."²⁶⁶⁰ Also: "Christ is often referred to as a rock from which flow the pure rivers of the gospel."²⁶⁶¹

Phoenix-bird & Stars as types: In some cases, Christ is symbolically represented by a phoenix bird,²⁶⁶² a symbol in both the Old and New World for resurrection and immortality. In addition to this, bird wings are symbolic for divine messengers' abilities to travel swiftly about.²⁶⁶³ In the Church of SS, Cosma and Damiano, Rome, Christ, represented as a phoenix bird, is also depicted in front of a star with six points, like the Star of David, both of these symbols are in the top part of a palm tree. Some have suggested, that this "star itself represents the power of Jahweh which reaches to all corners of the earth."²⁶⁶⁴ "Jews hope for God to send a messiah, an ideal ruler, who will bring all mankind under just and divine rule. Christians believe that Jesus was this messiah."²⁶⁶⁵ In other cases, this imagery, that of star symbols, and also the sun, these are symbolical types for bright angelic beings. They are also likened, in many cases in ancient Jewish and early Christian imageries to the pre-existing spirit of the Messiah, his messengers, and the pre-existing spirits of apostles and prophets, whom, before they were born, had appeared in their bright and glorious spirit forms, to different prophets living in different areas around the world,²⁶⁶⁶ and, at different times.²⁶⁶⁷ In later Christmas traditions, "the lit tree is humanity... the Child [tree decoration] is the Saviour."²⁶⁶⁸ From these sources, different parts of plants were used in Christendom as similitudes to describe the spreading forth of the gospel to the underworld & unto the ends of the earth, by the prophets, Christ, and his apostles.

CHRIST AS THE WANDERING WORD & OTHER TYPES OF CHRIST'S WORLD TREKS

The apostle John calls Christ the Word, this became a type of Christ which was used by early to later Christians. According to John, the pre-existing Christ was the Word who was with God the Father in the beginning. He also says that the Word came down from heaven to be clothed in a body of flesh and bones (John 1:1—14). As prophesied, Christ the Word, would go forth from Jerusalem (Isaiah 2:3). As noted earlier, the early anti-Christian Celsus mocks the concept that Christ would be sent down into only one corner of the world.²⁶⁶⁹ Origen, 185-230-254, in his response, calls Christ, the Word, which will go forth throughout the world. For Christ is "the Word" which "was about to be diffused from one corner over the whole world . . . in order that the whole world of men might be enlightened by the Word of God."²⁶⁷⁰

Gregory Thaumaturgus, 205—240—265, wrote that Christ, the Word, as a perfect, holy and sinless man, used his position for "the renewal of mankind and the salvation of all the world."²⁶⁷¹

Cyprian, 200—58, used this type when he wrote that: "Christ also is Himself the Word of God." Citing from Isaiah, "A Word completing and shortening in righteousness, because a shortened word will God make in the whole earth." Isa. 10:23.²⁶⁷²

St. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, 296 and 298, and died May 2, 373. In his De Incarnatione Verbi Dei, or Incarnation of the Word, we read: "For by the Word revealing Himself everywhere, both above and beneath, and in the depth and in the breadth—above, in the creation; beneath, in becoming man; in depth, in Hades; and in the breadth, in the world—all things have been filled with the knowledge of God."²⁶⁷³

Thus, it seems that Athanasius believed that the knowledge of God was spread by Christ who revealed himself everywhere, and who descended into hades to spread that knowledge there too.²⁶⁷⁴

CHRIST AS A ROLLING STONE: Stones, & rocks, in some cases also represented Christ or the Messiah. A portion of Genesis 49:24 mentions "the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel:)" Who is the shepherd, the stone of Israel? It seems that the descendants of Joseph are to be helped by the shepherd or stone of Israel, or the God of their fathers (Genesis 49:22-26; Psalm 80:1). David in the Psalms, often uses rocks for types of the Redeemer, how they remembered that God "was their rock, and the high God their redeemer." (Psalm 78:35). Like in the protective aspects of the Militant Christ, with similitudes & Christians' symbols seen throughout history.²⁶⁷⁵ Christ is likened unto a rock that is foundational to the forts of protection, the castles of retreat, the defense against false doctrines, (Ephesians 4:7-15). "But the LORD is my defence; and my rock God is the rock of my refuge." Psalms 94:22; 95:1. The rock of our salvation.

Isaiah 28:7-15. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste." (Isaiah 28:16).

Who is the stone of the sure foundation, or the corner stone? "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the LORD'S doing; it is marvellous in our eyes." (Psalm 14-23).

The writer to the Ephesians wrote that the church was "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Ephesians 2:20).

Some of the early Christians saw types of Christ in the stone that rolled forth into other nations of the world to preach the gospel everywhere. For example, Cyprian, A.D. 200—258, lists a number of types of Christ, one of which is, "That He is also called a Stone... that... should become a mountain, and should fill the whole earth."²⁶⁷⁶ Daniel 2:31-35, thus, some early Christians looked upon Christ as a type of rolling stone! Rolling forth until he fills the whole earth. Perhaps even a militant Christ, that smote the images of false gods, demons & devil, until all are subdued & made his foot stool, (1 Corinthians 10:1-5; 15:20-58; Matthew 7:25; 16:18).

The Pastor of Hermas, [A.D. 160], symbolically called Christ the "rock" which pre-existed & was "a fellow-councillor with the Father in His work of creation" The apostles were symbolically called "stones" that descended down into the spirit prison to preach the gospel. They also ascended up out of that realm to become part of a building, or temple.²⁶⁷⁷

CHRIST, THE LIGHT IN THE DARKNESS: Later Christian Christmas symbols, types, traditions, and customs of how lit candles²⁶⁷⁸ were placed in windows as guiding lights to the wandering Christ-child.²⁶⁷⁹ Finland, during Christmas, they lit pinewood torches, formed a procession, and carried burning brands along the route, hoping that the wandering Christ-child would walk down that way. If the lights burned well, it was a sign that the wandering Christ child would find his way.²⁶⁸⁰

In earlier centuries, different sources of light, such as the sun, candles, and fire, were likened unto the gospel, and how Christ's glory spread throughout the world. It is also connected with symbolized types of his descent into hell to light up the darkness there with the light of the gospel, and to guide the captive souls up out of the dark underworld.²⁶⁸¹

In his Exhortation to the Heathens, Clement of Alexandria used types that the Heathens could relate to. Hence, Christ is the one who lights up the world, instead of heathen gods lighting up the world by driving a chariot which pulls the sun across the sky by four horses.²⁶⁸²

Clement also wrote, "Sleepless light is now over all . . . For "the Sun of Righteousness," who drives His chariot over all, pervades equally all humanity, like "His Father, who makes His sun to rise on all men," and distills on them the dew of the truth." Clement also wrote that Christ was the "guide of all humanity."²⁶⁸³

Lundy notes that, "The four horses, like the four arms of Krishna, may have reference to the four elements, or four seasons, or four corners of the world, as influenced by the sun . . . Is there no bright Sun of Righteousness-- no personal and loving Son of God, of whom the material sun has been the type or symbol, in all ages and among all nations? . . . If the symbolical sun leads such a great earthly and heavenly flock, what must be said of the true and only-begotten Son of God?" Further on Lundy suggests that: ". . . this interpretation of the sun-god among all nations must be the solution of the universal mythos, or what other solution can it have? To what other historical personage but Christ can it apply."²⁶⁸⁴

Lundy, further on, wrote that a number of different nations of the earth had their sun-gods: "We have already seen how Mithra and Apollo are represented as sun-gods. . . . And therefore early Christian art took this typical and suggestive Pagan conception, and made it the framework of her grander and truer picture of the great Son of God shining on the earth to give it life, and going up on high to draw all men after Him, even as the natural sun draws up the moisture to give it back in fertilizing showers." Lundy saw in these, and other pagan parallels; when compared with that of early Christendom that here was evidence that a prophetic knowledge of God and Christ had been given to other nations in ancient times: "Wonderful coincidences, indeed, they are, implying one great truth revealed to all mankind alike to aid us in our struggle upward and heavenward, to God."²⁶⁸⁵ In other nations, the civilizing gods who come to "diffuse intelligence and instruct barbarians, are Solar Deities."²⁶⁸⁶

Tertullian, 145—220, wrote that Christ has "illuminated the whole world with the rays of His gospel." In his response to the heretic Marcion, he used this type again, for Christ was "a light to the nations" wherefore He had determined and decreed that the nations also were to be enlightened by the law and the word of the gospel."²⁶⁸⁷

In another portion of his writings Tertullian used this type again in his response to Praxeas: "Hear also what He [the Father] says to the Son: 'It is a great thing for Thee, that Thou shouldest be called my Son to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the dispersed of Israel? I have given Thee for a light to the Gentiles, that Thou mayest be their salvation to the end of the earth.'" [Isaiah 49:6].²⁶⁸⁸

Lactantius, 260—330, wrote that Christ's teaching was about to have such might, that: "the nations throughout the world, which were estranged from God and subject to death, being animated by the knowledge of the true light, might arrive at the rewards of immortality."²⁶⁸⁹

Some time during the third through the fourth centuries, in Poem Of Venantius Honorius Clementianus Fortunatus, On Easter, by an Italian presbyter and poet. (In some editions, is entitled: De Resurrectione). In this work, addressed to the bishop Felix, we read of Christ militant triumphant descent into the gloomy Tartarus, and how he crushed the jaws of hell. And of Christ's light going forth to light up the underworld prison, and the whole world.²⁶⁹⁰

During the 3rd or 4th centuries, another early Christian work, Constitutions Of The Holy Apostles, uses this same type of Christ: "Instead of the divine service confined to one place, He has commanded and appointed that He should be glorified from sunrising to sunset in every place of His dominion." (Psalm 113:3—4; Malachi 1:11). Does the portion, "from sunrising to sunset," mean, that the lands & nations that Christ's light touched, are to follow his gospel law too? Or is this the length of time they are to continue to worship him in every part of his dominion? A little further on we read: "For everywhere would he have us subject to His laws, but not transgressors of them."²⁶⁹¹

In The Infancy of the Saviour, we read how Simeon, in the Temple, said of the Christ-child that he had been "...prepared for the salvation of all peoples, a light to all nations...."²⁶⁹²

In The Gospel of Nicodemus, we read how Simeon, in the temple, took the Christ-child in his hands and said that this child was the salvation that God had "prepared in the sight of all peoples, a light for the revealing of the nations..."²⁶⁹³ Further on in this account, Christ bursts through the gates of hell in his brightness and glory. The demons comment about how they had never seen such a one as this who has no fear of them. For not only can't they put him in chains, he is breaking their captives free from theirs'. They then, conclude that this bright militant man is "Jesus of whom our prince Satan said, that by thy death of the cross thou hast destined to receive the dominion of the whole world." Christ, the King of glory, tramples on death & grapples with Satan, & delivers him to Hades. Christ then, "drew Adam to His brightness"²⁶⁹⁴ thus, showing him the hand and wrist grasps,²⁶⁹⁵ symbols of the cross,²⁶⁹⁶ which Adam & the other freed souls use to enter into paradise.²⁶⁹⁷

Methodius, 260—312, wrote this of the Christ—child: "the earth has been filled with that divine glory of God." He follows this by citing from Psalms 72:18—19: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, and the whole earth shall be filled with His glory." Hinting to the mysteries, Methodius, mentions how Christ passes through doors which is a type of the veil. Further on, he wrote that the virgin Mary has dawned on the world, and has brought forth "the Sun of Righteousness, that hateful horror of darkness has been chased away; the power of the tyrant has been broken, death hath been destroyed, hell swallowed up . . . and the whole universe has been filled with the pure and clear light of truth."²⁶⁹⁸ Christ's militant descent into hell to defeat death, and the devil, and how Christ's light shined throughout the world, during his post resurrection world tour, these things are alluded to here in these types.

In his The Banquet of The Ten Virgins; or, Concerning Chastity, Methodius mentions a hymn which repeats the Chorus: "I keep myself pure for Thee, O Bridegroom, and holding a lighted torch I go to meet Thee."²⁶⁹⁹ Earlier, Methodius used light, candles, bride, groom, and a wedding as types of how Christ gathers the people from the four corners of the earth, and spreads the light of the gospel throughout the whole earth.²⁷⁰⁰ From this, and other sources, we see how the early Christians used light as a type to likened how the gospel was spread throughout the world. Furthermore, the light was spread forth after Christ's descent into hell, according to The Acts of Philip. In this early Christian work from the third through the fourth centuries, we read of how, if the Lord intends, he will "raise those who are in Hades, that they may confess that Jesus is Lord. For in that day every tongue shall confess that Jesus is Lord..." Philip also praises Christ who "hast given us Thy light, the Gospel."²⁷⁰¹

In response to the Arians, during the Nicene Creed era, Athanasius, about A.D. 342, wrote On Luke X. 33 (Matt. XI,27), in which he likens Christ unto a light which illumines the world. He also argues for his own particular views on the nature of the Godhead. Thus, his views & interpretations of Christ's trek throughout the earth, should be considered in light of how he understood the Godhead to be according to creed.²⁷⁰²

Down through the ages in Christendom, the use of candles during Candlemas, & candlestick, all these are part of insignias in connection with the type of how Christ is the Light of the world. "Romanesque candlesticks were often ornamented with scenes symbolizing the victory of light over darkness."²⁷⁰³ Thus, these two types are often connected together to present the ceremonies, & customs in memory of Christ's descent into hell to defeat the devil, death, & to free the captive spirits in the ascension out of hell to begin his glorious militant victory march throughout the world.

In early Liturgies, during the third through the fourth centuries, A.D., the priest, during a prayer, says this about how Christ, "...hast chosen the lamp of the twelve apostles with its twelve lights, and has sent them forth to proclaim throughout the whole world and teach the Gospel of Thy Kingdom..."²⁷⁰⁴

In Rome, there is a Statue of truth personified as a naked female. This stone carving was done by Bernini at the Villa Borghese in Rome, A.D. 1644. Truth holds a sun-like disk with darting rays of light, and rest her foot on a globe. A similar statue is found in the Santo Spirito die Napoletani in Rome. It is on the tomb of Cardinal

Giovanni Battista de Luca. In the Library of the Collegio Romano is a book that inspired Italian allegories, thus, Iconologia, by Cesare Ripa, shows truth in the same sort of way mentioned, and offers the comments that Truth holds up the sun to “signify that she loves the light and is herself the light.”²⁷⁰⁵

St. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, 296 and 298, and died May 2, 373. In Against the Heathen, he wrote how the Heathens, when they “traduce the Cross of Jesus” they don’t see that its power has “filled all the world, and that by it the effects of knowledge of God are made manifest to all.” Further on he also states how God and Christ, as the Word of God flooded the whole world with knowledge of them. “For as the light is noble, and the sun, the chief cause of light, is nobler still, so, as it is a divine thing for the whole world to be filled with his knowledge...”²⁷⁰⁶

In his De Incarnatione Verbi Dei, or Incarnation of the Word, Athanasius also wrote of the victory which Christ had over death. Moreover, Athanasius hints to types which show up in later Christian art works of Christ’s descent into Hades with the cross-banner weapon to defeat death with. And of how that banner is the sign of victory which Christ held as he made his victory march throughout the world. Thus, Athanasius wrote that as the darkness is overcome when the sun rises, and the whole earth is illuminated by the sun. So also did Christ drive away the darkness and reveals his light everywhere. The part, which shows up in numerous art works, is the part which marks the beginning of Christ’s victory march throughout the world. For as he ascends out of Hades, death is “trodden under foot.” Consequently, Christ appearing in his resurrected body, is also he who “brought death to nought.” Christ is also he “Who displays the signs of victory.” One sign which he bears is “the sign of the Cross.” This sign is a sign of his “victory over death.”²⁷⁰⁷

A 10th c. depiction of a trinity, enthroned, has Mary also enthroned, with a child on her lap, a bird on her head, (or a dove, representing the Holy Ghost?). To her left, the wounded adult Christ, sits, & on God the Father’s right-hand side, sits Christ. Both of Christ’s feet rest on the back of a fallen devil, as also God the Father’s right foot rests on the rear of the same devil. The devil’s back is to them, it’s curled up, as if in total submission.²⁷⁰⁸

In 12th century mosaics, Christ is the Pantocrator, holding open a book which in Greek and Latin the text from John 8:12, “I am the Light of the World, he who follows me will not walk in darkness.”²⁷⁰⁹ In later Christmas traditions, millions of lights throughout the world represent how the light of Christ lights up the darkness throughout the world. Hence, this later imagery must have been carried over from the earlier. “The Christmas feast, first introduced by John Chrysostom at Antioch circa 375, coincided with the pagan feast of sol invictus. Chrysostom composed parts of the Greek Christmas liturgies which are still in use. The Christmas and Epiphany rites are full of phrases which equate the Saviour with light in various guises (‘sun’, ‘the true Light’, ‘Light of lights’, ‘star’, ‘sun of righteousness’, ‘to give light to those who sit in darkness’, ‘King of the sun’, ‘word all-shining’, ‘the light no man can approach’, ‘Light from light’)-images which are reflected in the Palatina sanctuary mosaics created by Greek artisans.” These earlier Christmas imagery and inscriptions tell how different symbolic types still “proclaim who Christ [really] is and what light and life you gave to the darkness of the world as from eternity you, pious deity, had arranged.” Inasmuch as Christ’s victory march and post-resurrection world wide trek happens after his ascension out of the underworld, where they, that sit in darkness, see a great light (Isaiah 9:2).

DARKNESS UPON THE EARTH BEFORE CHRIST’S WORLD WIDE VISITS TO LIGHT UP THE WORLD. DARKNESS COVERED THE GLOBE

An early Christian belief & testimonial about what was going on during Christ’s suffering, death, & while his spirit was in the spirit world, is how that darkness was said to cover the globe, before Christ’s world-wide-trek, to light up the world with his glorious visitations around the globe. This aspect of his trek seems to have later become faded reminders in the use of candles, Christmas lights, & the knocking on the doors, representing the underworld, to then have the priests open them, with a candle that is used to light up other candles. From that one candle then, many candle lighting spreads out, suggesting the lighting up of the darkness throughout the world, during Christ’s post-resurrection Easter dramas.

In some early texts of Mark 16:3: “In the third hour of the day there came darkness throughout all the globe of the earth, and angels came down from the heavens...”²⁷¹⁰

It’s also interesting to note that these Christmas imageries include references to the harrowing of hell, in which “the age-old bond of Adam’s condemnation has been untied.... [For] Paradise has been opened to us”²⁷¹¹ Hence, Christ’s post-resurrection world-wide-trek stories, liturgical dramas, and imagery often seem to include the fact that the saints he resurrects, appear to the saints then living on the earth, which saints also are visited by the resurrected Christ.²⁷¹²

Texts that early Christians might have found of use to present the lighting up of the darkness are: Ezekiel prophesied: “And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord GOD. I will also vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.” (Ezekiel 32:7—9).

“GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock” (Psalm 80:1). “For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day” (Ezekiel.34:11-12, italics added).

Numerous early Christian writings mention the darkness that covered the earth before Christ’s ascension out of the underworld. For example, Cyprian, A.D. 200-258, presents, among different types of Christ, how that at mid day, during Christ’s passion, “there should be darkness.... He should not be overcome of death, nor should remain in hell.... [Because] He should rise again from hell on the third day.”²⁷¹³ Cyprian also cites from Amos and Jeremiah, both of which prophesied about the darkness at the time of Christ’s suffering. He then goes on to cite from Matthew: “Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the earth even to the ninth hour.”²⁷¹⁴

Julius Africanus, A.D. 200-232-245, wrote that, “On the whole world there pressed a most fearful darkness; and the rocks were rent by an earthquake...”²⁷¹⁵ Julius goes on to mention Thallus’ third book of his History, which says that the darkness was caused by an eclipse of the sun. Further on he mentions how Phlegon records that, in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, during a full moon, there was a full eclipse of the sun. He then goes on to ask what an eclipse has in common with an “earthquake, the rending rocks, and the resurrection of the dead, and so great a perturbation throughout the universe?” Julius also wrote that this darkness was: “induced by God, because the Lord happened then to suffer.”²⁷¹⁶

In the Recognitions of Clement, first through the fourth centuries, we read how that when Christ was suffering, “all the world suffered with Him; for the sun was darkened, the mountains were torn asunder, and the graves were opened...”²⁷¹⁷

In the Greek version of The Gospel of Nicodemus, we read: "And it was about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over the earth until the ninth hour, the sun being darkened . . ." ²⁷¹⁸ In the Second Greek Form of this work, we read about the darkness, which is said to have been an eclipse of the sun. ²⁷¹⁹

In The Report of Pilate the Procurator Concerning Our Lord Jesus Christ, we read that: "at the time he was crucified there was darkness over all the world, the sun being darkened at mid-day, and the stars appearing, but in them there appeared no lustre; and the moon, as if turned into blood, failed in her light." This source also mentions an earthquake which took place too. ²⁷²⁰ Under the heading, The Giving Up of Pontius Pilate, it was during the crucifixion of Jesus, that the "world has been darkened and dragged to destruction." ²⁷²¹

The Narrative of Joseph, it says that one of the robbers which were crucified with Jesus, acknowledged Christ by saying: "...Thou shalt judge all the world... [and that] the sun, which is now darkened on account of Thee..." ²⁷²²

In Ancient Syriac Documents, The Teachings of Addæus the Apostle, again, we read about how at the time of Christ's suffering: "...the sun which was darkened, and... [there was a] great convulsion ["earthquake"] which took place at that time.... For the works of creation, which trembled when He was slain and were dismayed at His suffering... the sun grew dark...." These events are also during the era when Christ's gospel was spread throughout the earth. ²⁷²³ Further on he describes the darkness, earthquakes, and of all created things trembled and quaked during Christ's suffering. ²⁷²⁴

In Ancient Syriac Documents, The Teaching of Simon Cephas In The City of Rome, we read how the sun was darkened at Christ's death, and the earth quaked. ²⁷²⁵

The Acts of Sharbil, when the nails were driven into Christ the creator, the creation trembled and quaked. ²⁷²⁶

Another, Moses of Chorene, contains a letter by Abgar, king of Armenia, to Tiberius, emperor of the Romans. In this letter, Abgar wrote that the sun was darkened, and the earth was moved & shaken when Christ was being crucified. ²⁷²⁷

Melito, The Philosopher, A.D. 160-170-177, also wrote of how the earth shook, & its foundations trembled. But also, "the sun fled away, and the elements turned back, and the day was changed into night..." Further on he wrote that the "luminaries turned away, and the day became darkened, [and] because they slew God... the earth quaked..." ²⁷²⁸

In Ancient Syriac Documents, The Teaching of The Apostles, the apostles appointed that a service should be held on the 9th hour on the eve of the Sabbath. This service was to commemorate the day Christ suffered. For the "...fourth day of the week about the suffering of the Saviour was brought to pass on the same eve; the worlds and creatures trembling, and the luminaries in the heavens being darkened." ²⁷²⁹

In his response to early anti-Christians among the Heathen, Arnobius, writing about A.D. 297-303, says this, about what happened during Christ's death: "But when, freed from the body,... He allowed Himself to be seen, and let it be known how great He was, all the elements of the universe bewildered by the strange events were thrown into confusion. An earthquake shook the world, the sea was heaved up from its depths, the heaven was shrouded in darkness, the sun's fiery blaze was checked, and his heat became moderate; for what else could occur when He was discovered to be God who heretofore was reckoned one of us?..." ²⁷³⁰ He then follows this by pointing out that numerous people saw these things. And who were they who did witness these events? "... Tribes, people, nations, and that incredulous human race..." ²⁷³¹

Moreover, he points out that even the early anti-Christians among the Heathens knew that such events were recorded, but that they didn't believe them: "But if this record of events is false, as you say, how comes it that in so short a time the whole world has been filled with such a religion? or how could nations dwelling widely apart, and separated by climate and by convexities of heaven, unite in one conclusion?" Further on he continues: "... Nay, because they saw all these things to be done by Christ Himself and by His apostles, who being sent throughout the whole world carried with them the blessings of the Father..." ²⁷³² Thus, among the tribes, peoples, nations, and those of the human race which witnessed these events. Among all these, were many people throughout the whole earth which Christ and his apostles were sent to, during their sojourn among the nations.

In The Testament of Levi Concerning the Priesthood and Arrogance, there are portions which early Christians of the late 2nd century onward may have thought were prophetic types of Christ. If so, in one part, he is likened unto the sun which will shine forth in the earth, "and shall drive away all darkness from the world under heaven..." Further on, the spreading of the gospel throughout the world is likened unto water, for, "the knowledge of the Lord shall be poured forth upon the earth, as the water of seas..." During this time, the Lord will have also opened the gates of Paradise so Adam and the saints can enter in. ²⁷³³ Consequently, Christ, and the saints' ascension out of hell, and their passing through the gates of Paradise, are also prophetically presented here in this Testament. All of which are also in connection with an era when darkness would be driven away by the brightness of Christ's glorious resurrected body, during his world wide trek to preach the gospel.

Even the late 19th century anti-Christian writer, T. W. Doane, offers a number of historical sources from different nations to point out that other nations speak of a time of darkness, and other cosmic struggles between the good and evil gods. ²⁷³⁴ Furthermore, his whole point in making references to these sources is to suggest that because pre-Christian pagans had notions of these things, Christianity must have borrowed these aspects. However, if this event was a world wide event, then we ought to expect to see references to this darkness, and other things, in the histories of the different nations around the world. And even though Doane seeks to destroy our faith in Christ, by suggesting what critics throughout the ages suggested about borrowing. ²⁷³⁵ To make this charge, he decided to not accept early Christian responses, ²⁷³⁶ and Lundy's answer ²⁷³⁷ as to why there are parallels. Lundy notes how critics through the ages have charged that Christianity must have borrowed from the pagans. ²⁷³⁸ However, he also points out that if Christ had pre-existed, he must have manifested himself to other nations besides the Jews. ²⁷³⁹ If we view these ancient and modern arguments, & sources in the ways early Christians, and others have suggested, the sources which Doane offers could then be added with the others already mentioned. But, unlike what Doane and others have suggested, these added sources could be considered as evidences for Christ's pilgrimages into every corner of the earth, rather than against him. ²⁷⁴⁰

The prophet Amos also mentions how the Lord would "pass through" his vineyards, or visit different parts of the branches of the house of Israel which had been scattered throughout the world too. One of the "vineyards" he would pass through would be a remnant of Joseph; thus, the Messiah "will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph." Furthermore, Amos also prophesied about the events leading up to this, and how that: "Wailing shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skillful of lamentation to wailing. And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the Lord" (Amos 5:14-20).

Amos further prophesied about the darkness too, for he says that "the day of the LORD is darkness, and not light. . . Shall not the day of the LORD be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?" (Amos 5:14-18, & 20). Basic details of these events leading up to the Messiah's appearance in the Americas were passed down to later generations, for as Hubert Howe Bancroft notes: "The Mexicans were much troubled and distressed by an eclipse of the sun. . . . This was the occasion of a general panic, women weeping aloud, and men howling and shouting."²⁷⁴¹

Christ's post-resurrection first coming to other far away nations was a time for them "the cloudy and dark day," as Ezekiel had prophesied (Ezekiel 34:12). And as Amos had prophesied, "the day of the LORD is darkness, and not light." (Amos 5:14-18, & 20). In which there was heard "wailing" & "mourning" & great "lamentation." "Shall not the day of the LORD be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?"²⁷⁴²

The Mayan corn god was Yum Kaax, among the later Aztecs, their god of maize was Cinteotl, to which the people offered their blood to every April.²⁷⁴³ According to traditions, and the calendar dates, these ancient Americans give the date of the darkness,²⁷⁴⁴ and destruction as taking place during the first days of a new year.²⁷⁴⁵ During which time the death, ascension out of the underworld, or resurrection, and the arrival of the Great White God took place too. Hence, when Quetzalcoatl "died, dawn did not appear for four days, because he had gone to dwell among the dead."²⁷⁴⁶ The new year for these ancient Americans started in the spring,²⁷⁴⁷ or in April, rather than in January.²⁷⁴⁸

The darkness could have been a result of not only an eclipse of the sun, as numerous records state, but also, in addition to this, a number of volcanic eruptions. For these could have filled the air with a vapor of darkness which could have blocked out the sun light too. A good case in point is the darkness which came upon the land due to the El Chichón volcano eruption in southern Mexico. Sadly enough, on April 4, 1982, "An arid rain choked scores of towns on "Ash Sunday," the sunless day of the predawn April 4th eruption."²⁷⁴⁹ There were reports of earthquakes, intense lightning, and a vapor of darkness which the people could feel, and which blocked out the sun light. People said that they also heard low rumbling sounds coming from deep within the earth. There were also reports of fires caused by falling heated volcanic rocks, which smashed through roof tops.²⁷⁵⁰ Though legends offer only distorted memories of actual events,²⁷⁵¹ it is interesting to note how the Incas in South America have passed down the stories about a time of darkness and destruction, such as a great flood. And how they say that, "The moon and sun emerged, with the moon brighter than the sun; but the sun dimmed the moon by throwing ashes at it. Meanwhile, the giants were replaced by smaller, better people, and the god [Viracocha] wandered among them, dressed as a beggar, working miracles and teaching them the rudiments of culture."²⁷⁵²

Ixtlilxochitl wrote that their legends say that there was an eclipse of the sun and the moon. And that the "earth shook, the rocks broke into pieces and many other things and signs came to pass. These things occurred during the time our Lord, Jesus Christ, reigned on the earth and they say it came about during the first days of the year."²⁷⁵³

The Toltec traditions say, according to Bancroft, that the sun and moon were eclipsed, and the earth shook, and the rocks were thrashed and broken up. Many other signs happened too, though, according to this tradition, no one died as a result of this destruction that happened about the same time that Christ was suffering on the cross.²⁷⁵⁴

Brasseur De Bourbourg relates some of the themes he had in the collection of ancient American documents. He says that at some remote date, there were convulsions of nature, floods, upheaval of mountains, volcanic eruptions and other natural disasters. The memories of these events were passed down in the traditions of the different groups of people in Mexico, Central America, Peru, and Bolivia. Prescott also relates similar Indian traditions too.²⁷⁵⁵ In the mysterious ruins of Kenko, or Qenko, in South America, the ruins give one the impression that they were toppled and destroyed in an earthquake. The buildings at these ruins are tilted at about a 30-degree angle, which would have required a powerful earthquake.²⁷⁵⁶

LIGHTING UP DARKNESS, PASS ON THE FIRE!
Other symbolical types of Christ's global wanderings seem to have been preserved in such traditional ceremonies as the passing of fire. It includes dramatizations of the descent, & his resurrection, and how he lit up the world during his glorious pilgrimage into other nations. Hence, during the blessing of the Fire, in the Greek Orthodox Church²⁷⁵⁷ of the Holy Sepulchre, and while in the total darkness, a flame springs up in the very place where the dead body of Jesus is said to have been placed. From that flaming torch, which is raised by the Patriarch, thousands of candles, lamps & tapers are lit, for eventually, the vast crowd that gathers there is transformed into a sea of light, as people turn to light the candles of those next to them. It spreads out in this way from that original source of light held in the hands of the Patriarch.²⁷⁵⁸ Some years ago, they would carry the torch lit at the Holy Sepulcher, stage by stage, on horseback to Athens, Constantinople, Kiev & Moscow.²⁷⁵⁹

In earlier centuries, thousands of pilgrims who had gathered at Jerusalem, would take part in this tradition of lighting oil lamps. On many of these oil lamps, which were shaped like a slipper, again perhaps suggesting travel by foot, there is a common inscription which can be seen: ΦΩΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ ΦΕΝΙ ΠΑΣΙΝ, or "The light of Christ shines for all." The Ceremony of the Holy Fire was to remind the people of the light which shined in the darkness during & after the anastasis-resurrection.²⁷⁶⁰ Thus, during the anastasis, Adam extends his hand into the bright aura of light that surrounds, and comes from Christ. And, as I have already pointed out numerous times already, it is also at this moment in this event, that Christian artists through the centuries have depicted the exchange of different types of hand and wrist grasps, as Adam & the saints of old are raised out of the underworld.²⁷⁶¹

In the ancient Christian Combat of Adam, we read how Adam parts company with Deity, at which time, "...he lit a lamp and prayed that the fire would stay in the lamp until the hour when the bodies were again joined together."²⁷⁶²

In The Forgotten Books of Eden, we read how the spirit of Christ appeared to Adam and Eve and made a covenant with them that he would come to earth to atone for the sins of all humanity. Moreover, how he would eventually raise them out of the darkness of hell, and bring them back into the glorious state which they had lost. The light of Christ also lit them and all those who followed the mysteries which he and his angels would show them. Hence, they were promised that in the course of time, they would be able to return to glory, and would become bright beings, once again. The pre-mortal Christ taught them the mysteries as being the continual struggles toward eventual moral, spiritual & physical perfection, in the afterlife realms,²⁷⁶³ the holy sacred instructions of ultimate deification.²⁷⁶⁴

One aspect of interest here is how that many early to later Christians believed that when Christ came to raise the dead, his glory and brightness from his resurrected body not only lit up the darkness wherever he went. But also, it was transmitted in different degrees of glory, and light²⁷⁶⁵ to those he raised up by different hand and wrist grasps in the resurrection.²⁷⁶⁶ Thus, in this particular work, Adam and Eve were promised that they would become bright beings again when Christ came to raise them in the resurrection.²⁷⁶⁷

In the case with these later ceremonial traditions, and liturgical practices during which thousands of candles are lit, and, how that numerous fires are spread out from an original source. A source of light which symbolically represents how Christ's glorious light shone in the underworld, and how when he rose from there, his light shone forth unto the ends of the earth. Now, if these types, symbolism, and ritualistic practices have retained certain elements of the doctrine of deification. Then, these elements are in connection with Christ's descent, resurrection, and victory march throughout the earth. Consequently, it could be that when the priest or clergy, with the candles, passes through the doors, this is another insignia of how Christ passed through the doors of hades. And then, as he came forth out of those doors, it was also a type of the Anastasis, or resurrection. Furthermore, as he proceeds to light the candles in the hands of the first few people, whom, in turn, light the candles of those behind them, and so on, until many thousands are lit. Then, it could be that such things are not only emblems of how Christ's glorious light of the gospel was passed on throughout the world, but also, how he lit up a darkened world during his intercontinental treks. However, what is more important, it could also represent how he deified thousands of saints in the resurrection, and taught his followers the mysteries and way to eternal life, or deification. In addition, how Christ shared portions of his power, light, and glory with his repentant followers who were then to take the light of the gospel throughout the world too, by letting their light so shine (Mat. 5:14—16).

Therefore, perhaps these types of traditions and symbols were reminders of that hour when those who lay "in the shades of death" saw the redeeming light of Christ as he descended unto them. And of how a darkened world was lit up by the wandering Christ during his post resurrection international sojourns. Edna Barth notes that the early Christians "saw their new god [Jesus] in the same way they had seen the sun—as a glorious light shining over the world."²⁷⁶⁸ Plus, the post-resurrection world trek that begins with how the devil is thrust through with cross-laces, swords, or spears. His fallen corpse is trampled over, as Christ and his newly freed captives come forth out of limbo, hades, hell, the underworld, purgatory, or the pit.²⁷⁶⁹ Retaining early Christian mystery types & symbols of hand grasping and the ritualistic equals in the Christian liturgical dramas associated with the suffering, death, and the Anastasis, or resurrection of Christ, and the saints of old, out of the underworld.²⁷⁷⁰

During certain liturgical sayings, the deacon and other clerics mention how Christ lit up the darkness that covered the world, after he gained the victory over Satan in the underworld, and ascended with the saints of old, up out of the underworld. Thus, many liturgical dramas include these kinds of aspect, for they were ritualistic dramas to remind them of Christ's death, suffering, descent, the defeat of the devil in the underworld, the raising of the dead, and Christ's glorious victory march throughout the world. Hence, it was during certain moments in Christian rituals of this whole drama, that the devil, or the fallen angel of darkness, is commanded to flee from the light: "For [Christ] the salvation of nations has now come, and the salutary light has shone upon men who are to be saved."²⁷⁷¹

CHRIST'S OVER-SEAS SOJOURNS

CHRIST AS A TRAVELER IN A "FAR COUNTRY" David Hatcher Childress notes different cultures' traditions & says this about Christ's trek world wide, in Islamic titles, for Jesus is the Great Traveler.²⁷⁷²

There is another mask in addition to the different masquerades we have unmasked thus far. When removed, it reveals another disguise, the Traveler in a far country. Numerous traditions suggest that this is another garb which Christ will appear as, while cruising the planet. The scriptural root theme for these traditions seems to go back to a passage in Matthew: "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods." (Matthew 25:13-14, 15—30).

1887, Cornelius A Lapide, upon commenting on this passage in Matthew, wrote that: "God went into a far country, because as Origen says, when He had given His law and covenants to the Jews, appearing to them on Mount Sinai, He did not afterwards appear to them as though He had gone elsewhere."²⁷⁷³

While many of the wandering Christ, & the later wandering Christ—child Christmas legends, and stories derive their moral themes from Matthew 25: 31 —46. Some Christians considered Matthew 25:13—14, as suggesting that Christ is the man who is out and about traveling into a far country. He does this to give gifts to his servants in different parts of the world. Thus, some Christians may have interpreted the talents in Matthew 25:13-30 to represent different amounts of truth which he gave to different far countries. Furthermore, as the century went by, we have seen how Christ, as the Gift-giver, the traveling man in a far country, is eventually aged into that kindly old man with a white beard, Santa Claus.

CHRIST'S OVER-SEAS PILGRIMAGE: During the middle ages, centers of pilgrimages rose up throughout Europe. Pilgrims on the trail to St. James' tomb all wore cockleshell symbols on their garments. One saga relates how a knight was thrown into the sea by a frisky horse. He was rescued by St. James, and came out of the water covered in shells. Other epics say that shells covered the body of St. James himself. Consequently, the "cockleshell became the symbol of pilgrims."²⁷⁷⁴

950, the first known pilgrimage to the shrine of St. James at Compostella took place. From a theological point of view, pilgrimages became an increasingly popular way to gaining remission for sins.²⁷⁷⁵ In some cases, the symbol for pilgrims, as we have already noted, is a cockleshell. It is often placed on their traveler's pouches.²⁷⁷⁶ In medieval legends, tales, miracles and mystery plays of wanderers like troubadours, jongleurs, & palmers, "there bloomed a great variety of fanciful Christ legends."²⁷⁷⁷

Leonard W. Cowie shows a representation of James as a medieval pilgrim, walking along with the help of a walking staff and purse. Moreover, he is "proudly displaying the cockle-shell badge, a sign that he has traveled overseas" while on intercontinental overseas pilgrimages.²⁷⁷⁸ In this art work of Christ as a pilgrim, we see the cockleshell on his traveler's pouch. Thus, during Christ's world wide pilgrimage, did he travel overseas? If so, where did he go? What did he do? Whom did he meet?

The early Christian, Methodius, 260—312, used the sea as a type of Christ, when speaking of how the Jews rejected him: "For after the ends of the earth were sanctified, and the mighty house of the Church was filled, by the proclamation of the Thrice Holy, with the glory of the Lord, as the great waters cover the seas..."²⁷⁷⁹

St. Augustine, bishop of Hippo, A.D. 395, wrote in his City of God, that Christ shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.²⁷⁸⁰

In early to later Christian art works, part of Christ's guise as a pilgrim is a purse with a cockle-shell badge on it. This is a symbol that indicates that he had "traveled overseas" on a pilgrimage.²⁷⁸¹ If that is the case, where did Christ travel overseas to? What did he do? Whom did he meet?

CHRIST, AS FISHERMAN: Symbolism, & traditions about Christ's overseas-intercontinental-treks, also includes the guise, Christ as a Fisher of men.

Jeremiah prophesied: "Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the LORD, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks. For my eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.” (Jeremiah 16:16—17).

It may be, that the fish symbol was used by many early Christians, as a type of, and a symbol for the wandering Christ. At any rate, it was used as a secret symbol by early Christians. Hand and wrist grasping symbols continued to develop in later Christians rituals,²⁷⁸² as a carry over from the early Christian mysteries.²⁷⁸³ It’s also in the traditional meetings & greetings between Christians that we see fragments of the mysteries, but also in wandering Christ traditions that hand and wrist grasping of the mysteries were also deposited. Some examples, a wrist grasp is seen in the way a noble, Hesso II of Reinach, a lord of Aargau, greets the poor, sick, and disabled at his door, by grasping the wrist of the first in line.²⁷⁸⁴ The grasps shown in THE MEDIEVAL CHRIST.²⁷⁸⁵ Plus, Fra Angelico, 1387—1455, depictions of Christ’s descent, and Christ the Pilgrim, there are different types of grasps on wrists and hands.²⁷⁸⁶ The hand-grasp between the wandering Christ-child and St. Dorothy.²⁷⁸⁷ Mikhail Nesterov’s painting entitled: The Way to Christ, 1908—11, depicting Christ visiting people in Russia, and in which he grasps the hands of those bowed down before him.²⁷⁸⁸ Hence, inasmuch as fish symbols were also used, in greetings, as secret symbols between numerous early Christians, it too, may have been passed down in the wandering-Christ traditions,’ types, guises, and symbolisms of later centuries.²⁷⁸⁹ The fish symbol developed out of an era when early Christianity passed through days of very harsh persecutions, terrible horrors and martyrdoms.²⁷⁹⁰ Thus, early “Christian symbolism was secretly fostered by the horrors of the persecutions through which the early Church of Christ had to pass. Symbols were invented and used as secret signs by which the Christian brethren could recognize each other.”²⁷⁹¹ Thus, when two people met, and talked, the early Christian would draw a rounded line in the dirt which was the first part of the fish symbol. If the other person was a fellow member, who knew the secret sign, they would finish the fish symbol by drawing another rounded line to make a fish. In such a way, as with other symbolism, & secret ways of identification, early Christians sought each other out, & protected each other. Thus, the ichthos in the Greek, “ΙΧΘΥς” or “ΙΧΘΥC” is the word for fish.²⁷⁹² It was used to form an acrostic which could be read as: “Jesus Christ, Son of God, the Saviour.” In ancient sermons, early Christians were likened unto fish because they lived in the waters of baptism.²⁷⁹³

From a 3rd or 4th century Christian work, The Avenging of The Saviour, we read how Christ “went down to Hades, and freed the patriarchs and the prophets, and the whole human race; thereafter He appeared to His disciples, and ate [fish] with them . . .”²⁷⁹⁴ For, “the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee,” prophesied Isaiah (60:5). John also prophesied about how, “the sea gave up the dead which were in it” (Revelation 20:13). Different types of hand and wrist grips, like in other guises and types, were depicted by artists thus showing people being raised out of water.²⁷⁹⁵ Connected up with baptism, which is connected up with Christ’s descent, are numerous cases of Peter grasping the saving hand of Christ, as Christ raises him out of the sea. “Accursed and damned spirit, hear the command of God Himself, he who walked upon the sea and extended his right hand to Peter as he was sinking.”²⁷⁹⁶

Moreover, ascensions out of water were types of ascensions toward higher realms. It’s often during ascensions that different types of hand and wrist grasping takes place; as different people encounter good angelic beings, Christ, & even the Father.²⁷⁹⁷

Furthermore, with baptism also being a ritualistic type of passing on into death, and afterlife realm traveling,²⁷⁹⁸ it’s no surprise that the artistic types of these, along with the actual rituals, include the glorious moment when the soul comes face to face with Christ. The rituals, were symbolical types of these journeys, during which they would symbolically meet with God, Christ, and angels.²⁷⁹⁹ To prepare to meet Christ, they were to develop Christ like traits, and take part in the mysteries, so that: “when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.” (1 John 2:27—29; 3:2—3). Note in this reference how John mentions the anointing ritual.²⁸⁰⁰ This became an important aspect of early to later Christian mystery dramas.²⁸⁰¹ Part of Christ’s world trek themes about stories about times before the great meeting & hand & wrist grasping greetings, includes how Christ secretly watches & tests his followers to see who is living Christ like traits: Feeding the poor, visiting the sick, giving charity, etc., etc. Thus, the more Christ-like the person, the more they’d be ready to greet Christ. Their hands would feel Christ’s wounded hands, like art works of St. Thomas. For by Christ’s invite, they’d thrust their hands into Christ’s wounds, like also in art works of Christ wandering about as the Man of Sorrows.²⁸⁰² Amongst the many reasons why early to later Christians became monks, was that they were seeking to prepare to meet Christ.²⁸⁰³ In art works of monks climbing the ladder of moral perfection, Christ is waiting at the top, symbolic of heaven, to then pull them up by their hands & wrists.²⁸⁰⁴

Furthermore, another type of Christ is seen in how baptism is likened unto Christ’s death-descent into the watery abyss, and his resurrection. What’s of interest here are ancient Christian baptisms by immersion as ritualistic types of Christ’s descent²⁸⁰⁵ into the lake of fire, hell, limbo, hades, or the abyss.²⁸⁰⁶ For, when Christ calls upon his followers to become fishers of men, with him (Matthew 4:19; Mark 1:17). They are to perform the same types of works as he did. Thus, as a fisher of men, they, like Christ, would descend into the watery abyss²⁸⁰⁷ to bring souls up out of the sea.²⁸⁰⁸

In Athanasius’ Four Discourses Against the Arians, A.D. 356—360, he notes how the story of Jonah and the whale was a type of Christ’s descent into hades. He also wrote: “For their perfecting shews that Thy Word has sojourned among them; and the world seeing them altogether that Thou hast sent Me, and I have sojourned here.”²⁸⁰⁹

“Prosper of Aquitaine speaks of Christ as “giving Himself as food to the disciples by the seashore, and offering Himself to the whole world as Ichthys.... The fisherman represented the apostolic “fishers of men,” for not only was Christ a fish, but His disciples as well.”²⁸¹⁰

The early Christian writer, Cyprian, 200—258, after listing some of the many types of Christ, he later cites from a scripture in Ecclesiasticus, “I penetrated into the depth of the abyss, [Christ’s descends into hell, which: “He [Christ] should rise again from”²⁸¹¹] and I walked on the waves of the sea, and I stood in all the earth; and in every people and in every nation...”²⁸¹²

In ancient times, pearls were raised out of the sea by divers; thus when Christ is likened unto a Pearl, it could be a type of how he came forth out of the waters of baptism. Which ritual is a type of how he was raised out of the abyss.²⁸¹³ In another case, the early Christian writer, Gregory Thaumaturgus, A.D. 205 — 240 — 265, likens Christ unto a pearl which came forth out of the womb, (which is filled with water), of the holy virgin. Thus, Christ, “the enlightening Pearl comes forth for the salvation of all the world...”²⁸¹⁴

Origen, A.D. 185-230-254, in his Origen De Principiis, wrote: “In the sea also the dragon is said to reign. For the prophet [Ezekiel 32:2] intimates that the serpent and dragon, which certainly is referred to one of the wicked spirits, is also in the sea.”²⁸¹⁵ St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, A.D. 395, in his City of God, he mentions Christ’s descent into hell, and that the sea was a type of hell.²⁸¹⁶

Down through the centuries of historic Christianity, the jaws of hell, hades, limbo, the abyss, etc., out of which Christ draws souls; in some cases, these jaws look like the jaws of a large fish.²⁸¹⁷

Peter used Noah, the flood & the ark that saved those from the flood, as a type of Christ’s descent & baptism: “The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us... by the resurrection of Jesus Christ...” (1 Peter 3:18—22; 4:6). From these passages, and historical traditions in later centuries,²⁸¹⁸ water, lakes, rivers, and the sea were believed to be types of where captive spirits were held. Many believed that these watery places held water spirits.²⁸¹⁹ Later legendized pre-existence themes of the post-war in heaven, post-fall devious activities of the fallen angels, have them falling down from heaven into the deep places of the earth, the forests, streams, rivers, lakes & water ways.²⁸²⁰ Thus, in later legendized forms throughout different areas of Christendom, one of the areas the militant wandering over seas Mariner-Christ goes is through these invested areas. But, by later centuries the fallen angels were associated with or were some of the fairies, underwater demons, dwarfs, trolls, nymphs, insect like winged water creatures.²⁸²¹

CHRIST WENT TO THE DIFFERENT ISLANDS OF THE SEA

Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, in a discourse asks, didn’t Daniel say that: “...His sovereignty (or dominion) is from generation to generation, and His power is from sea to sea, and from the river to the end of the world?”²⁸²²

The prophet Isaiah wrote that the Lord would remember not only those who were in the spirit prison, but also those who had been scattered to the islands of the sea, for He reigns in glory, and His majesty extends to these areas of the world too.

"Wherefore glorify ye the LORD in the fires, even the name of the LORD GOD of Israel in the isles of the sea. From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous." Isaiah then warned that the wicked would descend into the pit, or spirit prison, but that after a while even they would be visited by the Lord. (Isaiah 24:15-23, 11:11, 42:5-12).

"Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof." (Isaiah 42:10).

"Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands." (Isaiah 42:12).

In The Clementine Homilies, early Christian writings from the first four centuries, we read how that Christ’s reign is “...extending mercy even to the Gentiles...” Further on we read how Christ, before his birth, had appeared and reappeared in different ages. Accordingly, Christ, “...from the beginning of the world, and so reappearing again and again in the world, until coming upon his own times, and being anointed with mercy for the works of God, he shall enjoy rest for ever. His honour it is to bear rule and lordship over all things, in air, earth, and waters.”²⁸²³

David Hatcher Childress, as he traveled throughout the world, notes the many different legends and traditions about how different ones believed that Christ visited the different islands of the sea. He says that the early, and later Nestorian Christians believed that Jesus “visits all over the world” and how that this belief is recorded in their religion. Furthermore, that “Jesus has visited New Zealand and nearly every place in the world.”²⁸²⁴ In another book, he says that when Christ traveled about the world during his post crucifixion trek, he, according to legends, crossed the Pacific to the Americas, New Zealand, Tahiti,²⁸²⁵ and the Polynesian Islands.²⁸²⁶

December 1979, Lee Roddy & Charles E. Sellier Jr., In Search of Historic Jesus, asked: “What about the strange legends of ancient peoples as far off as Alaska and the Pacific Islands, that a white, bearded God would return to them, even as Jesus of Nazareth promised to return? The first white explorers on the American continent had been startled to find that some highly advanced Indian civilizations practiced religious rites resembling those of the arriving Christians. What was the origin of such rites? ... What about legends that claim Jesus went to Britain, Greece, Egypt, India, Kashmir, Persia, and various other countries? After all, the Gospels are silent about Jesus’ exact whereabouts from the age of twelve to about thirty. Where was Jesus during those eighteen years?”²⁸²⁷

CHRIST VISITS BRITAIN: Vaughn E. Hansen has shown evidence that suggests that some of the “Isles of the Sea” to which some of the descendants of Israel could have been scattered to were the British Isles.²⁸²⁸

Eusebius, A.D. 320, in Book 3, says: “The apostles passed beyond the ocean to the isles called the British Isles.”²⁸²⁹

Early Christians such as Tertullian at Carthage, and Origen at Alexandria-Caesarea have suggested that the knowledge of Christ had been preached in Britain. A Latin text of Tertullian’s writings against the Jews says: “et Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo vero subdita” (Places of the British not visited by the Romans are subjected to the true Christ).²⁸³⁰

Another translation of Tertullian’s writings includes “the haunts of the Britons” in this list of the different nations’ gates which had been opened by Christ, when he had extended his reign everywhere throughout the world.²⁸³¹ Origen: “Quando enim terra Britanniae ante adventum Christi in unius Dei consensit religionem?... Nunc vero propter Ecclesias, quae mundi limites tenent, universa terra cum laetitia clamat ad Dominum Israel” (When did the land of Britain, before the advent of Christ, agree to the worship of the one god?... Now, truly, because of the churches which occupy the boundaries of the world, the entire earth shouts with joy to the Lord of Israel).²⁸³²

Some of these legends speak of a time during Christ’s youth when he is said to have traveled up into different areas of Britain. These traditions say that he went with Joseph of Arimathea, who may have been his great-uncle. Joseph traded tin up in Glastonbury and other nearby towns, so these legends go. And so it was, that during some of these trips to Glastonbury & other nearby towns, that Joseph had taken Christ with him.

Chrysostom, 402 A.D., says: “The British Isles which are beyond the sea, and which lie in the ocean, have received the virtue of the Word. Churches are there founded and altars erected.”²⁸³³

Hansen wondered about the possibility that their legends about the visitation of a “god” in the British Islands around the time of Christ, could have been “in truth the promised visit of the resurrected Messiah to the Ten Tribes?”²⁸³⁴ Thus, storytellers claimed that England was visited by one of the Twelve Apostles. This was their first choice, which is said to have failed, thus, “storytellers had to settle for a second-hand connection. To compensate for this status, a later story arose that Jesus had visited England as a boy, escorted by a merchant uncle who was none other than Joseph of Arimathea.”²⁸³⁵

“Spun in world enough and time, a folk hero’s biography does develop incredible centrifugal force. British church lore is a whirling cluster of fantastic accounts known in the Middle Ages to clerics whose minds dwelt upon the childhood of Jesus. Tales of how He was scorned by the sons and daughters of rich lords, how He was berated for having been born next to an ox in a stable, and how He was ragged in dress were particularly popular."²⁸³⁶

Keep in mind that many of the other legends we have considered speak of Christ as a wandering beggar who is dressed in rags to appear to be "one of the least of these." And in so dressing in this way, he is out to test people, as he wanders about the world.

Hansen notes that in some legends, Jesus goes to Britain as a boy with Joseph of Arimathea. Some traditions also say they traveled through such places as Cornwall, Somerset and Gloucestershire in southwest England too.²⁸³⁷

Hansen says that C. C. Dobson mentions 20 locations in southwest England where traditions of the Lord's visit are still found. William Blake's poem "Jerusalem" is said to have been sung at schools in England, in it, is a reference to these traditions. Hansen then wrote: "Among the questions raised by the legends and traditions of Christ's visit to Britain is the question of whether he may have also visited it as the resurrected Lord."²⁸³⁸

Legends in Cornwall said that Christ not only visited as a boy, but also that he returned and lived at Glastonbury prior to his ministry. "Even today there are homes in and around Glastonbury where an extra place is laid at the table in the belief that one day the Savior will return."²⁸³⁹

This might remind us of the different traditions in some places in Europe, where they would leave a place open at their dinner table, just in case the wandering Christ should happen to visit during their Christmas dinner.²⁸⁴⁰

In the story told in 1483, as translated from the Golden Legends, by William Caxton about St. Augustine of Canterbury who lived, about 600 A.D., and who should not be confused with St. Augustine of Hippo. He was a monk, sent to England as a missionary. After great success, and according to legend, one time, as St. Augustine was praying, the Lord appeared to him. Eventually a church was said to have been built in the same place that the Lord appeared.²⁸⁴¹ This may have been the Augustine, not to say that it couldn't have been the Augustine of Hippo too, that Christ came to, while in the guise of a pilgrim. Thus, one artist shows Augustine washing Christ, the pilgrim's feet.²⁸⁴²

In one of his post resurrection visitations with Joseph of Arimathea, Joseph says how Christ took him by the hand and led him to the tomb which had been opened by the angels. Could he have also taken him by the hand, as in the traditional greetings we have considered throughout this book? What about in the case within their mysteries, which are often accompanied with such visitations with the raised Lord? And then he took him by the hand to his house in Arimathea.²⁸⁴³ In the early Christian work, The Avenging Of The Saviour, 3rd or 4th c., Joseph of Arimathea, says that "Jesus, holding my hand in His right hand, led me to the place where I buried Him."²⁸⁴⁴

As mentioned earlier, in Holy Grail lore, Christ appeared to Joseph of Arimathea, while at Glastonbury.²⁸⁴⁵ Another tradition says that Christ came to Glastonbury to consecrate a monastery that was founded by St. Patrick.²⁸⁴⁶

The early Rock and Roll singer, Van Morrison seems to have heard about these legends about Christ walking throughout England, for he hints to them in his song Summertime in England, in his Common One. In this song he asks: "Did you ever hear about Jesus walkin', down by Avalon?"²⁸⁴⁷ Morrison seems to have based this line from an ancient legend that Jesus once visited the land of England. For according to the poem writer

William Blake, who Morrison mentions in his song, Blake's text, from Milton says: And did those feet in ancient time – Walk upon England's mountain green? And was the Holy Lamb of God – On England's pleasant pastures seen? And did the Countenance Divine – Shine forth upon our clouded hills?²⁸⁴⁸

CHRIST'S TREK THROUGH IRELAND? In Christianized Celtic folk-lore, blending elements of pagan mysteries with later Christian mysteries and esoteric traditions, we seem to find fragments of the imagery of wandering Gods, who travel in and out of different realms, and all over the earth. For in the legend of Bride, Bride nourishes the infant Christ, for to her, He is the "King of the Elements," to which she sings, among other things, how he is "the Lord of the World."²⁸⁴⁹

The setting for The Story Of Bride, by Vera Walker, is in Ireland. Bride saw off in the distance, some travelers walking down the path that led to the inn. They had a small child with them. They begged for water and to be allowed to rest for a time. Bride made sure that they felt welcomed, were fed, and were comfortable. One time, when she was bringing them some fresh milk, she was surprised to see that both the mother and child "shone with a great light and glory." And thus, Bride knew who they were.²⁸⁵⁰

Christ's Global Treks in Different Guises

As noted elsewhere, during the Great Apostasy, there are many controversies over doctrines & beliefs that clashed against each other, or like waves, blend & affect each other. One in many controversies was the Christological controversy of the 2nd century onwards. Many early Christians defended their beliefs that Christ's world-wide-trek was done in his resurrected body. While others argued that Christ didn't have a body, but only appeared to have one, thus, this is called Docetism.²⁸⁵¹ As to how much these types of controversies influenced the legendization process of turning doctrine into fables, where they also blended in with other fable making in process, is worth exploring further. So this raises the questions: How much of these anti-body dogma waves clashed & crashed into Christ's re-embodied (resurrected), world-wide-trek themes? "...Clement of Alexandria and Origen, for example, acknowledged that Jesus' body could readily change appearance at will—a decidedly docetic notion [that Christ didn't have a real body, but only appeared to be human, was a phantom type, not in a real human shape, thus] with Clement claiming that Jesus ingested food not for nourishment but simply to convince his followers that he actually had a body."²⁸⁵² It could be that some Gnostics also had their own versions of Christ's world wide trek themes, in how that Christ changes forms, or appears to different people in different areas of the world in different guises. In numerous stories, Christ appears in different guises to test different ones. At will, he shape-shifts or changes his form back into his identifiable resurrected self, to show that he is really the wandering Christ, & not the test-form he had appeared as. (Acts of John, known to Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. III, 25, 6). Jesus appears as a child to the Apostle James, as a young man to John. John is said to have noted that in this form, Jesus didn't blink, leave footprints, or yield to the touch, (Acts of John 88-93). This concept is not only amongst the Gnostic, or those classed as 'heretical,' but is also in anti-docetic versions, (Epistula Apostolorum, chap. 17). The differences, however, is that in docetism, Christ's body was a phantom type, not real, but only appearing to be real. While in the scriptures, & later anti-docetic versions, Christ's body is real, from his birth, on through to his physical suffering, death, resurrection & world wide trek. There is also the transfiguration story, Mark 9:2-8. Then Christ suddenly appearing in a locked room to show he had a body, (John 20:19). He sometimes appears, but people don't recognize him at first, thus such examples might be the inspiration for many later traditions about

Christ's different test-forms & test-guises that he appears in to test different ones' levels of charity, or non-charitable attitudes & actions, or non-actions. Consequently, as the Christological controversy influenced some areas of Christendom, if not many, the product of the blends & influences could have been these many later guises that traditions & art works have the wander Christ appearing as: A man of sorrows, leper, pilgrim, one of the least of these his brethren, the sick, stranger, wandering child, old woman, Gardner, Shepherd, plus other guises of lore, legends, & Christmas traditions in later centuries.²⁸⁵³

CHRIST IN THE GUISE OF A BEGGAR: Saint Martin is often seen in art works being tested by Christ who appears as a beggar. For example, Christ, in the guise of a beggar, asks Martin for help. He answers these pleas by giving him his coat. These works date back through the centuries, from the beginning of the 11th—15th century.²⁸⁵⁴

In WHERE LOVE IS, THERE GOD IS ALSO, a shoe maker named Martin Avdyeeich is visited three times by strangers. These strangers, later show themselves to him again in order to make the point that Christ had appeared to him in different guises, such as beggars, and other people in need of his help. Thus, he had been tested in the ways mentioned would happen in Matthew 25.²⁸⁵⁵

In a story about the wicked people in a town in Holland, Been, the people were celebrating with much debauchery one Christmas Eve. "Christ, in the form of a beggar, wandered through the streets, but no one would give him food or shelter."²⁸⁵⁶ And so, he caused great waves to cover the entire town. During each Christmas Eve after this time, one might be able to hear the sound of church bells coming from under the water in the area where the village once stood on dry land, now underwater.

HOLY GRAIL LORE, CHRIST IN THE GUISE OF A LEPER

Mid twelfth century, in an Antiphony, Christ, with both hands raised up, is holding a bowl in his left hand, while appearing to his disciples. One of the disciples is grasping the bowl, which could be the holy grail. Another, on Christ's right side, perhaps Thomas, is making what could be a sacramental gesture, his left arm is up, while his right is extended towards Christ's raised right hand, as though he is about to feel the wound in the palm of that hand. Down below this section, Christ, holding the cross banner, has appeared to his disciples during his post resurrection victory march throughout the world.²⁸⁵⁷

"The startling idea of portraying Christ as a "Leper" was also very ancient, going back at least to the first quarter of the second century, when Aquila translated Isa. 53:4 ("we did esteem him as stricken") as "we did esteem him as haphemenon ('leprous')." The same traditions is also recorded in the Talmud and Midrash, which describe the expected Messiah as a "Leper".²⁸⁵⁸

1875, Gustave Flaubert incorporates a medieval account into his Masonically-inspired tale, The Legend of St. Julian the Hospitaler. In it, "Jesus appears as a dying and loathsome leper, who is befriended by Julian the Ferryman." He claims it's from a stained-glass window in the Cathedral at Rouen, showing St. Julian ferrying the Leper across a river and thus being rewarded with eternal life. In the story, the Leper clasps him in his arms and transformed into a bright and glorious Christ to talk with him face to face. The embrace is derived from a 13th century French prose-account, which says that the "leprous Christ" offered to embrace Julian's wife. The compassion couple is blessed by the wandering leprous Christ for their kindness towards him. After he blesses them, he miraculously disappears.²⁸⁵⁹

1848, James Russell Lowell, 1816—91, The Vision of Sir Launfal, is about a brave young knight named Sir Launfal, who goes on a quest in search of the Holy Grail, or the cup from which Christ supposedly drank from, during the last supper. Launfal is young, handsome, strong, and is clothed in bright and shining armor, and is mounted on a gallant white charger, when he left. While crossing the drawbridge to go out into the world, he sees a beggar-leper extending his hand to him for alms. The young knight reached into his pouch, took out a gold coin and threw it to him as he rode on by. After he spent his life on this quest, in which he didn't find the grail, he came back over the same old drawbridge, however, this time he was a lot older and wiser. Once again, a leper puts out his hand begging for alms. This time he stops, gets down off his horse, & reaches into his knapsack to give the only thing he had left, a crust of bread. Taking out a wooden cup, he dips it into the stream to give the beggar—leper, a cool-drink of water too. To his surprise the wooden cup suddenly turns into the Holy Grail, "and the beggar turned into a Christ and said"²⁸⁶⁰ "Not what we give, but what we share. For the gift without the giver is bare; Who gives himself with alms feeds three, Himself, his hungering neighbor, & me."²⁸⁶¹

Later Christmas lore & customs: The custom of giving charity and gifts to the poor during Christmas seasons originated with the following belief. The Christ-child sometimes came to the door in the guise of a poor beggar. Elise Traut presents an old legend that illustrates this belief. It tells how the Christ-Child would annually make his intercontinental hikes during Christmas Eves. He "wanders all over the world," heading toward castles, and then from there to hovels. His tours takes him up hills and down valleys, in search of the good and deserving. He uses a number of different guises during this trek too, such as that of a poor beggar in need. Wherefore, "He pleads for succour at the various homes he enters, usually appearing as a beggar or humble wanderer."²⁸⁶² It was because of this legend, & lore like this, that beggars were rarely turned away at the door on Christmas Eve. Consequently, the aid one might render to beggars was, and still is looked upon as hospitality shown to Christ.

OTHER GUISES THAT CHRIST ROAMS THE WORLD IN

The saint of travelers,²⁸⁶³ Offero, was later called St. Christopher, meaning, the bearer of Christ. According to traditions, he carried the wandering Christ-child²⁸⁶⁴ across a river.²⁸⁶⁵ Some art works, that shows the Christ-child on the back of saint Christopher, date between A.D. 1470—1498.²⁸⁶⁶

In some cases, saint Christopher bears the Christ-child, who holds an orb,²⁸⁶⁷ or ball in his hand.²⁸⁶⁸ The orb is symbolic of royalty, and is, "A jeweled globe surmounted by a cross that is part of the regalia of a sovereign and that symbolizes monarchical power and justice."²⁸⁶⁹ In other cases, the orb is so large that the Christ-child holds it with both hands. In others, it is small enough to fit in just one of his hands.²⁸⁷⁰ The important symbolism to keep in mind about the orb,²⁸⁷¹ is this, in many cases, it represents the power to rule and reign. However, in the hands of the voyaging infant Jesus, it is a symbol of how he rules and governs the whole world, even during his overseas and intercontinental tours.

St. Dorothy was given roses by the traveling infant Jesus.²⁸⁷² In one depiction, she has a basket in her hand which is filled with roses, that "a naked male child—Jesus— has brought her as assurance that the heavenly Paradise awaits her."²⁸⁷³ Other sources say that the Christ-child came to her "in the guise of a small boy." Moreover, paintings of Dorothea often show her with roses in her hands, or in a basket. In others, she is “offering a basket of fruit and flowers to the Virgin or the Infant Christ.”²⁸⁷⁴

The Holy Rupert saw the infant Christ appearing in indescribable glory because, earlier, Rupert had given a garment to a poor child.²⁸⁷⁵

St. Martin, according to numerous art works, is tested by Christ in the guise of a beggar. Hence, in some works, he is seen giving a coat to Christ.²⁸⁷⁶

St. Olive, in a written account, is visited in prison by an angel, while in a work of art, it is Christ who comes to her.²⁸⁷⁷

St. Augustine washes the feet of Christ who appears in the guise of a pilgrim.²⁸⁷⁸

St. Pantaleon is visited by Christ in the guise of a Christian hermit.²⁸⁷⁹ Hermolaus, who is his mentor, is honor at Dolianova because the apparition of the wandering Christ-child appeared.

When the Doctrine of Christ's World Wide Treks Turned to Fables, Legends & Traditions About Christmas Treks of Santa Claus

Christmas lore is filled with later versions of Christ's world wide treks, after the doctrine & polemics answered by early Christians, in response to ancient critics, about Christ not being neglectful of other areas of the world. About how Christ's rule did extend out throughout after life realms, & earthly realms. Eventually, when these, & other aspects mentioned, had faded off into fables. They became part of later Christmas lore, thus, in much later many German homes, when the family has gathered around their Christmas tree, the Christkindl would arrive. Sometimes a youth plays the role, but often a young girl with long blond hair acts out the part. Dressed in a white robe, a golden crown, and golden wings, she often carries a small Christmas tree in one hand. Christmas gifts for children are often tied up in bundles and supposedly delivered by "der Haus-Christ."²⁸⁸⁰

Thus, many German people believe that a messenger, a young female angel named, Christkindl, brings presents from Baby Jesus on Christmas Eve. The name "Christkindl" became another name for Santa Claus in North America, while many other people called Santa, Kris Kringle.²⁸⁸¹

Numerous stories tell of different families, and persons around the world who were visited by the rambling Christ-child. Knowing that he was out and about, some nations have popularized lighting the way for the drifting Christ-child. Hence, they placed a lit candle in the window as a sign to the adolescent Jesus, and other homeless adventurers, that they would be welcomed there. For example, the Irish placed a lighted candle in their windows thinking that they would provide a glimmer of light to guide the roaming Christ-child to their homes. Furthermore, it was during the Christmas seasons' cold dark nights that he would be out alone in the darkness, and required to be lighted on his journey throughout the world.

An Irish legend says why these candles were placed in windows. Every Christmas, "the Christ Child visits homes. Sometimes He sends a stranger instead. Nobody knows how the stranger will look. It may be a hungry child, a beggar, an old woman. The lighted candle says: Here you are welcomed!"²⁸⁸²

Another source says that this practice is a continuation of an Irish custom which is bound up with these types of traditions. Consequently, the Christ-child was out alone during these chilly and shadowy nights, and needs to be "lighted on His way."²⁸⁸³

In New Mexico, people in the community would place lit candles in paper bags filled with sand. After which they put them along the streets and on roof tops in order to "light the way for the Christ Child."²⁸⁸⁴

Today, the people of Syria place candles in the windows on the anniversary of his birth to light the Christ child's path. Also, many of them say the camel of Jesus brings the children gifts.²⁸⁸⁵

Among the people in France, the fire is left alight, candles are left burning, and, food and drinks are put on the table "just in case Mary should pass that way with the Christ Child."²⁸⁸⁶

The fact that candles, and electric lights are used in later traditions comes as no surprise when we consider this. That Christ is believed by many to be the light of the world.

Moreover, while in later legend the Christ-child is wandering about in the darkness, seeking to be guided to homes with glimmering lit candles in their windows. In earlier Christianity, Christ is the light in the darkness for them that dwell in the land of the shadow of death.²⁸⁸⁷ For in the darkness of the underworld, Christ's light bursts forth to light the way for the captive spirits to come forth out of the prison house. His glorious bright presence causes the demonic forces to scatter back into the deepest abyss, so as to attempt to hide themselves from his power and glory.²⁸⁸⁸ Furthermore, it is also after the harrowing of hell that the glorious light of Christ was seen throughout the world. For not too long after his resurrection, Christ appeared among the nations in his radiant resurrected body.

One tradition, that speaks of a salutation during winter solstices, says: "I give you Christ—the light of the world."²⁸⁸⁹ In an earlier age, Gregory Thaumaturgus, A.D. 205-240-265, wrote, in reference to the star, that: "A light from heaven shone round about Him who lighteneth the whole creation."²⁸⁹⁰

Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 296—373, likened Christ unto the sun, for just as the sun rises after night time. So also did Christ, upon trampling over death, ascend out of hades to thereafter illuminate the whole world. Thus, "the whole region of earth is illumined by him."²⁸⁹¹

On December 13 in Sweden, St. Lucia's day there is not only the custom of bringing in light, or lighting the way for the migrant Christ-child with lit candles. But there is also another tradition that could be a reminder of earlier Christian hand clasping welcomes associated with welcoming the wandering Christ. And which reminds me of the earlier traditions and art works of the hand and wrist grasps depicted in the harrowing of hell, when Christ, the Light of the World, illumine the underworld.²⁸⁹² Thus, in Sweden, families join hands and weaves in and out of every room in the house singing the Christmas welcome.²⁸⁹³

Santa Claus Masks Wandering Christ Lore: In some areas of Christendom, the traditions concerning St. Nicholas, as a gift giver, continued to thrive in later folklore. Nevertheless, in Protestant Germany, this Catholic saint faded somewhat after the Reformation, whereas the traveling Christ-child traditions flourished as they gained more acceptance. His annual times of visitation became Christmas Eve. As the traditions grew, other strange characters entered into the story such as Pelznichel. This character knew, with the help of the Christ-child, all about their good and bad points. Thus, Pelznichel became a kind of holy terror to the children.

As noted earlier, in Germany the Christ-child, or Christkind traditions didn't preserve their original charm and simplicity. For numerous versions were popularized as different aspects of traditions were blended together. Thus, stories and traditions ranged any where between a combination of angel, infant and fairy, and again a tall girl clad in white, with flowing flaxen hair.²⁸⁹⁴

A.D. 1504, in Feeding the Hungry, Christ is in line to receive bread. This is part of the first panel which is part of a series entitled Seven Acts of Mercy. The Master of Alkmaar made it seem as though Christ is not recognized by the others around him. Accordingly, the artist is in harmony with the traditions of his time, for as in later ones, they depict how Christ travels the world over while searching for different people he wants to test. And to observe them in acts of kindness, according to his teachings, or to witness their evil deeds, which are against his teachings. During these tests, he appears in the guise of a poor person, or hungry traveler. Thus, in the first panel, a team, consisting of a husband with his wife, both distribute bread to the poor, the blind, and the crippled who have come to their home. In each of these panels, "Christ appears in the crowd to illustrate the lines of the text" of The New Testament passage in Matthew chapter 25: "Truly, I say to you, as you did it [an act of mercy] to one of the least of these my brethren, you did it to me" (Matthew 25:40). In these different panels, "Christ looks out at the viewer as if addressing him directly as the program of good works begins."²⁸⁹⁵

The other panels continue on with this theme. Another shows drinks of water being distributed to the thirsty: "I was thirsty and you gave me drink." In the third panel, clothing is being handed out to the poor. The fourth, a burial of the poor, the fifth, a husband and wife invite pilgrims into their home. Thus, Christ, in the guise of a pilgrim, is seen in the background with the other pilgrims. "I was a stranger and you welcomed me." In another, more travelers and pilgrims are being greeted. A hospital scene illustrates another thought in this scripture: "I was sick and you visited me." The last panel illustrates the seventh act of mercy, "I was in prison and you came to me."²⁸⁹⁶

1514—1525, Ospedale del Ceppo, Giovanni della Robbia depicts the seven works of mercy: 1. Clothing the naked. 2. Welcoming strangers. 3. Nursing the sick. 4. Visiting prisoners. 5. Burying the dead. 6. Feeding the hungry. 7. Comforting mourners. These art works can be seen on the outside wall along the Ospedale del Ceppo which was built earlier in A.D. 1277.²⁸⁹⁷

About mid-16th century, to later, in Germany "...parents told children that St. Nicholas came on December 6, and that the Christ Child himself brought more gifts on December 25. "Christkind," was the German name for him. As years passed, that name began to be pronounced "Kris Kringle," by German settlers in other parts of the world, especially in America. German children today still expect their Christmas presents to come from the Christkind, who is usually accompanied by little gnomish helpers."²⁸⁹⁸

In the early seventeenth century, a Protestant pastor complains about how some parents were sneaking presents into their children's beds, telling them that St. Nicholas had brought them. "This," he says, "is a bad custom, because it points children to the saint, while yet we know that not St. Nicholas but the holy Christ Child gives us all good things . . . "²⁸⁹⁹

In Alsace it is usually a girl, with a crown of gilt paper. She is attended by Han Trapp, in a bearskin, with a long beard. As Han Trapp threatens the naughty children, they are saved by the intercession of das Christ-kind who makes them recite a hymn or verse of scripture. If they recite it well, Christ-kind rewards them with gingerbread. If poorly, he clobbers them with a bag filled with ashes. In Brittany, they ascribe gifts directly to Le Bon Jesus—the Good Jesus. One writer suggests that this tradition is a lot better than the fictitious Babuska, Kris Kringle, Knecht Rupert, & Santa Claus, for this reason. It's "truer; for is not the Holy Child the real giver of whatever is given in honour of His blessed Nativity?"²⁹⁰⁰

1645, Christmas was practically outlawed in England, for a while, like in Plymouth, in the North American colonies, the Puritans didn't approve of celebrating Christmas with feasts and gifts, so they ordered everyone in England to treat Christmas like an ordinary day, warning that if anyone tried to celebrate it, they'd be punished. As a consequence, people all over England, unhappy with the new law, started to riot in some cities, such as in Canterbury, one of the worst ravaged by riots, with people getting hurt. About 10,000 protesters signed a proclamation to have Christmas back. By 1660, when England had a king again, Charles II, soon afterwards, Christmas was restored. But, the damage had been done by the Puritans, for a lot of English families, afraid of the Puritans' ideologies that brought in the anti-Christmas law, didn't openly join in singing carols in the streets, as before, but resorted to private Christmas dinners, & many business owners continued to require their employees to work on Christmas day, like it was any other day.²⁹⁰¹

In 1652 a fleet of ships arrived with settlers from Holland. They brought with them traditions about Sinter Klaas, and named their settlement Nieuw Amsterdam, forty years later called New York, when the British took it over. In time, among the Dutch, in the century that followed, Sinter Klaas gradually became anglicized into the later Santa Claus.²⁹⁰²

During about the mid 17th century in Holland, "Sint Niklaas became the vernacular Sinter Klaas" appearing in mediaeval garb of a bishop, becoming a figure of fun, a folk hero with hardly no religious connotations.²⁹⁰³ In Northern Germany, the Lutherans didn't depict St. Nicholas in his episcopal robes, but rather, he was dressed in furs with a cap on his head, and lost his religious title too. In some places he was known as Pelze Nicol, or furry Nick, in others, the Weihnachtsmann, or the Christmas Man. In Protestant areas, Christkindl was depicted as a child figure, often played by a girl in a white robe with a veil and a star on her head, said to be derived from Roman Festivals.²⁹⁰⁴

By the late 17th century, as with other early Christian doctrines that eventually were turned to fables, during the great apostasy, so also were Christ's world wide treks themes, in that fables continued to be mixed in with other versions of similar, but different gift giver themes. One explanation for the developments of give giver names, blended in with lore, is this: During the late 17th century, into the early 18th century, laws also caused issues too, & differences in languages, cultures' fables & traditions, & when different nationalities started to live amongst each other, their language differences also created different sounding names for the gift givers themes. The Puritans had banned Christmas, for a while, but the custom still was in practice, even if in secret, & the law was protested against in England. The British, when they ruled over Dutch colonies, in North America, made English the official language that had to be learned. The Dutch, in attempting to learn English, had a hard time with different words, & when Christmas stories were being told to each other in the different cultures, the Dutch couldn't quite say "St. Nicholas," clearly. Thus, the English thought they'd heard from the Dutch, what sounded like "Sintnicklus," & thought how the gift giver's name was something like "Sinta Klass. Eventually they began to give it their own English version of spellings, as the traditions also morphed further into the spelling & Americanization of the gift giver as "Santa Claus," & with these mispronunciations, about Sinta Klass, the children, such as those around New York, expected Santa Claus to bring their presents.²⁹⁰⁵

One reason why St. Nicholas eventually took over the Christ-child's position as gift deliverer is that he often accompanied Christ, while he made his Christmas rounds. In certain country places in Europe, he still does, "where the modern spirit has been least felt.”²⁹⁰⁶ Note here again how that in these earlier centuries, it is not Santa Claus, nor St. Nicholas, who travels about the earth. But rather, it is the touring Christ-child who makes these annual intercontinental excursions during brisk & frosty Christmas Eves. Nevertheless, in some cases, such as in these later traditions, the Christ-child goes with St. Nicholas throughout the world, as well as with 3 others.²⁹⁰⁷

By now you should have already figured out that the name Christkindl is German for Christ-child. But where did these later legends about Kriss Kringle’s, & Santa Claus’ world travels come from? By now you may have also figured out that most of them go back to earlier legends & stories about the itinerant Christkindl or Christ-child. During Christmas Eve, and in many homes, “this is the time for the visit from a Christkind (pronounced Kristkindt).”²⁹⁰⁸

According to lore in Switzerland, Christmas was the time “when the Christkindl—the Christ child—walks on earth.”²⁹⁰⁹ Consequently, in these later fables, we see the commercialization of the earlier folklore, such as the market Christkindlsmarkt. Held in Germany, it was named after the journeying minor Jesus. However, it seems that Kriss Kringle gets in on all this too during the “Kriss Kringle’s Fair, in Nuremberg.”²⁹¹⁰ William S. Walsh notes how these earlier legends and traditions about the Christ-child began to fade out. And how they gradually became the later stories about “the white-haired, white-bearded, merry-hearted and kindly old pagan, whom we sometimes call Christ-Kinkle but more frequently Santa Klaus.”²⁹¹¹ In some areas, the metamorphosis which transformed Saint Nicholas, Bishop of Myra, into Santa Klaus, this took place over a long period of time. Consequently, it was very “many, many, years before Saint Nicholas had ousted the Christ-child from the first place in the Christmas festivities.”²⁹¹²

“In Germany,... others anticipate the coming of the Christkindl (Little Christ Child), an angelic servant sent by the holy infant. (When German immigrants settled in Pennsylvania, they gave Christkindl an American name, Kris Kringle, Kris traveled astride a mule and left gifts in baskets.)... German immigrants of the 18th century brought to the Mid-Atlantic region their... Christkindl [traditions].... By the early 1800s, holiday customs were beginning to merge across ethnic boundaries, and eventually, the stories were combined to create one new one. This story would become the tale of Santa Claus, a national Christmas figure whose importance in the minds of American children eclipsed that of any old-world folk hero.”²⁹¹³

Earlier, in the 1840s, a few publications appeared and began to circulate among the Americans concerning this Kriss Kringle. Consequently, upon hearing the Germans speaking of this Christkindl, it sounded to the Americans like Kriss Kringle. Hence, it was during the 1840s—1850s that this name was in the process of becoming popularized in the media of that time.²⁹¹⁴ But, who is Christkindl, and what does this name mean among the German people?²⁹¹⁵

During the 1850s, German immigrants brought these folk tales about Christkindl, when they came to New York.

From 1863—1886, Thomas Nast, a Bavarian-born artist, with German heritage & background, sketched a new picture of Santa Claus each year for Harper’s Weekly.²⁹¹⁶ Because of that German background, he occasionally drew Christkindl, whom he called Christkindchen.

By the 1870s, Kriss Kringle was known by another name, Santa Claus.²⁹¹⁷ But why was Kriss Kringle, an earlier version of Santa Claus? And how is Christkindl wrapped up with all this lore about Kriss Kringle and Santa Claus? Christmas day, in later centuries, would eventually become the official day to celebrate the Mass of Christ, or Christmas.²⁹¹⁸

In early Christian art motifs of the toddler Christ, in some cases, he holds a globe of the world in his arms. In other cases, he is the King of Kings, holding an orb or ball in his hand. On some of these spheres are maps of the world. He is, in other compositions, an adult male seated on a globe. These spheres and orbs symbolize how the Christ-child (or the adult Christ), is the ruler of the earth.²⁹¹⁹

As legendization processes go, myths & later legends often get blended in with other cultures’ versions of different themes. In some cases, the Yule tradition of the Norse solstitial festival, the season of the sun’s rebirth, was assimilated in Christmas traditions of the Middle Ages, while later: “Some said the god of Yule was Kris Kringle, i.e., a Christ of the Orb, a new solar king.”²⁹²⁰ Which might also account for some depictions of the wandering Christ-child holding orbs, as seen in art works during the Middle Ages.²⁹²¹

1889, art works about the young Jesus holding orbs, or globes are interesting to consider with a later work by Thomas Nast. He published a drawing of the Christ-child as a small female with a crown of holly with red berries. In her arms rest planet earth, and a dove, a ribbon extends from her with the words: “Peace on earth, Good will toward men.”²⁹²²

January 1891, on the frontispiece of the first number of The Strand Magazine, is a small female holding a Christmas tree while descending through the woods toward a town.²⁹²³ Baffling as it may seem to us now, back then, she was called “Santa Claus!” This later version of Santa Claus as a blond female youth, seemed to be derived from German wandering Christkind traditions, art works & Christmas lore, that shows the Christ-child, or Christkindl, as a blond hair female youth giving gifts.²⁹²⁴

CHRIST ROAMS THROUGH RUSSIA: 1885, Russian writer, Leo Tolstoy, (1828–1910), perhaps influenced, or inspired by Russian legends about Christ & his apostles wandering around Russia in different guises, wrote Where Love Is, There God Is Also, also inspired by Matthew 25 lore, is of Martin Avdyeeich, the Cobbler, who visited by the wandering Christ, disguised as different people in need, during three separate visits, the first, as an old fellow, named Stepanuich. Then as a stranger, a woman poorly clad, with a little child. The third, as an old woman with a basket of apples to sale. Martin does different acts of kindness towards them, while looking for Christ who said he would visit him. He later finds out the he was visited, as promised, but not in the way he was expecting, but in three teaching moments, as the three visits were tests to see if he was following Matthew 25.²⁹²⁵

In Russia, another hand clasping tradition seems to have been passed down from earlier times. According to legend, an old woman named Baboushka, welcomed travelers passing by her cottage. These travelers were the three kings from the east. Eventually, she leaves her cottage to seek the Christ-child too. In some stories, she brings gifts into the homes she visits, while looking for the wandering Christ—child.²⁹²⁶ Other stories state how she made it all the way to Bethlehem to find out that only the animals remained. However, that night, she heard a voice calling to her, saying: “I am the Christ Child. Take my hand and come with me.” The Christ—child then took her by the hand to guide her to heaven.²⁹²⁷

All throughout historic Christendom, different types of hands and wrist grasping, hence, it may be that the Russian painter, Mikhail Nesterov passed down to us these earlier ways in which the wandering Christ was greeted by hand and wrist grips. At any rate, in his The Way to Christ, dated 1908—11, shows him grasping the hands of those who bowed down before him, as he is visiting people in Russia. Another version of his 1896 work, dated 1901—5, is entitled: Holy Russia.²⁹²⁸ In Russian folk belief, St.

Nicholas acquires the status of apostle by "accompanying Christ on his pilgrimage through Russia in some of the many legends on this subject."²⁹²⁹ "We have already seen how he [St. Nicholas] is attended by various companions, including Christ Himself!"²⁹³⁰

One Russian Legend begins, "This happened long ago when Christ was wandering about the earth with his twelve apostles." It also says that they were walking about as ordinary people, for it was impossible to know their identity. They came to a certain village and asked a rich peasant for a place to stay during the night.²⁹³¹ Note again the guises they used to travel about as, that of homeless wanderers.

The legendary hero of Russia, Ilya Murometz, according to tradition, was healed by holy sojourners, for "Christ and two of his apostles came and restored life to his limbs."²⁹³²

MORE CHRISTMAS TRADITIONS ABOUT ROAMING CHRIST: In Brittany, the gifts are directly ascribed to Le Bon Jesus, the Good Jesus. This is similar to the Germans' gift-giver, das Christ-kind—the Christ-child.²⁹³³ In some cases, decorations on Christmas trees represent "the Christ Child angel" for even a star, or angel symbolize the Christ-child.²⁹³⁴

One tradition says how spiders crawled all over a Christmas tree, leaving grey webs behind them. When the roving Christ-child came to visit, and bless the tree, he found the webs and turned them into gleaming threads of gold.²⁹³⁵

A similar story tells how a widow was secretly decorating a Christmas tree for her little ones. After she went to bed, spiders spun their webs all over it. "The Christ Child, passing by, turned the webs to silver, to delight them all on Christmas morning." These folk tales are just some of the types of explanations that some give as to why we put tinsel on our trees.²⁹³⁶

In Christian symbols, the grasshopper, when held by the Christ-child, was symbolic of the conversion of nations to Christianity.²⁹³⁷

In 1843,²⁹³⁸ Madame Calderon de la Barca describes in her Life in Mexico, a drama called "Posadas." The custom was based upon the traditions about the holy family's search for a place to stay.²⁹³⁹ In Mexico, "villagers frequently explain that St John or even Jesus Christ actually visited their region."²⁹⁴⁰

The commuting Christ-child is known by many names throughout historic Christendom. However, these are just some of the names which he is called by. And of which are according to the languages of some of the nations that traditions say he often visits.

Among the Germans, he is Christkind, Christkindel, or Christkindl.

The French call him Petit Noel.

In Spanish, he is the Nino Jesus.

In Italian, Gesu Bambino.

Among the Dutch settlers in America, Sinter Klaas.²⁹⁴¹

The people in old England wouldn't take the ashes out on Christmas Day because they feared they might throw it in Christ's face!²⁹⁴²

Door to door caroling, masked mumming skits, and meandering "guisers" have some of their roots in earlier customs. Hence, earlier ones tell of Christ's expeditions among the people of the world²⁹⁴³ in different guises,²⁹⁴⁴ such as a beggar, a stranger, a wandering homeless child, and, or, a poor person.²⁹⁴⁵

In some traditions, the Christkindl appears dressed in white robes, wearing a golden crown,²⁹⁴⁶ and has big golden wings. He brings different ones gifts and disappears after yelling "Yulklapp!" These surprise reappearances continue until supper-time, when he bids all the children "good-bye for a year."²⁹⁴⁷

In Finland, they pave the way by cutting and laying down hundreds of pine boughs. Thus, the Christ-child would have a huge green carpet to walk on, if he should happen to pass through that way. They also light pinewood torches called "good-luck chips" and form a procession from the top of the hill down to the village square. If the lights burned well, it was a sign to them that the Christ-child would find his way.²⁹⁴⁸

In Bavaria, Austria, & South America, children write, or dictate letters to Christ-child, requesting different kinds of gifts that they would like him to bring them. In some parts of Germany, children sprinkle sugar on envelopes so that they sparkle and catch his eyes, as he passes by.²⁹⁴⁹

One traditional German story, which is often told on Christmas Eve, is about a woodman and his family. One night, they were warming themselves by the fire, when all at once they heard a knock at the door. When they opened it, to their surprise, a small boy stood outside in the snowy forest, all by himself. After they let him in, they gave him warm food, something to drink, and a warm bed to sleep in for the night.

The next morning they rose out of their beds because they could hear singing. It was a choir of angels whose presence filled the cottage with beautiful music and light. It was then that they all realized that they had given shelter to the roaming Christ-child.

"You cared for me," said Jesus. "This will remind you of my visit." He touched a little fir tree near the door. "May this tree glow to warm your hearts. And may it carry presents, so that you are as kind to one another as you were to me."²⁹⁵⁰

In another story, entitled: Miracle of Jesus, it tells how: "Long ago, one fine Christmas Eve, a little child wandered all alone in the busy streets of a crowded city. The child had no place to go to and so, he roamed about freely. The winter winds pierced his skin severely and yet he walked by the houses in the hope of being welcomed by a family." Here we have the traditional guises of these types of stories, a child out wandering on Christmas Eve, the traditional test to see who would give the gift of charity, or not. Thus, testing different ones, to see who would receive a cold wandering strange child at their doors, or not, during Christmas Eve. The story goes on to tell how the child climbs a stairway to an enormous, wealthy house, taps on the front door, but is rejected by the servant, & so the child, disappointed, continues wandering. "Every time the door opened, he was denied a share of Christmas pleasures, which left him utterly disappointed." Like in the art works, eventually, the child came upon a small house. He peered through the windows, this is a favorite theme in art. The child sees a mother & her kids warming themselves by the fireplace. The child, still cold, goes to the door, & knocks on it gently, one last time. When the mother opens the door, her compassion for the child is immediate, for here is a boy clothed in rags, out in the winter cold, so she quickly pulls him into the house, warms his frozen hands & kissed his face. After he's warm & shown charity, as if part of the family now, they all began to decorate the Christmas tree. This is another common aspect of these stories, the decorating of the Christmas tree & the miracles that happen, for: "What happened next was nothing short of a miracle. A luminous light began to grow in the room, and when the mother and children turned to see where the light came from, they were astonished with the divine sight. The little boy was not in rags but was bedecked in white with a halo and the face shone like the sun." Here we have the common transformation, the guises are unmasked to reveal the glory of the true identity of the one disguised. Having passed the test of true charity, the family is blessed, as the family gazed in awe at the glowing child. The gift of the wandering Christ-child, in this case, is to make their small house grow larger, as: "The little child smiled and floated away into the night. The family knew immediately, that the child was Jesus Christ."²⁹⁵¹

In Dobry's Christmas, the setting is a peasant home in a mountain village of Bulgaria. After the peasants discovered that the Christ-child had left gifts for them, they talked about how blessed it was that he had passed by that way.²⁹⁵²

In Yugoslavia it is said that on the day of Epiphany the heavens open so that the Christ child may hear what gifts are desired.²⁹⁵³

In Fife, Scotland, men and women, boys and girls, dressed up in different costumes and blackened their faces, or disguised themselves in other ways. Then they would go visit farmhouses, like the masked mummers did. They would also sing songs, dance, & amused the onlookers. Some people would attempt to find out who these "guisers" were. For sometimes, a strong youth man would grapple a young damsel until he was sure of her identity. However, upon so doing this, he risked getting wacked with the walking-sticks of the males who were assigned to protect & watch over her.²⁹⁵⁴

Children in France hang up stockings, and place their shoes²⁹⁵⁵ beside their beds on Christmas Eve, just as in the later traditions about Santa Claus. However, in this case, the Petit Jesu (little Jesus) fills them with gifts.²⁹⁵⁶ Similar to the French, the Pennsylvania Dutch children set out hats, stockings, and baskets so that they can be filled with presents too. They are "brought by the Christ-child, whom they call the Krischkindel or Kindlein."²⁹⁵⁷

In Ecuador, after children write letters to the traveling Christ-child, they then place them in shoes that are set on window shelves. Consequently, when he passes by, he places toys in them.²⁹⁵⁸

The Italian children know that the Christ-child, Il Santissimo Bambino, is among the gift givers. In The Little Guest the holy family annually visits different nuns. A wax doll, as in other traditions, represents the wandering Christ-child.²⁹⁵⁹

By now you may have already noted that there are two guises that the wandering Christ-child travels about as. One, is that of a child in need, such as in the case with the story, LITTLE JEAN.²⁹⁶⁰ The other, is that of a gift-giver.

1885, Fritz Von Uhde's painted Come Jesus, Be Our Guest, Christ observes a peasant family in the act of preparing to sit down at their table to eat a meal. The painting was exhibited in Germany and Paris Salon in 1885. The meal is equated unto a sacramental rite. Hence, this very act of saying grace before a meal has summoned up "the invited presence of Christ himself, who, as in the Supper at Emmaus, enters this lowly but pious home."²⁹⁶¹

1853, William Holman Hunt's painting of the wandering Christ, as The Light Of The World, has him holding a lamp, symbolic of him being that Light. He is also knocking on a door that has no knob on the outside, for it is in the inside. Lights played an important symbolical reminder of his travels throughout the world to light up the world with his example and teachings.²⁹⁶²

In Poland, a chair is left vacant for the Holy Child.²⁹⁶³ While in Czechoslovakia, a "place will be left free at the table in case the Christ Child should join the party."²⁹⁶⁴ In France, there is a similar custom, "the fire is left alight, candles burning, and food and drink on the tables just in case Mary should pass that way with the Christ-child."²⁹⁶⁵

During the eighteenth century, the German-speaking Swiss, sometimes known as the Pennsylvania Dutch, and the Germans, held to the folklore that the tiny Christkindl enters the house through the keyhole.²⁹⁶⁶

"Today, wax candles are still lighted in homes and churches at Christmas time." The candle is said to be a sign to the wandering Christ-child that he would be welcomed there.²⁹⁶⁷ Another source says that they are put there to light his way.²⁹⁶⁸ The lighting of candles also commemorates the arrival of Christ, the Light of the World, for in time, old pagan imagery had long since been Christianized into the new source of light, the light of Christ who had cast "His radiance and image all across the world."²⁹⁶⁹

From France comes another custom which spread to many other countries. In this one, Children would prepare a soft bed in the manger for the roaming Christ—child. They did this by placing straw, as tokens of prayers, and good works done. Thus, every night the children were allowed to put in the crib one token for each act of devotion or virtue performed. If they had done a lot of good deeds, there would be an abundant amount of straw for the Christ-child to keep him warm, and to "soften the hardness of the manger's boards."²⁹⁷⁰

Poland, "few straws are scattered under the table... for the Holy Child."²⁹⁷¹

German children believe that the holy infant travels on the back of a pure white donkey, and so they often leave a small bundle of straw for the animal to eat. Of course, the straw was always gone on Christmas morning.²⁹⁷²

1949—1950, Peter Marshall's Mr. Jones, Meet the Master, a man stands in the shadows & smiles in approval of good deeds performed by a rich man. That night, the rich man, who lived on Massachusetts Avenue, had fed & helped the poor. But, who is this man in the shadows?²⁹⁷³

1978, in which a Finnish artist drew a cartoon of a child standing in a dark corner. His thin clothes offer no protection from the harsh cold climate, as he stands there hungry, and shaking. The people walking by are too preoccupied to notice him as they rush in and out of shops to buy things. Some push each other, others are too tired to notices, while others don't because they are too busy quarreling over different things. Others are so loaded down with food and gifts that they can't see him either. Under this picture is another clue: Birthday child watching the celebration of his birthday. Who is the child?²⁹⁷⁴

PART 8: THE FRATERNALIZATIONS & LEGENDIZATIONS OF THE EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIAN MYSTERIES, MASSES & LITURGICAL RITES

CHRIST TEACHES THE MYSTERIES DURING HIS POST-RESURRECTION WORLD WIDE TREK

CHRIST, AS THE MAN OF SORROWS, DISPLAYS HIS WOUNDS: One of the important themes in our study of Christ, as The World Wide Wounded Wanderer, is this; the numerous art works and writings about how Christ sometimes appears, during his world wide trek, as The Man of Sorrows, displaying his wounds. These traditions seem to have their roots in Isaiah's prophecy: "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief" (Isaiah 53:3). This certainly is one of the basic elements behind later legends about the wandering Christ, and the later Christmas wandering Christ-child lore. Consequently, as he travels the world, going from door to door, fables and stories say how he is either welcomed in, or "despised," as some "esteemed him not" (Isaiah 53:3).²⁹⁷⁵

Nevertheless, in this guise, Christ's wounds are more visible to those who encounter him, for when he appears, he displays his wounds as the one who "was wounded for our transgressions." And "bruised for our iniquities" (Isaiah 53:5).²⁹⁷⁶ In some cases, the same types of gestures that Christ makes while displaying his wounds, are also seen in early Christian mysteries, masses, and later liturgical gestures.²⁹⁷⁷ According to one Christian tale, Pope Gregory the Great, while celebrating the Mass, experienced a vision of Christ, as the Man of Sorrows.²⁹⁷⁸

Thus, it seems that one of the traditional places that one might expect the Wounded Wanderer to appear is during Mass, or even Masses for the dead.²⁹⁷⁹ Some later Christian art compositions illustrating this event, shows the man of sorrows²⁹⁸⁰ displaying his wounds.²⁹⁸¹ In this particular guise, Transubstantiation is at its roots.²⁹⁸² This is where the clergy, and church members attending the Masses, believed that the sacrament actually became the body and blood of Christ.²⁹⁸³ Hence, the influences of these beliefs on Christian artists are evident in not only images of the Man of Sorrows, but also in a similar guise, Christ the Sufferer.²⁹⁸⁴

In traditions, & art works, Christ, the man of sorrows, sometimes appears during sacraments at altars. In The Imitation of Christ, by Thomas A. Kempis, The Fourth book of the Sacrament of the Altar, with great reverence Christ must be received during the sacrament, & while "in the saving presence of Thy Godhead no unmeet thought ought to intrude... because it is not an Angel but the Lord of the Angels, that I am about to receive as my Guest.... But here in the Sacrament of the Altar, Thou art present altogether, My God, the Man Christ Jesus".²⁹⁸⁵

Consequently, in Holy Grail lore,²⁹⁸⁶ Christ appears to different ones to explain the meaning behind the sacrament, or to even serve the wine of his blood and the meat of his immortal flesh.²⁹⁸⁷ According to a Glastonbury tale, St. Joseph of Arimathea brings the Holy Grail to Glastonbury, a monastery, founded by St. Patrick. Thus, its church was believed to have been "consecrated by a visitation to earth of Jesus Christ himself".²⁹⁸⁸

1380, in a Latin art piece, there is an element that shows a certain aspect of the early Christian mysteries in it. For a man with a glove on, extends his hand toward Christ, the Man of Sorrows. On this glove are what seems to be a mark in the wrist area, and another mark, or symbol in the middle of his hand.²⁹⁸⁹ Furthermore, in a depiction of St. Theresa, pleading for souls in the fires of purgatory, Christ appears, with hand clasping angelic guides, who are lifting souls out of the fire. Christ appears to be in the guise of the Man of Sorrows here too.²⁹⁹⁰

1461, The Croxton Play of the Sacrament, performed in England, a Jewish merchant acts like a Christian in order to test the sacrament to see if it's literally the flesh of Christ. After obtaining some from the Host, and upon piercing it, to his surprise it began to bleed. When he tried to throw it away, it stuck to his hand. The servant nailed that hand to a post, but when he pulled on it, his arm came loose. While the hand still remained nailed with the Eucharist, eventually, they freed it from the hand, and threw it into an oven. "From the midst of the flames in the oven, Christ appears, bleeding, urging the Jews to repent." ²⁹⁹¹

About mid-1940s, further legendization of Christ's world treks in different guises, continued to be pass down in stories. Roy H. Stetler, tell us about the meeting of The Big Three,²⁹⁹² which the story says, occurred outside the Crimean Castle of Livadia. A soldier pacing back and forth, has an encounter with Christ, who displayed his wounds, as he tells the guard to let him into the meeting, telling him: "I can help them. I have a plan that will really work, and will keep the peace of the world, if they will only adopt my plan." The Guard questions Christ's credentials, not knowing at first who the wounded man is. But not allowing Christ in, Christ disappears into the darkness of the night. It was then, when it was too late, that the Guard laments as he realized that he had just turned down the wounded wandering Christ.²⁹⁹³

CHRIST AS WORLD WIDE WOUNDED WANDERER: Some of the main themes, and scenes that early to later Christian artists focus in on are different types of hand and wrist grasps, for this is the very moment when Christ's post resurrection international trek begins. These grips are so often repeated, and depicted in Christian art works, that some writers have suggested that certain hand clasps, such as the "salvific handclasp is nearly the trade-mark of the iconography of Christ's postcrucifixion descent into Hades."²⁹⁹⁴ As Christ raises up the dead by their hands, some art works show him turning. Others show him turned and pulling out Adam, the first in many to be pulled out of the underworld.²⁹⁹⁵ As he marches away from the entrance to the underworld, with the cross-banner flowing in the wind, which banner he holds in his other hand. It is at this point that his first post resurrection treks around the world, and victory march is underway.

During this trek, he goes forth as The Messenger of the Covenant, for it is during his post resurrection visitations that he teaches his followers the new covenant, the mysteries of his life, sufferings, death, and resurrection. Which mysteries, or ordinances were also a type of how he ascended into heaven. These types, were also how all of those throughout the world who accepted the message, and The Messenger of the Covenant, would ascend into heaven too.²⁹⁹⁶ Origen notes that "the first Christians taught that God had covenant people on the other side of the world — the Antichthonians."²⁹⁹⁷

God's messengers, as we have already considered, are not only prophets, like in the case with John the Baptist, (Matthew 3:1—3). But they are also angels of God, like in the case with the angel Gabriel, who prophesied of John the Baptist's, and Christ's births. He did this, by appearing to Zacharias in the temple, and then later to the virgin Mary (Luke 1:5, 11—21, 26—47). During the 12th century, a Christian artist, depicting Zacharias in the temple with this angel, also shows two men clasping each others' left hands.²⁹⁹⁸ This might suggest that the new covenant was about to be brought into the world. Hence, Christ, as The Messenger of the Covenant, made his appearing in the flesh to teach the way back home to the Father. Secondly, after he rose from the dead, he taught the nations of the world the new covenant.²⁹⁹⁹

Concerning these mysteries, and their conditions throughout the world, Dr. Hugu W. Nibley notes how the mysteries had been taught from the very beginning of the human race. And how that they passed through alternate phases of apostasy and restoration, which he says has "left the world littered with the fragments of the original structure, some more and some less recognizable, but all badly damaged and out of proper context."³⁰⁰⁰

Furthermore, in a work, dated before the middle of the 12th century, made in the Kingdom of Jerusalem for Queen Melisande. Different charitable works of Matthew 25 are illustrated on a book cover. One of the acts of mercy shows a king, or noble, greeting, or guiding a homeless wanderer to a place of refuge, by grasping, with the right hand, the wanderer's right-wrist. Another section shows the noble or royal, visiting the sick and raising them by gripping, with the left hand, the right wrist of the sick person in bed.³⁰⁰¹

WOUNDED-HANDS OF THE WANDERER: "What are these wounds in thine hands and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them: These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God." (See also: Zechariah 13:6).

1486, art-work by Filippino Lippi, The Madonna Appearing to St. Bernard, Florence, Badia, see the background-scene of two monks greeting each other in a most interesting manner.³⁰⁰² This greeting, is like those seen in depictions of Christ's descent into purgatory.³⁰⁰³ One of the monks supports himself with a crutch or pilgrim's walking stick. The other grasps the crippled monk's hand in the same types of ways in which God also grasps Eve's hands to raise her out of Adam's side.³⁰⁰⁴ In one depiction, the hand shakes between God and Eve is surrounded by a circle of praying angels.³⁰⁰⁵ Furthermore, this same type of hand shake is seen in the manner in which Adam and Christ grasp each other's hands in depictions of Christ raising souls³⁰⁰⁶ out of limbo, and purgatory.³⁰⁰⁷ But also, they are the same types of clasps that people greet each other with, in art works depicting scenes in Paradise.³⁰⁰⁸ These types of greetings³⁰⁰⁹ seem to be derived from the early to later Christian mysteries,³⁰¹⁰ and liturgies, much of which centers on Christ's wounds that he received when he was nailed to the cross, for the thumb rests on the middle of the hand where one of the nail-wounds is often depicted.³⁰¹¹

1516–18, on the St. Florian Altarpiece, a person, perhaps a clergyman, greets a itinerant noble by clasping the right hand.³⁰¹²

As noted earlier, in earlier centuries, the early anti-Christians, such as Caecilius, and Fronto were disturbed by this type of symbolism being used among the early Christians. Caecilius charged that "they recognize each other by secret marks."³⁰¹³ Fronto ascribes this to them: "When they extend the hand for greeting at the bottom of the palm they make a tickling touch and from this they ascertain whether the person who appeared is of their faith."³⁰¹⁴ Early Christian symbolism was fostered by the horrors through which they had to pass through during times of persecutions. Thus, "Symbols were invented and used as secret signs by which the Christian brethren could recognise each other."³⁰¹⁵ Moreover, "all the symbols of Christianity were ordained primarily to teach pure doctrine, and that they were necessarily used to distinguish Christianity from paganism, and as signs and watchwords to discriminate between friend and foe, true and false, hypocrites and genuine Christians."³⁰¹⁶

In later centuries, these types of symbols were passed on in the later traditions and manners by which monks were to greet each other, pilgrims, and strangers. Consequently, they greet each other as if they were greeting the roaming Christ. After all, their writings and art works reminded them that the wandering Christ was out and about, and that he was going to be known by certain signs, and symbolical hand clasps. Their greeting customs centered on these earlier wandering Christ traditions to, for when someone came to the monastery, the monks were to go out and greet them as if they were the journeying Christ himself. These greetings, in some cases, included different types of hand, & wrist grasps. At least, this is what another, dated 1400—1455, seems to indicate. For it shows two monks clasping each other's hands, except in a different manner as the one depicted, and mentioned earlier.³⁰¹⁷ In these types of greetings, they were to show to all, the respect due to them, especially to their own fellow Christians in the faith, and to pilgrims. If a visitor was announced, the abbot and brothers were to go meet them. In so doing this, they were in fulfillment of their loving Christian duty. They were to give each other the kiss of peace only after praying together. The kiss of peace is "A ceremonial gesture, as a kiss or a handshake, used as a sign of unity and brotherhood among those celebrating and attending the Eucharist."³⁰¹⁸ Other artists show how monks greeted pilgrims & the postulants,³⁰¹⁹ and fellow monks with different types of clasps on their hands, perhaps as if they were greeting each other as if see Christs in each other, according to St. Benedict rules.³⁰²⁰

During the 15th century, in France, an artist shows St. Benedict greeting his sister Scholastica by grasping, with is left hand, her right wrist. At the same time, they are reaching out toward each other as if they are about to shake hands.³⁰²¹ In the greeting itself, great humility was to be shown toward all guests. When the guest comes and goes, they were to bend their head or prostrate themselves on the ground before them, and so honor Christ in them, since in them they had received him. They were to also show especial and particular care in the welcome given to the poor, and to pilgrims, for in them they believed that they had received Christ in the truest sense.³⁰²²

In these legends and traditions about Christ's world wide treks, his true identity is hidden to those who fail to recognize him, for Christ travels about in the guise of a stranger, pilgrim, beggar, and a normal looking man, whose identity is thus hidden too. However, in some cases, the wounds in his hands and feet are clues to his identity for those who know what to look for.³⁰²³ Especially those who know about the prophecies concerning the manner of Christ's suffering, and crucifixion. In addition, those who have received types,³⁰²⁴ imitations,³⁰²⁵ and similitudes of Christ's sufferings when they passed through the early to later Christian mysteries,³⁰²⁶ and liturgies.³⁰²⁷ Thus, they would know what types of wounds to look for in the strangers they suspected were Christ in the guise of a man of sorrows,³⁰²⁸ or as a wounded wanderer.³⁰²⁹ Other examples of this kind are seen in art works that date back to this century, and earlier.³⁰³⁰

THE WOUNDED WANDERER APPEARS : In The Gospel of the Birth of Mary, & in Christian lore about Christ's mother Mary, before she is born, an angel appears to Joachim and Anna, Mary's mother, and tells them how Mary will bring forth the Son of the most High God, named Jesus, "the Saviour of all nations" and of "the world."³⁰³¹ In traditions, Christ's intercontinental treks often include post-resurrection visitations with his Mother Mary, especially when he escorts the souls he has raised out of limbo to where his Mother Mary is. Thus, Christ and the redeemed patriarchs appeared to the Virgin Mary. Later Christian artists illustrated this event in their art works based on this tradition. For example, after their ascension up out of limbo, a large group of raised souls comes to visit the Virgin Mary. One account of this visit is found in a publication at Burgos in 1520, and it also was enacted in a very similar way, as in the account of Villena. Other sources, and art works suggest that it was during his visits to Mary, as in other post resurrection appearances to others, that Christ showed & explained the symbolical meanings, and types behind the mysteries. Furthermore, he did this by expounding on the prophecies. Many early to later Christians understood these mysteries to include prayers, & sacramental gestures, baptism, anointings, garments, robes, crowns,³⁰³² coronations & different types of hand symbols, and handshakes. All these were types and symbols of that which was to happen in the afterlife realms.³⁰³³

17th cent., art-works show how after Christ lifted souls out of limbo, he then brought them to meet his Mother, during his post-resurrection world trek & victory march. These works, and the traditions behind them, were based on Matthew 27:52-53.

These traditions³⁰³⁴ represent some of the first post resurrection visitations³⁰³⁵ which the raised Lord made. Consequently, this very visitation marks another point in time in the beginnings of his post resurrection intercontinental treks throughout the world. Folklore says that while Mary had retired to her chamber to wait for her son's resurrection, she prayed earnestly saying: "Thou didst promise, O my most dear son, that thou wouldst rise again on the third day. Before yesterday was the day of darkness and bitterness; and, behold, this is the third day. Return then to me, thy mother. O my son, tarry not, but come!"³⁰³⁶ Soon after this, Christ enters the chamber, bearing the standard of the cross. He is followed by the patriarchs and prophets whom Christ had lifted up and released from hades. They all thanked her, because their deliverance had come through her, because of her son. Knowing her son is still among this group of resurrected souls, she calls out to him to come forth to her, because she wanted to hear him speak. Christ raises his hands in a benediction, saying: "I salute thee, O my mother!" And they embrace each other. She then asks: "Is it thou indeed, my most dear son?" Jesus then presented his wounds, and bade her be comforted since he had triumphed over death and hell. Having knelt down, she thanks him that she had been his mother. After they talk some more, Christ then leaves her to go and show himself to Mary Magdalene.

In an art work in the Parément de Narbonne in the Louvre, three events are depicted right next to each other, as if suggesting a series of events. One, perhaps representing the earlier event shows a woman with her arms around Christ's neck, while other women and men look down at Christ's dead body. Now, though Christ's body is dead, his spirit lives on during the descent into hell. Hence, the next scene show Christ spearing Satan as he descends into hell. Christ grasps, with his left hand, the right wrist of an old man he is lifting up out of the jaws of hell. Others follow close behind the first to be lifted up. The next scene seems to be Mary in the garden. Hence, Christ's world-wide-trek is underway as he appears to different ones, holding the banner of his victory over Satan.³⁰³⁷

Likewise, along with parts of these traditions are numerous art works that show the raised Lord presenting his wounds to Mary so that she recognizes him.³⁰³⁸ In an earlier event, Mary examines up close the wounds³⁰³⁹ in her son's dead body as they take him down from the cross. Hence, in a number of art compositions depicting the descent from the cross, Mary feels, with her hands,³⁰⁴⁰ the nail mark wounds in her Son's dead hands.³⁰⁴¹ One artist shows how she gives her dead Son's wounded right hand, what some might have likened unto the hand clasping rite in the Eucharist, such as the kiss of peace.³⁰⁴²

1178, a depiction shows her pressing her finger into the wound area of Christ's hand.³⁰⁴³ One writer, upon commenting on this work, says that the "lifting of Christ's right hand from the Cross becomes an act of ritual grace accomplished with the aid of an angel"³⁰⁴⁴ Other artists show the moment before Mary's right-hand pointer finger is about to touch the nail mark wound in the middle of Christ's right hand, while, like in other works, her thumb is about to feel where the nail went through on the other side. In another, she holds Christ's right hand with her right, as she bends forward as though to take a closer look at the wound. One dating back to the late 13th or early 14th century, shows two of Christ's followers giving Christ, the kiss of peace, on his wounded hands. As noted earlier, there is a hand clasp³⁰⁴⁵ involved in giving a kiss of peace,³⁰⁴⁶ and kiss on the wound³⁰⁴⁷ area.³⁰⁴⁸ This also seems to be the area that is kissed by those who clasp the hand of Bishops. On the Bishop's hands are gloves with symbols in the middle of the palm area, as if to represent Christ's wounds. Thus, it seems as though they are kissing and clasping Christ's wounds.

After Mary had felt Christ's wounds in his dead body, and after a few days later, when Christ appears to her with the host of redeemed saints of old. She then embraces him³⁰⁴⁹ and then proceeds to examine Christ's wounds up close, and in this same way, as during the descent from the cross. However, this time, she is not feeling the wounds of her dead son, but rather, her resurrected Son. Thus, she became one of the first witnesses to the resurrection.³⁰⁵⁰

At the very moment Mary dies, Jesus Himself appears³⁰⁵¹ in glory to receive her soul.³⁰⁵² After three days she is resurrected, ascends into heaven to pass through a heavenly coronation ceremony, in which she is crowned, enthroned,³⁰⁵³ glorified,³⁰⁵⁴ exalted,³⁰⁵⁵ & deified as the Queen of Heaven.³⁰⁵⁶

Historic Christendom's numerous treasures of manuscripts, and art craftsmanship, also point out and testify that it was during these post resurrection visitations, that Christ showed her, and his apostles, the mysteries of the Kingdom. For Mary uses these same types and imitations of Christ's suffering to enter into heaven.³⁰⁵⁷

Many early to later Christian artists have illustrated the whole journey of the souls through each step, not only from a ritualistic³⁰⁵⁸ point of view, but also, from a theological dogmatic point of view too. Consequently, they illustrated what they believed took place during the preexistence,³⁰⁵⁹ in earth life, and in the afterlife realms.³⁰⁶⁰ Portrayals of these post resurrection visits show Christ teaching Mary and his followers the mystery of the Kingdom. He does this by the ways in which he makes different arms gestures, as he displays his wounds. These arm gestures are the same types of ones that religious leaders make during their sacramental gestures, & in masses for the dead.³⁰⁶¹

Furthermore, many of the depictions of Mary's death, assumption, ascension,³⁰⁶² coronation,³⁰⁶³ crowning,³⁰⁶⁴ enthroning,³⁰⁶⁵ glorification,³⁰⁶⁶ and deification in heaven,³⁰⁶⁷ suggests this.³⁰⁶⁸ That she was instructed in the mysteries³⁰⁶⁹ before her death. Thus, like in other ancient mystery religions, this "ritual preparedness,"³⁰⁷⁰ helps her be ritually ready to face death, even before she passed away.³⁰⁷¹ After death, Christ guides her through the mysteries again in the afterlife.³⁰⁷² For example, the artist, Taddeo Di Bartolo, 1362/63 —1422, depicts a wrist clasping rite of passage between Christ and Mary as she ascends into heaven. Thus, in Bartolo's depiction, 1389, Christ descends out of heaven to grasp the wrists of Mary in this version of The Assumption of the Virgin Mary.³⁰⁷³ Mary also takes on the role, like many of the angels, of guiding souls to the enthroned Christ, hence she is seen as a hand clasping guide too. For example, a work 1280, shows the Last Judgment. Christ, enthroned raises both hands while down below, on his right-hand is an angelic guide, clasping the wrist of the first in many souls to be guided over into paradise.³⁰⁷⁴ In another work, dating back to the 13th century, Mary guides souls to the enthroned Christ, who holds an orb in his right hand. One of the souls she is guiding is on her knees with her hands together, the finger pointing upward, as if in a prayer gesture. These two hands are being grasped by Mary's right hand. Her right-hand thumb rests a little above the pointer finger's knuckle of the right hand of the said praying woman. Another portion shows Christ displaying his wounds in the palms of his hands. His right hand is raised, while his left hand is down as if he is pointing to the wound over on his right side.³⁰⁷⁵

Monumental evidences, and writings thus testify, that Christ ritualistically enacted for them a preview of what would take place again in the afterlife. This was one of the main reasons for Christ's post resurrection visitations during the forty days.³⁰⁷⁶ Dr. Hugu W. Nibley points out that in the Old World forty-day literature, references are made to how "the Savior is to appear to people in all parts of the world."³⁰⁷⁷

During other post resurrection appearances, such as to some of the apostles, Christ had them feel the nail mark wounds in his hands, with their own hand, and his other wounds too. He also helps them to understand the meanings behind the prophecies about his sufferings, the atonement, and the ritualistic types.³⁰⁷⁸ Plus, symbols in both the old and new covenants. After he departed from them, they worshiped him, & returned to Jerusalem and "were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God" Luke 24:13-53; Acts 1:3.

If many of these early to later Christian hand, and wrists grasps were symbolical types of the wounds Christ received when nailed to the cross, then, it may be that some of them believed that Christ had more than one nail driven through each of his hands. In fact, some Christian art works show nail-hole marks in the wrists and the middle of the hands, hence, two nail wounds in each arm.³⁰⁷⁹ Surprising enough as it may be, double nail-hole wounds can be seen on the monuments of other nations' crucified "gods" too. This, we will consider in more detail throughout this book. However, in the case with Christendom, at least, this is what the early to later Christian art works seem to suggest was believed by some to have been the case. Christ and the saints, while traveling in and throughout different realms, according to many depictions, use different types of hand and wrist grasps as they enter in and out of different realms. For example, in a work depicting the harrowing of hell, the print of the nail in the middle of Christ's hand lines up with Adam's wrist, as Christ grasps his wrist to raise him.³⁰⁸⁰ In another work, this same area of Adam's wrist is grasped by Christ, in which his thumb rests on the middle of the wrist between the carpals and radius.³⁰⁸¹

Furthermore, St. Augustine wrote that "the savior went to the cross as a bridegroom to his bride."³⁰⁸² If, then, in early Christian types and similitudes, the numerous different hand and wrist grasps seen in historic Christendom's marriage ceremonies, art works, and in wedding rings³⁰⁸³ are types and symbols of Christ's wounds from the nails. Then, many early to later Christians must have believed that nails were driven into the middle of Christ's hands, and then others into the middle of his wrists too.³⁰⁸⁴ This is because in early to later Christian craftsmanship of weddings, and wedding rings, there are clasps on the hands³⁰⁸⁵ and on the wrist, in addition to other kinds.³⁰⁸⁶ Young couples would also cut a small cut on their wrists and join them together to let their blood mingle, while making their vows to God together.³⁰⁸⁷ With other art works showing nails driven through Christ's wrists, it may be that these types of vows have symbolical connections, and types that reminded them of the wounds Christ's received during his crucifixion.³⁰⁸⁸ In some cases, there's a double grasp involved in the ceremony of matrimony. For the Priest, or Friar would grasp the wrists of the bride and groom to join their hands in marriage.³⁰⁸⁹

1853, later works may have preserved the concept of hand clasps taking placed between those in guises as other characters, this, as noted already, is what happens in traditions and art works, for when Christ wanders the world in different guises and meets different people, they clasp hands in different ways. In this 1853 case, the traditional marriage clasp is done with the thumbs of their right hands resting on each others' second knuckle down. Some of those who take part in this "marriage" are in guises.³⁰⁹⁰

Ossuary findings of skeletal remains show that the crucifieds' wrists were nailed to the cross, instead of the palms.³⁰⁹¹ However, as suggest by the art works, there must have been a nail driven through the middle of the palm too.³⁰⁹² For as we have already noted, this is another area, which early to later Christian artists depict how the hand and wrist are held, as Christ raises up the dead out of hell, limbo,³⁰⁹³ purgatory, or the grave, etc.³⁰⁹⁴ The same could be said about the different types of hand and wrists grasping in the ascension into heaven. For in some cases, the wrist is grasped,³⁰⁹⁵ in others, it is the right hand.³⁰⁹⁶ In other cases, it is a double clasp, for God's hand extends to clasp the wrist, while at the same time, an angel holds that same right hand of Christ.³⁰⁹⁷ A depiction of Christ as the man of Sorrows, A.D. 1360, also shows a man extending his hand toward Christ. The man's right hand looks as if there are nail wound marks in his wrist, and in the middle of his hand.³⁰⁹⁸ On a roof boss, Christ's left arm is raised, while his left wrist is being clasped. His right hand rests on his heart. There are nail marks in the middle of his hands too.³⁰⁹⁹

4th c., in The Catechetical Lectures of S. Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, Cyril testified of the types of Christ's suffering in their mysteries. In these mysteries, they took part in a similitude, a type of Christ's suffering, but without having to endure the same pain which Christ did. He said that "we did not really die, we were not really buried, we were not really crucified and raised again; but our imitation was but in a figure, while our salvation is in reality."³¹⁰⁰ He goes on to testify how Christ was actually crucified, buried, and rose from the dead. And how that these things were vouchsafed to them by an imitation communicating in his sufferings, he then exclaims: "Christ received the nails in His undefiled hands and feet, and endured anguish; while to me without suffering or toil, by the fellowship of His pain He vouchsafes salvation." In an Apocryphal Christian source, The Acts of John, John says that Christ showed him, in secret, a symbol and type of his torment, piercing, blood, wounding, fastening, and death. "I held this one thing fast in my mind, that the Lord had performed everything as a symbol and a dispensation for the conversion and salvation of man[kind]."³¹⁰¹

Thomas became a witness to the resurrection when he touched Christ's wounds too (John 20:24-31). Later artists depict Thomas' hand, or wrist³¹⁰² being grasped³¹⁰³ by Christ,³¹⁰⁴ while he feels the wound in Christ's side.³¹⁰⁵ For example, in a work, dated 1450, Christ, as the banner bearer, grasps, with his right hand, just below the right wrist of Thomas' right arm to assist him, as he feels the wound in Christ's right side. In the same work, Christ is before his Father's throne, displaying to his Father, the wounds of his passion. His right hand is raised up, while his left hand is down, pointing over to the wound in his right side.³¹⁰⁶ After Thomas witnessed, in this manner, the resurrected Lord, at some point in time, Thomas went to preach the gospel in India, and taught the mysteries to some there too. After which he says to them to "... look for His [Christ's] appearing . . . For His heralds are proclaiming in the four quarters of the world."³¹⁰⁷ Further on Thomas tells those in India to believe on Christ, so "that He may be your fellow-traveler in this land..."³¹⁰⁸

St. Jerome, born about 345 near the Italian-Dalmatian border to Christian parents, later wrote that: "The Son of God was with Thomas in all the places of India... and with all the preachers of the Gospel, wheresoever they came."³¹⁰⁹ In India, some Christian groups there still retain, even to this day, a hand holding ceremony that just might be derived from earlier ritualistic greetings, passed down to them from earlier generations of Christians which may have learned such things from Apostle Thomas.³¹¹⁰

William of St. Thierry, during the 12th century A.D., wrote how the mysteries of redemption flow from Christ's wounds like a door to understanding the secrets of the sacraments. "Open to us your body's side, that those who long to see the secrets of your Son may enter in, and may receive the sacraments that flow therefrom, even the price of their redemption."³¹¹¹ In another place, he seems to hint to the how Christ assists them in feeling his wounds, by grasping their hands. "Lord, whither do you draw those whom you thus embrace and enfold, save to your heart?"³¹¹² And it is to these wounds that Christ draws the soul in order that one might thrust their fingers, or hands into his side like Thomas did.

In other post resurrection appearances to his disciples, one of which was while some of them were fishing at the sea of Tiberias. Jesus appears on the shore and tells them to cast their nets in a certain area. When they do, their nets are full of fish when they pull them up. At this moment they knew that it was the raised Lord. Peter jumps in the water and starts to swim toward Christ (John 21:1-14). In the art works, Christ raises Peter from the water by taking a hold of his hand. These types of art works served to remind later Christians of the same types and symbols which they dramatized in their sacraments.³¹¹³

Irenæus, 120—202, wrote that after Christ had descended to the place of the dead in the lower parts of the earth to preach the gospel there, He then afterwards rose up "in the flesh, so that He even showed the print of the nails to His disciples, He thus ascended to the Father."³¹¹⁴

Leo the Great, 390-400, died A.D. 461, mentions Christ's visitation to his Apostles: "He entered when the doors were closed upon the disciples, and gave them the Holy Spirit by breathing on them, and after giving them the light of understanding opened the secrets of the Holy Scriptures, and again Himself showed them the wound in the side, the prints of the nails, and all the marks of His most recent Passion . . ."³¹¹⁵ Leo also suggests that their mysteries were imitations or types of Christ's suffering, resurrection and ascension. For "the Lord's Resurrection and Ascension did not pass by in uneventful leisure, by great mysteries (Sacramenta--mysteria) were ratified in them, [and] deep truths [were] revealed."³¹¹⁶

Another connection in all this, is another symbol³¹¹⁷ found in the middle³¹¹⁸ of later Christian gloves,³¹¹⁹ called the monial.³¹²⁰ Some of which symbols look like unto, and seem to be a type of nail wounds.³¹²¹ For example, in an engraving, 1485, in first editions of Dance of Death, by Guyot Marchant, the Parisian printer, a personified Death is grasping the left wrist of a religious leader, Pope Innocents. Thus, as this engraving shows, hand grasps were done on gloves with circular symbols in the middle of the hand in the same areas where Christ's nail marks are also depicted.³¹²² These types of hand grasping on gloves were passed down to later freemasons.³¹²³ They had learned of these things because of how the later Christian religious leaders had hired Stonemasons to carve and create these ritualistic hand clasps in the many different stone carvings which can still be seen today in the old churches throughout Christendom.³¹²⁴ Before later masonic grips on gloved hands were done and depicted, earlier Christian artists, & stone carvers made stone monuments that show different types of handshakes with gloves on.³¹²⁵ Some of these stone monuments are grave markers,³¹²⁶ some of which also show the symbols mentioned earlier, in gloves,³¹²⁷ and on rings.³¹²⁸ Numerous tomb stones also depict clasped hands. In some cases, what angels do at certains suggest connections to earlier symbols of the descent into hell, and resurrection, or lifting out of souls out of the place of the dead. Many of these ritualistic concepts go back to the earlier symbols that reminded the Christians about the wounds of Christ's atonement.³¹²⁹

Consequently, the way in which the wandering Christ is greeted with grips, these greetings are seen in the way in which a Noble greets the poor at the entrance to his home.³¹³⁰ And sense some of them are disabled people, another blind, etc., the Noble is in the act of receiving Christ the wounded wander in this symbolical way. During the 11th--12th century, Christians had artists illustrate these hand clasping greetings between monks and those who came to their door. Thus, the artists preserved for us this traditional greeting as part of a series depicting Monastic life. Hence, in showing monks receiving postulants at their monastery doors, the first monk clasps, with his left hand, the hand of the postulant, which is raised a little.³¹³¹ From the workshop of Fra Angelico, 15th century, two saints greet each other with both their hands, by gripping both of each others' hands.³¹³²

12th cent., earlier lore on Christ's global wanderings, may have caused many Christians to become wanderers too. For "nuns or monks, canons or wandering preachers, defined themselves as imitators of Christ and the apostles."³¹³³ One such wounded wanderer was St. Francis of Assisi, 1181-1226. He patterned his life after how Christ went about in the guise of a beggar, or pilgrim. For, according to traditions, "St. Francis wandered up and down the world smiling for the great love that was in his heart." Many noble and poor knew him, and his smile. "To them the smile of "the Lord's own beggar" meant help and sympathy." Like the vagabond Christ-child tales, St. Francis begged for food from door to door. He would also sleep in whatever place he was able to find lodging. "He wanted to be poor because Christ was poor, and he was trying to live like his Master."³¹³⁴ "Christ was depicted as he who was "the Highest made the lowliest, the King of all kings a poor infant."³¹³⁵

Also, St. Francis is often shown having received nail mark wounds in his hands³¹³⁶ and feet,³¹³⁷ or the stigmata,³¹³⁸ as well as other saints too.³¹³⁹ In Giotto's Death of St. Francis, 1320, a hand clasp is seen in this kiss of peace. It is similar to depictions of how Mary grasps and gives Christ's dead hand the kiss of peace on his wounds. In Francis dead hands, one of which is in view, we also see the wound or the stigmata. We don't see the other circular nail print wound on the other hand because a monk is kissing the stigmata on his other hand. Furthermore, like depictions of Mary, while the monk is kissing the wound area on top of Francis' hand, with the palm down, & in the middle of the hand. He is also grasping Francis' hand underneath with one hand, and his wrist with the other.³¹⁴⁰ Thus, when this same type of kiss of peace is done on glove symbols, and in greeting commuting pilgrims, it seems as though they are likened unto the same types of kisses and grasps³¹⁴¹ which are given on the wounds in the hands of the journeying Christ. Moreover, because monks believed that Christ was ambling the earth in different guises, to them, it was as if they were kissing and clasping the wounds of Christ. Thus, when they performed the kiss of peace on the hands of beggars, pilgrims, the poor and the sick, it was as if, in their minds, they were clasping and kissing the wound marks in Christ's hands. After all, their customs & art compositions reminded them that, at some point in time, he would come to them when they least expected, for he would appear in different guises. This is why they would greet strangers, etc., in this way as if they were episodic "Christs" out visiting & testing different monasteries.³¹⁴²

The hand clasping kiss of peace is mentioned by Severus, Archbishop of Antioch, 512—19, in a Coptic text in which he relates this greeting in a letter to John, the Archbishop of Ephesus: "Before all things I kiss the holy hand wherewith thou hast touched the holy Flesh of the Son of God. Greeting!"³¹⁴³

These types of greetings between Christ and his followers seem to date back through the centuries, for example, during the third through the fourth century, in the Acts of Andrew and Matthias, we read how Christ appeared in the prison where Andrew was being held. In having stretched out his hand toward Andrew, he said: "Give me thy hand, and rise up whole." Andrew reaches up and "gave Him his hand, and rose up whole."³¹⁴⁴ It is also interesting to note other traditions³¹⁴⁵ and accounts, in which the touring Christ is a healer wherever he goes. Furthermore, how that in Christian Monasticism, this thread or element in cruising Christ folklore & customs is found too. Consequently, in living and practicing Benedict's Rule for the sick, Christian monks were to care for the sick, whom they believed could be Christ in the guise of a sick person.³¹⁴⁶ With this in mind, it was their moral duty to help them to regain their health.³¹⁴⁷

Another element which is in the wandering Christ traditions, and which shows up in the acts of raising a person up to good health, is this: There is also a hand clasp to symbolize how the sick are raised back to good health.³¹⁴⁸

Moreover, such things may have also been seen as a type of the triumph over spiritual and physical sicknesses. Spiritual, because of how angels would anoint the wounds of the souls, they lifted, with hand clasps,³¹⁴⁹ out of hell.³¹⁵⁰ But also, physical, because of how all types of physical imperfections, and illnesses are healed when the spirit is clothed in a gloriously bright resurrected body.³¹⁵¹ Very often, numerous Christian artists through the centuries have illustrated the resurrection of Adam and Eve, and the saints of old. They are lifted by the hand out of the underworld during the harrowing of hell.³¹⁵² Thus, Christ's resurrection became a symbol of hope for the sick and the dying.³¹⁵³

In a work by Giovanni da Milano of the Christ-child and the Madonna, the Christ-child takes hold of a person's hand in the same sort of way as already mentioned. There are other grasps done between Christian Kings and their Nobles. These too were derived from the early to later Christian mysteries, and were eventually preserved among later Freemasons,³¹⁵⁴ militant Christian Orders,³¹⁵⁵ and Christian Knight Orders.³¹⁵⁶

Another artist that characterizes a hand clasp between a King, and the Christ-child—as the King of Kings, is a composition that is dated 1455/60—1532. Thus, it shows the adoration of the Magi, in which the small Christ-child is clasping the hands of the first foreign king who has come to pay him homage.³¹⁵⁷

In the thirteenth-century church of St. Tommaso in Formis, Rome is a mosaic called THE MEDIEVAL CHRIST. Christ grasps the wrists of two men who represent the captives of the different races of the world. Their feet are in irons, one man is white, the other is darker skinned. In grasping their wrists, Christ “draws into one and the same salvation the captives of every race.”³¹⁵⁸

Furthermore, because sheep are symbolic of people, in that the “lamb, as St. Hilary says, though single, signifies humanity in general.”³¹⁵⁹ It may be that another symbol of hand and wrist grasping gatherings, in early Christian art works, are when Christ gathers the lost sheep from the ends of the earth, and from the underworld. Consequently, in many cases, he holds the ankles, or legs of the lamb on his shoulders.³¹⁶⁰ Perhaps each leg of the lamb may represent the four corners of the earth from which humanity is being gathered from.³¹⁶¹ If so, then it is as though Christ is drawing humanity together, by hand and wrists grasping, from the four quarters of the earth. But also from the underworld too, because these types of Christ are also seen on early Christian tombs, sarcophagus, in sepulchral monuments, & on early Christian graves, as a symbol of Christ's descent into the underworld, and the resurrection too.³¹⁶² Moreover, further evidences to these theories and possible interpretations are how lamb legs, and, or ankles are grasped, hence, many of these may be types of gatherings. If, that is, each leg represents the four corners of the earth to which the human family was spread into. Nevertheless, the fact that numerous artists show Christ grasping the wrists, and the hands, in such works as, The Medieval Christ; and in the different ways he lifts souls up out of hell; and then, like The Good Shepherd, how he conducts souls over into paradise.³¹⁶³ All these types of symbolical art pieces, and themes seem to suggest the theological motifs that represent Christ's intercontinental gathering of souls from around the world, & from the spiritual realms too.

In the mystery of marriage, we see further types and symbols of the drawing together of humanity. In these hand clasping³¹⁶⁴ ceremonies, there are some types of Christ's gathering together of both the living and the dead. An ancient Christian document, The Gospel of

Philip, says this about this type: “Christ came to repair the separation which was from the beginning and to again unite the two, to give life to those who died as a result of the separation and unite them.”³¹⁶⁵ A reading of Psalm 85:11—12, as it is found in old Spanish Archive Manuscripts, says this: “And truth shall I send forth out of the earth in the latter days, to bear testimony of Mine only Begotten, & righteousness and truth shall I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood to gather out mine elect from the four corners of the earth. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is lost and the land shall yield up her increase.”³¹⁶⁶

Lactantius, 260—300, states that Christ was sent by God the Father, in order that, “He might reveal to all the nations which are under heaven the sacred mystery of the only true God, which was taken away from the perfidious people, who oftimes sinned against God.”³¹⁶⁷

In early Christianity, there is a gathering of the people from the east, west, north and south for a celestial banquet.³¹⁶⁸ In some Christian Liturgies, during the 3rd—4th centuries, such as during the Anaphoral prayer, the priest mentions a bloodless sacrifice; “. . . which all nations, from the rising to the setting of the sun, [or east and west] from the north and the south, present to Thee, O Lord; for great is Thy name among all peoples. . . .” Further on he asks the Lord, “. . . remember in Thy good mercy the Holy and only Catholic and Apostolic Church throughout the whole world, and all Thy people, and all the sheep of this fold.” (John 10:16).³¹⁶⁹

In Constitutions Of the Holy Apostles, 3rd—4th cent., we read: “. . . O Lord Almighty, everlasting God, so gather together Thy Church from the ends of the earth into Thy kingdom, as this corn was once scattered, and is now become one loaf.”³¹⁷⁰

The Second Epistle of Clement, 3rd or 4th century, early Christians were to make good the command of the Lord to be “. . . gathered together unto life. For the Lord said, “I will come to gather together all the nations, tribes, and tongues.” A little further on he speaks of a day in which: “. . . the unbelievers “shall see His glory,” and strength; and they shall think it strange when they see the sovereignty of the world in Jesus, saying, Woe unto us, Thou was He, and we did not obey...”³¹⁷¹

Some of these types of hand symbols represent how the wandering Christ is out in the world with his servants to gather &, unite the people of all races into one fold.³¹⁷²

Irenæus, 120—202, Christ, “gathered from the ends of the earth into His Father's fold the children who were scattered abroad, & remembered His own dead ones who had formerly fallen asleep, & came down to them that He might deliver them.”³¹⁷³

Origen, 185—230—254, wrote that the Apostles were filled with the power of Christ's divinity in order to “itinerate [or travel from place to place]³¹⁷⁴ throughout the world that they might gather together out of every race and every nation a multitude of devout believers in [Christ] Himself.”³¹⁷⁵

Cyprian, 200—258, citing from the scriptures, wrote of this gathering too: “Nations which have not known Thee shall call upon Thee; and peoples which were ignorant of Thee shall flee to Thee.” Citing again from Isaiah, “Thus saith the Lord God to Christ my Lord, whose right hand I hold, that the nations may hear Him; and I will break asunder the strength of kings, I will open before Him gates; and cities shall not be shut.” (Isaiah 55:5; 45:1).

Citing Isaiah again, “I come to gather together all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory. And I will send out over them a standard, and I will send those that are preserved among them to the nations which are afar off, which have not heard my name nor seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory to the nations.” (Isaiah 66:18—19). He also goes on to cite other passages from the same prophet who makes reference to how a banner would be lifted up for the nations to gather to.³¹⁷⁶

Methodius, 260—312, in his use of Revelation 12, and other scriptures, he likens Jerusalem unto a bride, out of which shines forth the Groom (Christ). Thus, Christ is likened unto a light which arose from the dead to shine forth in the darkness which covered the earth, (citing Isaiah 60:1—4). As Methodism presents a number of types and symbols connected with early Christian mysteries, it may be that such passages in Isaiah, were considered types of Christ's intercontinental treks after his resurrection. Thus, it was from Jerusalem that the light of Christ did shine forth unto all continents. It may be that this passage in Isaiah may have also been seen by him as a prophecy about the darkness which covered the earth before Christ rose from the dead to show himself to all nations. It was also during this era that the captive spirits were released from the spirit prison. In some cases in early Christianity, this was likened unto their escape from the waters of hell, or "the sea."³¹⁷⁷ A part in Isaiah, which Methodius does not cite, seems to hint to this in the words, "...the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." (Isaiah 60:5).

Methodius hints to the time when the raised Lord had showed his gloriously bright resurrected body to different groups of people among the nations, and how he gathers them together to instruct them in the mysteries. Hence, he follows this, with a comment on a passage from Isaiah: "It is the Church whose children shall come to her [Jerusalem, a Bride, Mount Zion, the Temple and Tabernacle of God] with all speed after the resurrection, running to her from all quarters."³¹⁷⁸

Upon receiving the light which never goes down, they are also, "clothed with the brightness of the Word as with a robe."³¹⁷⁹ Methodius' use of weddings as a type of gathering is an appropriate type, and mystery too. This, because of hand and wrist clasps involved in gathering families together. In fact, later Christian artists depict Revelation 12 as if it were a type of wedding between the heavenly Temple and Christ. Consequently, some artists show the Christ child's hands and wrist being grasped by a hand, or an arm that extends from a higher realm building in order to pull him into the heavenly Temple.³¹⁸⁰

However, even though hand and wrist clenches are not mentioned here by Methodius, he does go on to mention other aspects of the mystery of marriage when he wrote how, "the queen should be adorned, to be led as a Bride to the Lord, when she had received a garment of light..."³¹⁸¹

Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 296—373, likened Christ's spread out arms upon the cross as a type of how he spreads out his arms to the nations to come unto him. Thus, it was through Christ's death on the cross that "the calling of the nations is brought about.... Whence it was fitting for the Lord to... spread out His hands, that with the one He might draw the ancient people, and with the other those from the Gentiles, and unite both in Himself."³¹⁸²

Paul to the Ephesians wrote that God revealed the mystery, "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him" (Ephesians 1:9, 10). Another translation of this reads: "For he has made known to us in all wisdom and insight the mystery of his will, according to his purpose which he set forth in Christ as a plan for the fullness of time, to unite all things in him, things in heaven and things on earth."³¹⁸³

Irenæus, in the 2nd century, and later St. Augustine wrote of this gathering too, how that the elect of God would be gathered together from all over the earth. Thus, as part of this "universal salvation," Augustine wrote that, "He will gather together His elect with Him." Origen went so far as to suggest that not only will the human family be gathered by Christ, but also, he will seek out and escort even the fallen angels back to him. "The redemptive will of God touches all the cosmos and every entity within it, even God's enemies will ultimately be restored."³¹⁸⁴ This view, of course, got him in trouble with later Church men who rejected the idea that even the demons could eventually be brought back to God.

In Russian Orthodox Churches, there is the concept that the Redeemer leads us, just as a mother leads her child by the hand. There is also the imagery of how, Christ is the Pantocrator, blessing the world. Some of the structures in their Churches are built in such a way as to convey the idea of "a meeting between the divine and the human; they become a place where the world is gathered up whole and resolved into the House of God." They also believe that through the Holy Rites performed in their churches, especially the Eucharist, that this sacrament will be "the one through which the world is united in Christ."³¹⁸⁵

The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, mid 2nd cent., the Lord is reported to have said: "I am a great King, saith the Lord, and my name is wonderful among the nations." Like in the later wandering-Christ traditions, there is this warning that, "ye know not the hour in which our Lord cometh. But ye shall be gathered together frequently, seeking the things which are suitable for yours souls; for the whole time of your faith will not profit you, unless ye shall be made perfect in the last time."³¹⁸⁶

These types of hand grasping greetings³¹⁸⁷ are not only part of the concepts, and doctrines of bringing the nations together³¹⁸⁸ into one fold, under one Shepherd. But they are also part of this whole symbolical science that runs throughout historic Christianity.³¹⁸⁹

Some of which deals with the stigmata,³¹⁹⁰ the marks which helped them to identify the World Wide Wounded Wanderer.³¹⁹¹ Much of which, as we might have already noted, also has its roots in the earlier Christian mysteries, or their rites of passage.³¹⁹² "Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."³¹⁹³ An Easter story from about the 10th century tells of a young woman who was on her way home from the town market one morning when she met a stranger sitting on a rock. She offered him a drink of water, and noticed that there were wounds on his hands. The stranger didn't say anything but accepted her offer and then went on his way. When she got home, she uncovered her basket and found that her eggs had been transformed into pysanky. "The stranger was Jesus Christ—and that morning was the first Easter."³¹⁹⁴ 17th c. work & allegory, The Pilgrim's Progress, the wounds in Christ's hands are marks of identification. "I perceived the holes in his hands and in his side; then I concluded that he was Our Lord. So I went up the Hill."³¹⁹⁵

Washings & Anointings in Historic Christianity

Many aspects of the early Christian mysteries have already been explored, such as baptism, baptism for the dead, etc. In these following chapters, we shall explore other aspects, such as anointing, garments, & so forth.

Coronations, & Investments of Powers: The right & authorities to Baptize & perform the other aspects of the mysteries, were not to be given to just anyone, but from the earliest day of Christianity, the performer had to be divinely authorized. Moreover, the power of the priesthood to perform the rituals, could not be bought, as Simon-the-magician attempted to do from Peter, (Acts 8:5—24). But this was to change as the churches were taken under the protective wing of Roman Emperors, like Constantine, fourth century & later. Thus, Simony, named after Simon the magician, was the sin of buying up positions of authority & power in religious political settings, such as during the Middle Ages, & this practice became issues of concern, in the selecting & coronations of different rich nobles, or elites to positions of religious leadership, where they could spend the tithing & forced religious-state taxes collected from the sales of indulgences, fees to perform religious ceremonies, fees to see the different collections of relics, & gifts that came into the theocracies from all over later Christendom.³¹⁹⁶

FEET WASHING: Another aspect of washing in the earliest church, was the cleansing of the feet, & anointing with ointment, done to Jesus by Mary, as a funerary type ritual for the day of Christ burying, (John 12:1-7). Then of Jesus washing the feet of his apostles, (John 13:4-17). Tertullian, 140–220, in his De Corona, mentions the feet washing ritual, but offers no details as to whom, how, & where it was being practiced. 300, the council of Elvira mentions it, & in 380, the practice was being performed by the church of Milan. Bishop Ambrose of Milan, 340–397, the head is anointed, but also their feet are washed. 400, Augustine mentions it. 529, St. Benedict's rule has foot washing as a hospitality in welcoming travelers. Feet washing was also performed during the baptismal rites in Africa, Gaul, Germany, Milan, Northern Italy, & Ireland. During the eighth century, it was done by the Roman church, but not connected to the baptismal rites. The rite continued to be practiced down through the centuries by different Christian denominations, such as the Catholics, Eastern Orthodox & Byzantine Catholics, Coptics, Anglicans, Protestants, Lutherans, Methodists, Baptists, Anabaptists, Adventists, Pentecostals, & others.³¹⁹⁷

Washings & Anointings as Part of the Ritualistic Journey of the Soul

"In order for the soul to return to the presence of God, certain ordinances are necessary. Among these ordinances are baptism, washings, anointings, special garments, and signs as seals and passwords to pass by the angels who guard the gate to God's kingdom."³¹⁹⁸ During part of the ritualistic journey through the afterlife realms, before going down into the font, (as a type of Christ's descent into hell), they were anointed with oil, or in some cases, blessed holy water, which symbolically made them "Christs," or anointed ones.³¹⁹⁹ As "Christs" they were armed for battle against the forces of darkness, for washings & anointings, were just parts of the whole baptismal journey of the soul through different realms of existences. Paul to the Hebrews mentions the ordinance, as "...having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." (Hebrews 10:22). One of the symbolical meanings behind washings & anointings was that it washed away the uncleanness & impurities of sins so that the repentant can inherit the Kingdom of God, for no unclean thing can enter: "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?... [Paul goes on to list some of evil traits that would make the unrighteous disqualified, then wrote] ...And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." (1 Cor. 6:9-11). John wrote how that the early Christians should stick to what they'd been taught & heard from the beginning. "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie..." (1 John 2:27). There must have been counterfeited anointing rituals that "anti-Christs" were teaching in order to draw away the people after them, or get them to stop believing in Christ, (1 John 2:18–27).

From the earliest days of the church, controversy or schisms arose, and different church leaders attempted to combat the false perversions of their pure doctrines that were being blended & thus corrupted with outside & inside influences. Under these conditions, baptism, washings & anointings were changed & some aspects dropped out for other modes adopted for different reasons.

About 90–100, the first century non-canonical early Christian writing, though entitled as if written by apostles, but not, the Didache – the Teachings of the Twelve Apostles, references different modes of baptism, & allowed sprinkling if immersions were not practical.³²⁰⁰

"An anointing with oil which signified the reception of the Holy Spirit very early became part of the rite of baptism..."³²⁰¹

Justin Martyr, 110–165, baptism & the process of repenting and "washing," was part of the cleansing ritualistic symbolism in the church. Justin uses Isaiah (1:18) to make the point that one's sins shall be white as wool, in "washing."³²⁰²

Clement of Alexandria, 153–193–217, seems to suggest that the garment is a symbol of Christ. "And I will be" He [Christ] says, "their Shepherd," and will be near them, as the garment to their skin. He wishes to save my flesh by enveloping it in the robe of immortality, and He hath anointed my body."³²⁰³ As part of the mysteries, which led up towards deification, godhood, part of them included, "...washing: washing, by which we cleanse our sins; grace, by which the penalties accruing to transgressions are remitted; & illumination, by which that holy light of salvation is beheld, that is by which we see God clearly."³²⁰⁴

Hippolytus, 170–236, cites Isaiah (1:18), & interprets the washing as being a beforetime of the purifying power of baptism. We might note here that baptism, washings & anointings, were sometimes done right after each other in the baptismal font areas. Hippolytus might be making reference to this when he goes on in commenting: "For who comes down in faith to the laver of regeneration, and ... joins himself to Christ;... and puts on the adoption, – he comes up from the baptism brilliant as the sun, flashing forth the beams of righteousness, and ... he returns a son of God and joint heir with Christ."³²⁰⁵ The types of these early Christian cleansing & washing rituals, is how that the cleansing away of sins through the washing process, is the removal of sin-spots from the white garments, to make them white as wool. Thus, as in the baptismal-rite, also are many references to white or 'bright' garment themes. Hippolytus thus hints to these, & deification themes, which were in the types, "puts on," (garment type), & coming up 'brilliant,' as the sun, 'flashing' 'beams of righteousness,' (these are more garment types blended with deification themes). As also in those coming up from baptism, the ritualistic type of resurrection, being clothed in a glorious body, that shines brilliantly!

Anointed ones, like Christ, were amongst the nations, & as Christ's post-resurrection world trek themes go, prophets – the anointed ones, were also those who spread the gospel message, as Christ's did during his global victory march. In the 3rd–4th century Christian work, Constitutions of The Holy Apostles, "...the Lord of the whole world, who hast scattered the sweet odour of the knowledge of the Gospel among all nations, do Thou grant at this time that this ointment [the oil used in early Christian anointing rites] may be efficacious upon him that is baptized..."³²⁰⁶

Answering Celsus, Origen wrote that there really was no need, at the time of Christ's birth, for a number of Christs to have also been born into every corner of the world. For if Celsus had wanted to see "Christs" he should have noted that God had sent out representatives whom are termed "Christs," by the scriptures, (1 Chron. 16:22; Psa. 105:15), or anointed prophets into all lands! Origen's response includes the idea that Christ had eventually entered into different parts of the earth, also.³²⁰⁷ Where those who were anointed as “christs” in the baptismal rituals, the ritualistic type of the descent & resurrection, also considered as wandering Christ’s after their ritual resurrection?

Though the answer to ancient critics’ charge, ‘that Christ neglected other nations,’ was answered by early Christian apologists’ doctrine, that Christ wasn’t neglectful for ‘Christ went to other nations.’ Despite this, Roman Emperor, Julian the Apostate, 361–363, asked why God had sent prophets to the Jews only, but no prophets, & oil of anointing to other nations? Did God neglect us? As noted, the answer was no, there were anointed prophets in other nations.³²⁰⁸

Protective Anointing as part of the Protective Garment themes in early Christian mysteries: By the beginning of the third century, if not earlier, anointings in the baptismal rituals, were done as part of the ritualistic denouncing of & the battle against the devil & his demons. Thus, themes like protection against the devil, evil spirits & fallen-angels, or demons, also included victory over them, the crushing of them, like under baptismal fonts. Or foot-stool resting, with them under-foot, a symbol of victory over the fallen. Or trampling of them, as the Grateful Dead come forth out of captivity. All these types, plus others, are part of the baptismal protective themes of battles against & victory over demonic evils. Plus the victory over one’s sinful past-life, & the hopes for a new life in Christ.³²⁰⁹ Thus, the candidates for baptism, whom have vowed to put off the old man (person) of sin, like the old garment, & put on (like the white garment or purity), the new righteousness of Christ-anointed of God. Thus, like Christ & as “Christs,” they were following their anointed King leader into battle, & on his victory march throughout the watery abyss & post-resurrection victory march throughout earth. (Just as in later Christian Knighthood types & later Christian war-lord themes of the Crusades).³²¹⁰
